As has been already mentioned, a trust or charge of debts by will very frequently embraces also a charge of legacies; but although, in such case, at least until the late act in favour of creditors by simple contract, those creditors as well as the legatees could only claim under the will and under an act of bounty on the part of the testator, it was settled at an early period, that a legatee, whose right rests solely on the bounty of the testator, could not claim in competition with creditors who had also a claim on the justice of the testator, though the testator himself might not have made any distinction between them (a); devises for payment of Portions in pursuance of articles before marriage are protected, as the testator is there under an antecedent obligation. Debts and legacies stand upon a very different footing. Creditors have certain rights by operation of law, liable indeed, as we have seen, to be varied as between themselves by the act of the testator, but the legatee has no antecedent right, he can only claim his legacy under the will, and in the manner and form in which it is given by the will (a); the intention alone governs in the case of a legacy (b); if it is given out of the real estate only, by that all parties must abide, and if one part is charged with the legacies, that as regards legatees, generally speaking, is a discharge or rather an exclusion of the rest of the property, for the legatees can only take what is given and in the way it is given (c). If the legacy is given generally the legatee must resort to the personal estate only (d).

(a) Foley's case, 2 Freeman, 49; ibid. 121; Shallcross v. Finden, 3 Ves. J. 739; Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 154. Of the vesting of legacies, v. supra, 94, 184; et infra, Legacies.

Lord Alvanley considered that there was a wide difference between the effect of a general charge for payment of debts and one for payment of legacies, so far as regards devisees of particular estates; he contended that the testator must be taken equally to have meant that the specific devisee should have his estate as that the legatee should have his legacy (e). Lord Rosslyn however disputed this doctrine; he seems to have considered that a general charge—at least if preceding the specific devise—must be considered as affecting all the estates, and that any specific devise must be taken to be subject to this general charge, equally in the case of legacies as of debts (f); Lord Alvanley however still adhered to his opinion (g). It has since been decided that if there be first a specific devise and then a charge of legacies on the testator's real estate and afterwards a residuary devise, the land specifically devised is not affected by the charge, and therefore is not liable to the payment of any part of the legacies (h).

(a) See 1 Meriv. 233, and Jones v. Bruce, 11 Sim. 227-8; Lamphier v. Despard, 2 Dru. & W. 63.

(b) See Noel v. Lord Henley, 7 Price, 262.

(c) Brydges v. Phillips, 6 Ves. p. 571; White v. Vitty, 2 Russell, 491, 495; Spurway v. Glynn, 9 Ves. p. 483, where such a legacy was held not to be included in a direction that the legacies should be paid out of the personal estate, to the exoneration of the real; Lamphier v. Despard, 2 Dr. & War. 59, where on the construction of the will certain woods and timber directed to be cut were held to be the primary fund for payment of legacies, auxiliary only for payment of debts, ib. pp. 64, 65; Dickin v. Edwards, 4 Hare, 276-7.

(d) V. supra, vol. i. p. 193-4, 581.

(e) Kightley v. Kightley, 2 Ves. Jun. 330, approved by Lord Manners, Spong v. Spong, Dom. Proc. 1 Bli. 107, "A pecuniary legatee shall never charge a specific devisee of lands, even though the lands were specifically devised to the heir-at-law," Lord Macclesfield, Chitton v. Burt, Prec. Ch. 540; therefore it has been held that a pecuniary legatee has no right to stand in the place of a bond creditor as against a real estate devised, although he has such right as against a real estate descended, it being considered that a devisee is not to be deprived of any part of the real estate which the testator has given him, because it happens that the testator's intention of bounty towards the pecuniary legatee fails for want of that fund which ought legally to supply the legacy; S. C. under the name of Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. W. 678; Sir J. Leach, Wythe v. Henniker, 2 My. & K. 645, "A specific devisee or a specific legatee shall not make good a pecuniary legacy;" Lord Manners, Spong v. Spong, 3 Bli. N. S. 109. On the subject of the liability of specific devisees to contribute with specific legatees to the payment of specialty debts, v. infra, Of Marshalling Assets.

(f) Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. J. 551; Sir E. Sugden, in Spong v. Spong, 3 Bli. N. S. 106, contended that such would be the effect; but Lord Manners dissented, ibid. 107.

(g) Shallcross v. Finden, 3 Ves. J. 739; Keeling v. Brown, 5 Ves. J. 361. It will be remembered that in the interpretation of wills, favour to creditors has been an acknowledged principle of construction.

(h) Spong v. Spong, 3 Bli. N. S. 102, 110, 1 Dow. N. S. 377-9; Joy v. Campbell, 3 Bli. N. S. 117. In many of these cases, the general rule that the last clause of a will shall prevail, is abandoned, to carry out the clear intention, v. supra, vol. i. p. 527, &c.

Where the general charge comes first, and then there are specific devises of real estates, i. e. by name or description, and also a residuary devise, in such case Lord Alvanley's doctrine is capable of application as regards the estates so particularly devised; but if each of the testator's real estates is specifically devised, or if the whole is given under one general devise there seems to be no means of giving any effect to a general charge, but by treating the particular devises in the one case or the general devise in the other as subject to that charge (a). The question so raised by Lord Alvanley is noticed by Lord Cottenham, in a late case (b), but I do not find that it has yet been set at rest, unless the case of Spong v. Spong, before referred to, is to be considered as affirming Lord Alvanley's doctrine.

It is hardly necessary to say that whether the legacies are charged on the real estate or not is also a question of intention to be determined upon a view of the whole of the testamentary instruments: some definite rules however may, in this instance, be extracted from the cases.

The circumstance, that the testator leaves the whole of his real and personal estate embodied in one bequest to one individual, is not sufficient of itself for the court to determine that legacies left afterwards are to come out of the real estate (c). But where the testator is making a provision in the same clause for the payment of debts and legacies together, the natural inference is that he intends both to be paid in the same way, and if the debts are payable out of such mixed fund so will be the legacies (d). And it has been held, that if a testator gives all his real and personal estate together to one person for life, blending them together, for his use, and after his death he gives certain pecuniary legacies, and then gives the residue of his real and personal estate to some third person, that will be a sufficient indication of intention that the fund should continue as one fund after the enjoyment of it by the tenant for life, and that the legacies should be paid out of that consolidated fund (e).

It is also settled that a bequest of legacies followed by a gift of all the residue of the testator's real and personal estates will operate as a charge upon the entire property, real and personal, included in such gift, in favour of the legatees; the word residue as applied to the personal estate must mean after payment of the legacies, and it is natural

(a) See the cases cited, 2 Jarman, 532-3.

(b) Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 My. & C. 708.

(c) Lord Abinger, Nyssen v. Gretton, 2 Y. & Coll. 232.

(d) Lord Eldon, Boottle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 233.

(e) Bench v. Biles, 4 Mad. 188; and see Aubrey v. Middleton, supra.

to suppose that the testator used those words in the same sense as applied to the real estate (a).

If a man devises lands for payment of debts and legacies, and the overplus to the heir or to the heir and a stranger, there the personal estate shall not be applied to exonerate the real so devised, as it is called in Chancery, out and out—for the overplus is devised in such case as a pecuniary legacy, and not as real estate, and then the quantum of such pecuniary legacy is to be ascertained in such case according to the intention of the testator, and that can only be by taking the debts and legacies out of the price or value of the lands, and therefore it would be at variance with the intention of the testator to cast in the personal estate by way of exoneration (b): this depends upon the principle, so often referred to, that a devisee or legatee is only entitled, as such, to that which is given to him.

Where a testator charges his executors with the payment of his legacies, and then devises to them the residue of his real and personal estate, the real estate is charged, though an annuity be in another part of the will expressly charged on such residuary estate (c).

If a man devise his real estate in trust to pay his debts and legacies, and one of the legatees dies in his lifetime, if the fund be insufficient for the payment of the legacies, including the one given to the deceased legatee, the legatees do not abate, but the whole fund is a trust for the other legatees if necessary (d); and it is the same if the gift of the legacy fails in any other manner, as by having been given to a charity (e).

If there be in the first instance the gift of an Annuity, and a charge of it upon the estate and then a direction to the trustees to pay it out of the rents, or if the trust simply be to receive the rents and

(a) Cole v. Turner, 4 Russ. 376. There, after giving some legacies and annuities, but without any devise of any part of his real estate, the testator gave all the residue of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, his stock, &c. and the rest of his real and personal property to his executors, on certain trusts. Sir J. Leach held that the testator had only given what would remain after some prior purposes were satisfied, and those could only be the annuity and legacies previously given; Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 My. & C. 695: the words were, "It is my will that all my debts, and all the above legacies be paid and discharged within six months after my decease, and all the rest and residue of my estate, both real and personal, lands, messuages, and tenements, I give," &c.: the testator had first specifically devised one field, but that was not sought to be affected, and the devisee of that field was not a party, p. 696; and see Hassell v. Hassell, 2 Dick. 526, and 2 Jarman on Wills, 532-3. It will be remembered that by the stat. 1 Vict. 26—the new Statute of Wills,—every devise, whether of a residue or not, speaks as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator.

(b) Lex Prætoria, p. 313; Wainwright v. Bendlows, Pr. Ch. 451.

(c) Cross v. Kennington, 15 Law J., N. S. p. 157, 169; but see Parker v. Fearnley, 2 Sim. & Stu. 592, where the residuary gift was confined to the personal estate only.

(d) Lord Eldon, Currie v. Pye, 17 Ves. 466.

(e) Ibid. 468.

profits of the estates when and as they shall become due and payable, and thereout to pay to a certain person an annuity for his life, this will be a charge upon the rents, &c., until the whole amount of the annuity with the arrears shall be paid: but where the trustees are directed immediately on the death of the annuitant to convey the estates to other persons, a new trust arises, and if the trustees should perform their trust as they are bound to do, they would be disabled from applying the subsequent rents to the discharge of the arrears; therefore in such a case the arrears are not a charge on the subsequent rents (a).

Primâ facie the testator must be presumed to have intended that all his legatees shall be paid in equal proportions; the testator may give a preference, but the onus is on those who contend for a priority to show that the testator intended to give a preference to a particular legatee (b): a direction in the first place to pay what may be due on the testator's covenant to D., then to set apart sufficient to pay certain annuities given by the will, and in the next place, after making such investments, to pay the legacies given by the will, is not sufficient to give a preference to the annuitants over the legatees (c).

Where the assets in money applicable to the payment of general Legacies and Annuities are insufficient to pay both, the annuity ought to be valued, and the annuitant is entitled at once to the amount of the valuation, subject to an abatement in proportion to the abatement of the pecuniary legatees, and that, although the annuitant may have died before the payment of the annuity in full would have equalled the amount of the valuation (d).

It may be well here to observe that although the Statute of Fraudulent Devises and the statute making real estates liable for debts by simple contract (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104,) may, as the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce observed in a late case, be admitted to have been intended for the benefit of creditors merely, and not to improve the condition of legatees, still it may be of material importance in its consequences to

(a) Foster v. Smith, 1 Phillips, 631-3. The Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 193, had declared, hesitatingly, that the arrears were a charge on the subsequent rents.

(b) Brown v. Brown, 1 Keen, 275, 277; See Pepper v. Bloomfield, 2 Con. & L. 198, infra, p. 331.

(c) Thwaites v. Foreman, x. Jurist, 483, confirming the decision of the V. C. K. Bruce.

(d) Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & Sma. 36, 357, and Long v. Hughes, Rolls, 1824, 1829, 1831, ibid. p. 364. It had been contended, on the authority of other cases cited, that the annuity ought to be valued, then that a proportionate abatement should be made in the amount of the valuation, that the abated amount should be invested, and that the dividends and a competent part of the capital to make up the whole annuity, should be paid to the annuitant, giving the remaining principal of the fund, if any, after paying the pecuniary legatees in full, to the residuary legatee at the death of the annuitant.

legatees. A charge of debts on freehold estate by a will may be supposed generally to be intended in fact for the benefit of creditors merely, but its consequences to others are admitted and obvious. A mortgagee's lien is generally intended only for the benefit of the mortgagee, but has often ulterior effects; but this subject will be more particularly adverted to when we are treating of the Marshalling of Assets (a).

(a) Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 498.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

The following is an abstract of the case of Pepper v. Bloomfield, 2 Conn. & L. 198, referred to supra, p. 330. The interest of a sum of £5000 (no rate being specified) was bequeathed to the testator's wife, for life, in such terms as, in the opinion of the Court, to give her priority over all the other legatees; the wife's jointure, which the testator had covenanted to pay, exhausted the interest of the whole fund which could have been applied in payment of legacies, and was received by the wife during her life. It was held that the wife's representative was entitled, in priority to the other legacies, to all the arrears of interest, (computed at the rate of 5 per cent.) which accrued during the wife's life. But it seems it would have been otherwise, if it had appeared that the other legatees had been intended to take the £5000 by way of remainder depending on the wife's life estate.

SECTION III.—General Doctrines as to Charges of Debts and Legacies by Will—Exemption and Exoneration of Personal Estate.

General Rule that Personal Estate first Fund for Payment of Debts.

And also of Legacies, if no other Fund specified.

Debts secured by Mortgage within the Rule, so that on a Devise or Descent of a Mortgaged Estate, the Personal Estate must be applied to exonerate the Land from the Mortgage.

But where the Real Estate was the original Debtor, and came to its Possessor as such, it must bear the burthen.

And though the Owner may have given Collateral Security, still the Mortgaged Estate must be first resorted to.

Otherwise if he has made the Debt his own by a new Contract, &c.

Where Mortgaged Debt was created by another, the Estate must bear the burthen, although the Owner has charged other Property with Payment of all his Debts.

Where there is a Simple Charge the Real Estate can be applied only in case of Necessity.

But every one is at liberty to throw the Payment of his Debts and Legacies on his Real Estate exclusively, in Exoneration of his Personal Estate.

What amounts to Exoneration is to be determined on the Wording of each particular Will. No Extrinsic Evidence admitted.

Originally Express Words were necessary to exempt the Personal Estate, but the Rule was afterwards relaxed.

Now a Question of Intention.

Difficulty in defining what Expressions are sufficient.

Lord Thurlow's Definition.

Lord Alvanley's—"Irresistible Inference."

Lord Eldon's—"Evident Demonstration," "Plain Intention," "Necessary Implication."

Bootle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv.

It must appear that Testator intended so to charge the Real Estate as to discharge the Personal.

If Testator merely directs his Debts and Legacies to be a Charge on the Real Estate that only makes it applicable in aid of the Personalty.

Other Instances.

Where the Persons appointed Executors are the same to whom Real Estate had been given as Trustees.

Where Testator has made the Real Estate liable to the Costs both of Trustees and Executors in regard to Matters which would ordinarily fall on Personal Estate—Mr. Jarman's Opinion.

If the whole of the Personalty is specifically bequeathed and another Fund supplied for Payment of Debts—that exonerates.

Or if Testator has used Words shewing his Desire to preserve the Personal Estate entire for any given Purpose.

But generally, if the Executor is the Individual to whom the Personal Estate is given, it will not be exonerated.

Intention to exonerate may also be found in the Mode in which Real Estate is given.

Where nothing is given to the Legatee but a Sum to be raised out of Real Estate.

Or if a Portion of Real Estate is severed and directed to be the Fund for Payment of Legacies, the Personal Estate is exonerated.

And Real Estate may be so appropriated to the Payment of a particular Debt as to shew an Intention that it shall not be a Burthen on any other Fund.

Even though the Personal Estate should be given subject to Debts.

Decisions on one Will, not easily applicable to another.

If a particular Portion of Personal Estate is bequeathed, subject to Debts and Legacies, such Property must be first applied.

Not where there is no Gift of Residue.

Exoneration of Specific Legacies, as between General and Specific Legatees.

Exemption of Personalty in favour of Legatee does not necessarily extend to Next of Kin.

Exoneration of Real Estate by Payments on the part of Persons having a Partial Interest in the Estate.

Tenant for Life paying off Charge and merging the Security primâ facie puts an end to it.

But a simple Payment of the Charge would entitle the Tenant for Life to have it raised out of the Estate for his own Benefit.

Burthen of Proof as to Intention to exonerate the Estate lies on those claiming Exoneration.

If Tenant in Tail or in Fee pays off Charge, it is presumed to be in favour of the Estate. It is the same whether he take an Assignment or not.

But the Presumption may be rebutted by Evidence.

Where a Person pays off a Charge under an erroneous impression as to his Liability, it is not Evidence of intended Exoneration.

Person becoming entitled to an Estate subject to a Charge may keep it up for his own Benefit.

Courts of Equity not always governed by Rules of Law on this subject.

HAVING shortly considered what will amount to a charge of debts and of legacies, and how creditors and devisees may be affected by a charge of debts, I proceed to take a general view of an important consequence that may arise from a charge of debts and legacies as affecting the rights and interests of those who take the real and personal estates of the testator as between one another; namely, by the exemption or exoneration of the personal estate from its natural charges (a); this is a very important subject in reference to the administration of assets (b). The question of Exoneration has arisen on so many wills, has presented itself in such a variety of forms and circumstances, and is so ancient and so familiar a head of jurisdiction, that authority upon it is abundant. The accumulation of cases with the different views taken by different judges of the nature and effect of particular phrases and provisions has tended of necessity to embarrass the subject. On the whole, however, some principles of interpretation have been finally recognized and established (a).

(a) 2 Jarm. 587.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. pp. 192-7.

It will be remembered that the general rule of Law and Equity, as administered in the Court of Chancery, is, that the personal estate is the first fund for payment of Debts; and as to Proper Legacies, that is where they are given without any directions out of what fund they are to be paid, or any words indicative of any intention to charge the real estate, the personal estate is considered to be the only fund for the payment of the legacies, both in the Ecclesiastical Court and in the Court of Chancery (b): debts secured by mortgage on the real estate, unless the estate be devised cum onere (c), are equally within the rule as debts not secured; the loan creates a debt, and in the view of the Court of Chancery the land mortgaged is a pledge only for the money borrowed; so that if a man mortgages his lands and then devises his real estate or suffers it to descend, the personal estate must be applied to exonerate the land from the mortgage, though the rule was qualified by the doctrine of Marshalling, which will be treated of hereafter, so that it might not wholly defeat simple-contract creditors, who could formerly only resort to the personal estate (d).

The rule does not apply solely to cases where the personal estate has been directly increased by reason of the creation of the mortgage, but generally to all cases where a debt is contracted, and a mortgage is given collaterally to secure its payment. The rule does not apply

(a) See Collis v. Robins, Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, xi. Jurist, 364, 1 De Gex & Smale, 139, 141. In this case the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce said (p. 136) it had occurred to him to doubt whether the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, which relieved our law from a great discredit, ought not to have some influence so as possibly to render a decision, since the act, in favour of the personal estate against the real estate right, which before that act would have been erroneous. There is now, perhaps, it is to be observed, less reason for holding the real estate to be charged on doubtful words, as men no longer "sin in their graves" (see Thomas v. Britnell, 2 Ves. 314; 2 Powell on Devises by Jarman, 1653) by not themselves charging their real estates with their debts; but on the clear intention the law must remain the same; v. int. alia, Price v. North, 1 Phillips, 87, et v. supra, p. 320.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 193; 2 Freeman,

265; Ram on Assets, 121; Roper on Leg. 695, 709, 744.

(c) See Lockhart v. Hardy, 9 Beav. 379, infra, add. note No. 1.

(d) Gilbert, Lex Prætoria, 311-12; but it is there said, where the devise is with remainder over the rule is different, the devisees must take the estate cum onere, ibid.; Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. 487. The cases on this subject are numerous, and there are some important distinctions to be attended to, for which I would refer the reader to Ram on Assets, ch. xxix. p. 437, et seq., and Mr. Cox's note to Howel v. Price, 1 P. W. 294, and Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 497, before referred to, a very important case, which is stated infra, Section Of Marshalling Assets. As to the condition of a mortgagee who has foreclosed, and then seeks to prove his debt, see Lockhart v. Hardy, infra, additional note, No. 2.

where the obligation was in its primary constitution not intended as a debt but as a charge, or where the obligation affecting the personal estate was subsidiary or given as a security for the performance of the obligation (a): thus where a person covenants that he will settle or secure a portion out of particular lands, or that he will settle particular lands, (in which case, as before observed, he is trustee of the lands for the purpose of the settlement,) though he enters into a bond for the performance of his covenants, his personal estate as between the real and personal representatives, will not be liable to exonerate his real estate in respect of such covenants if broken; and even, in the case of a covenant to secure the portion, if there be also a covenant to pay it (b). A father having agreed to secure a marriage-portion for his daughter, mortgaged part of his real estate for that purpose, which mortgage contained a covenant for payment of the money; by his will he declared that his debts should be paid, first out of the residue of his personal estate, then out of his money in the funds, and lastly, out of his real estate: it was held that the mortgaged estate was not to be exonerated from the portion out of the personal estate (c).

The rule only applies to those debts which were properly the debts of the testator: in all cases where the real estate was the original debtor, and came to its possessor as such, it must continue to bear the burthen: even though the testator when he purchased the estate entered into a collateral contract or covenant or gave a security for payment of the debt, the estate burthened must first be resorted to (d): but it is

(a) See the note to Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 664.

(b) In Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 437, Sir J. Jekyl expressly referred to there being no covenant to pay the portion; but he added that if there had been a covenant to pay, the party entitled to the portion ought to come upon the land first, and to resort to the personal estate only in case of a deficiency.

(c) Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 398.

(d) Basset v. Percival, Mattheson v. Hardwicke, and the other cases cited in Cox's note to Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 665, and the case itself, ib. 664. Many other cases have been decided on this principle, as Lewis v. Nangle, Amb. 151, where the husband had covenanted to pay a sum of money charged on the wife's estate for the wife's purposes; and see the cases cited in Mr. Belt's note to Billinghurst v. Walker, 2 Bro. 608; Tweddell v. Tweddell, 2 Bro. 101, 153, which is the leading case in regard to the purchase of an estate subject to a mortgage; Lord Tankerville v. Fawcett, 1 Cox, 239, where the doctrine is extended to a mortgage made by the heir to secure the ancestor's debts; Basset v. Percival, 1 Cox, 268; and see the other cases cited in the note, 2 Brown, p. 153; Barham v. Lord Thanet, 3 Mylne & K. 607, 624; Noel v. Noel, Dom. Proc. 12 Price, 303, Lord Redesdale; 323, Lord Eldon: Lord Eldon instances a case of a mortgage by a grandfather called in by the mortgagee during the life of the son, and the son in consequence having to join in a transfer of the mortgage with a personal covenant for payment of the mortgage money; this is not taking the debt or interest on himself, though the interest may be increased from 4 to 5 per cent., et v. ib. 328. The case of Noel v. Noel itself, ultimately resolves itself into a simple case of construction of a settlement and other instruments coupled with the will, under which it was plain that Lord Wentworth clearly meant that his personal estate should never be liable for the 20,000*l.* which had upon general principles been charged upon it by the Court of Exchequer, 12 Price, 328-30; and see Earl of Ilchester v. Lord Carnarvon, 1 Beav. 222, which arose on a question as to the liability to exonerate a mortgaged estate; and the late different if he has done any thing which raises a new contract between him and the mortgagee or other incumbrancer or he has in any other way made the debt his own (a). Where the mortgage debt has not been made the testator's own debt, the estate must bear the burthen, though the testator, the owner of the equity of redemption, has charged other parts of his property with the payment of all his debts (b).

These are cases of Exemption independently of any act or expression of intention on the part of the testator rather than of exoneration, which implies that some act should be done in order to effect it. What will amount to an Exoneration will now be shortly considered.

Where real estate is actually charged, it may be taken as a general rule, that unless there are words to alter the ordinary course of administration, the real estate will not be held to be charged primarily or pari passu with the personalty not specifically bequeathed, but will only be held liable in case of necessity in its usual rank and order; that is after the general personal estate is exhausted (c).

It is incident to the right which every one has as between himself and the persons claiming under him to dispose of his property as he pleases, that he should be at liberty to alter the ordinary course of law, and being master of both funds, to throw his debts and legacies or either of them upon the real estate exclusively, and thus to exonerate the personal estate (d). Not that a man can take from creditors their right of resorting to the personal estate (e), but he case of Earl of Clarendon v. Barham, before Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 710-12, where the leading cases on this subject are observed upon; and Butler v. Butler, 5 Ves. 537.

(a) Dict. Lord Hardwicke, Parsons v. Freeman, Amb. 115, case of purchase of the equity of redemption of an estate; Lord Thurlow, Billinghurst v. Walker, 2 Bro. 608; Earl of Oxford v. Rodney, 14 Ves. 424-5; and the other cases cited in Lord Henley's note, 1 Bro. 153; Scott v. Beecher, 5 Mad. 96; Earl of Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 688; Barham v. Lord Thanet, 3 My. & K. 623. That the rule will not apply where the debt has constructively become his own, see Lord Clarendon v. Barham, ubi sup. 710-712; Lord Ilchester v. Lord Carnarvon, 1 Beavan, 222; Roper on Leg. 739, 743; but see Cope v. Cope, Gilb. Lex Prætoria, 315.

(b) See Earl of Ilchester v. Earl of Carnarvon, 1 Beavan, 222; and Hamilton v. Worley, 2 Ves. J. 62, 4 Bro. 199, Lord Loughborough; one ground there was, that it might have interfered with the interests of the other creditors.

(c) V. int. al. Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 304; Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 497: these are very important cases on many points connected with the administration of assets and the construction of wills, particularly as to Marshalling Assets, and as to what will pass by the words "ready money," "debts due," &c.: the former was confirmed on appeal, 1 Phillips, 356.

(d) Lord Inchiquin v. French, before Lord Hardwicke, Amb. 37, and The Duke of Ancaster v. Mayer, 1 Bro. 459, are leading cases on the subject of exoneration of personal estate from debts and legacies, on which we are about to enter. The cases are collected in Roper on Legacies, i. 596, et seq., and the general principles are stated and the leading cases collected, 2 Fonbl. 286-9, to which I would beg to refer.

(e) It has already been mentioned that the real estate also is now liable to simple-contract debts, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, amended by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 69, supra, vol. i. pp. 174, 295, and see Collis v. Robins, 1 De Gex & Smale, 136, 138, supra.

may charge and appropriate which fund he will as between his representatives (a). What will amount to an exoneration is a question of intention to be extracted from the wording of each particular will (b): as a general rule no extrinsic evidence can be admitted to ascertain the intention (c).

Originally express words were necessary in order to exempt the personal estate (d), and almost every judge has lamented that that rule has not been adhered to (e). But in Lord Hardwicke's time the rule had been relaxed, in conformity with the general rule for construing wills according to the intent to be collected from the whole context (f). It need not be by express words, said his Lordship, where without them the intention of the testator will plainly appear (g); and it makes no difference how the debts are charged upon the estate, whether charged generally or with directions to sell out and out; there are instances in both these ways where the real estate has been taken in aid of the personal, and where the personal estate has been held to be exempt (h).

In this, as in every case where it is left to the judge to collect the intention from the whole scope and context of the will, there must necessarily be great difficulty in any attempt to define what expressions and what kinds of dispositions as affecting the real and personal estate

(a) Lex Prætor. 311; and see Ambl. 37; 1 Cox, 5; 2 Atk. 624.

(b) Lord Thurlow, 1 Bro. 459; Stapleton v. Colville, Forrest. 208, and the note p. 210.

(c) It is established by the more modern authorities—see the note to 1 Eden, 43 (confirming the dictum of Lord Holt, cited in Lord Inchiquin v. French, Ambler, 40)—that the circumstances of the testator, and the amount of his personal estate or of his debts, cannot be taken into consideration in determining what is the testator's intention on this subject; Lord Northington, Stephenson v. Heathcote, 1 Eden, 43, 44; Lord Inchiquin v. French, ubi sup. and 1 Cox, 9; Lord Eldon, Bootle v. Blundell, 1 Mer. 220-2, as to which case see 1 De G. & Smale, 140; Aldridge v. Wallscourt, 1 Ball & B. 314; though Lord Hardwicke appears to have allowed the consideration of the amount of the debt and of the value of the property to influence him in one important case, Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 201, notwithstanding his declared opinion in Inchiquin v. French, supra; and see Gray v. Minnethorpe, 3 Ves. 103, before Lord Loughborough; and in Stapleton v. Colville, For. 208, Lord Talbot was willing to have admitted it: where parol evidence may be received in the construction of a will has been noticed in the former volume, p. 556, et seq., and see the cases in the note, 1 Eden, 39.

(d) Lord Cowper so states the rule, Dolman v. Smith, Prec. Ch. 458; Gilbert, Eq. R. 129; but yet he decided that case on the construction of the whole will, which he considered not to afford evidence of an intention to exempt; and see Fereyes v. Robertson, Bunb. 301, 1 Bro. 462.

(e) V. int. al. 11 Ves. 186, Sir W. Grant.

(f) Greene v. Greene, 4 Mad. 148.

(g) Dawes v. Scott, 5 Russ. 34, is one amongst many instances that might be cited; see Jarm. on Wills, 587, et seq.

(h) Lord Hardwicke, Ambl. 38; Lord Thurlow, Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 5; Tait v. Lord Northwick, 4 Ves. 816; Hancox v. Abbey, Sir W. Grant, 11 Ves. 186; 2 Jarman on Wills, 565; Noel v. Henley, 7 Price, 264. Whether the direction is to sell to pay particular debts, or a charge; and whether it is to be sold out and out for the payment of debts, or in aid, it seems to be the same thing; Lord C. B. 7 Price, 264; and see 2 Jarman, 565. Mr. Jarman, it is to be observed, considers that Sir W. Grant's decision in Hancock v. Abbey was inconsistent with the principle of the decision in the last-cited case, so far as regards a charge of particular debts; v. ibid. p. 595.

shall be considered as amounting to an exoneration of the personal estate; however some of our most distinguished judges, feeling the great importance of fixing the rules of property, have, as is before mentioned, made the attempt.

Lord Thurlow thus laid down the rule: "Where there is a declaration plain that shall stand in lieu of express words"—"if there be a declaration plain or manifestation clear, so that it is apparent upon the face of the will that there is such a plain intention, the rule then is, not to disappoint, but to carry such intent into execution" (a).

Sometimes the terms "irresistible inference" have been used, in respect of which Lord Alvanley observed, "The inference must be such as to leave no doubt upon the mind of the judge who is to decide it"—"it must be irresistible to his mind (b), it need not be such that no man alive can doubt it: but it must not be a case of presumption, for then we shall get into that miserable way of explaining it by evidence" (c).

"Upon looking," said Lord Eldon, "through the several cases "which have been decided during more than a century past, I think I should have been authorized to say at the commencement of it, that if such a rule were laid down (viz. that the intent to exempt the personal estate must be manifested in such a manner as that persons out of court on reading the will could not fail to agree that such was the intention) there could never in all human probability be any decision upon a will furnishing a solution of the question; and now at the close of it, I think I should have been authorized to say that which was then probable would be the case; for on a comparison of all the cases which have arisen it is scarcely possible to find any two in which the court altogether agrees with itself, there being scarcely a single circumstance that is considered in one case as a ground of inference in favour of the intention, but it is considered in other cases as against the same inference (d); and I can find no rule deducible from all that has been said on the subject but this, (which appears to be a rule supported by all

(a) Duke of Ancaster v. Mayer, 1 Bro. 462. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, adverting to this and the preceding passages, says, where the court, by what is called implication, as distinguished from express gift, gives property to a claimant, it does not by so doing contravene the rule, that an unequivocal intention to give must be found in the instrument; Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare, 50.

(b) Brummel v. Prothero, 3 Ves. J. 112.

(c) Ibid. Lord Eldon observed that it "seems strange to lay down as a rule that express words shall not be required, but yet there must be expressions tantamount to express words;" 1 Meriv. 220.

(d) Lord Eldon illustrates this position, 1 Meriv. 221-4, which is perhaps a little too strong; but there are many instances where some judges have considered a particular circumstance as expressive of an intention to exempt, which other judges have wholly disregarded; the funeral expenses as well as debts and legacies being charged on the real estate is one; 6 Ves. 570.

the cases taken together,) namely, that since it has been laid down that express words are not necessary to exempt the personal estate, there must be on the will that which is sometimes denominated 'evident demonstration,' sometimes 'plain intention,' and 'necessary implication,' to operate that exemption: this much can be collected from the cases. But when it is further inquired as to what it is that constitutes this evident demonstration, plain intention, or necessary implication, it appears to me that Lord Alvanley is right when he says, 'You are not to rest on conjecture, but the mind of the judge must be convinced that he is deciding according to what the testator intended.' I take it that this is what will be found to be the result of all the cases, that the judge is in every instance to look at the whole of the will together, and then ask himself whether he is convinced that it was the testator's intention to exempt the personal estate" (a).

The question, then, in each particular case resolves itself into this: Does there appear upon the whole testamentary disposition taken together, an intention on the part of the testator so expressed as to convince a judicial mind that it was meant not merely to charge the real estate, but so to charge it as to exempt the personal estate; for it is not upon an intention to charge the real, but an expressed intention also to discharge the personal estate, that the question is to be decided, and every testator must be presumed to have been cognizant of the law (b).

The general expressions above adverted to, leave the question much at large, but some definite rules for their application may be collected from the decisions both as regards what will not as well as what will be considered as operating by implication as an exoneration of the personal estate from the payment of debts and legacies.

It is well established that if the testator merely directs that his debts and legacies shall be a charge on his real estate, or if he in any other manner simply devotes his real estate to the payment of his debts and legacies, that is not considered as an indication of an intention to exonerate the personal estate; it therefore still remains primarily liable, and the real estate is only to be applied in aid of the per-

(a) Boottle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 220; and see Collis v. Robins, before Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, xi. Jurist, and 1 De G. & Smale, before referred to, where the leading cases on the subject are adverted to by the Vice-Chancellor. The principal cases in favour of the heir and against exoneration, are enumerated by the Vice-Chancellor, p. 139, and his own decision, ibid. page 142, must be added to the list.

(b) Lord Eldon, Boottle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 230; Dolman v. Smith, Gilb. Eq. R. 129; S. C. Prec. Ch. 456; Bickham v. Cruttwell, 3 My. & Cr. 772; 1 De G. & Smale, 141.

sonalty (a). The most anxious provision for payment of debts out of real estate, coupled with specific directions as to how the specialty debts are to be borne by the several devisees who are to take the estate in succession, which may only have been given on the supposition that such debts must fall on the real estate, though amounting to some indication of intention, will not of themselves be sufficient to exempt the personal estate (b). Nor is a mere gift of the personal estate to a stranger coupled with a charge of debts and legacies on the real estate sufficient (c), particularly if the gift be to the executor (d).

Where real estate is subjected to the payment of debts and legacies, and the personal estate is expressly subjected to certain legacies, to which it would of course have been liable, that is not considered as sufficient to show an intention to throw the debts exclusively on the personal estate; the testator might have meant only to distinguish those legacies from other legacies that were to be paid out of the personal estate (e).

Mere words of recognition of a debt accompanied by a charge will not make the particular estate charged the primary fund as between this and the other real estates; but if a person actively charges a particular estate with a particular debt it will (f).

In many of the cases (g) very considerable stress has been laid on the circumstance of the persons who were appointed executors being the same to whom the real estate had been before devised as trustees; in other cases this circumstance is considered as less material; but the degree of weight, said Lord Eldon, to which it is entitled, depends upon the whole will taken together, and if a distinction is to be found from the beginning to the end of the will between what they are called upon to do in the character of executors and what as trustees, and if they are directed as trustees to do that which is properly the duty of executors, this is a circumstance which deserves also to be attended to in determining what is the general intention of the testator (h): though, generally speaking, this circumstance is an argument against the

(a) Boottle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 220; Lamphier v. Despard, 2 Dr. & W. 63.

(b) Watson v. Brickwood, 9 Ves. 454; Tait v. Lord Northwick, 4 Ves. 816.

(c) Lord Thurlow, Ancaster v. Mayer, 1 Bro. 459, 461; Aldridge v. Wallscourt, 1 Ball & B. 316; but v. infra, p. 341.

(d) Lex Prætoria, 313; inf. p. 342.

(e) Sir W. Grant, Brydges v. Phillips, 6 Ves. 571; and see 2 Jarman, 672, et seq.

(f) Evans v. Cockeram, 1 Coll. 431. The Vice-Chancellor considering that there were so many cases on the subject did not in the first instance give a definitive opinion (though not expressing any doubt). The marginal note says in exoneration of his personalty and other estates, but this was not contended in the argument (see p. 430), nor is it warranted by the judgment, as I read them: the charge of 200*l.* stood on a different footing to the mortgage debt in this respect.

(g) As in Ancaster v. Mayer, 1 Bro. 461; 1 Meriv. 228-9.

(h) Lord Eldon, 1 Meriv. 227, and see 231.

intention to exempt, it may, under peculiar circumstances, be an argument in favour of that intention (a).

Where a testator has devoted a part of his real estates to the payment of his debts and annuities and legacies, and also of the costs of his trustees and executors, both as trustees and executors, this also is a circumstance on which great stress has been laid, as evidencing an intention to exonerate the personal estate, the real estate being thus made liable to the payment of such expences as exclusively regard the administration of the personal estate, such as the costs of probate and other costs sustained in the execution of the will (b); but this of itself does not necessarily imply more than that the real estate shall make good the deficiency of the personal estate for these purposes (c).

If the personal estate as a whole and not as a residue (d) is given (e) in the nature of a specific bequest, and another fund is supplied for the payment of the debts and legacies (f) and funeral and testamentary charges (g), or if the testator has by express words or any other declaration in his will shown an intention to preserve the personal estate entire for any given purpose whatever, that will be sufficient to exempt the personal estate (h): but, generally speaking, if the individual to whom the personal estate is given is the executor, it will not amount

(a) Ibid. 232, et v. 234-5. As to the effect of a direction that the executor, to whom property is specifically given, shall pay all the debts and legacies, and the order in which they are to be paid; see Henvell v. Whitaker, 3 Russ. 343, (10 Sim. 399,) and the other cases cited there and in Dover v. Gregory, 10 Sim. 394, et v. ibid. 399, 400, and Cross v. Kennington, 15 Law J., N. S. p. 167, M. R., et v. supra.

(b) Lord Eldon, Boottle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 239. In that case Lord Eldon, after an elaborate review of the authorities, and a minute examination of the words of the will and codicil, in reference to the previous authorities, (which case the student will do well to read with attention,) pronounced that the personal estate was exonerated.

(c) Mr. Jarman, after an examination of the cases on this subject, comes to the conclusion that no case, which rests on the simple circumstance, of the funeral and testamentary expenses and other charges which belong to the personalty only being charged on the real estate as exempting the personal estate, can now be depended upon. On Wills, ii. 568-571, and see 2 Fonbl. 287.

(d) See 2 Jarm. on Wills, 586.

(e) To a stranger, Lex Prætor. 314; and see Dolman v. Smith, Gilb. Eq. R. 128; Lex Præt. 314.

(f) Lord Thurlow, Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 5; and see Burton v. Knowlton, 3 Ves. 111.

(g) 2 Jarman, 586. But the intention is still to be looked to, if it can be collected from the will; see Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. W. 325: Lord Talbot, however, appears to have imported into this case, and to have founded his judgment in part on, the fact that the legatee was an infant. The cases in the 3rd vol. of Peere Williams' Reports, as is noticed more particularly hereafter, are posthumous, and are not of equal authority with those in the 1st and 2nd volumes.

(h) Lord Thurlow, 1 Bro. 466. But Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow considered that Adams v. Merrick, Eq. Ca. Ab. 271—where in favour of the widow, to whom the personal estate was given, a forced construction was given to the words "do and shall," so as to preserve it for the widow—was a weak case, and not to be followed, 1 Bro. 465. "There were two cases before Sir John Leach, Greene v. Greene, 4 Mad. 148, and Michell v. Michell, 5 Mad. 69, which went far to establish this, that where there first appears an intention to give the whole personal estate, and then a real estate is charged with the debts, the legatee will take the personal estate exonerated;" Sir E. Sugden, L. C., Lamphier v. Despard, 2 Dr. & W. 63.

to an exoneration, as he will be held, in that case, to take it as executor, subject to the claims of those who are entitled by law to have those claims satisfied as against the executor (a).

The intention to exempt or to exonerate the personal estate may be found not merely in the mode in which the personal estate is given, but also in the mode in which the real estate is given (b); as where an estate is devised to a devisee, he paying the incumbrances affecting it. Where the testator directs a portion of the proceeds to arise from the sale of his real estate to be applied in discharge of a particular debt and gives the remainder to some one else, the devisee of the residue of the proceeds cannot call for payment of the debt out of the personal estate: indeed it may be stated as a general rule, that in all cases where the will is so constructed as that nothing is given to the devisee but what shall remain after payment of debts, the devisee, under the ordinary rules of construction, will take subject to the payment of the debts, for that is all that is given to him (c).

Legacies stand on a different footing from debts; they are created by the will (d); and although the personal estate is the primary fund for the payment of legacies generally, as well as of debts, particular legacies may be so provided for as to be a charge upon the real estate exclusively. Thus, where nothing is given to the legatee but a sum to be raised out of the real estate, or if a portion of the real estate or its produce is severed from the estate, and it is directed that it shall be the fund for the payment of the legacies, the personal estate cannot be made to bear the burthen, the legatees are devisees pro tanto (e). It has been held that the real estate may also be so appropriated to the payment of a particular debt as to show a clear intention that it shall not be a burthen upon any other fund, though an intention to exonerate the personal estate is not in any other way expressed (f); and if in such a case the personal estate should be given expressly subject to debts, though this will create a considerable difficulty, yet if on the context the particular debt is clearly intended to be charged on the real estate only, Sir Wm. Grant thought that such a provision might

(a) Stephenson v. Heathcote, cited 1 Meriv. 227; French v. Chichester, 2 Vern. 569; and Lord Thurlow's and Lord Eldon's observations, 1 Meriv. 226-7; Lex Prætoria, 313, supra.

(b) Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. 186.

(c) Hale v. Cox, 3 Bro. 322; Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. 187-8, 190; Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 12 Sim. 206; Lockhart v. Hardy, x. Jur. 728; 9 Beav. 372, inf. p. 346; Wythe v. Heniker, 2 My. & Cr. was decided upon the special terms of the gift of the personal estate; see p. 644; and see 2 Jarman, 593-4.

(d) See 2 Dr. & W. 63, L. C. Sugden.

(e) Wilson v. Lord Bath, cited 4 Ves. 82; Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. 185; Lamphier v. Despard, 2 Dru. & W. 64.

(f) Sir W. Grant, Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. 186-7; but see as to the authority of this case, supra, p. 337, and 2 Jarman on Wills, 597-8.

be construed to extend to such debts only as had not been before provided for (a).

But it is not often that the decision upon one will can serve as a precedent for the decision on another, or even as a guide, excepting as it may recognize the general rules applicable to such cases (b); and these I have endeavoured to extract in the preceding cases. The cases have been particularly examined by Mr. Roper, "On Legacies" (c), and by Mr. Jarman, "On Wills" (d), to which learned works I would refer the reader for the qualifications of the general rules above adverted to, and for the doctrine generally.

It may here be observed, that if a particular portion of the personal estate be bequeathed subject to the payment of debts and legacies, as between the legatees, the residuary personal estate is exonerated, if there be a residuary bequest; but not where there is no gift of the residue (e); and that as between specific and pecuniary legatees, if there is a deficiency of the personal estate to satisfy all the legacies the loss is, as between them, to fall wholly on the pecuniary legatees; the law, as before remarked, considering a testator, when giving specific and pecuniary legacies, as saying by the very act (unless he declares himself, in effect, not to mean so to say) that if there is a deficiency, the loss shall be borne by the general legatees, and as a specific personal legatee shall not contribute towards a pecuniary legacy, much less shall a specific devisee of land (f). Neither the heir nor devisee can claim to have the real estate exonerated either against a specific or a pecuniary legatee (g).

It is to be observed that the exemption of the personalty in favour of legatees does not necessarily extend to the next of kin in the event of the failure of the bequest of the personalty by lapse or otherwise (h);

(a) 11 Ves. 189, Sir Wm. Grant; but see Wythe v. Henniker, ubi supra.

(b) See Lord Eldon's observations, 1 Mer. 224.

(c) By White, chap. xii. § 3, see the Summary, p. 709.

(d) Vol. ii. p. 564, et seq.

(e) Hewett v. Snare, 1 De G. & Sm. 333; Phillips v. Eastwood, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 270-1, 294. In the note to this case the authorities on the subject of exoneration are collected, p. 295; Choat v. Yeates, 1 Jac. & W. 102, the Lord Chancellor observed that in Holford v. Wood, 4 Ves. 76, in which the decision was the other way, there was no gift of the residue; Gray v. Minnethorp, 3 Ves. 103, 2 Fonbl. 287: and see 2 Jarman, p. 598.

(f) Lord Macclesfield, Clifton v. Burt, 1 P.W. 679, 680; (2 Coll. 505). The point decided was, reversing Lord Harcourt's decree, that a pecuniary legatee shall not stand in the place of specialty creditors who have exhausted the personal estate as against real estate specifically devised.

(g) Hamilton v. Worley, 2 Ves. J. 65.

(h) Lord Thurlow, Hale v. Cox, 3 Bro. 324, and Lord Henley's note; Noel v. Lord Henley, 7 Price, 258; 2 Jarman on Wills, 592. See the distinction between the case where the exemption fails together with the gift of the personal estate, and where the devisee is in all events to take cum onere; 2 Jarm. p. 593; et v. infra, pp. 346-7, additional note.

for where the testator bequeaths his personal estate in such manner as to exonerate it, in the hands of the legatee, from the payment of debts or legacies or both, it is presumed that such exoneration is only meant to be in favour of the person to whom the personal estate is given; if therefore such person should die before the testator, so that he cannot take the benefit of the bequest to him, and the personal estate therefore goes to the next of kin of the testator, they cannot take the benefit of the exoneration (a).

Where the personal estate is given to a legatee, the widow for instance, in consideration of the legatee giving up certain securities which the testator has entered into, the personal estate so given will be held to be exonerated from the payment of debts (b).

Where an estate is limited to trustees for payment of debts and legacies or either, if the amount is once properly raised, although the trustees may waste or misapply the money so raised, neither creditors or legatees can require that the amount shall be again raised out of the estate (c). Although all the real estates of a deceased are now (d) rendered liable for his debts generally, the creditors have no charge on the land, so that they cannot follow it, their remedy is merely personal (e).

It may be well here to consider a description of Exoneration of a different nature. It not unfrequently happens that a person who takes an estate subject to a charge, pays off the charge, and in such case, in the absence of an express declaration on the subject, a question may arise whether the estate is to be considered as exonerated, or whether the charge is to be kept up for the benefit of the person who has paid off the charge: the following cases will exhibit the leading doctrines on this subject.

A tenant for life paying off a charge upon the estate (f), in the same transaction merging the security by taking an assignment connecting it with the legal estate of inheritance, primâ facie puts an end to the charge, for he does an act indicative of such intention; but something is required to be done by a tenant for life to manifest an intention to exonerate the inheritance; a simple payment of the charge,

(a) Waring v. Ward, 5 Ves. 670; Noel v. Lord Henley, 7 Price, 241, 259; Roper on Legacies, 745.

(b) Blount v. Hipkins, 7 Simons, p. 43; Waring v. Ward, 5 Ves. 670: see 2 Fonbl. 287-8.

(c) Anon., 1 Salk. 153, in Dom. Proc.; Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 736; and see Carter v. Barnardiston, 1 P. W. 518, 519;

Oldfield v. Oldfield, 1 Vern. 336; Harrison v. Cage, 2 Vernon, 85; 2 Ves. 603; Juxon v. Brian, Prec. Ch. 143; Hutchinson v. Massareene, 2 Ball & B. 49, inf. p. 381.

(d) 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, supra, vol. i. pp. 174, 295.

(e) V. infra, p. 387.

(f) V. supra, p. 308, et infra.

without more, will not extinguish the right of the tenant for life to have the charge raised out of the estate: he has no obligation or duty to make a declaration, or to do any act demonstrating his intention for that purpose: the burthen of proof is upon those who allege that in paying off the charge he intended to exonerate the estate (a); but it is wholly a question of intention, and evidence may be adduced to show the contrary conclusion to be true; such evidence only shows the character in which the act done is to be received (b).

If an adult tenant in tail in possession (c) or a tenant in fee-simple pays off a charge, that payment is presumed primâ facie to be made in favour of the estate, and it is the same whether he takes an assignment or not (d); and though there has been some conflict of opinion on this subject, it may now be considered that the rule of the court is settled, that there is no difference in the operation of the rule between a charge merely equitable and one that is supported by an outstanding legal estate (e). Where a person executes deeds under an erroneous impression as to his liability, of course those deeds cannot be treated as evidence of an intention to exonerate; as where a person, tenant for life, under the understanding that he was personally liable as residuary legatee to pay portions which in fact were exclusively or at least primarily chargeable on the real estate, paid the portions, and obtained releases, and executed deeds in conformity with such supposed liability, it was held no presumption could arise from acts so done that there was an intention to exonerate the real estate (f).

(a) Lord Langdale, 7 Beav. 232, and the cases in the next note. As to what are the liabilities of the tenant for life, in respect of incumbrances, v. int. al. 2 Atk. 463; 3 Atk. 201; 1 Ves. 93; 2 Bro. 128-9; and 5 Ves. 107; et infra, chap. on Mortgages.

(b) Lord Langdale, Burrell v. Earl of Egremont, 7 Beav. 226-7, in which all the principal authorities were cited; Astley v. Milles, (Sir A. Hart), 1 Sim. 326, 327. The Vice-Chancellor said the court was to act upon the intention of Mr. Milles, and was therefore bound to hear all the evidence that could be fairly given on the subject, and he decided on the evidence, ib. 346; there the charge was subsisting at law, p. 341; Earl of Buckinghamshire v. Hobart, 3 Swanst. 186, 199, Lord Eldon: et v. Trevor v. Trevor, 2 My. & K. 678.

(c) As to whom there was formerly a conflict of opinion, see D. of Chandos v. Talbot, 2 P. W. 601, 604; Chester v. Willes, Ambl. 246.

(d) Lord Eldon, St. Paul v. Visct. Dudley and Ward, 15 Ves. 172, and Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 278; where his Lordship says the rule does not apply in the case of infancy; Jones

v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 206, 218; 1 Ball & B. 140, and Turn. & R. 183; Earl of Buckingham v. Hobart, 3 Swanst. 186, 199; (see Sir A. Hart's observations on this case in regard to the illustration given by Lord Eldon). Drinkwater v. Combe, 2 Sim. & S. 345, is a case of a person whose estate was defeasible by executory devise; Wigsell v. Wigsell, 2 Sim. & S. 364, is a case where tenant in tail in remainder paid off an incumbrance and took an assignment of the security during the life of the tenant for life, and afterwards became entitled in possession; he declared no intention one way or the other, ib. 369: in both cases the charges were held to be subsisting. Sir A. Hart considered both these cases to be exceptions to the general rule, 1 Sim. 345.

(e) Sir A. Hart, Astley v. Milles, 1 Sim. 344.

(f) Burrell v. Lord Egremont, 7 Beavan, 232; and see Countess of Shrewsbury v. Earl of Shrewsbury, 1 Ves. J. 233; Pitt v. Pitt, Turn. & R. 180; St. Paul v. Viscount Dudley and Ward, 15 Ves. 173.

It is very clear that a person becoming entitled to an estate subject to a charge for his own benefit, may, if he chooses, at once take the estate and keep up the charge. Upon this subject a court of equity is not guided by the rules of law. It will sometimes hold a charge to be extinguished where it would subsist at law, and sometimes preserve it where at law it would be merged. The question is upon the intention, actual or presumed, of the person in whom the interests are united. In most instances it is, with reference to the party himself, of no sort of use to have a charge on his own estate, and where that is the case it will be held to sink, unless something shall have been done by him to keep it on foot (a). These presumptions may be rebutted by evidence (b).

(a) Sir Wm. Grant, Forbes v. Moffat, 18 Ves. 390.

(b) Ibid.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

The following is an abstract of the case of Lockhart v. Hardy, x. Jur. 728, 2 Real P. and C. Ca. 293, 9 Beav. 379, cited supra, pp. 334, 342 :—A copyhold estate, called Field Head, was vested in John Waslie, the testator, to secure the repayment to him by one Smith, of two sums of money. The testator assigned the debt and the mortgage of the Field estate to one Browne, by way of mortgage, to secure 1600*l.* borrowed by him from Browne. The testator was also entitled to an estate called Buttermere, subject to a mortgage made by him to the same Browne, for 4460*l.* By his will the testator gave to his nephew, James Lockhart, the Buttermere estate in fee, “he paying the mortgage thereon.” In another part of his will he gave the Field Head estate to his sister-in-law for life, with remainder to her daughter Elizabeth, in fee. He gave the residue of his real and personal estate to John Hardy, “in trust to give aid and payment of my debts and legacies.” By what he called a schedule to his will, he gave several legacies, and amongst them to Mr. Browne, the mortgagee, “through the medium of my executors, 2000*l.*, they being directed therewith to exonerate my Buttermere mortgage, and to them 1000*l.* to clear in part my Field Head mortgage.” Browne foreclosed the mortgage of the Field estate against Smith and the representatives of Lockhart. Under these circumstances, 1st, the devisee of Buttermere estate claimed to have the whole mortgage money, 4460*l.*, paid out of the general estate; and, 2nd, the devisees of the Field estate, which had so been foreclosed, claimed the legacy of 1000*l.* intended for their benefit. Lord Langdale held, as to the first point, that the claim would have been good if the devise had been simply of the Buttermere estate, or of the Buttermere estate subject to the mortgage thereon (1); but that the words, “he paying the mortgage thereon,” imposed a duty on the devisee, and amounted to a direction or con-

(1) 9 Beav. 382; see Serle v. St. Eloy, 2 P. W. 386: “The devise of the estate, subject to the incumbrances, is no more than what is implied, for the testator could not do it otherwise;” per M. R. ibid.; Bickham v. Crutwell, 3 My. & Cr. 763; and see 2 Jarm. on Wills, 553, 554.

dition that he should pay the mortgage, or take the estate with the burthen upon it. His lordship further held, that this general obligation was qualified by the gift in the schedule to the extent that, to the amount of 2000*l.*, the mortgage should be borne by the testator's estate. (9 Beav. 383.)

As to the second point, his lordship held that the devisees of the Field estate were entitled to the 1000*l.*; the benefit was capable of being afforded, though not in the manner contemplated. (Ibid. pp. 383-4).

The following is an abstract of another branch of the case of Lockhart v. Hardy, 9 Beavan, p. 349, referred to ubi supra, which belongs more properly to the chapter on Mortgages:—A. mortgaged certain premises to B. in fee, and B. afterwards, by deed to which the mortgagor was a party, mortgaged the benefit of the mortgage to C., who foreclosed against both A. and B., and sold the premises at a price which fell short of the amount due to him on his security. C. then carried in a claim in a creditor's suit, which had been instituted to administer B.'s estate, for the difference between the debt due to him and the sum realized by the sale, and the Master allowed it. Exceptions were taken to the Master's report, as to the admission of the claim, and they were allowed. The rule, as laid down in this case, (9 Beavan, 354-5-6,) is that where a debt is secured by mortgage, covenant, and bond, the mortgagee may pursue all his remedies at the same time. If he obtain full payment on the bond or covenant, the mortgagor becomes entitled to the estate; if he obtain part payment only, he may go on with his foreclosure suit and foreclose for the remainder. So long as the mortgagee holds the estate, and is able to give effect to the mortgagor's right to redeem, he may proceed on the bond. Where the mortgagee forecloses, and the mortgaged premises prove insufficient for payment of the debt thereby secured, the mortgagee may sue on the covenant contained in the mortgage, or on a collateral bond, or may bring in a claim in a creditor's suit for the difference; but if he does so, he thereby opens the foreclosure, and the mortgagor is at liberty to redeem and so get back his estate. If, however, the mortgagee forecloses and then sells the mortgaged premises, he cannot sue on the covenant or bond, or bring in a claim in a creditor's suit, because by the sale he has put it out of his power to give the estate back to the mortgagor if he should think proper to redeem; so that the right to sue can only be enforced where there is a possibility of opening the foreclosure. Lord Thurlow's opinion, as to this question, in Took v. Hartley, 2 Dick. 785, differs from Lord Eldon's in Perry v. Barker, 8 Ves. 531; the decision in the principal case is in conformity with Lord Eldon's view.

SECTION IV.—*Trust Deeds for Payment of Debts.*I.—Preliminary Observations.

Putting the Bankrupt Laws out of the question, a Person is at liberty to assign his Property for the Benefit of all his Creditors, though for the purpose of Defeating some particular Creditor.

But if there be Fraud it will vitiate the Transaction.

If Grantor retains the Deed and gives no Notice of it to the Creditors, it will be considered Fraudulent and Void as against subsequent Judgment Creditors.

But it is not a Fraud for a Man, not a Trader, to assign all his Property for the Benefit of some particular Creditors, though one of the Trusts is to pay Part to himself.

If one of two Trustees dissents, the Property passes to the assenting Trustee.

Conveyance for Payment of Debts to which no Creditor is a Party, nor any particular Debts expressed, is Fraudulent within 27 Eliz. c. 4.

Conveyance of all a Trader's Property was formerly an Act of Bankruptcy.

Provisions of 6 Geo. IV. c. 16.

Commission must issue within Six Months.

A Trader may give Preference if he do not exhaust his whole Estate.

Stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 57, § 32. Conveyance void against Assignees of Insolvent if made within Three Months before Imprisonment.

Trusts for Payment of Debts exempted from Thellusson Act.

II.—Doctrines relating to Trusts of this description, particularly in Equity.

Lands stand charged only with Debts owing at the date of the Deed, unless otherwise expressed.

On Trust created by Will, all Debts will be included.

On Trust to pay all Debts affecting the Donor's Estate, Bond Debts let in, there being no Debts that directly affected the Estate.

The Court will give all Creditors for whom the Trust is intended the Benefit of it, without reference to their Compliance with merely formal Directions.

The Court will assist in the Enforcement of Agreements for Composition, where they are obtained without Fraud.

But the Terms of the Agreement must be complied with in Substance.

Where Deed is made between Debtor and such Creditors as shall subscribe the Deed within a limited Time, Creditors not complying will have no Interest in the Trust.

Where a Composition Deed is to be void if not executed by a certain Day, and yet the Parties act under the Deed, though void at Law, it may be valid in Equity.

But where a Creditor seeks the Benefit of the Deed, he must comply with substantial Conditions.

A Creditor is not bound to take Less than his Debt, unless the Agreement is substantially fulfilled by the Debtor.

But if the Debtor fail in making Payment by limited Time, the Court may, in respect of the Interest of the other Creditors, prevent a Creditor taking Advantage of the Breach giving him Compensation.

Those claiming the Benefit of a Trust must take it as given.

If Debentures are authorized to be given at the Discretion of the Trustees, and the Trustees act, the Court will not interfere with their Discretion.

If the Trustees decline to act the Court will not let the Trust fail for want of a Trustee.

Persons not Objects of the Trust cannot enforce it, though they might derive a Benefit from its Execution.

Creditors are paid Interest on their Debts according as they are entitled to it or not, independently of the Trust.

Under particular Circumstances Creditors not entitled to Interest will be allowed it in Equity.

The mere Direction by Deed to pay Debts, infers neither Contract nor Trust for Payment of Interest.

Interest may be Payable as between Grantor and Creditors, but not as between certain Creditors and others whose Debts carry Interest.

Bond Creditor not entitled to receive for Principal and Interest more than the Penalty.

Debts barred by Statute will not be revived by the Creation of a Trust.

But Statute ceases to run from the Time of Creation of the Trust.

Difference as regards Personal Estate in Wills—Express Direction is in-operative.

III.—Collateral Questions arising out of Arrangements between Debtor and Creditor.

Transactions of this kind ought to be founded on Good Faith, which, if not observed, will render Transactions arising out of them invalid.

The Deed is considered to speak the Language of all the Creditors, both towards the Debtor and each other.

Creditors becoming Parties to the Deed agree to the Justice of its Stipulations.

This takes it out of the Principle of Accord without Satisfaction.

No Creditor can obtain an Advantage not given to the other Creditors under the Deed.

If he do it is a Fraud on the Policy of the Law, and any Security given becomes invalid.

Creditor not entitled to obtain for himself a Collateral Security of another Person, even for Instalments.

The Case is different if the Transaction be communicated to the Creditors, and they do not object.

Greenwood v. Ledbetter.

Redemption by Creditors.

Parties to Suits for Execution of the Trusts.

SOME notice has already been taken of conveyances and assignments of property to trustees in trust to sell and distribute the proceeds amongst the creditors of the assignor (a). It has been observed, that such a conveyance, if an instrument of Agency only, does not of itself create a trust which the creditors can enforce against the grantor; the only cestui que trust being in such cases, generally speaking, the assignor; and in determining this, the court is guided by the particular circumstances (b). The transactions which we are now about to consider are those in which there is confessedly a complete constituted Trust in favour of the creditors (c).

It is to be observed that, putting the bankrupt laws out of the case, a person is at liberty, without question, to assign all his property for the benefit of his creditors, though it may be for the purpose of defeating some particular creditor of his execution in an action commenced by him against the debtor. A debtor in securing the equal distribution of his effects amongst all his creditors is only performing a moral duty (d); but to give validity to such a transaction, there must be an absence of fraud or misrepresentation (e), and of all underhand dealing and secret understandings as between the assignor and the trustee, or any particular creditor: fraud may vitiate such a transaction at law as well as in equity (f). If the grantor retains the possession of the deed with a view to produce it or not as he pleases, and no notice of it is given to the creditors, it will be considered as fraudulent and void as against creditors by judgment subsequently obtained (g).

It is not of itself a fraud for a man who is not a trader to assign the whole of his property for the benefit of some particular creditors, though one of the trusts be to pay a part of the profits to himself (h). It

(a) V. supra, p. 58; and see Field v. Lord Donoughmore, 1 Dru. & W. 228; Wilding v. Richards, 1 Coll. 660; but see ib. p. 664. In that case it was held, under the circumstances, that the deed was a deed of trust, not an instrument of agency, which is the distinction.

(b) Bill v. Cureton, 2 My. & K. 503; Wilding v. Richards, 1 Coll. 664.

(c) See, on this subject, Lewin on Trusts, 387; Hill on Trustees, 330, et v. sup. p. 59.

(d) Lord Ellenborough, Pickstock v. Lyster, 3 Maule & S. 374; Le Blanc, J. 376; Bayley, J. ib. 376; Dampier, 377; and see Pollen v. Husband, infra.

(e) Pollen v. Husband, 1 P. W. 751; Cann v. Cann, 1 P. W. 723; Tuck v. Tooke, 9 Barn. & Cr. 437; S. C. 4 Bingh. C. P. 224; Britten v. Hughes, 5 Bingh. 460; Greenwood v. Lidbetter, 12 Price, 183.

(f) Ibid. 377; Buller, J., 5 T. R. 426; and see Dutton v. Morrison, 17 Ves. 197; and the other cases cited, Lewin on Trusts, p. 377, note (b), et v. infra, in this section.

(g) Tarback v. Marbury, 2 Vernon, 509. The grantor had there also reserved to himself an unlimited power to alien the property. It is to be observed that it is competent to a jury to find that a deed attested by a witness was delivered; and it may be presumed that the donor intended that the deed so delivered was to have all its legal consequences; Hope v. Harman, xi. Jurist, 1097.

(h) Lord Ellenborough, Nunn v. Wilsmore, 8 T. R. 528; Ashhurst, J. 5 T. R. 425. The trust there was to pay all or such part of the assignor's debts as the trustees should in their discretion think proper, ib. p. 523; Pickstock v. Lister, 3 Maule & S. 371, supra; there the object was avowedly to delay the plaintiff of his execution; and see the other cases cited, Lewin on Trusts, 376.

is neither illegal nor immoral to prefer one set of creditors to another (a), and such a preference is not void under the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5 (b). A conveyance for payment of debts generally, to which no creditor is a party, nor any particular debts expressed, is a fraudulent conveyance within the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4, and therefore is void as against a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration (c). How persons in embarrassed circumstances, and not being traders, may, under the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, effect a composition with their creditors, has been noticed in the former volume (d). Where there is an assignment to two trustees, and one assents and the other dissents, the property passes to that assenting trustee: a party may by express proviso make the deed void, unless all the trustees assent to the estate; but unless there be such a proviso, the property will pass to the assenting trustee (e).

As regards traders, a conveyance of all the bankrupt's property, though in trust for creditors, was always held to be an act of bankruptcy, the reason being that a trader has not a right by deed to place his property under a distribution different from that ordained by the bankrupt law (f); it is now so by statute as being constructively fraudulent (g); but by the 4th section of that statute, the execution of such a deed shall not be deemed an act of bankruptcy, unless a commission issue within six months from the execution thereof by such trader, provided the deed be executed and attested as therein is provided, and notice thereof be given in the London Gazette and otherwise, as provided by the act. But it was never held (h), even in the

(a) Lord Kenyon, 5 T. R. 424, et v. ibid. 425, Ashhurst, J.

(b) Supra, vol. i. pp. 172, 185; Meux v. Howell, 4 East, 9.

(c) Leech v. Leech, 1 Ch. Ca. 249; Sugd. V. and P. 9th ed. ii. 159, 11th ed. 929.

(d) Supra, vol. i. p. 203.

(e) Small v. Marwood, 9 Barn & C. 307; Browell v. Reed, 1 Hare, 435; v. sup. p. 38.

(f) Ex parte Bourne, 16 Ves. 148; and see Dutton v. Morrison, 17 Ves. 197; Pickstock v. Lyster, 3 M. & Sel. 371; Lewin on Trusts, 378-9, 380, where the substance of the cases is fully stated.

(g) 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 3; and although not intended to defeat or delay creditors, it has been held an act of bankruptcy within that statute; Stewart v. Moody, 1 Cr. Mees. & Rosc. 777; 5 Tyr. 493; et v. Moser v. Newman, 6 Bing. 556; and although the deed has not been acted upon, nor passed out of the trader's hands; Botcherby v. Lancaster, 1 Ad. & Ell. 77.

(h) Lord Kenyon, Estwick v. Caillaud, 5 T. R. 424; et v. Jacob v. Shepherd, cited 1 Burr. 478; Unwin v. Oliver, mentioned ib. 481; and see Yeates v. Groves, 1 Ves. J. 282. In such cases the question is, whether by the partial transfer of his estate he has incapacitated himself from carrying on his business, by the insolvency which would ensue; Wedge v. Newlyn, 4 B. & Ad. K. B. 831; and see the modern decisions as to fraudulent preference reviewed, and the extent to which the doctrine has been carried examined; Morgan v. Brundrett, 5 Barn. & Ad. 289; S. C., 2 Nev. & M. 280; Balme v. Hutton, 2 Younge & J. 101; Gibbins v. Phillips, 7 Barn. & C. 529. It may be incidentally observed, that if a will be made of real estate, and afterwards a trust-deed for the payment of debts, this, in equity, independently of the modern Statute of Wills, does not amount to a revocation of the will; see Brydges v. Duchess of Chandos, 2 Ves. Jun. 428; 2 Jarm. on Wills, 176.

case of a trader, that he could not fairly give a preference, provided that the property so set apart for the payment of one or more favourite creditors did not exhaust his whole estate, or approach so near to a disposition of the whole, as that the exception was merely colourable, and provided it were not in contemplation of bankruptcy and with a view to a fraudulent preference (a).

By the stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 57, § 32, every conveyance or assignment of any estate, real or personal, in trust for creditors, is fraudulent and void against the assignees of an Insolvent, if made within three calendar months before the commencement of his imprisonment, or with a view or intention of petitioning the court for his discharge under the act. A trust for payment of debts is expressly exempted from the operation of the Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98 (b), restricting the period within which accumulations of rents and profits may be made.

We now proceed to consider the Doctrines more particularly applicable to trusts of this description when they come before the Court of Chancery, noticing some incidental points as to trusts created by will.

Where lands are subjected by deed to a trust for payment of debts, the lands will stand charged with such debts only as were owing at the time of making the deed, unless it be expressed to be for the payment of such other debts as the grantor shall afterward contract, or to that effect (c). When the trust is created by will, all debts which the testator may contract will be included (d), unless as in Lodington v. Kime the trust is confined to scheduled debts, or debts due at the date of the will: Sir J. Leach was of opinion that a debt originating in a covenant to pay six months after the testator's death was not such a

(a) Ibid., and Bevan v. Nunn, 9 Bingham 107; et v. sup. vol. i. p. 201, stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. As to what deeds executed by a trader will be considered as good, and not fraudulent and void, within the provisions of the acts relating to bankrupts, see Lewin, p. 378, et seq.

(b) V. supra, p. 166.

(c) Purefoy v. Purefoy, 1 Vern. 29. In Leukener v. Freeman, Freeman 235, Prec. Ch. 105, the plaintiff had brought an action for crim. con. against Mr. Montague, who, before judgment, conveyed his estates for payment of certain scheduled creditors, purposely to exclude the plaintiff; the plaintiff, after he had obtained judgment, filed his bill to get rid of the deed for fraud. The Lord Chancellor and Master of the Rolls held that the deed was neither fraudulent nor void; but instead of dismissing the bill, decreed that the estate should be sold, and that the scheduled debts should be paid in the first place, and that the surplus should be applied as the court should direct; thereby holding, as it is presumed, that the plaintiff, by virtue of his judgment, would have a lien in equity on such surplus, which he might make effectual in that suit: see the decree in the note to Freeman, 237; in the report in Prec. Ch. 106, it would appear that the court had declared that the plaintiff might come in under the deed upon the surplus.

(d) 3 Lev. 433. It may be observed that a man cannot make himself creditor of another, by volunteering to pay his obligations; Lord Brougham, C., Hodgson v. Shaw, 3 M. & K. 190.

debt as a testator who provided by his will for the payment of his debts intended to include (a). A debt honestly, though not legally due, as a debt incurred by an infant for necessities, will be included under a general trust for payment of debts (b), at least when created by will. Where the trust was to pay off all debts affecting the donor's estates, there being no debts that directly affected the estates, bond debts were let in, hesitatingly, by Sir E. Sugden, C.; because as they can easily be converted into judgments, and under the old law were clearly a charge on real assets by descent, he conceived that the donor must have intended to include them (c).

The general disposition of the court is to give to all creditors for whom the trust is intended the benefit of the trust, without reference to their compliance or non-compliance with such provisions and directions as may be considered to be merely formal. Where a trust was created by letters patent for payment of such creditors as should come in within a year, it was decided that a creditor might still file a bill to have the benefit of the trust, though he had not come in within the year (d); if their coming in after the time fixed is inconsistent with any stipulation in the deed, it will of course be different.

The Court of Chancery will assist in the enforcement of agreements of debtors with their creditors for a composition, both in favour of and against the creditors, provided they are obtained without fraud or misrepresentation (e); but the essential stipulations of the agreement must be complied with, at least in substance, or the court will not interfere. Where the trusts of the deed were to sell for payment of the grantor's debts, should the creditors come in and agree to accept the composition offered, Sir T. Clarke held, that this was a trust for all or none, and that those who had executed the deed could not file a bill to have it executed for the benefit of those who might come in whilst there were any who had not agreed to the terms of the deed (f). And where the deed is expressly stated to be made between the debtor and such creditors as shall subscribe the deed, and a time is limited within which this is to be done, no creditor who has not executed the deed, unless he has by his own acts as regards himself, and by the

(a) Wathen v. Smith, 4 Mad. 331.

(b) Marlow v. Pitfield, 1 P. W. 560; with interest, if the trust be to that effect, Lewin, 387.

(c) Douglas v. Allen, 2 Dru. & W. 213; Pearce v. Slocombe, 3 Y. & Coll. 84.

(d) Dunch v. Kent, 1 Vernon, 260. The trust was created by letters patent upon special trust for all those creditors who should come in within a year. Each creditor, it is to be observed, had a distinct case; see p. 261, ibid.

(e) Pollen v. Sir J. Huband, 1 P. W. 751.

(f) Atherton v. Worth, 1 Dick. 376. The marginal note in Dunch v. Kent, 1 Vern. 260, is not warranted by the case, but the circumstances were different; there was no stipulation on the part of the debtor in that case.

acquiescence of the parties interested as regards them become a quasi party as before adverted to, will have any interest in the trust (a). As regards a deed of composition, in which it is generally declared, that if the creditors do not execute it by a certain day the assignment shall be void, and the deed is not executed by all the creditors within the prescribed time, so that the deed is void at law, Lord Eldon said, It is the constant course in equity where the creditors have acted under the deed (b) and treated it as valid, though they may not have executed it, that the Court of Chancery will also act under it and treat it as valid as against the assignors, whether the creditors have executed it or not (c), that is, it is presumed, if no objection has been made. But where a creditor seeks the benefit of the trust-deed under such circumstances, the court will see that he has faithfully performed the essential conditions of the deed before it suffers him to take any benefit under it; if he has taken any step inconsistent with its provisions, the court will not allow him to take any benefit under it (d). Whatever may be the general rule, if there be any general rule, with regard to the indulgence shown to a creditor under a composition deed who does not claim under or assent to the deed within the time limited by the deed, it does not apply to a creditor who actively refuses to assent to the deed within the time specified, and who does not afterwards retract that refusal within the time (e).

On the other hand, it is a general rule that a creditor having entered into an agreement for a composition is not bound to take less than his debt, unless the agreement shall be absolutely and strictly fulfilled on the part of the debtor (f). Still, however, where a breach on the part of the debtor has been committed by not making a stipulated payment within the limited time, yet in respect of the interests of the other creditors, the Court of Chancery may prevent a creditor from taking advantage of that breach, so as to defeat the arrangement, taking care however that the rights of the creditor under the composition be properly secured to him (g).

(a) See Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 157.

(b) See Ex parte Shaw, 1 Mad. 600.

(c) Spottiswoode v. Stockdale, G. Coop. 102.

(d) Field v. Donoughmore, 1 Dru. & War. 227, 228, 229, 231, 232, reversing Lord Plunket's decree; and see Spottiswoode v. Stockdale, G. Coop. 105-6.

(e) Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, Johnson v. Kershaw, xi. Jur. 795.

(f) Lord Eldon, Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 16 Ves. 374; and see Sewell v. Musson, 1 Vern. 211, 1 Eq. Abr. 28; 2 Atk. 527; there the creditor had agreed to take less than his debt, provided a certain sum were paid him on a particular day, which was not paid; he was allowed to sue for his whole debt: and see Ex parte Bennett, 2 Atk. 526, and the other cases in the notes to that case; those are cases of agreements with an individual creditor; and see Watts v. Hyde, 2 Coll. 376, stated in the additional note, No. 1, to this section.

(g) Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 16 Ves. 375, and see 373; it was insisted that as the notes had been given, the stipulation had in effect

It is scarcely necessary to repeat that those who claim the benefit of a trust created by deed or otherwise, must be content to take what is given to them, and in the way and under such restrictions as it may be given. Where the trust is that debentures shall be given to the creditors, if the trustees are authorized by the deed to refuse debentures at their discretion to any lawful creditor, and the trustees are willing to act, the Court of Chancery will not take upon itself to control or to exercise such discretion, nor grant a power to the Master to ascertain the parties entitled to the benefit of the deed. Even if the trustees have no such absolute discretion, yet every creditor, before he can have the benefit of the deed, must tender his debt for examination by the trustees. If the trustees decline to act, it will depend upon the terms of the trust-deed whether the court can act, and refer it to the Master to inquire into the debts (a). Where the deed points at equality a creditor cannot first realize any security he may hold, and then come in rateably with the other creditors (b).

Persons who are not objects of the trust cannot enforce it, though they might derive an advantage from its execution (c).

As regards Interest, the practice is that creditors shall be paid interest or not, according as they are entitled to it or not independently of the trust (d); under the old law therefore, simple-contract creditors were not entitled to interest. But when they had obtained reports of their debts in a suit for the administration of the trust, interest would run from that time; and where it appeared that a fund had been realized, which, according to the trusts of the deed, was applicable to the payment of creditors whose debts did not carry interest, but by the interposition of the persons entitled to the residue of the fund the money had not been paid but had been laid out at interest, such creditors were held to be entitled to interest (e). The been complied with, and that the creditor knew that he would have to rely on the security of the notes.

(a) Wain v. Lord Egmont, 3 My. & K. 448, Sir J. Leach. The late cases of Prendergast v. Lushington, 5 Hare, 171. The Attorney-General v. Mosley, xii. Jur. 889, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce; and Fordyce v. Bridges, 10 Beav. 111, 119, (where the principle is stated,) are instances, in addition to those which have been referred to in the preceding chapters, of the court refusing to exercise discretionary powers vested in trustees, where they have declined to exercise their discretion, and refusing to interfere with a discretion fairly exercised; v. sup. pp. 85-87.

(b) Buck v. Shippam, 14 Sim. 243; 1 Phill. 697; Cullingworth v. Loyd, 2 Beav. 385;

Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 372; et v. inf. 359.

(c) Palk v. Lord Clinton, 12 Ves. 56-7.

(d) Shirley v. Lord Ferrers, 1 Bro. 42; Hamilton v. Houghton, 1 Bli. 187, Lord Eldon; ibid. 190, Lord Redesdale. As to the present state of the law in regard to interest on simple contract debts; by the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 28, §§ 28, 29, 30, interest may be recovered on sums payable by virtue of a written instrument at a certain time, and in cases where a demand has been made in writing as provided by the act. Interest on a judgment debt, under the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 17, runs from the time of the entry of the incipitur; Newton v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 16 Mees. & W. 139; Fisher v. Dudding, 3 Man. & Gr. 238; et v. sup. p. 325.

(e) Pearce v. Slocombe, 3 Y. & Coll. 90;

mere direction by deed to pay a debt does not infer either contract or trust to pay interest upon debts by simple contract. "If the creditors," said Lord Eldon, "do not execute the deed, it cannot be alleged that there is a contract—there was nothing to prevent their suing the debtor after the execution" (a). And even when they become parties it has been held that, in the absence of express direction as to interest, there must be a contract for specialty, and a consideration given to the debtor by taking the charge upon the land and releasing the person (b).

Interest may be payable as between the grantor and the creditors, but not as between certain of the creditors and the other creditors whose debts carry interest, or whose debts it is expressly provided shall be paid with interest; in such case, the latter must have priority, but the others may have interest out of the surplus (c). Lord Abinger, on the subject being brought before him, thought that the cases and dicta might be reconciled, (without reference of course to the modern law above adverted to,) thus:—If a man execute a deed creating a trust of a term for the benefit of his creditors, the deed makes them mortgagees of the estate, if they execute it, and so gives them a right to interest, but a mere covenant to pay the debt does not give them that right; if there be a covenant by the trustees to pay at a particular day (they taking charge of the fund in the mean time), that would give a claim for interest by way of damages, according to the ordinary rule. In the case itself, as there was a direction to pay some of the debts with interest, and the deed was silent as to the others, the Lord Chief Baron held that the deed explained itself, as between the two sets of creditors (d).

Bond creditors are not entitled to receive for principal and interest more than the amount of the penalty (e).

Lord Chief Baron Abinger considered that under such circumstances the creditors might have recovered interest at law; and see Anon. 1 Salk. 154. Mr. Maddock says, in a note, that it was held by Sir J. Leach, in Willock v. —, 26 June, 1818, that a provision for debts carrying interest does not include what may be owing in respect of property in an executor's hands, which he may be liable, by the rules of the court, to repay with interest; Pr. and Pr. i. 684. The law having been altered as above, of course the creditors will now have the benefit given to them by the act under the trust. Mr. Ram (On Assets, pp. 686-698) has collected the authorities at law prior to the statute (pp. 698-705), and the authorities relating to the payment of interest in equity; and see, on this subject, Lewin on Trusts, 386, et seq.; Hill on Trustees, 335, et seq.

(a) Lord Eldon, 3 Bli. 186; but, as already noticed, a creditor, by his acts, may become constructively a party.

(b) Ibid.

(c) See the cases cited, Jenkins v. Perry, 3 Y. & Coll. 181-2, and the decision, 184.

(d) Ibid. p. 184.

(e) Hughes v. Wynne, 1 My. & K. p. 24; there the trust was for the payment of all sums secured by bonds and interest thereon; and see Anon. 1 Salk. p. 154—both cases of deeds. In Wilson v. Poe, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 114, the general rule was admitted; but though the decree was erroneous, it not having been reversed the creditor had the benefit of it.

Debts which are actually barred by the statute will not be revived by the operation of the trust (a): a trust for payment of debts in aid of the personal estate is necessarily a trust only for the payment of such debts as the personal estate, if sufficient, would have been liable to pay (b). Where the provision is made by will (c) or by deed for payment of debts out of real estate, the statutory time will cease to run, in the first case from the death of the testator, in the latter from the date of the deed; for it is not to be inferred that a man has no debt because he does not go to law to enforce payment when he has a trustee bound to pay it to him; and the court will never hold, in such a case, that because the trustee neglects to do his duty his cestui que trust shall be barred (d): and the same principle will apply where personal estate only is assigned in trust for payment of debts. However, in the case of a will, it is different as regards personal estate: an express direction or trust by will for payment of debts out of personal estate, neither has the effect of reviving a debt or of preventing time from running; it is inoperative for any purpose: the legal trust for payment of debts, with which every executor is clothed, does not prevent the operation of the statute at law; and a different effect will not be given to an express trust in the Court of Chancery (e).

Arrangements between debtors and their creditors, by which the latter agree to receive a certain per-centage or composition in full of their respective claims, often give rise to collateral questions, which have now to be shortly considered.

These bargains, as has been laid down at law as well as in equity, must, as before noticed, be founded on entire good faith; and if such good faith be not observed, the whole transaction is void, at least as against the guilty parties (f).

(a) The dictum of Lord K. Harcourt to the contrary, in Andrews v. Brown, Prec. Ch. 385, which Lord Brougham considered as of little weight (1 My. & Cr. 269), is overruled by Lord Redesdale's dictum, Executors of Fergus v. Gore, 1 Scho. & Lef. 109, and Sir T. Plumer's decision, Burke v. Jones, 2 Ves. & B. 290.

(b) Sir J. Leach, 6 Mad. 326.

(c) Lord Redesdale, Executors of Fergus v. Gore, 1 Scho. & Lef. 109, and whether by way of direct trust or by charge, "for a charge is a trust to be executed by the devisee or heir," Sir J. Leach, 6 Mad. 326; Reake v. Lea, 2 Freem. 479: on a simple charge of an annuity it is different; see additional note, inf. pp. 363 and 368.

(d) Ibid., and Hughes v. Wynne, T. & R.

309; the real estate was there charged in aid of the personal estate: Crailan v. Oulton, 3 Beavan, 8; there were special circumstances in that case; and see Bennett v. Cooper, x. Jur. 507, M. R.

(e) Jones v. Scott, in Dom. Proc. (affirming Sir J. Leach's decision, and reversing Lord Brougham's, 1 Russ. & M. 261), 4 Cl. & Fin. 398; Freaker v. Cranefeldt, Lord Cott. 3 My. & Cr. 502; Evans v. Tweedy, 1 Beav. 55; and see Hill, 336; Lewin, 382.

(f) Howden v. Haigh, 3 Per. & Davison, 661; 4 Y. & Coll. 440. See, as to the doctrine in Equity, Jackman v. Mitchell, 13 Ves. 586; Mawson v. Stock, 6 Ves. 300; Child v. Danbridge, 2 Vern. 71; Middleton v. Lord Onslow, 1 P. W. 768; Spurrett v. Spiller, 1 Atk.

In deeds of composition, where the creditors agree to release the debtor on receiving a certain per-centage, in the manner provided by the deed, it is considered, that the deed, speaking the language of all the creditors, not only to their debtor but to each other, is a common declaration that the amount mentioned in the deed, and the securities (if any) provided for securing such per-centage, are to be taken in full discharge of their respective debts, and that the terms proposed and embodied in the deed are such as, in the view of all the creditors who are parties to the deed as to the justice and humanity of the case, are proper to be acceded to, and that every creditor, in becoming a party to the deed, makes this representation. This circumstance creates a peculiarity in this description of agreement, which, as between the debtor and creditor himself, might be treated as void, being an accord without satisfaction (a). Every creditor has in fact an interest that the agreement should be fairly performed. If any creditor, unknown to the others, has obtained any benefit or security beyond what the others have obtained, the others are imposed upon, as, instead of having the evidence of such creditor that the act which he is about to do is reasonable, proved by the same act on the part of the creditor so secretly preferred, they are circumvented by such preferred creditor, and misled into a situation in which the act of the preferred creditor shows that he thinks it unreasonable that a creditor should be placed: good faith requires that a creditor, proposing to the other creditors to deal upon equal terms, and obtaining some additional security, should impart to the others the benefit of the security he has so obtained (b): and if any person enter into a contract with the debtor which prevents him from being put in that situation of freedom from existing demands, which may be considered as one of the inducements to the other creditors to sign the deed, and relinquish a part of their demands, such a contract is a fraud on the arrangement, and any security that may be given in pursuance of such contract is absolutely void even against the debtor who may have given such a security (a).

105; Ex parte Sadler, 15 Ves. 52; Constantein v. Blache, 1 Cox, 284; Scott v. Scott, ibid.; Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 16 Ves. 372; Cecil v. Plaistow, 1 Anst. 202; Fawcett v. Gee, 3 Anst. 910: at Law, Smith v. Bromley, cited 2 Dougl. 696; Clarke v. Shee, Cowp. 200; Cockshott v. Bennett, 2 T. R. 763; Jackson v. Duchaire, 3 T. R. 551; Jackson v. Lomas, 4 T. R. 166; Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 372, overruling Feise v. Randall, 6 T. R. 146; Butler v. Rhodes, Peake, N. P. Ca. 315; Wood v. Roberts, 2 Starkie, N. P. Ca. 417, which L. Ch. B. Richards refers to in Greenwood v. Lidbetter, 12 Price, 190, where the general doctrines are stated; and Knight v. Hunt, inf.

(a) See 12 Price, 192, Greenwood v. Lidbetter.

(b) See Ex parte Sadler, 15 Ves. 55, 57, 58. In order that the benefit of the additional security may be imparted to the other creditors (see 15 Ves. 58), of course it must be held to be good as against the party giving it; but may not this produce the consequence, as against the debtor, adverted to inf. 359, n. (d)? Spurrett v. Spiller, 1 Atk. 105; Chesterfield v. Janssen, 1 Atk. 352; Middleton v. Lord Onslow, 1 P. W. 769; Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 125; Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Mer. 626; Watts v. Hyde, 2 Coll. 376, stated in the additional note.

In granting relief in this, as in similar cases (b), to the particeps criminis, as the debtor in most cases is, the court proceeds upon the principle that the taking the security in contravention of the arrangement which the other creditors have acceded to, is a fraud on the policy of the law; the relief is given on account, not of the individual, but of the public, and it is absolutely necessary to give relief to the particeps criminis in respect of the interests of the other parties (c). Following up this principle, where the creditor stipulates that he shall receive a collateral security from a third person not provided by the deed, though for the mere amount of instalments, the transaction is held to be a fraud upon the other creditors and upon the debtor (d); and where a banking firm, they being creditors, had agreed on receiving a guarantee, to pay a certain composition to the creditors of their debtor, and they privately stipulated with the debtor that he should secure to them the amount of their debt beyond the composition, this was held to avoid the guarantee which had been given to them (e).

In all these cases it is assumed that the transaction complained of was unknown to the other creditors; but an instrument creating an

(a) Cockshott v. Bennett, 2 T. R. 765; Eastbrook v. Scott, 3 Ves. 460; Mawson v. Stock, 6 Ves. 301-306; Ex parte Sadler, 15 Ves. 55; Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 379; Jackson v. Davison, 4 Barn. & Ald. 695. This is another of the many instances in which the law has followed equity, not, as is the case where equity follows the law, for uniformity of decision independent of choice, but from a deliberate approval of the principle.

(b) Scott v. Scott, 1 Cox, 366; Neville v. Wilkinson, 1 Bro. 543; Palmer v. Neave, 11 Ves. 167, ibid. 535, cases of frauds upon the faith of marriage contracts.

(c) Jackman v. Mitchell, 13 Ves. 587, with costs, which Lord Chancellor Sugden disapproved, Lloyd & G. 183. In Eastbrook v. Scott, ubi sup. 460-1, Lord Kenyon, M. R., seemed to think that where a creditor, at the instance of the debtor, had set his debt at 1500*l.*, it being really 3000*l.*, on having promissory notes given him for the composition upon the remainder of the debt, he might recover it, if there were any surplus, after paying the compositions to the other creditors.

(d) Leicester v. Rose, 4 East, 371-9; Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 432, judgment of C. J. Best; Ex parte Sadler, 15 Ves. 55: "I was not aware," said Lord Eldon, "of the last decision of the Court of King's Bench; that where the security is obtained [from a third person] for the same sum which is secured by the general composition, it is a fraud upon the creditors: but I am struck with it, and think there is much principle in it. When the security is for a larger sum it is a fraud upon the debtor; as if the surety pays the larger sum, he has immediately a demand over against the principal, who then has not the benefit of the agreement which his creditors in general intended to give him," ibid.; v. sup. p. 358, n. (b). In Cullingworth v. Lloyd, (2 Beavan, 392; sup. p. 355,) a creditor, unknown to the others, before executing the deed had realized a security which the deed purported to release; it was held that the principles of public policy applicable to these cases would deprive the creditor of the advantage he had so obtained. In Lee v. Lockart, 3 My. & C. 302, where the creditor had the benefit of his security, there was no contract or common purpose between the mortgagees and other creditors, (ib. p. 315); there was besides an indorsement on the deed, reserving to the creditor his rights under his security, which was evidence of bona fides, and of the absence of all idea of concealment. In the note, 2 Beav. 395, all the cases in regard to transactions in fraud of composition deeds, from 1688 to 1837, are collected.

(e) Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Y. & Coll. 427, 440.

obligation to pay the deficiency of a composition, though by the debtor himself, is good if it be part of the transaction that it be communicated to the other creditors, and they do not object (a): however those who assert that it was known to the creditors, have the onus of establishing that fact by proof (b).

It is to be observed, that it is not by refusing, but by consenting to a composition, that one or more creditors may be restrained in their proceedings on the originally equitable and now legal ground of fraud upon the rest: a creditor who enters into a personal individual arrangement, and receives money under it, is not within the principle, if that agreement were not made a lure to others; and he may therefore still proceed to recover the whole of what remains due to him at law (c), and there is no ground in equity to restrain him.

Where a composition deed between a debtor and his creditor provides that those who come in under it shall thereby release their debts, a creditor having a lien cannot realize his lien and prove for the difference: if he elects to take the benefit of the deed, he must first give up the property on which he claims the lien (d).

It is established as a general principle, as before noticed, that he who is the person to give the discharge, is the person who ought to sue for a debt, and that a person who has an interest in a debt, when recovered, is not, on that account merely, entitled to sue the debtor for the recovery of the debt. He who has the legal estate is the person to redeem a mortgage, therefore some of the creditors under a trust-deed cannot file a bill, even on behalf of themselves and the others, to redeem a mortgage on the property or a part of it which is subject to the trust, unless they make a special case, as that the trustees are colluding with the mortgagor (e); nor can they sue for the recovery of any debts due that may have been assigned as part of the trust property, unless the trustees are colluding with the debtors, or they are in circumstances which make it unsafe that the money should get into their hands (f).

In a creditor's suit, whether to carry into effect the trusts of a deed

(a) Lord Eldon, 13 Ves. 536-7: and see 15 Ves. 57.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Greenwood v. Lidbetter, 12 Price, 191.

(d) Buck v. Shippam, 1 Phillips, 694.

(e) Doran v. Simpson, 4 Ves. 651; 4 Bro. C. C. 270; et v. sup. p. 308; et inf. Mortgages.

(f) Lord Alvanley, Troughton v. Binkes, (Dec. 1801), 6 Ves. 573; and see, on the necessity of charging and proving collusion or insolvency, where the party suing is not the legal hand to receive, Francklyn v. Fern, Barnardist. 30, 33; and Alsager v. Rowley, 6 Ves. 749, 750: Beckley v. Dorrington, there cited, (and see 1 Russ. & M. 279,) and Law v. Law, 2 Coll. 44, where Newland v. Champion, 1 Ves. 105, is examined; and see 1 De Gex & Smale, 383.

or for the administration of the estate of a deceased person, any creditor may impeach in the Master's office the debt of any other creditor who offers to prove his debt, though such last-mentioned creditor may have been plaintiff in the suit and obtained the common decree for an account of the debts (a).

It may here be observed in reference to creditors' suits generally that it is always advisable for the creditor who seeks by a suit in Chancery to affect the real estate of his deceased debtor to prove his debt against the heir or devisees, even though it be admitted by the personal representative, which admission cannot be read, as an admission, as against the heir or the devisees. To allow a creditor at the hearing to supply the defect of evidence is not a matter of right, but of favour; and the court will be very much influenced in granting or refusing such favour by the merits of the case: if therefore the debt be of long standing or attended with any unfavourable circumstances, it is particularly advisable that it should be proved (b). Mistake as to the law or practice of the court is not per se a ground for asking the indulgence (c).

(a) Owens v. Dickinson, Cr. & Phillips, 56; Tomlin v. Tomlin, 1 Hare, 248, where other cases are cited shewing the general practice. As to the form of decrees in matters of this description, v. int. al. Seton on Decrees, p. 252.

(b) See Marten v. Whichelo, Cr. & P. 261, and Seton on Decrees, 263, and 2 Daniell, Ch. Pract. p. 416, there referred to; and see the additional note, No. 2, p. 363, infra.

(c) Woodgate v. Field, 2 Hare, 211.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

In the late case of Watts v. Hyde, 2 Collier, 376, referred to supra, p. 354, the material circumstances were as follow:—In the year 1841, Mr. Watts, the plaintiff, became involved in debt: in the latter part of that year, he was in confinement at the suit of one or more of his creditors: under Mr. Hyde's, the defendant's, advice, who was then, and had for some years, been, and for some time afterwards continued to be, his solicitor, and with his assistance, a composition with Mr. Watts' creditors was effected, and a deed of composition was executed by Mr. Hyde and many of Mr. Watts' creditors, including the trustees of it, Mr. Spottiswoode and Mr. How, for whom Mr. Hyde acted as solicitor in the matter of the trust; several of the creditors executed it after Mr. Hyde. One of the conditions of the deed was, that Mr. Watts should insure his life for 1500*l.*; he did not strictly comply with this condition; what did take place is stated, p. 378, of the report. Mr. Hyde, in consequence of this breach, in 1843, brought an action against Mr. Watts to recover his whole debt, alleging also (by his answer) that it was the understanding between him and Mr. Watts, that he should in any event be paid his entire debt (see pp. 384-6). The bill was filed for a perpetual injunction, and to establish the deed and the release it contained against Mr. Hyde. There was no evidence to show that Mr. Watts knew or understood accurately what was or would be or might be the effect, upon the validity of the deed, of his default or omission to insure in conformity with the provisions of the deed (see pp. 381-2). The Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in giving judgment said, "If Mr. Hyde executed the deed with an intention on his part, or on the part of Mr. Watts, or under any agreement or understanding between them, or any person on the part of Mr. Watts, that the deed should not or was not to have between them full effect and complete operation according to its tenor and purport, that intention, that agreement, that understanding, that promise is plainly not effective or available for any purpose at law or in equity, and did not prevent the deed from operating, as the deed would have operated without any such intention, agreement, understanding, or promise; for it does not appear, and cannot be presumed to have been communicated or known to Mr. Spottiswoode, or any of the other creditors before or at the time of Mr. Hyde's execution of the deed, or before or at the time when any creditor whose execution took place after that of Mr. Hyde executed it. This state of the law must be taken to have been known to Mr. Hyde, a professional man; he must be taken to have been incapable of supposing that any intention, agreement, understanding, or promise could be of any force or validity, and to have considered himself bound by the deed as between him and the plaintiff, according to its tenor and purport" (and see p. 387, of the Judgment). The Vice-Chancellor added, though this part of the judgment has reference to another subject, "But though, as a general observation, it may be true that all persons of full age and competent understanding are liable to be considered as knowing the law, the rule is, I apprehend, not without exceptions; and I am certainly not satisfied that for any purposes of this suit, it is, without proof, to be presumed that Mr. Watts, while the client of Mr. Hyde, was accurately informed or correctly aware of the state of the law, whether as administered in courts of equity or otherwise, as to any matters concerning both of them, in which their interests were, or might be, conflicting, if there were any such." "I may here also add," continued his Honour, "that in my opinion, if, by a deed of composition, a creditor release his debtor, a subsequent agreement between them (not by deed) that the debt shall be paid in full, cannot stand, unless supported by a valuable consideration beyond the mere fact of the released debt: the case of a bankrupt promising after his certificate (v. supra, vol. i. p. 246) standing, I apprehend, on a different footing." In pp. 387-8, the Vice-Chancellor sums up the propositions of fact and of law on which his judgment was founded; of which one was, that, until the litigation in 1843, Mr. Watts did not understand that Mr. Hyde's execution of the deed was, as between them, a substantial execution, or that it at any time bound him, as between themselves, in any manner; and that Mr. Hyde must be taken to have been the creator of that impression; and that Mr. Watts' mind being taken to be so impressed, he would not have considered it to be material as between him and Mr. Hyde, whether any default or omission in performing the conditions of the deed or any part of them did or did not or should or should not take place on the part of Mr. Watts; and the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that, under the circumstances, Mr. Hyde could not be permitted to say that as between him and Mr. Watts the deed or any of its provisions had become void. The injunction was granted, pp. 389, 395. In pp. 389-91, of the judgment, the Vice-Chancellor observes upon the point of Pleading arising from the agreement or understanding above referred to not having been stated in the bill; namely, whether the plaintiff on the record as it stood could have the benefit of the defendant's allegations as fully as if they had been in the bill; referring to Parsons v. Briddock, 2 Vern. 608; Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swanst. 400; Attwood v. —, 1 Russ. 353, 5 Russ. 149; Taylor v. Tabrum, 6 Sim. 281. Liberty was given to the plaintiff to amend (p. 391) in special terms: evidence was gone into on the amendments pursuant to the liberty given, and the cause was reheard; but the Vice-Chancellor retained his former opinion.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Whether Trusts by Will for Payment of Debts are within the 25th and 40th Sections of the Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

The Master of the Rolls of Ireland in giving judgment in Young v. Wilton, 1846, 10 Ir. Eq. Rep. 19, made the following remarks: "A question similar to that in Frances v. Gower, 5 Hare, 39, (a case of an annuity charged on an estate, v. supra, p. 198,) is adverted to by Sir E. Sugden at the close of his judgment in the case of the Commissioners of Donations v. Wytrantz, 2 Jo. & Lat. 198; but it is not necessary to decide that question in the present case, as I am of opinion that a trust for payment of debts, although it be an express trust, does not fall within the 25th section, the subject of that section (as was stated by the late Master of the Rolls, in the case of Knox v. Kelly, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 285) being land or rent, in which it is impossible from the interpretation clause to comprize a gross sum of money charged on the estate. The question, however, still remains whether where there is a trust for payment of debts, the case falls within the 40th section. This point was in effect, though not in terms, decided by the late Master of the Rolls, in Knox v. Kelly, it being impossible, in my opinion, to suggest any sound distinction upon the construction of the 40th section, between a trust for payment of legacies and a trust for payment of debts," though his Honour did not decide the point. The last clause of note (e), p. 229 sup. was introduced inadvertently.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.

Proof of the Plaintiff's Debt in Creditor's Suit.

The subject of the proof by the plaintiff, of his debt in a creditor's suit, was again called to the attention of Lord Cottenham, in the late case of Watson v. Parker. Lord Cottenham there said, "In bills seeking payment out of assets in a course of administration, the court exercises its jurisdiction as incidental only to the account: it has no original jurisdiction over the debt. The first question in such cases is as to the debt: if there is any doubt about that, before the court proceeds to administer the estate it requires the plaintiff to establish his right at law, and for enabling him so to do it will sometimes retain the bill, with liberty to him to bring an action. The question is, whether I ought to do so here, or to dismiss the bill at once. It seems probable that the result will be the same in either case; and though it would be much to be regretted, if the party who is really entitled to have this money should lose it solely for want of evidence, yet I do not think I ought to go further than to give him an opportunity of establishing his title, if he can, at law. The only other course would be to direct inquiries before the Master, as the Vice-Chancellor has done; but though it is sometimes done, where owing to a slip the plaintiff's evidence is left incomplete, I am by no means disposed to encourage a practice of that sort, more particularly where the plaintiff's case is founded on a legal demand." (1)

(1) Lord Chancellor, Watson v. Parker, 2 Phillips, 8. In this case there are some important observations of Lord Cottenham, as to the form of decrees where evidence is admitted de bene esse.—Pages 9, 10.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. IV.

Right of Executor to Surplus of Trust Fund.

In the late case of Russell v. Clowes, 2 Coll. 648, the question arose on a bequest of certain leaseholds to trustees, upon trust to sell, and to apply the proceeds in payment of the testator's debts funeral and testamentary expenses, between the Crown, there being no next of kin of the testator, and the executors, as to who was entitled to the surplus; a question which, since the passing of the Act of 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 40, is not of frequent occurrence. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, on the authority of Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193; Southouse v. Bate, 2 Ves. & B. 396, and Dawson v. Clark, 15 Ves. 416, held that under the circumstances the executors were entitled to the residue, although they had legacies given to them by the will.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. V.

Of the Passing of Trust Estates by the Will of the Trustee.

The subject of the passing of the trust estate by a devise of his real estates by a trustee, is shortly adverted to supra, p. 37 (et v. p. 38). In addition to the cases there cited, Lord Braybrooke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 416, and Bainbridge v. Lord Ashburton, 2 Yo. & Coll. 349, should be consulted. The subject was brought before the Vice-Chancellor of England in the late case of Rackham v. Siddall, xii. Jurist, 641, 1848, where his Honour has stated the rule thus: "Where a person having estates of his own and estates vested in him as a trustee does make a devise in general terms, which general terms would be sufficient at law to pass both estates, but couples that devise with something that necessarily leads to the inference that he was thinking only of his own property at the time he made the devise; that, there, the general words of the devise shall not operate to pass that which he held as a trust estate, and although the thing here is very minute" (the devise was of all his real estate charged with 50*l.* to one Watson) "the trust estate did not pass."

SECTION V.—Of Sales of Property, Real and Personal, under Trusts and Charges for the Payment of Debts and Legacies.

General Doctrines as to who is the Person to sell under a Devise or Charge by Will.

Who is to sell under Direction in a Will.

Devise in Trust—Powers—Term of Years created.

Difference between Devise to Executors in trust to sell, and Power given to Executors to sell.

Power to sell where more than one Executor is appointed.

Specific Authority not necessary.

Where there is a Direction for Sale without naming any Person to sell.

Where there is a Charge.

Charge of Debts a Trust.

Power extinct at Law.

Estate charged with Annuities.

Trustees for Sale not to wait for Decree of the Court of Chancery.

Generally Power to Sell implies Power to Mortgage.

Direction to raise Money out of Rents and Profits.

Annuity to be paid out of Rents and Profits.

Court cannot direct a Sale not authorized by the Trust, on the ground of its being Beneficial.

It has already been observed that whether the real estate is subjected to debts or legacies (a) or both, by way of trust or of charge, or by way of legal power in the nature of a trust, the estate can only be turned into money and the proceeds distributed, in case of dispute or difficulty, through the agency of the Court of Chancery (b).

Where the land is devised to trustees, in trust, to raise the requisite money out of the estate, by sale, or in any other manner, or a power is given to certain persons for that purpose, or where, as is usual, a term of years is created and vested in trustees upon trust to raise the requisite funds in the manner pointed out, little difficulty can arise; the legal powers of the trustees in ordinary cases enable them to perform the trust: but it sometimes happens that no trustees to (a) Portions will form the subject of a distinct Section.

(b) There are some old authorities that, where the money, when raised, is to form part of the personal estate, and it has been raised and is in the hands of the executor, a legatee whose legacy is payable out of the mixed fund may sue for it in the Ecclesiastical Court; see the cases cited 9 Barn. & Cr. 491; but see ibid. pp. 492, 493, where the contrary is decided.

perform the trust are named, and difficulties and doubts arise as to who is to sell or otherwise raise the money, and as to the manner in which it is to be done; in these cases the Court of Chancery must necessarily be resorted to: it is necessary therefore shortly to advert to the Doctrines of the Court of Chancery and incidentally of the common law to some extent, in reference to this subject.

It very commonly happens that the executors of the testator are made the trustees for the purpose of raising and distributing the requisite funds; it may be proper therefore first to notice the difference in the view of a court of law between a devise to executors in trust to sell, and a power given to executors to sell.

If the land be devised to executors to sell, such a devise passes the interest in it at law; but a devise that executors shall sell the land, or that the land shall be sold by the executors, gives but a power (a).

In all cases where the executor is authorized to sell, he may sell alone, even where he has only a power, for where an authority to sell is given to a particular person, the vendee takes under the will; any right or title in the heir is excluded; there is no need for his joining in the sale; and a complete title can be made to the purchaser, by him to whom the power is given (b). A power to sell real estate may not only be expressly given, but, what is equivalent, necessarily implied, as will presently be noticed.

Where the power is given to more than one, as is the case where there are several executors, some nice distinctions have been taken. If a power be given to two or more persons, the power can only be executed by the whole of the persons so named: it cannot be executed even by the survivors or survivor, unless under an express authority, for it is a personal trust in all. But a distinction has been taken where the power is given to executors or persons as a Class. Sir Edward Sugden thus sums up the result of the decisions (c):—
1. Where a power is given to two or more persons by their proper names, who are not made executors, the power will not survive without express words;—2. Where it is given to three or more generally, as to “my trustees,” or “my sons,” amounting to three or more, and not by their proper names, the authority will survive whilst the plural number remains;—3. Where the authority is given to “executors,” and the will does not expressly point to a joint exercise of it, even a single surviving executor may execute it;—but, 4. Where the authority is given to them nominatim, although in the character of executors, yet it is at least doubtful whether it will survive;—and, 5. Where the power to executors arises by implication, the power will equally arise to the survivor (a).

(a) Sugden on Powers, vol. i. pp. 131-4; Chance on Powers, vol. i. 53, 54. I need scarcely add that in these learned works the subject of Powers is exhausted.

(b) See the judgment of Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, White v. Vitty, 2 Russ. 497.

(c) On Powers, i. 146.

It is not necessary that there should be a specific authority given to the trustee to enable him to sell if a sale is necessary to the due execution of the trust (b): it will always be inferred that the testator means to give to the persons directed or empowered every authority which is necessary for his declared purpose (c). If the testator directs his estates to be sold for certain purposes without declaring by whom the sale shall be made, in the absence of such declaration, if the fund be distributable by the executors (d), they will have by implication a power to sell (e); and it seems that the executors of the executor may sell, so long as the chain of representation is duly kept up, such executors coming within the same reason (f).

If a testator merely charges his lands with the payment of his debts, that is a declaration of intention, on which the Court of Chancery will fasten, and draw out of the mass going to the heirs or to others that quantum of interest which will be sufficient for the debts (g); but to effectuate this the estate must necessarily be sold by the heir or such other person; and a purchaser under the person to whom the legal

(a) Sir Edward Sugden, in his profound Treatise on Powers, has fully investigated this subject, and to it I would beg to direct the student's particular attention.

(b) Ball v. Harris, 8 Simons, 485, 4 My. & Cr. 266; and see 1 Coll. 649; Barker v. D. of Devon, 3 Meriv. 311; Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 559; see, as to this case, the judgment of Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, Gosling v. Carter, 1 Coll. 648-9; Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 152, 160. The Vice-Chancellor of England, after referring to Ward v. Devon, (9 Feb. 1805,) where under a general direction for sale it was held that the executors could sell, held that the plaintiff (the surviving executor) in this case was entitled to sell. "The only other question," he added, "is whether the plaintiff can give a valid receipt for the purchase money; and I am of opinion he can do so, for the testator has charged his real estate with the payment of his debts, and as the bill says nothing at all about debts, non constat but that some of them may remain to be paid; at all events the purchaser has no notice that they have all been paid, and he is not bound to inquire whether they have been paid or not."

(c) Sowarsby v. Lacy, 4 Mad. 142.

(d) Barrington v. Att.-General, Hardress, Rep. 419; Mackintosh v. Barber, 1 Bing. 50; Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Mad. 44; Patton v. Randall, 1 Jac. & W. 189; Tylden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. & S. 238; Milward v. Saville, Dyer, 371 b; Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Mees. & W. 639; judgment of Rolfe, B.; and see Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Mad. 49; and Gosling v. Carter, 1 Coll. 644; there the receipt of the executor was held to be a sufficient discharge, et v. infra.

(e) Sugden on Powers, i. 139; Ball v. Harris, 4 My. & Cr. 266-7, confirming Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 559; in which case Lord Cottenham observes that in fact the point had been long since settled by Elliott v. Merryman, Barnardist. 78, followed by other cases down to Dolton v. Hewen, 6 Mad. 9; see, as to this case, 1 Coll. 649-50; Wood v. White, 4 My. & Craig, 460, 481; Bateman v. Bateman, 1 Atk. 421, 2 Russell, 496; Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 160.

(f) Sugden on Powers, i. 139, 140; where the representation begins with a prerogative probate it cannot be kept up without prerogative probates throughout.

(g) Lord Eldon, Bailey v. Ekins, 7 Ves. 322, et v. infra.

estate shall be devised or may descend subject to the charge, will no more be liable to see to the application of his purchase money than if he had purchased of a person having an express authority to sell. In the former case, above referred to, the power is expressly, and in this impliedly given, for the purpose of carrying into effect the declared intention as to the purchase money (a), and every thing necessary for effectuating it is enforced against the parties whose concurrence is necessary for its completion (b).

A charge for payment of debts has been and ought to be treated as a trust, so far as to give to the creditors a priority over the special purposes of any subsequent devisee; though the charge, directly, affects the equitable and not the legal estate, it is a devise of the estate in substance and effect pro tanto to pay debts (c): and where upon the construction the trusts of the will affect a particular estate first in common with the testator's other property for the payment of debts generally, and next separately for the special purposes of the will, then the trustees and executors may sell without seeking the authority of the court, and the purchaser is not bound either to inquire whether other sufficient property is applicable or ought to be applied first in payment of the debts or to see to the application of his purchase money (d).

Where a power given for sale is for any reason extinct at law, or where in point of law, for want of any persons being named to execute the trust or because those named have died before the testator, the power therefore never could exist and cannot take effect; the Court of Chancery, deeming the purpose for which the testator directs the money arising from the sale to be applied, to be the substantial part of the devise, and the persons, if any, named to execute the power of selling, to be mere instruments, will enforce it; on the principle analogous to

(a) Ball v. Harris, 4 My. & Cr. 266-7; Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 559, supra; Wood v. White, 4 My. & Cr. 460, 481; Bateman v. Bateman, 1 Atk. 421, (2 Russ. 496); Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 160; and see Peter v. Beverley, 10 Peter, R., U. S. 532.

(b) On this principle, in Fowle v. Green, 1 Ch. Ca. 262, the heir was compelled to join where lands were devised to the executors to sell; but, as we have seen, this is not now considered to be necessary, unless, perhaps, in the case of an implied power to sell, see Gosling v. Carter, 1 Coll. 651; v. sup. 366.

(c) If a man, said Lord Eldon, by deed or will charges or orders an estate to be sold for payment of his debts, and then makes specific dispositions, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application: it is just the same as if the specific bequests were out of the will; Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves. 654. Lord Langdale says, 1 Keen, 576, "A charge of this nature has been and ought to be treated as a trust which gives the creditors priority over the special purposes of the devise." But, as before mentioned, (sup. p. 363, additional note, No. 2,) a devise of an estate, subject to a charge of an annuity or the like, though it imposes an obligation, does not otherwise confer a fiduciary character on the devisee; v. sup. pp. 198, 357.

(d) Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 573, 578; and Elliott v. Merriman, Barnard. 78, (approved by Lord Kenyon, Bonney v. Ridgard, 1 Cox, 145,) there cited: the seeing to the application of purchase-money will be more fully considered in the next Section.

that before noticed, namely, that a trust shall never fail for want of a trustee, and that if one is wanting the court shall execute the office (a). The relief is administered by considering the land, in whatever person it may be vested (other than a purchaser bonâ fide for valuable consideration without notice), as bound by the obligation and by compelling the heir or other person having the legal estate to perform it (b); and that at the instance, not only of favoured objects, as a wife, children, and creditors, but of all persons indiscriminately: every cestui que trust—and the persons claiming under a charge are in the nature of cestuis que trust—has, as has already been noticed, a right to the aid of the court to enforce the trust in his favour (c). Where the estate is charged with Annuities, it is not the course to discharge the lands; they will still be charged in the hands of a purchaser, because it was the very purpose of making the lands a fund for that payment, that it should be a constant and subsisting fund (d).

The mode of raising Portions will be considered in a distinct chapter (e), where some others of the doctrines applicable to charges generally will also be noticed.

Trustees for sale are not to wait for a decree of the court for the raising the money, which would oblige every person to come here; and where it is done by the trustees fairly, this court, if the matter be before it afterwards, will always support the sale; for a decree of the Court of Chancery does not give the right, but it is only made for an execution of the trust or power that is given or conferred (f).

Generally speaking, a power to sell implies a power to mortgage (g); but a mortgage is not a proper execution of the trust where the clear, manifest intention of the testator is, that the estate should be sold out and out, and that there should be a complete conversion of his real estate, and that the produce of his real and personal estate should be disposed of as money (h).

Where the direction is to raise out of the rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, if the words are evidently used in contradistinction, the

(a) The distinction in this respect between naked powers and powers coupled with a trust has been adverted to sup. pp. 81, 82; and see Madison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 57; and Sugden on Powers, i. 191.

(b) See Walker v. Smallwood, Amb. 676; Elliott v. Merriman, Barnardist. 78: as to liability to see to the application of the purchase-money in such case, see Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves. 654, and the next Section.

(c) See Hargrave's note (2) to Co. Litt. 113 a.

(d) Elliott v. Merriman, Barnardist. 78.

(e) Infra, chap. viii. p. 390.

(f) Earl of Bath v. Earl of Bradford, 2 Ves. 590.

(g) Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. p. 1; Ball v. Harris, 4 My. & Cr. 268; Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65, affirmed Jacob, 631; approved Bootle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 233: there leaseholds for lives were devised to several in succession, the money to be raised was for the fines on renewal, v. sup. p. 86.

(h) Haldenby v. Spofforth, 1 Beav. 390, 395.

former must mean annual rents and profits; and if in such a case the charges to be raised by these respective modes are of two kinds, the one annual and the other in gross, the words will be distributed, the annual charges being raisable out of the annual rents and profits, the sums in gross by sale or mortgage (a).

Where a testator gives freehold and leasehold estates to trustees upon trust to receive the rents when and as the same shall become due and payable, and thereout to pay his wife an annuity during her life, and immediately after her decease upon trust to convey the estates to the use of other persons; in such case the annuity is not considered to be charged on the rents generally, and therefore if the rents received during the widow's lifetime are insufficient to pay the annuity, the arrears are not to be raised out of the estate, but the annuity must abate (b).

However beneficial it may appear to be (as where an advowson is directed to be sold on the death of the incumbent) that an immediate sale should take place not authorized by the trust, the court cannot for the benefit of infants or others not sui juris direct an immediate sale: to proceed upon the notion of what might be beneficial to the parties would be to assume a legislative not a judicial power: if the parties are adult they may of course without the interference of the court sell how and when they please (c).

(a) Playters v. Abbott, 2 My. & K. 110; Jarman on Wills, ii. 540, to which very learned work I would refer for a more comprehensive view of the doctrines applicable to this subject: et v. supra, p. 85, and vol. i. p.

540; and see the section on Portions, part i. infra.

(b) Foster v. Smith, 15 Law J., N. S. 183, Lord C., 1 Phillips, 629, on appeal, et v. infra.

(c) Johnstone v. Baber, 8 Beav. 233.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

As to the Duties of Trustees for Sale, v. supra, p. 369.

It is further to be observed generally, as regards the duties of trustees for sale, that a direction that trustees shall sell at such time and in such manner as they shall see fit will not authorize an indefinite postponement of the sale, so as to interfere with the relative rights of the tenant for life and remaindermen (1); so they ought not to sell the timber separately if the estate be settled, if they do the tenant for life will be entitled to be indemnified (2). The rules for the guidance of trustees who are to sell with the consent of the tenant for life are laid down by Lord Eldon in Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 308, 309; and see 2 Sugd. on Powers, 487. Where the trustees have committed the management to one, they will all be answerable, if he should commit a breach of trust in the disposal of the property or in the application of the proceeds (3).

(1) Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 391-2.

(2) Davies v. Westcomb, 2 Sim. 425.

(3) Oliver v. Court, 8 Pri. 166.

SECTION VI.—Of the Obligation of the Purchaser to see to the Application of his Purchase Money.

I.—Purchases of Chattels, Part of the Estate of a Testator or Intestate, from Executors or Administrators.

As regards CREDITORS.

General Power of Executors and Administrators over the Personal Estate of Testator or Intestate.

Generally speaking, Purchaser or Mortgagee acquires an Absolute Title.

But not if it appear that the Sale is not for the Purposes of the Estate.

Pledge for Antecedent Debt due from the Executor.

Fraud and Covin as affecting such Transactions.

Transactions set aside under Circumstances, though no Moral Fraud or Impropriety.

As regards LEGATEES.

Where it is evident the Sale is not for the Purposes of the Administration.

Mortgage by Executor for his Personal Debt.

Hill v. Simpson.

Sale of Chattels specifically Bequeathed.

Distinction between the Cases of Creditors and of Legatees, especially as regards Specific Legacies.

Scott v. Tyler, and Sir W. Grant's Observations upon it.

Where the Property professedly is not sold as Assets.

Sale, Mortgage, or Settlement by Executor of Specific Chattel given to him.

Condition and Rights of Residuary Legatee.

Alienation without Valuable Consideration.

Effect of Length of Time merely as a Bar to any Claim.

II.—Purchases of Lands, &c., from Trustees, for Sale, constituted by Deed or Will.

Condition of Purchaser of Real Estate from Trustee for Sale.

Usual to insert a Clause that the Receipt of the Trustees shall be a sufficient Discharge.

Where the Charges are Indefinite.

Sir William Grant's Observations on the General Doctrine.

Trust for Payment of Debts generally.

Annuity charged on Land—where there is a Paramount Charge of Debts.

Land discharged when the Amount has been properly raised.

Alienation pending a Suit void.

Liability of Purchaser to be determined on the State of Things at the Time.

Bond of Indemnity taken by Purchaser.

Fraud—its Effects.

Trustee cannot aliene to satisfy his Private Debt—or so as to give a Preference to one of several Creditors.

Sale subject to Legacies only where there is a Charge of Debts.

Eland v. Eland.

Braithwaite v. Brittain.

Where the Trust is for Payment of definite specified Charges.

Purchaser not bound to see that no more is sold than is necessary.

Purchaser may obtain good Discharge on Receipt of Trustee only, on apparent Intention of the Deed or Will, though no express Authority be given.

Purchasers under Decree.

Effect of Stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 47, 47 Geo. III. c. 7, and 3 & 4 Will. IV., as regards Alienation for Valuable Consideration and Settlements on Marriage.

Analogy to a Purchase from an Executor does not hold in such case.

When the Heir may be restrained from receiving the Purchase Money.

Where Estate charged with Legacies the general Charge of Debts under the Statute will not protect the Purchaser from seeing to the Application of the Purchase Money.

Horn v. Horn.

WE have now to consider more particularly the important subject of how far and in what cases a purchaser, in order to obtain a good title to the estate clear of the charges, is bound to see that his purchase-money is applied to the purposes for which the sale was directed or authorized to be made; and perhaps the most appropriate introduction to this subject will be an inquiry into the condition of a purchaser of a term for years or other chattel from an Executor as regards the creditors and legatees (a); though, as will be seen, the analogy between the two cases does not universally hold.

The executor and administrator, as has already been adverted to (b), are the persons intrusted with the personal property of the testator or intestate: the primary and paramount duty of the executor and administrator is the payment of the testator's debts: for this purpose each of them is bound to make money of the personal estate with all practicable speed, that it may be applied in the first place for the payment of the debts. Even the executor or administrator cannot know at any particular time what is the extent and amount of the debts, or whether all have been paid, and it would be impossible for a stranger to satisfy himself on these points: no one indeed would purchase, except on disadvantageous terms, if he should, by reason of such purchase, become involved in any such inquiries: so that unless those who deal with the executor or administrator could obtain a discharge as regards creditors, from him alone, it might be impracticable, in some cases, for the latter to administer the estate at all (c).

(a) This subject is treated by Mr. Lewin, in his usual concise and perspicuous manner, p. 353, et seq.

(b) Supra, p. 298.

(c) Lex Prætor. 319; Elliott v. Merriman, 2 Atk. 42; S. C. Barnardist. 78; 17 Ves. 162;

The possession of the fund by the executor or the administrator, whether rightfully constituted, or becoming liable in that character by his own unauthorized act (a), renders him personally liable both at law and in equity. In the Court of Chancery, indeed, the fund itself is also considered as charged, to a certain extent, with the debts. "The Court of Chancery," says Mr. Justice Buller (b), who had applied his powerful mind to the doctrines of this court as well as those of the common law, "considers the fund as the debtor, and therefore they pursue that, collect it all into their own hands under the notion of taking an account, call all persons before them who have a demand upon that fund, and distribute it amongst all according to their priorities at law (if they have any), or if not, equally; but that court never said, that, if the effects of a testator get bonâ fide and for good consideration into the hands of a third person, they will take it from him: the case of Elliott v. Merriman, 2 Eq. Ab. 450, pl. 6; ibid. 686, pl. 12; 2 Atk. 41, (supra), proves directly the contrary—at law there is no such thing as a fund in the hands of the executor being the debtor, but the person of the executor, in respect of the assets which he has in his hands, is the debtor."

The executor or administrator therefore having of necessity the absolute power of disposition, it has been established as a general rule that if the assets or any portion of them be sold or aliened by the executor or administrator for valuable consideration, the creditors cannot follow them, they are absolutely vested in the purchaser (c). This power of absolute sale on the part of the executor equally applies where the transaction is with one of several executors; for each being liable for the payment of the debts to the extent of the assets received by him, it is necessary that each should have the power of realizing and applying the assets in his hands (d).

In considering this question as regards purchasers, it is material to inquire whether money was advanced at the time; if not, and the sale and see Lord Mansfield's judgment, Whale v. Booth, 4 T. R. 625, n.; Sir Edward Sugden, Vend. and Pur. 834-5, has fully discussed this subject; and a full examination of the cases relating to sales by executors may also be found in Roper on Legacies, i. 374, et seq.

(a) As to executor de son tort and what dealings with him will be good, see Williams on Executors, pp. 197-8. Payment to an administrator who has obtained letters of administration in the wrong diocese is a good payment; Clark v. Hooper, 10 Bing. 480; 4 M. & Sc. 353.

(b) Farr v. Newman, 4 T. R. 636; see xi. Jur. pt. ii. p. 110.

(c) Lex Præt. 319.

(d) See M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 360; Scott v. Tyler, 2 Dick. 725 (stated inf.). "It is of great consequence," said Lord Thurlow, in this case, "that no rules should be laid down here which may impede executors in their administration; or render the disposition of the testator's effects unsafe or uncertain to the purchaser: his title is safe by sale and delivery; what becomes of the price is no concern of the purchaser. This observation applies equally to mortgages and pledges, and even to the present instance, where assignable bonds were merely pledged without assignment."

or pledge is for an antecedent debt of the executor, that is evidence that the sale or mortgage is not for the purposes of the will (a). "It is not essential," said Sir J. Leach, "that the executor should have the power to pay his own creditor, though it is that he should have the fullest powers for paying the testator's creditors; and it is not just that one man's property should be applied to the payment of another man's debt" (b). But a purchaser from an executor of a part of the personal estate of the testator, advancing money at the time, has a right to infer, unless he has notice to the contrary (c), that the executor, in making the sale, is acting fairly in the execution of his duty (d), and the purchaser shall not be put to examine whether in the particular instance the powers of the executor have been discreetly exercised (e); and it matters not whether the transaction be by way of sale or of pledge, provided money be advanced at the time (f), and provided the party is not affected with notice that the money is not to be applied conformably to the duty of the executor (g).

But fraud and covin will vitiate any transaction, and a purchaser, in his dealings with an executor, may be affected by fraud, direct or implied. The question in such cases must be, whether there is sufficient evidence to prove the fraud (h). The fraud, as in other cases, must be made out by the party seeking to disturb the transaction: if the party have the legal possession, of which he could not be deprived at law, the court, according to its ordinary rules, will not, except upon equitable grounds clearly established, take it from him, or make him in any way liable (i).

The same doctrine applies where the assets of the testator are,

(a) See 17 Ves. 163; 7 Ves. 167.

(b) Watkins v. Cheek, 2 Sim. & St. 205.

(c) See 17 Ves. 171.

(d) Sir J. Leach, 2 Sim. & St. 205.

(e) Sir W. Grant, Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 166.

(f) "I have not found any case where money has been advanced at the time, to the full value of the assets, and it was ever called back. There is no trace of that, except in the case of Humble v. Bill, (2 Vern. 444; 1 Bro. P. C. 71,) which is the case of a specific charge, and therefore does not apply to this. That case was also distinguished by Lord Hardwicke, and disapproved by Sir Joseph Jekyll;" Sir W. Grant, M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 355. "Where a man," added his Honour, "is applied to for a loan of money, there is no motive to fraud, as there may be where a party takes the assets in pledge for an antecedent debt;" and his Honour therefore directed an inquiry, in that case, whether the bonds were deposited for money advanced at the time of the deposits or for any debt antecedently due; ibid. and 361-2; now perhaps the inquiry would be extended (if the question were raised) to the purposes for which as between the parties the money was advanced; see 17 Ves. 171; and see Scott v. Tyler, 2 Dick. 725.

(g) Lord Eldon, M'Leod v. Drummond, 17 Ves. 170-1.

(h) Lord Thurlow, Scott v. Tyler, ubi sup. 17 Ves. 167-8; and see Elliott v. Merriman, Barnardist. 78; 17 Ves. 162-3; Bonny v. Ridgard, 1 Cox, 145, cited 4 Bro. 130-8; 17 Ves. 165.

(i) Sir W. Grant, M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 360; Lord Brougham, Wilson v. Moore, 1 My. & K. 358, 362: whether the court will assist in perfecting a title so acquired, is another question, and must depend perhaps on the circumstances of each particular case; see 17 Ves. 167, 172.

through the agency of the executors, and with the knowledge of the party with whom he is dealing, in any other manner diverted from the purposes of the trust for the private purposes of the executor, though the parties so dealing with the executor may not be guilty of any moral fraud or impropriety in the transaction (a). The transaction may have been fair on the face of it, the executor may have had, to the knowledge of the party with whom he was dealing, ample assets to pay the debts; yet if the transaction with such party was not in the character of executor, but for his private purposes, if the executor should afterwards dispose of the assets in hand without paying the debts, the party so dealing with the executor with notice that there were debts remaining unpaid must, it is presumed, in order that the rule may be efficient, be held to be liable to the creditors to the extent of the assets which he has received (b).

The doctrines above stated have reference more particularly to creditors, but they are also to a great extent applicable to Legatees, though creditors and legatees stand in many respects on a different footing: creditors have a right to resort to the whole of the assets—legatees only to that part which is given to them; what debts there may be must be matter of extrinsic inquiry—what legacies are given, and to whom they are given, may be ascertained by resorting to the testamentary instruments, which are open to all. As regards the claims of legatees, where there are or may be debts, it is of no importance as regards a purchase from the executor, whether the purchaser has or has not notice of the bequests contained in the will. “Every person,” said Sir John Leach, “who deals with an executor, has necessarily implied if not express notice of the will, but all dispositions of personal property are by law subject to a prior charge for the payment of debts. A purchaser has a right to assume that the executor sells in the necessary course of his administration; and it is upon this principle altogether indifferent what dispositions may be made by the will with respect to the personal property for which he deals; for whether it be specifically given or be part of the residuary estate, it is equally charged by law with the payment of debts” (c). But it is a different case if the purchaser is fixed with notice that

(a) Wilson v. Moore, 1 My. & K. 351; Lord Brougham, in this case, considered that Nugent v. Gifford, and Mead v. Lord Orrery, which have always been disapproved, were decided on the ground that the intended misappropriation by the executor was not in point of fact brought home to the party (ibid. 355-6), so that the principle on which they were decided may be admitted; see Kean v. Robarts, 4 Mad. 352; 1 My. & K. 357.

(b) But v. infra, 375, 377.

(c) Keane v. Robarts, ubi sup.

the transaction is not for the payment of debts or for the purposes of administration.

A mortgage (a) by an executor, who is also Residuary legatee, to secure his private debt, may be set aside even at the suit of a pecuniary legatee, for the nature of the claims of legatees, they taking under the will, may be ascertained (b): but as to creditors it is different; if a reasonable time has elapsed since the death of the testator, and then the executor deals with the residue as his own, the purchaser may, in the absence of notice to the contrary, assume that the debts have been paid, or that there are other assets for payment of the debts if any, therefore the mortgagee would be safe as against creditors (c).

If the testator has directed that a specific portion of his personal estate should not be liable to debts, as he does in effect, by giving it specifically and directing his debts to be paid out of the residue, yet as every such direction is a nullity as against creditors, a bonâ fide purchaser of a term or other chattel specifically bequeathed, from the executor, as executor, may hold the property against the specific legatee (d). If the executor has assented to the specific bequest, so as to give the specific legatee the legal title (e), the purchaser can of course only obtain an equitable title, and that, like every other similar equitable title, is liable to be defeated by a sale by the legatee to a purchaser giving him the legal estate, for valuable consideration without notice (f). If there be no sale, the property in the hands of the

(a) The case of a mortgage is less favourable than a sale, for by the common law an agent or factor, with power to sell, cannot pledge for his own debt; Paterson v. Tash, 2 Strange, 1178; Daubigny v. Duval, 5 T. R. 606; De Bouchout v. Goldsmid, 5 Ves. 211; and see Wilson v. Moore, 1 My. & K. 359, et seq., where the alteration in the law by the stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 83, and 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, in favour of bonâ fide purchasers without notice is mentioned.

(b) Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves 152; there the plaintiff was not legatee under the will by which the executor immediately derived his title as executor and residuary legatee, but was a legatee under a prior testator, who had given the residue of his estate to the executor's testator, subject to the payment of the plaintiff's legacy; the property pledged was part of the original testator's property. Direct notice that the property pledged was liable to the legacies was not imputed, but negligence only, the bankers relied on the executor's representation that the property was absolutely his own. This was the first case in which a mere pecuniary legatee succeeded in an attempt to follow assets alienated by the executor, the relief having previously been confined to the cases of creditors and specific legatees; 14 Ves. 354, 361; affirmed, 17 Ves. 171: and see 169-70, where Lord Eldon approves of Sir W. Grant's decision in Hill v. Simpson, supra, saying he did not see why the doctrine should not be extended also to a residuary legatee; ibid. 169-70. The principle that circumstances exciting suspicion only will prevent a person making no inquiry from acquiring property is acted upon at law as regards promissory notes; Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & C. 466; Down v. Halling, 4 B. & C. 330: this subject is discussed at large in Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. R. U. S. 155-60.

(c) V. infra, p. 377; and Mead v. Lord Orrery, 3 Atk. 235, as stated by Sir W. Grant, 7 Ves. 166, though the decision has been disapproved of.

(d) Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. W. 149; Andrew v. Wrigley, 4 Bro. 125; Atty.-General v. Potter, 5 Beav. 171. There the tenant for life of the term, but who was also executrix, had been let into possession.

(e) See Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Ch. Ca. 256; and Thomlinson v. Smith, Rep. temp. Finch, 378.

(f) The observations of Mr. Coote on Mort-legatee and those claiming under him as volunteers, still remains liable in equity for the debts, for every legatee is bound to refund in proportion (a).

If the rule in regard to property specifically bequeathed were not as above stated, it would be incumbent on the purchaser, though the sale of the specific chattel were necessary for the payment of debts, to require that an account should first be taken of the debts and assets of the testator in the Court of Chancery, which would obviously be productive of great inconvenience (b); but the purchase, so as to give an absolute title to the purchaser, must be bonâ fide, and without notice that there were no debts or that all the debts had been paid (c).

There is a plain distinction in these cases, in reference to the rights of creditors and those of legatees, and especially as regards specific legatees. Creditors have no lien on the assets; specific legatees have; the claim of the creditors is indeed paramount, and, as we have seen, the purchaser is not bound to inquire whether there is sufficient for the satisfaction of those paramount claims without resorting to the property specifically given; but if all the debts are paid, then the executor is bound to assent to the specific legacy, and not to treat it as assets; and if the purchaser is aware of the fact of all the debts having been paid at the time of his purchase, he is a party to a wrongful act on the part of the executor, and will be affected, together with the executor, with the consequences attending such an act (d).

Even where there is no apparent fraud on the part of the executor, the purchaser is not protected from the claims of legatees, if he knows gages (p. 200, n. 2nd ed.), would lead to the supposition that a purchaser of a term specifically bequeathed, to which bequest the executor had assented, would acquire the legal title if he should obtain the muniments of title; the author of the Treatise in the Jurist, vol. xi. referred to below, has remarked (p. 112) on this inadvertence.

(a) Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Ch. Ca. 256; and Thomlinson v. Smith, ubi sup.

(b) Langley v. Earl of Oxford, Ambl. Append. p. 797, Blunt's ed.

(c) Sugd. V. and P. 852-4, § 9; Andrew v. Wrigley, 4 Bro. 125; Taylor v. Hawkins, 8 Ves. 212; M'Leod v. Drummond, 17 Ves. 162. In this section I have, with Mr. Sweet's permission, made use of and in part adopted a Treatise on this subject in the Jurist, vol. xi. pt. 2, p. 110, et seq.

(d) See Scott v. Tyler, 2 Dick. 725; 14 Ves. 363. In Scott v. Tyler, as reported 2 Dick. 724, also reported 2 Bro. 431, and before referred to, some River Lee Navigation bonds had been deposited by Eliz. Tyler, who was an executrix with others, and specific legatee in remainder of the property, for her private debt. Four years had elapsed since the death of the testator; Mary Christ. Tyler, the specific legatee of the bonds in question, then filed her bill against the bankers to have it declared that the deposit was null as against her, and Lord Thurlow was of opinion (see 17 Ves. 166), though his decision was intercepted by a compromise, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the bankers. In that case the breach of trust, as against the immediate specific legatee, was obvious, but Sir W. Grant observed that the testator was an opulent man, therefore his executrix was bound to have assented to that specific legacy, and had no right to deal with it as assets (see 14 Ves. 363), much less for payment of his private debts. It is observable, as Sir W. Grant remarked (14 Ves. 360), that Lord Thurlow resorted to implied fraud as the ground for taking the property pledged from the bankers.

that payment of creditors is not the executor's object in effecting the sale; thus, where the testatrix had directed that a leasehold should be sold, and the produce divided amongst five persons; B. who had purchased from H. the executor under a false representation that the testator had become beneficially entitled by an arrangement with the legatees, was held liable to the legatees on the express ground that his vendor did not profess to be selling the leaseholds as assets; "but," said Lord Gifford, M. R., "if H. in his character of executor had sold the property to B., and B. had been ignorant of the real nature of the transaction, the sale could not have been set aside" (a).

If the executor is himself legatee of a specific chattel, he may (after a reasonable time has elapsed from the death of the testator to enable him to ascertain the amount of the debts and the sufficiency of the other assets for payment of the debts,) mortgage that chattel as a security for his own debt, and settle it on his marriage, or otherwise deal with it as his own; his doing so will amount to a sufficient representation that the circumstances are such as to warrant the act, so that the purchaser will have a good title as against the creditors. In this respect a purchaser from the executor stands in the same situation as a purchaser without notice from any other legatee after assent (b). "Although," said Sir W. Grant, "executors are in equity mere trustees for the performance of the will, yet in many respects and for many purposes third persons are entitled to consider them as absolute owners. The mere circumstance that they are executors is not sufficient to vitiate every transaction with them in which they deal as owners (c). Such a length of time may have elapsed since the testator's death as that a purchaser may fairly presume that the executor has paid all demands, and that the assets therefore belong to him, though they may not have been specifically given to him; where the executor is residuary legatee, especially where he is only one of several executors, the circumstances may be such as to raise a fair presumption that his co-executor has released to him or that the property has otherwise become his own; in such cases a stranger may properly deal with him on the assumption that the assets are his own (d).

(a) Cubbidge v. Boatwright, 1 Russ. 549.

(b) Taylor v. Hawkins, 8 Ves. 209; Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 260; et v. Bonny v. Ridgard, 4 Bro. 133; M'Leod v. Drummond, 17 Ves. 163-4. In Taylor v. Hawkins, the mortgage, which was made within seven months after the testator's death, was sustained against creditors, ix. Jurist, part ii. p. 110, et v. supra, p. 375.

(c) Sir W. Grant, Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 166; M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 363; Mead v. Lord Orrery, 3 Atk. 235; Nugent v. Gifford, 1 Atk. 463, as there cited.

(d) See M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 363, et v. 17 Ves. 164; Whale v. Booth, 4 T. R. 625 n., Lord Mansfield; though the decision itself is overruled by Farr v. Newman, ubi supra, Nugent v. Gifford, as stated from

As regards a residuary legatee, if in fact all the debts are paid the residuary legatee may call for a transfer in equity; therefore though the creditors have no lien on the assets it cannot be said that the residuary legatee in such a case has not. If therefore the purchaser from the executor has notice that all the debts are paid, that consequently the remaining assets are in effect specifically the property of the residuary legatee, it would seem to have been Lord Eldon's opinion that the purchaser from the executor is accessory to a breach of trust, and cannot hold the property against the residuary legatee (a): so though possibly an executor may have prima facie a power to lease so as to bind all parties, yet when the residuary legatees or next of kin have called for a sale, and the lessee takes with knowledge of that fact, the lease is void in equity (b).

It is clear that wherever the executor or administrator disposes of the assets without valuable consideration, there the creditors, or whoever is entitled either as legatee or under the Statute of Distributions, may follow the assets if distinguishable (c): for such disposition is fraudulent as against the persons beneficially entitled; and therefore it is as if they were in the hands of the executor, and he in whose hands they are, at least if he took them knowing that they were parts of the estate of a testator or intestate, being particeps criminis, the creditor has a demand against him as well as the executor (d). If the property so transferred be money and not distinguishable, and the party taking it knew that it was part of a testator or intestate's estate, the creditors and legatees will still have a right to the amount; but the remedy will be confined to a personal demand.

Whether where it is admitted on all sides that the debts are paid and that the sale is made only for the payment of legacies, the purchaser is bound to see to the payment of the legacies, has not been, that I can find, expressly decided; Sir Joseph Jekyll does not appear to have had the Registrar's Book, 4 Bro. 135-6, and in Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 166-7; and Lord Hardwicke's observations on the same case, in Mead v. Lord Orrery, 1 Atk. 235 (7 Ves. 167), (which latter case, however, was disapproved by Lord Kenyon, in Bonny v. Ridgard, 1 Cox, 145).

(a) See 17 Ves. 163, Lord Eldon's dicta; but Lord Lyndhurst says, in Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Phillips, 721, assuming that the purchaser knew that the debts were paid, as the executor had authority to sell not only for the payment of debts, but also for the purpose of distribution amongst the residuary legatees, this would not afford any inference that the executor was committing a breach of trust in selling the estate.

(b) Drohan v. Drohan, 1 Ball & B. 187.

(c) It is established that they cannot be taken in execution for the private debt of the executor; Farr v. Newman, 4 T. R. 621.

(d) Pagett v. Hoskins, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 111; S. C. Prec. Ch. 431; Lex Prætor. 319. If the property be money, without any ear mark, and had previously been mixed with the executor's money, it cannot of course be followed, v. supra, p. 221, add. note.

a clear opinion upon the subject: as a sale is necessary, I presume that in such case the purchaser may obtain a good title from the executor alone; though the principle stated below may be applicable in this case also (a).

Length of time alone, that is without reference to any presumption it may afford (b), may be a bar to any relief being granted to creditors or legatees in cases of this description, as indeed it may as regards every kind of equitable claim (c).

II. We now proceed to the consideration of the condition of a purchaser of Real estate from a trustee.

As regards a purchase from a trustee for sale (d), whether under a will or a deed, the only liability of the purchaser at law, is, that he pay the purchase-money to the vendors; though they may be trustees for others, of the money to be produced by the sale; the receipt of the vendors is a sufficient discharge to him at law (e). It has been already noticed that in the Court of Chancery where a person purchases land bound by a trust with notice of the trust, the land generally speaking will still be bound in the hands of the purchaser, and it has been considered that as the trust in these cases is not only to sell, but to sell for the purpose of payment of the charges, the purchaser ought, when he can, to see that the trust is performed in all its parts; as a general rule the payment of the money is to be made in the way the deed or will directs, for that is the purchaser's title (f), so that, as a general rule, the receipts of the persons who are entitled in whole or in part are necessary to the obtaining a complete title in equity.

It is usual in deeds or wills by which trustees are empowered to sell lands, to insert a clause, declaring that their receipts of the purchase-moneys shall be a sufficient discharge to the purchasers. Such a clause should in no case be omitted; it will relieve a purchaser in all cases from the necessity of seeing to the application of the purchase-money, and by facilitating the sale will enhance the price (g).

(a) "I admit if an executor should sell a term for an undervalue or to one who has notice that there are no debts, this might be another consideration," Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. W. 149; though that observation may have applied to the case of the claims of specific or residuary legatees; and see Burting v. Stonard, ib. 150; there extrinsic evidence was resorted to to see whether a sale was in fact necessary; et sup. 378, n. (a), v. inf. p. 381, at n. (d).

(b) V. supra, p. 61.

(c) Andrews v. Wrigley, 4 Bro. 138, before Lord Alvanley; Bonny v. Ridgard, 1

Cox, 145, 4 Bro. 125, before Lord Kenyon, where the general principles adverted to in the text are recognised, and the limitations of the right of the executor are particularly noticed, and the prior dicta and decisions reviewed; but relief was refused on the ground of the lapse of time.

(d) See, on this subject, Hill on Trustees, 357-361.

(e) Sugd. V. and P. 832.

(f) See Lex Præt. 320.

(g) See Sugd. V. and P. 832; and see the add. note, infra, p. 389.

But it would have been extremely inconvenient to have held that the rule that the purchaser shall be bound to see to the application of his purchase-money, or to obtain receipts from all the parties interested in the proceeds, should apply to cases where the individual objects are not pointed out. To have mixed up a purchaser with such a trust, and to have imposed on him the duty of seeing to its execution would have been attended with the same inconveniences as would have resulted from the application of a similar rule to purchasers from executors (a); it would have laid an embargo on property in the hands of trustees for sale, and have prevented any sale taking place with safety to the purchaser, excepting under the directions of the Court of Chancery, or for a price calculated on the amount of the trouble and risk incurred (b). The rule therefore has been relaxed in cases where the charge is indefinite, that is where the specific objects of the trust are not pointed out; but it remains in full force in all cases where the purchaser has the means of seeing that the payments whether to specific creditors or others to which the purchased estate has been made liable, have been duly discharged (c).

Sir William Grant disapproved of this doctrine; he considered that in principle it ought to have been held that as regards the purchaser, the only trust by which the land was bound was the trust for sale, and that the trust for the application of the purchase-money was quite distinct, and that this part of the trust only affected the trustees personally. "I think," said that very eminent judge, "that the doctrine upon this point has been carried further than any sound equitable principle could warrant: where the act is a breach of duty in the trustee, it is very fit that those who deal with him should be affected by an act tending to defeat the trust of which they have notice; but when the sale is made by the trustee in performance of his duty, it seems extraordinary that he should not be able to do what one should think incidental to the right exercise of his power, that is, to give a valid discharge for the purchase-money" (d). His Honour, however, though no decision was called for on the point, assumed that the law was established so as to exclude all doubt or discussion.

Where a trust of this nature is created for payment of debts gene-

(a) V. sup. p. 371.

(b) See Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. W. 149; Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. Sen. 215; S. C. 1 Dick. 132; Elliott v. Merriman, Barnard. 78; and 1 Keen, 573; see Lord Mansfield's observations in regard to the corresponding doctrine as to a purchaser from an executor, Whale v. Booth, 4 T. R. 625, n.; and Lord Hardwicke's, in Nu- gent v. Gifford, 1 Atk. 463.

(c) See Lex Prætor. 120.

(d) Sir Wm. Grant, Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 156; and see 4 Ves. Jun. 99; Sugd. V. and P. 841; and Butler's note to Co. Litt. 290, b. note (1), § 12; v. supra, p. 379, at n. (a).

rally, it is clear that the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money (a), as he cannot any more than a purchaser from an executor be supposed to have notice of all the general creditors; and the reason of the rule, and the rule itself equally applies where the trust or charge is for the payment of debts generally and of legacies, as the payment of the debts, which are indefinite, must precede the payment of the legacies (b), and that, whether the estate be specifically devised subject to the charges or not.

Where, as before observed, an Annuity is charged on land, and there is no devise for the payment of debts, and no general charge of debts, it must generally be deemed that the land was intended to be a constant and subsisting security for the payment of the annuity (c): but if there be a paramount general charge of debts, the annuitant stands in the same situation as a legatee; the annuitant being a mere volunteer cannot prevent the loss or diminution of his security upon the land charged, and the rule by which the purchaser is discharged from seeing to the application of his purchase-money equally applies to a case of this description (d): where a man devises an estate to be sold for payment of debts generally, or charges it with debts generally, and then makes specific dispositions, it is just the same thing as regards the purchaser as if the specific devises were out of the will (e).

In these cases as soon as the money is raised, though it may be misapplied by the trustees or persons whose duty it is to distribute the money, the land is discharged (f); what becomes of the price is no concern of the purchaser (g), and the purchaser from the trustee is no more liable to see that the trustee has discreetly exercised his powers than is a purchaser from an executor (h). But where a suit has been instituted by creditors to have the estate sold for the payment of debts the execution of the trust is taken out of the hands of the trustees, and an alienation pending the suit is void (i).

(a) See 2 Jarman, 511.

(b) Watkins v. Cheek, 2 S. & S. 199; that case was decided on the special circumstances: Johnson v. Kennett, 3 My. & K. 630-1; Ball v. Harris, 4 My. & Cr. 264; Sugd. V. and P. 835, § 10.

(c) See Elliott v. Merriman, Barnard. 78, cited Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 575-6; et sup. p. 369.

(d) Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 284-5; Sugd. V. and P. 839-40; the same principle, as regards leaseholds charged with an annuity, appears to have been established by Watts v. Kaney, Tothill, 141; 9 Jac. 1.

(e) Lord Eldon, Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves.

654, n.

(f) Anon. in Dom. Proc. 1 Salk. 153; Carter v. Barnadiston, 1 P. W. 518-9; et v. sup. p. 344.

(g) Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115; Sugd. V. and P. 835, § 9; et v. 2 Dick. 725.

(h) Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 577; there a specific portion of the estate was devised on a particular trust, but the whole of the estates were charged with debts: Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 285; Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115; Sugd. V. and P. 835, § 8; et v. supra, p. 373.

(i) Lord Camden, Walker v. Smalwood, Ambl. 677; the trustees had answered and submitted to the jurisdiction: see Bishop of

In determining as to the liability of the purchaser the court will not, it seems, look to subsequent events. In the case of a trust by deed, the deed must receive its construction as from the moment of its execution : as a general rule, according to the frame of the deed, so the court determines whether the purchasers are or are not liable to see to the application of the purchase-money (a). So as regards a trust or charge by will the question is to be determined on the construction of the instrument itself (b). If there be a general charge, whatever may have happened since the testator's death cannot it seems affect the liability of the purchaser (c), unless a case of fraud or collusion be made out so as to make him a party to a breach of trust on the part of the vendor (d). If therefore where the charge is general, and the debts are paid after the death of the testator and the legacies only are left as a charge, that circumstance alone does not prevent the application of the general rule (e); indeed, to follow out the rule, evidence of that fact ought not in any case to be admitted, unless with a view of showing that the purchaser was a party to an intended mis-

Winchester v. Paine, 11 Ves. 197; and see the other cases cited in Mr. Blunt's note as to purchases made pendente lite.

(a) Sir William Grant, Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 156.

(b) See Mr. Phillips's note, 1 Phill. Rep. 722-3.

(c) See Johnson v. Kennett, 3 My. & K. 631, reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, 6 Sim. 384, which reversal the Vice-Chancellor approved, (Speakman v. Tumbril, 15 Law J., N. S.); the decree, as drawn up, was wrong on the face of it, as it directed an account of debts, see 6 Simons, 390; Eland v. Eland, stated infra; 4 My. & Cr. 428-9; Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 269, 283; Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 152; 12 Sim. 528, before the Vice-Chancellor of England; 11 M. & W. 630, on case sent to the Court of Exchequer; 1 Phillips, 717, 722-3, before Lord Lyndhurst, where the decree of the Vice-Chancellor of England was reversed. In the course of the investigation of the title before the Master, the defendant inquired of the plaintiff, the vendor, whether all the debts had been paid, to which question the plaintiff declined to give any answer: the Vice-Chancellor of England considered this as equivalent to his having been told that the debts had been paid, in which case the purchaser would not be exonerated. In this case his lordship said (p. 721-2), "But assuming that the facts relied upon in this case amount to notice that the debts had been paid, yet as the executor had authority to sell, not only for the payment of the debts, but also for the purpose of distribution amongst the residuary legatees, this would not afford any inference that the executor was committing a breach of trust in selling the estate, or that he was not performing what his duty required." His Lordship then referred to his dictum in Johnson v. Kennett, before cited, as applying to a case where the debts are paid off before the sale, and the purchaser knows it (see p. 722), without expressing any change of opinion. Mr. Phillips adds a note, which is partly as follows: "If, notwithstanding this decision, it should still be inferred from the terms of the dictum in Johnson v. Kennett, that the rule would not apply to a case in which it should happen that there were no debts due at the testator's death, and that the purchaser knew it, I have the authority of Lord Lyndhurst for stating that he did not intend, on that occasion, to lay down any rule that should govern such a case; and that the guarded and somewhat qualified terms in which the dictum is referred to and adopted in this case were used for the express purpose of excluding that inference." See the observations on this case, in the Jurist, vol. xi. part ii. pp. 125-6, and Mr. Phillips's note, which is there set out.

(d) As in Watkins v. Cheek, 2 S. & S. 199; Eland v. Eland, 4 My. & Cr. 429; Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 151; see Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Phillips, 721.

(e) Rogers v. Skillicorne, Ambl. 188; Elliot v. Merryman, Barnard. 78; Johnson v. Kennett, 3 My. & K. 624, and the cases cited in the last note.

application of the purchase-money or some other fraud on the part of the trustee (a).

If the case is such that the purchaser is to be considered as having been discharged from liability, but he should nevertheless for his security have taken a bond of indemnity, that will not have the effect of imposing upon him the liability from which he was at the time free (b); but if by his contract he expressly or virtually binds himself to pay, or he takes subject to, any charges on the estate, by that contract he must abide (c).

But in these cases, as in the instance of a sale or mortgage by an executor (d), fraud, direct or constructive, if proved may vitiate the transaction. If the transaction affords intrinsic evidence that the sale or mortgage was not made in order to pay off the charges, but for other purposes which would amount to a breach of trust, then the purchaser or mortgagee being a party to the breach of trust the estate remains liable in his hands (e). Or if there be collusion between the purchaser and the trustees who are guilty of a misapplication, the estate will still be liable (f); just as a purchaser from an executor will be, if he is party to a breach of trust on the part of the executor in the misapplication of the assets (g).

There never was any pretence that a trustee could aliene in payment of his own private debts, whatever might have formerly been thought as to the power of an executor to do so (h). Nor can he mortgage to a

(a) But see the reporter's note to Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Phillips, 722; and see Gosling v. Carter, 1 Coll. 644, 648; that was a case of a charge.

(b) See Johnson v. Kennett, 3 My. & K. 624, supra, (Sugd. V. and P. 11 ed. 840); some of the bonds mentioned legacies only, but some were general bonds of indemnity. Quære, could the creditors have claimed the benefit of the bonds? Lord Lyndhurst did not notice one principal ground of the Vice-Chancellor of England's decision, that the prior conveyance to uses to bar dower showed that the executor was dealing with the estate as his own: his Lordship appears rather to have misapprehended the ground of the argument of the counsel for the legatee.

(c) In Eland v. Eland, 1 Beav. 235, (affirmed on appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 420,) the testator devised real estate, subject to a general charge of debts and legacies, to his son in fee, and appointed his son executor. Nine years after the testator's death the devisee mortgaged the estate, with a covenant against all incumbrances, excepting the legacies; there were debts still due: it was held that the mortgagee took subject to the legacies, but not to the debts; not subject to the debts on account of the general rule, but subject to the legacies because, by his contract, he was to take subject to them: how the case would have stood if there had been no such contract, is left in doubt upon that case. In Rogers v. Rogers, 6 Sim. 364, a testator devises his estates charged with debts and legacies; the devisee mortgaged the estate to A., subject expressly to the legacies. A. having called in his money, and the devisee requiring a further advance, they joined in a mortgage of the estate to B., but not expressly subject to the legacies, and B. was informed, falsely, by the devisee, that all the legacies had been paid: it was held that B. took the estate subject to the legacies.

(d) Supra, p. 373.

(e) Watkins v. Cheek, 2 Sim. & S. 205-6; 4 My. & Cr. 426-7; Sugd. V. and P. 840, § 27.

(f) Rogers v. Skillicorn, Ambl. 189.

(g) Crane v. Drake, 2 Vern. 616; v. supra, p. 373.

(h) Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. 215. This is one of the cases in which Lord Hardwicke is supposed to have recognized the authority of Nugent v. Gifford, 1 Atk. 463, which would creditor of the testator to secure his individual debt, as it is a fraud to give a preference to one individual creditor, which the law has not established and the court will not allow (a).

If the money which is raised by the mortgage might have been applied for the payment of debts, though nothing is said in the deed on the subject, the mortgagee will have the benefit of that presumption. If a devisee of the estate, subject to a charge of debts and legacies, raises money as owner upon the security of the estate, and mortgages it, subject to the legacies only, it will not be presumed that the money was raised for the devisee's own purposes, he might have raised the money expressly for the immediate payment of the debts (b): nor is it evidence of fraud that the devisee sells the estate as his own; he is, in truth, owner, subject to the charge (c). There may be circumstances under which a purchaser or mortgagee may be at liberty to assume that a devisee has become the actual owner free from the charge, and deal with him as such: the same principles which apply to a sale by an executor as absolute owner (d) may be applied to a devisee (e). An attempt to establish such a case was lately made in the suit of Braithwaite v. Brittain, but it failed (f). That case was in substance as follows:—The testator, a trader, devised an estate called Sinderly to his nephew William, charged with 3800*l.*, to be paid to his executor; and devised an estate called Bridlington to his nephew John, charged with 1400*l.*, to be paid in like manner, and gave those sums and his residuary real and personal estate, charged with the payment of his debts, and the annuities and legacies given by his will, to his nephews William, John, and George. The nephews William, John, and George were appointed executors, but John and George alone proved. Two years after the testator's death, a deed was executed by the three nephews, whereby, after reciting that the two sums of 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* were given to the three nephews, William, John, and George, and that they had apportioned between them their respective shares of the 3800*l.* and 1400*l.*, and that all accounts between them as to these sums had been settled to their satisfaction, (but saying nothing as to the debts have established that an executor might mortgage the assets for his own individual debt; v. supra, p. 383.

(a) Ibid.

(b) Eland v. Eland, supra. The amount of the legacies so excepted and remaining charged was directed to be applied first in payment of debts, ibid. 429-30; and see Lyon v. Colville, 1 Coll. 470, 471; Braithwaite v. Brittain, 1 Keen, 207, stated in the text, appears to have been decided on the special circumstances in regard to the previous dealings between the parties; see the Jurist, vol. xi. part ii. pp. 113-4, as to this case; et v. infra, p. 386, n. (b).

(c) Lord Cottenham, Eland v. Eland, 4 My. & Cr. 427.

(d) Supra, p. 377.

(e) See 1 Keen, 222.

(f) 1 Keen, 206.

and legacies); William and George released John, and George and John released William from all claims in respect of those two sums respectively. William, shortly afterwards, mortgaged his estate. John, two years afterwards, did the same. The question was whether the mortgagees could hold as against the claims of the creditors under the charge, or by virtue of the statute 47 Geo. III. c. 72, the testator having been a trader (a); Lord Langdale was of opinion they could not: the mortgagees had notice of the will and of the charge, and constructively at least that there were or might be debts of the testator: there was no representation that the debts had been paid; the release only referred to the claims of the executors and residuary devisees to the 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* amongst themselves, and consequently his Lordship held that these sums so charged still remained charges so far as creditors were concerned (b).

When the trust or charge is for the payment of some specified debts only, or for the payment of legacies only, or of both specified debts and legacies, there the debts, as well as the legacies, are specific charges on the land, and the purchaser has the means of ascertaining to what particular charges his money is to be applied, and who are the persons from whom he may obtain a discharge are pointed out (c). The purchaser, however, as a general rule, is not bound to see that no more is sold than is necessary to pay the charges; for he is not bound to enter into the account, and the trustees in general cannot sell just so much only as is sufficient to pay the debts, besides they may have to cover their expenses (d); but if the trustees are plainly selling more than is requisite, it would seem that the sale would not be good (e); no one is protected who is a party to a plain breach of trust. Where lands are vested in trustees by act of parliament to be mortgaged for a particular purpose, it is incumbent on the mortgagee to see that the money is applied accordingly (f).

A purchaser may, in some cases, obtain a sufficient discharge by the receipt of the trustees, upon the intention to be collected from the deed or will, though no express authority be given for that purpose: if it can be collected that the intention must have been, at the

(a) 1 Keen, 220.

(b) Braithwaite v. Brittain, 1 Keen, 222. If, said Lord Langdale, the two sums had been raised and paid to the executors, the mortgagees would not have been bound to see to their application; but, added his Lordship, so far from its appearing that the money received from the mortgagees was paid to the executors, the contrary appears, ibid.

(c) Dunch v. Kent, 1 Vern. 260; Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 153, 157; Sugd. V. and P. 11th ed. 834.

(d) Spalding v. Shalmer, 1 Vern. 303.

(e) Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115, cited 1 Vern. 487, 1 Fonbl. 149.

(f) Cotterel v. Hampson, 2 Vern. 6.

time the deed was executed or the will made, that the trustees were to have the power to give an effectual discharge to the purchaser, then their receipt alone will be sufficient. Thus, if, in the case of a will, a sale is directed, which is to take place immediately after the testator's death, and the persons for whose benefit the money is to be raised are unborn, or if born are infants, and therefore incapable of giving a receipt for the purchase-money; or where the deed or will clearly confers an immediate power of sale, for a purpose which cannot be immediately defined—as to pay particular debts which cannot be ascertained until a future distant period; it will be implied that the intention was that in such case the trustees should have authority to give effectual discharges, for as no one else would have ability to do so, the sale could not otherwise be effected according to the explicit direction (a): but if an estate be charged with a sum of money payable to an infant on his attaining 21, there the purchaser is bound to see that the money is actually paid on the infant attaining that age, if not the estate will remain liable; and it seems that the court cannot bind the right of the infant in such a case (b).

So if the trust is of such a nature that the contemplated sale might have to be effected at a time when the distribution could not possibly be made (c), or if the trusts on which the purchase-money is to be applied are of a nature requiring time and the exercise of discretion (d), it has been considered that it must have been intended that the trustees should of themselves be able to give a discharge to the purchaser for the produce, for otherwise in this case the sale would have to be deferred (e).

(a) Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 151, (see 1 Phill. 722, note of Mr. Phillips); Sowarsby v. Lacy, 4 Mad. 142; Lavender v. Stanton, 6 Mad. 46; and see Breedon v. Breedon, 1 Russ. & M. 413. In Glynn v. Locke, 3 Dru. & W. 22, a policy of insurance had been assigned to a trustee upon certain trusts, one of which was for the payment of the debts of the party insured; the ultimate trust was for the family. Lord Chancellor Sugden held that the trustee could give a valid discharge to the insurance company notwithstanding they had notice of persons having adverse equitable claims, though the deed had not provided that the receipt of the trustee should be a sufficient discharge. "The nature of the trust deed," said his Lordship, "is sufficient to absolve the company from the necessity of seeing to the application of the money; "if," his Lordship continued, "I were to decide in favour of the company (they had filed a bill of interpleader) it would amount to a decision that in all cases a party paying money to a trustee is bound to see to its application, and consequently to the execution of the trusts of the deeds, however complicated;—no such rule exists."

(b) Dickenson v. Dickenson, 3 Bro. p. 19; Sugd. V. and P. 836, § 14.

(c) Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 151; that was the case of a trust deed; an immediate sale was contemplated, and the money was to be applied amongst such creditors as should come in within 18 months from the date of the deed.

(d) As where the money is to be laid out in land; Doran v. Wiltshire, 3 Swanst. p. 699; Sugd. V. and P. 836.

(e) See Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 156; Rogers v. Skillicorn, Ambl. 188; Johnson v. Kennett, 3 My. & K. 624.

It may here be observed, that although, generally speaking, persons purchasing under a decree are safe, it is a settled maxim of equity that persons purchasing under decrees of the court are bound to see that the sale is made according to the decree, and they must see that the persons who are the parties to convey are before the court (a).

Neither the stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, re-enacted by the 1 Will. IV. c. 47, against devises made in fraud of creditors, nor the statute 47 Geo. III. c. 74, which made the real estates of traders liable to their debts, charged the real assets descended or devised with the ancestor's debts, but the remedy, as we have seen, was against the heir or devisee personally to the extent of the value of the assets; the same principle applies to the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105, which makes the real estates of all persons liable to their debts: therefore if the estate be conveyed for a price in money or settled on marriage, which is a valuable consideration (b), the parties claiming under the sale or settlement (c) hold the land discharged of the debts, (though having full notice that there are such debts,) and the only remedy is against the heir or devisee, who is personally liable for the value of the assets he has so conveyed or settled (d). Here it will be seen the analogy to the case of a purchaser from an executor does not hold; it is not because the purchaser is to presume that the alienation is an execution of a trust that he is discharged, but because any alienation would have defeated a creditor before the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, and neither that or any subsequent statute has done more than to give to the creditors a remedy against the alienor whether heir or devisee (e). But where there is danger that the price of the estate will be misapplied, the Court of Chancery will at the instance of the creditors restrain the heir from receiving it from the purchaser (f).

Where the estate is charged with Legacies the purchaser is clearly (a) Lord Redesdale, Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bli. 186; Giffard v. Hort, 1 Scho. & L. 386.

(b) V. supra, p. 52.

(c) As to a purchase from an executor, v. supra, p. 372. In Higgins v. Shaw, 2 Dru. & W. 362, Sir E. Sugden appears to have thought that a settlement, where nothing passes, would not affect the rights of creditors.

(d) Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 259-60; Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 123. There a portion of the estates had been set apart to answer the debts, which had proved to be insufficient, yet the settlement of the remainder was supported as against the claims of the creditors; these cases are founded on Matthews v. Jones, 2 Anst. 515: and see, as to the effect of these statutes, 4 My. & Cr. 268-9; Sugd. V. and P. 834-5. The testator, as we have seen, may make the estate equitable assets by charge or devise in trust for his creditors, though he cannot exempt his heir or devisee from liability, supra, p. 313; the statement, 7 Beav. 123, if it means that the debtor may now withdraw the land from his specialty creditors altogether appears to be a mistake; et v. supra, p. 344; note (e).

(e) There is a dictum of the Lord Chancellor Sugden, 2 Dru. & W. 362, which may seem to be at variance with this doctrine; but it was introduced obiter, and did not affect the decision.

(f) Green v. Lowes, 3 Bro. 217.

liable to see to the application of his purchase-money, notwithstanding the general liability of the estate under the statute-law, above adverted to, to the payment of debts, and the estate may therefore have been sold for that purpose. "The purchaser from and heir or devisee," said Sir J. Leach, "being before the stat. 47 Geo. III. sess. 2. c. 74, bound to see to the application of his purchase-money in satisfaction of legacies charged on the land by the devisor, notwithstanding specialty debts which were to be paid out of the land, and the statutes having made no difference in this respect, the purchasers from the heir or devisee must continue bound to see to the application of his purchase-money in satisfaction of legacies charged upon the land, notwithstanding the statutes by which simple-contract debts are to be paid out of the land" (a).

(a) Sir J. Leach, Horn v. Horn, 2 Sim. & S. 451; and see Sugd. V. and P. 835, as to the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—See p. 380, supra.

Cestuis que Trust Parties.

The 30th of Lord Cottenham's very beneficial orders of Aug. 1841 directs, That in all suits concerning real estate which is vested in trustees by devise and such trustees are competent to sell and give discharges for the proceeds of the sale and for the rents and profits of the estates, such trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested in the estate, or the proceeds or the rents and profits, in the same manner and to the same extent as the executors or administrators in suits concerning personal estate represent the persons beneficially interested in such personal estate, and that it shall not be necessary to make the persons beneficially interested parties to the suit; and under such circumstances persons having charges are under this order unnecessary parties. In Osborne v. Foreman, 2 Hare, 656, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram has stated the reason of the order and the cases to which it applies. The order does not operate where the trustees have not the legal estate, Turner v. Hind, 12 Sim. 414; see Daniell's Practice, by Headlam, 224; and see Weatherby v. Giorgio, 2 Hare, 629, where the Vice-Chancellor Wigram gives the rule as to foreign trustees and cestuis que trust.

SECTION VII.—Of Portions.

§ 1.—General Doctrines.

§ 2.—Double Portions.—Satisfaction.

§ 1.—General Doctrines.

Introduction.Portions secured by a Term.Personal Estate Primary Fund.When only Fund.Portions given by Will.Case of Parent.Person loco parentis.Portions, how far governed by Rules of Civil Law.Rules of Civil Law adopted by Court of Chancery.Old Rule as to Legacies charged on Real Estate payable in futuro.Where Postponement is for Convenience of the Estate.Where Time fixed for Payment of Portions.Court has enlarged the Powers of Trustees.Where no certain Time for Payment is fixed—vest immediately.Unless different Intention to be collected from Context.Rule must be construed in a Reasonable Sense—if the Portion be wanted.Hubert v. Parsons.Hinchinbrooke v. Seymour.Where no Gift but in the Direction to Pay.Conditions must be fulfilled.Where Postponement not annexed to Substance of Gift.Condition Precedent.After Debts paid, or the like.Leaning of Court of Chancery in favour of Vesting of Portions when wanted.“Payable” construed “vested.”Observations on this Rule of Construction.Some Children living held in some cases to satisfy the Contingency.Lord Eldon, Hope v. Clifdon.Sir W. Grant’s Rule.Lord Cottenham’s Observations as to this Doctrine,Whatford v. Morris.Of raising Portions by Sale of Reversionary Term.Early Cases.Distinctions taken in subsequent Cases.Rule as stated by Lord Hardwicke.Lord Talbot.Lord Eldon.Intention must prevail if expressed.Winter v. Bold.Gough v. Andrews.Circumstance that Child of Tender Years.

Survivorship of Portions.

Evans v. Scott, Dom. Proc.

Mode of raising by Sale or Mortgage—or by Perception of Rents.

Time for Payment fixed.

Rents and Profits clearly pointed out, &c.

Exempt from Thellusson Act.

The Rule stated by Sir W. Grant and Sir T. Plumer.

Extended to Arrears, if any.

Forster v. Smith.

Charge of Debts.

Sale implies Mortgage.

Sale or Mortgage for raising the whole together, or each Portion successively.

Interest on Portions.

Lyddon v. Lyddon.

Clayton v. Lord Glengall.

Person having Power to appoint may appoint unequally.

Marshalling as between Portionist and Mortgagee.—Expense of Raising paid out of Trust Estate.

Rules of Construction established in the Court of Chancery, for determining who are “Younger Children.”

Great Latitude of Construction in this respect.

Reason of this explained.

Younger construed all except the one who succeeds to the Estate.

Younger who so succeeds to the Estate excluded.

Settlement of Real Estate rectified to give it to Eldest Daughter.

Heneage v. Hunloke.

Duke v. Doidge, in Note.

Third Son to whom Estate appointed considered as Eldest.

Only Daughter considered Eldest Son.

Earl of Northumberland v. Egremont.

This latitude only applies to Parents and those in loco parentis—In Gifts by Strangers “Younger Children” receive their ordinary Construction.

Reason of this Distinction.

Not every Act done by a Parent to be construed on Principles different to those done by a Stranger.

Shifting Clause.

Scaresbrick v. Skelmersdale.

On Evident Intention Only Child construed Youngest in Gift by Stranger.

But the Rule that Elder unprovided for shall be deemed Younger, only applies to Elder unprovided for by the Settlement or Will itself.

Peacock v. Pares.

General Rule of Construction.

Where the Portion has become vested in Younger Child, who has become Eldest, application of the Rule more difficult.

General Rule.

Whether Time of Vesting or Time of Distribution is to be taken as the Period for determining who is Elder and who are Younger, depends on Terms of Will.

Matthews v. Paull.

Rule in ordinary cases that the Time of Distribution is to be taken.

Tacit Condition for divesting vested Portion of Child becoming an Eldest Son.

But if it is to be collected from the Instrument that the Portion was to be vested and remain so, it will not go over.

Loder v. Loder.

Court will not always interfere with an Appointment made by the Father amongst Children, though he may derive a personal Benefit from it.

The Question as to the Time within which Children must be born so as to share, and the Mode of Distribution, whether per capita or per stirpes, here introduced.

As to first Question.

Natural Meaning of "Younger Children" all who may be born after the First.

Where Gift executory, i. e. where Future Time of Distribution fixed, all who shall be born within that period shall take.

Whether the Gift is present or executory depends on the Terms of the Will.

Ellison v. Airey.

As to second Question, namely, whether Children of two or more Persons are to take per capita or per stirpes.

Where the words "Equally to be Divided" are used, Children take per capita.

Rule applied to case of Gift to a Brother and Children of a deceased Brother.

ONE very important instance of the use to which express trusts may be applied, is the raising of Portions for younger children. Whether an estate be settled by deed or by will there is usually a provision for that purpose introduced. The usual mode in which this is effected is by vesting a term for years in trustees, to take effect in possession immediately on the expiration of the tenancies for life given to the parents, and before the limitation of the estate to the eldest son and his issue and the others who are to take the estate itself in succession; and the trusts of the term are declared to be that the trustees shall by sale, mortgage, or other means (a), as by receipt of the rents, &c. raise the intended portions (b).

The enjoyment of the estate, liable to the payment of portions by the person to whom the estate is limited, is secured, he paying the portions, for it is in default of such payment that the trustees are authorized to exert the powers conferred upon them in relation to the term. Portions are also very frequently given to children in the form of legacies and of charges on real estate.

The general rules for the construction of instruments containing directions or powers for raising portions by the creation of trust

(a) See Warter v. Hutchinson, 1 Sim. & St. 276, 281; and Walcott v. Bloomfield, 4 Dr. & W. 235, as to the forms generally used. It may be observed that where, after a direction for the insertion of powers for jointuring, leasing, and sale and exchange, all other clauses, powers, and provisoes usually inserted in settlements of the same kind are directed to be inserted in a settlement, whether by will or articles, before marriage, this will not authorize the insertion of a power to raise portions; Higginson v. Barneby, 2 Sim. & St. 518; and see Hill v. Hill, 6 Sim. 144-5.

(b) See Hill on Trustees, p. 363, et seq.

terms (a) and by way of legacy or of charge, are the same as those which are adopted on similar subjects; the Intention is to be followed, so far as it is consistent with the rules of law; the ordinary rules of the court govern the general construction, but some latitude of construction in regard to intention has been introduced as regards portions.

In the following pages an attempt will be made to give an outline of the doctrines which have been applied to the Raising and Payment of portions, and the Incidents of portions, and in regard to the important and much litigated subject of Double Portions. But the subject is one of great complexity, and the cases, to appearance, are not always consistent, so that much must be left to the reader to investigate for himself; the leading authorities will be laid before him, but I cannot pretend to reconcile them all or to extract such principles as shall be free from doubt, or which may not to some extent at least be controverted or qualified by some others of the numerous cases which have occurred on this subject.

Where portions are secured by a term, and there is also a covenant by the settlor to pay them, the real estate is considered as the primary fund, and the covenant as auxiliary only (b). In the case of Lechmere v. Charlton, Sir W. Grant at first was inclined on general principles to consider the covenant in such cases as creating a personal debt and liable to all consequences. He observed that where a person becomes entitled to an estate subject to a charge and then covenants to pay it, the charge still remains primarily a charge on the real estate, "because the debt is not the original debt of the covenantor" (c), which does not apply to the covenant of a settlor; however in the principal case Sir W. Grant ultimately decided that the land was primarily liable on the authority of the case of Lanoy v. The Duke of Athol (d). And though the testator may have given his residuary personal estate expressly charged with the payment of all his just debts, this will make no difference, as such a direction is construed to apply to personal debts (e).

It is the same though the covenant be to settle land out of which the

(a) V. int. al. Warter v. Hutchinson, ubi sup.; Hume v. Rundell, 2 Sim. & St. 174.

(b) Lechmere v. Charlton, 15 Ves. 193. In Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 405, the Vice-Chancellor of England held that as on the settlement and mortgage it was plain that the intention was that the testator should secure 6000*l.* as a marriage portion, though there was a covenant in the mortgage to pay it, the personal estate was an auxiliary, not the principal fund;

the testator had given the residue of his personal estate, charged with the payment of all his just debts; et v. Lex Prætor. 269.

(c) See Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 663; and Mr. Cox's note, p. 664.

(d) 2 Atk. 444-5.

(e) Ex parte Digby, Jac. 235; Graves v. Hicks, ubi sup.; and see Ward v. Lord Dudley, 2 Bro. 318.

portion is to be raised absolutely within a specified time as six months, and it is broken so that damages might be recovered, for still the intended portionist must first resort to the land and only in case of a deficiency call upon the personal estate: the articles to settle the land are in equity equivalent to an actual settlement (a). If there be a covenant to settle lands and to raise a term of years out of them for securing a portion, but no covenant for payment of the portion, and only a bond for performance of covenants, the portion is not in any event payable out of the personal estate (b).

Portions may also be given by will. In the case of a parent a legacy to a child is presumed to be a portion, although it be not so expressed (c), because providing for a child is a duty which the relative situation of the parties imposes upon the parent. The duty which is imposed upon the parent may be assumed by any other person, who for any reason thinks proper to place himself in that respect in the place of the parent; and when that is so the same presumptions will arise as in the case of a legacy or gift by a parent. Whether the donor has for this purpose assumed the office of parent so as to invest his gift with the character of a portion, may be proved by extrinsic evidence, such as the general conduct of the donor towards the children; or by intrinsic evidence, that is, from the nature and terms of the gift. If the former be alone relied upon, it may prevail, although it should appear that the donor did not assume all the duties of a parent, or effectually perform those which he had undertaken; the question being merely whether the facts proved fairly lead to the conclusion that he intended to provide a portion for the child, and not merely to bestow a gift (d). There are many doctrines which are applicable to portions, that is, sums of money secured or given by a parent or person

(a) Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 438; though there is a dict. by Sir T. Powis to the contrary, in Howel v. Price, 1 P. W. 293, but no case cited; Countess of Coventry v. Earl of Coventry, 2 P. W. 222, 233; Burgoyne v. Fox, 1 Atk. 576; Ward v. Lord Dudley, ubi sup.

(b) Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 437; but in the case of a mortgage, the money borrowed is a personal debt (Howel v. Price, 2 P. W. 293), and to be paid out of the personal estate in the first instance, whether there be a covenant for payment or not; Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449; Howel v. Price, ubi sup.

(c) Lord Eldon, Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 153; Lord Cott. Pym v. Lockyer, 5 My. & Cr. 35.

(d) Lord Cott. Pym v. Lockyer, 5 My. & Cr. 35; and see Booker v. Allen, 2 R. & M.

299; Carver v. Bowles, ibid. 301; Powys v. Lord Mansfield, 3 My. & Cr. 359; Lord Cottenham (3 My. & Cr. 366), observed that the authorities had left in some obscurity the question as to what is to be considered as meant by the expression in loco parentis; his Lordship preferred Lord Eldon's definition, in Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 154. The Vice-Chancellor of England had considered (6 Sim. 556), that it could only be applied to a person who has so acted towards the child as that he has thereby imposed upon himself a moral obligation to provide for it; and that the designation would not hold where the child had a father with whom he resided, and by whom he was maintained; on which subject, see Shudall v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 518; et v. sup. vol. i. p. 560, note.

standing in loco parentis to a child, which would not be applied to a gift as between strangers (a).

It must be remembered that portions secured by marriage settlement or by any deed or writing not being a will, are not governed by the rules of the civil law which prevail as to legacies of personal estate given by will (b); those rules, so far as they differ from the ordinary rules of construction, are not applicable to any interests but those of a purely legatory nature, that is, which cannot be taken notice of unless in the form of a probate or letters of administration with a will annexed, although the fund be merely personal (c). To some extent the rules as regards legacies charged on land are the same as those which are applied to legacies given out of personal estate only; thus, a pecuniary legacy, whether charged on land or not, given by will to a person in esse simply without any postponement of payment, is vested immediately on the testator's death (d). The difference is chiefly in regard to legacies payable at a future time.

The Court of Chancery, as before mentioned (e), in construing gifts of this description, following the rules of the civil law (f), has adopted two rules of construction: that a bequest to a person payable or to be paid "at" or "when" a person shall attain 21 or at the end of any other certain determinate term, confers on him a vested interest immediately on the testator's death, for the words payable or to be paid are construed so as to disannex the time from the gift of the legacy, and thus to leave the gift immediate, in the same manner, as respects vesting, as if the bequest stood singly and contained no mention of time. The other rule is that if the words "payable" or "to be paid" are omitted and the legacy is given "at" 21 or "if," "when," "in case" or "provided" the legatee shall attain 21, or at any future definite period, these expressions shall be construed as annexing the time to the substance of the legacy, so that the right of the legatee is made to depend upon his being alive at the time fixed for its payment (g);

(a) V. int. al. Hope v. Clifden, 6 Ves. 506-8-9; Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beat. 334.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 293; vol. ii. pp. 94, 184; and see Hubert v. Parsons, 2 Ves. 262-3.

(c) Ibid.; and see the cases 2 P. Wms. 612, in Cox's note (where the exceptions to the application of the rule are stated), and Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Ves. 513; and Lex Præt. 268.

(d) Supra, v. p. 94, 184; and see 1 Jarm. on Wills, 756; Williams on Executors, 766.

(e) V. supra, pp. 94, 103, 184, and vol. i. p. 523.

(f) See 6 Ves. 243, 245; sup. vol. i. p. 542.

(g) Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 245; Williams on Executors, 767, et seq.; 1 Jarman, 760, where several cases are stated, in illustration of these rules, and the exceptions to them. The cases of Saunders v. Vautier, 1 Cr. & P. 248; supra, pp. 94, 99; and Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, p. 17, et seq., afford important illustrations of the nature of the second point (which resolves itself into this, whether the beneficial interest is or is not intended to be contingent), and of the cases to which it is and is not to be applied; and see May v. Wood, 3 Bro. 473, there referred to; supra, p. 94.

though these rules, as all other mere rules of construction, will give way to a contrary intention to be collected from the whole context of the instrument (a).

As regards legacies or portions payable out of lands in futuro the civil law has not been entirely followed; the old rule, which was established at a time when the judges, in all cases, were much inclined to favour the heir whether hæres natus or hæres factus, was that the legacy or portion, whether charged on the real estate primarily or in aid of the personalty, should not be raised out of the land if the legatee died before the time of payment, though the legacy were given in words which would have vested it according to the first of the rules adopted from the civil law in legacies of personal estate only (b). But, as has been before noticed, this doctrine, though it still prevails in the main, has undergone some modification.

If portions or legacies charged on land are made payable on an event personal to the party to be benefited and such party die before that event happen, the portion or legacy is not to be raised out of the land; but if the payment be postponed until the happening of an event not referable to the person of the party to be benefited, but to the circumstances of the estate out of which the portion or legacy is to be paid, such as the death of the tenant for life, then it will be raisable after the death of the tenant for life, although the term out of which it was to be raised had not arisen in consequence of the party to be benefited not having been in esse when the event happened (c). When a particular Time is fixed for the payment of a portion, and the portion has become payable, the court has laid great stress upon the time appointed

N. B. Festing v. Allen, referred to p. 99, sup. is in 5 Hare, 573, not 240; and the case in 9 Sim. 538 (p. 97), is Spry, not Fry v. Bromfield; see also, in addition to the cases, in the same page, n. (a), Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. W. 21.

(a) See Williams on Executors, p. 768, et seq.; Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 18; and the other cases cited in the pages in this and the former volume, above referred to: the subject of Vesting so frequently recurs that it is impossible to avoid repetition, without putting the reader to the inconvenience of continual back reference.

(b) See Lex Præt. 267; et v. infra, p. 399, n. (b); and Poulet v. Poulet, add. note, No. 1.

(c) Lord Cottenham, Evans v. Scott, in Dom. Proc. xi. Jurist, 292; 1 Cl. & Finell. N. S. p. 57; referring to Emperor v. Rolfe, 1 Ves. 208; and Cholmondeley v. Meyrick, 1 Eden, 77, and other cases; et v. supra, p. 99; 1 Jarman on Wills, 756-7. The Question in Evans v. Scott was whether, the portions provided for children who had died infants and unmarried, were or were not to be raised for the benefit of the surviving children. It was held on the context that the vesting of the portions did not depend upon the portionee surviving the tenant for life, and that the children, if they had attained 21, or the other events specified had happened, although they had afterwards died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, would have been entitled; but the children in question died before any of the events on which they were to become vested: it was held—Lord Cottenham, Lord Brougham, and Lord Campbell concurring—that on the terms of the settlement (reversing the decree of the Vice Chancellor K. Bruce), the portions to which they would have been entitled had they lived were to be raised for the benefit of surviving younger children: the case of a child dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life was actually provided for in the clause for the further accruer of accrued shares.

being adhered to, and has, in some instances, enlarged the powers of trustees in order to raise the money within the time, though payable out of the rents and profits, to the extent of ordering a sale; but the interests of the reversioners will be protected by taking care that the rents applicable to the payment are first applied (a). Where there is an immediate gift of a portion (b), and where portions are charged on lands, and no certain time of payment or vesting is fixed by the settlement or will (c), generally speaking, the portions will vest immediately; but though vesting in the first-born, on the birth of others they divest to answer the intent (d). But it does not always follow that the portions are to be immediately raised, or that the portionist will be entitled to any immediate profits (e); in this, as in every other case of construction, the particular penning of the instrument must be looked

(a) Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 551-2, Lord Hardwicke; and see 2 P. W. 669; Warler v. Hutchinson, 1 Sim. & St. 281. The subject of raising portions charged on rents and profits will be more particularly adverted to in this Section.

(b) Lex Præst. 270; Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. W. 119, was decided on this principle; there the trustees were to raise and pay a portion for the testator's daughter within six years; she died before the expiration of that time; her representatives were held to be entitled; and see Wilson v. Spencer, 3 P. W. 174, to the same effect. In Jackson v. Farrand, 2 Vern. 424, a portion, charged on real and personal estate, to be paid by the executors at 21, was ordered to be raised by a sale of the real estate, the daughter having married, but died under 21, 2 P. W. 174; King v. Withers, Dom. Proc. 3 P. W. 416; there the event on which the daughter was to have the additional portion did not happen till after her death: all these cases were decided on the absolute gift in the will, but in all the time had arrived for the daughter wanting her portion; as to which, v. infra, p. 398; and see add. note, No. 2.

(c) Staniforth v. Staniforth, inf. note (e); Sandys v. Sandys, 1 P. W. 709, stated infra; Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 671; 3 P. W. 120; and see Earl Rivers v. Earl Derby, 2 Vern. 72, (additional note, No. 2); Chandos v. Talbot, 1 P. W. p. 612; Hynes v. Redington, 1 Jones & L. 605; Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 1 Dru. 122.

(d) Teynham v. Webb, 2 Ves. 208.

(e) See Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 668-9-70; and Emperor v. Rolfe, ubi sup.; Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 548; Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 551; there were circumstances in that case, showing an intention that the trustees should continue in possession, which would have been defeated by an immediate sale; ibid.

p. 551. The case of Staniforth v. Staniforth was this:—By settlement on the marriage of the plaintiff's father and mother, the estate was settled on the father for life, and to the mother for her jointure, and to the heirs male of their two bodies; and if there should be no issue male, and one or more daughters, then to trustees for a term of 500 years, to raise portions; no time was appointed for payment: there was no issue male of that marriage; the father died, leaving the plaintiff, the only daughter: it was declared—1, that by the contingency of the death of the father without leaving issue male, the term arose, though not to take effect in point of profits until after the death of the mother (sed v. infra); 2, that the portion vested in the daughter in the lifetime of the mother; 3, no time being appointed for the payment of the portion, nor any maintenance in the mean time, that she was entitled to a reasonable maintenance, not exceeding the interest of the portion, from the death of the father, or at least from such time as the portion might have been raised by sale; and it was decreed that the portion should be raised by sale of the term, with a reasonable maintenance in the mean time: as regards the direction for an immediate sale, which will be noticed more particularly hereafter in this Section, it was made on the authority of Gerrard v. Gerrard, 2 Vern. 458; but though that and some other cases of a similar character (see Cox's note to Butler v. Duncombe, 1 P. W. 452, and Lord Macclesfield's dictum, ibid.) have been acknowledged as law, the judges have been disinclined to follow them, excepting under precisely similar circumstances; v. infra, p. 403. In Bulter v. Duncombe the sale was postponed on the special wording of the settlement; see p. 453: a power will not generally prevent the vesting: 1 Eden, 85; 1 Ves. 208.

to in order to come to a right conclusion (a). According to the modern doctrine, where a portion is Secured and no particular time is fixed for the vesting, it is to be construed in a reasonable sense, namely, when the child shall want the portion, so that if the child should die before that time the portion shall not be raised (b); for it is, said Lord Cowper, highly reasonable the land should be eased of the charge, when the only motive and inducement for making the same is at an end, and determined by the daughter's dying before she had any occasion for the portion (c). Trustees were directed, by marriage articles, to raise 5000*l.* out of 9000*l.* stock, and pay it to such child or children, not being an eldest son, and in such manner as the father should appoint, and in default of appointment to pay the same to such younger children at 21, the interest to be applied for their maintenance in the mean time. The wife died, so that there could be no more children; there had been two, one had died at two years old, and the father, as his administrator, claimed a moiety of the fund. The intent, said Lord Hardwicke, plainly was this: to take out of the 9000*l.* provided for the eldest son, 5000*l.* for younger children, by way of portion, which must be construed in a reasonable sense when they shall be supposed to want the portion, and if there be any doubt on the construction of these contingencies and the words, it must be construed accordingly; and Lord Hardwicke held on this reasoning that the portion was not to be raised (d). So where a power was given to the father to raise portions for younger children at such times as the father should by deed or will appoint, the father directed that 10,000*l.* should be immediately raised for the only daughter, she then being 14, and on her death he claimed it. Lord Thurlow said, the meaning of a charge for children is that it shall take place when it shall be wanted; it is contrary to the nature of such a charge that it should be raised before that time; the power given to the parent was only to enable him to raise it during his life if it should be necessary; he might properly have directed it to be raised on the daughter's marriage, or for other purposes, but what he had done was against the nature of the power (e). The converse will some-

(a) Int. al. Teynham v. Webb, 2 Ves. 209.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Hubert v. Parsons, 2 Ves. 263; Lord Teynham v. Webb, ibid. 209; 1 Eden, 451-2; Brewin v. Brewin, Prec. Ch. 195; and see Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beat. 334-5; (et inf. p. 405). There are cases where, though the court would not raise the portion for the representative, it has given interest for so long as the child lived; ibid. 337.

(c) Wilson v. Spencer, 3 P.W. p. 174. In the case itself the legacy had become vested by the first words of the will.

(d) Hubert v. Parsons, 2 Ves. 262; and see the cases in the following note.

(e) Hinchinbrooke v. Seymour, 1 Bro. 395; 1 Beat. 334. The cases on this subject are collected and examined in Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, ubi sup.; and by Mr. Fonblanque, vol. ii. pp. 203-4-5: as to the question of fraud in the execution of such a power, see 13 Ves.

times hold: a portion was given to be paid at 21, charged, in aid, on lands; the daughter married, and died under 21: the portion was directed to be raised for her representatives (a).

Where there is no gift but in the direction to pay, and the authority to pay is only on a given event, as marriage or attaining 21, the portion, though given wholly out of personal estate, does not vest in the interim (b). Whatever condition may be annexed which refers to the person must be performed: if there be any definite condition precedent to the vesting of the portion in the same manner as of an ordinary legacy, its non-performance will prevent the vesting. If the condition be indefinite, as after debts paid or the like, the court will direct an inquiry to ascertain when the debts might have been paid, so as not to allow the negligence of the trustee to affect the interests of the parties claiming the portion or legacy (c). If, said Sir William Grant (d), by the settlement it clearly and unequivocally appears that the gift to the children is to depend upon their surviving their parents, then a Court of Equity has no power to alter such a plainly expressed disposition. Where however the words are in any degree ambiguous (e), and there appears to be an uncertainty at what period the gift is intended to vest, the court is always in the habit of leaning towards the construction that the vesting took place at the time when the provision is most required for the children, which is usually at the age of 21 in males, and at that age or marriage in females (f).

479; 14 Sim. 454; 2 Conn. & L. 342; and Gee v. Gurney, 2 Coll. 489.

(a) Farrant v. Jackson, 2 Vern. 424, sup.; though the general rule is that if the child die before the time fixed for payment, the portion shall not be raised; Poulet v. Poulet, 1 Vern. 204, 321; 3 P. W. 418.

(b) Chevaux v. Aislaby, 13 Sim. 72; et v. int. al. Wingrave v. Palgrave, 1 P. W. 402; et v. supra, p. 97.

(c) Small v. Wing, 5 Bro. P. C. 66; Bernard v. Montague, 1 Meriv. 433; and see 11 Ves. 508, note: the words were that the portions were to become vested in two years, "if my debts shall be then paid."

(d) Howgrave v. Cartier, 3 Ves. & B. 85-6, cited with approbation by Lord Cottenham, 2 Phillips, 351: this case was decided by Sir Wm. Grant, upon some inaccuracies in the provisions, and particularly upon there being a power of appointment which was inconsistent with the contingency continuing; see Whatford v. Moore, 3 M. & C. 289: this case was also recognized and acted upon in Perfect v. Lord Curzon, 5 Mad. 444. It was there stated by Sir J. Leach, that in settlements of this kind there are two sets of clauses to be considered—the clauses of gift to the children, and the clauses of gift over on failure of children; the authorities require that both sets of clauses should be clearly and unambiguously expressed. In Bright v. Rowe, 3 My. & K. 316, the same doctrine was applied to a will, but Sir J. Leach added, "the expressions of the testatrix are not to be subjected to any violence for the purpose of raising an implication in favour of the children;" ibid. 322: in that case a distinction was taken and allowed as to a share which had accrued to a deceased child; ibid. 323.

(e) Fry v. Lord Sherborne, 3 Sim. 243, is one of the latest cases in which the decision turned on there being a variety of clauses inconsistent with each other; see 7 Sim. 585.

(f) See Bouverie v. Bouverie, before Lord Cottenham, (1847,) xi. Jurist, pp. 661-2; 2 Phillips, 351, (citing Howgrave v. Cartier, ubi supra). In that case the question was, whether the vested gifts in the prior part of the will were to be considered as controlled by the subsequent words, so that the shares of children who had attained 21, and then died in the life of the mother, should go to the survivors: the Vice-Chancellor of England had been of

The leaning of the court in favour of the vesting of portions at the time they may be wanted has been carried to the extent of controlling express words (a). Where a portion is given to a child at 21 or marriage, though actual payment be suspended by reason of the existence of a life interest in the estate out of which the portion is to come, if the portion is given over or directed not to be raised simply in the event of the death of the child before the portion becomes "payable," that word has been construed to refer to the time of vesting, that is the attaining 21 or marriage (b).

It has been observed that though in some of these cases the words have been strong and difficult to manage (c), yet the court looking upon it as a hard thing to impute to a father that he should mean a child, having attained 21 or come to marriageable years and formed a family, yet because that child dies in his lifetime the descendants should have nothing, and feeling that not to be a probable intention in a parent, have thought themselves at liberty to manage the construction of the words, as they would not, in the case of a stranger (d) or upon a matter of mere contract, without any mixture of parental feeling (e). In some cases the circumstance of there being some children living opinion that the words, "in case one dies, the others are to have share and share alike, the survivor to have the whole," controlled the prior gift; but Lord Cottenham was of a different opinion, and, reversing the decree of the Vice-Chancellor of England, declared that the children were entitled to vested interests, following Salisbury (Earl of) v. Lambe, Amb. 383; S. C. 1 Eden, 465.

(a) See the notes 2 Fonbl. 204-5.

(b) Emperor v. Rolfe, 1 Ves. 208. There the daughter had married, (see 6 Ves. 507-8); Cholmondeley v. Meyrick, 3 Bro. 253; 1 Ed.; Woodcock v. Duke of Dorset, 3 Bro. 569; 3 Ves. & B. 87; Hope v. Clifden, 6 Ves. 507; Powis v. Burdett, 9 Ves. 433, "leave," was there turned into "have," (see 3 Ves. & B. ubi supra); (in both these cases the earlier authorities are observed upon): Schenk v. Legh, 9 Ves. 310; Jefferys v. Reynous, 6 Bro. P. C. 398; King v. Hake, 9 Ves. 443; Howgrave v. Cartier, 3 Ves. & B. 91; Perfect v. Lord Curzon, 5 Mad. p. 447; all cases of settlements: and see Jones v. Jones, 13 Sim. 568, a case of a will; and Henderson v. Kennicot, infra, p. 406: see also 2 Roper on Leg. 534, et seq.

(c) See Woodcock v. Duke of Dorset, 3 Bro. 569; "This case," said Lord Cottenham, in Whatford v. Moore, 3 My. & C. 289, "has always been considered as carrying the doctrine to its utmost limits. It appears that that decision was much influenced by the consideration that, according to the construction contended for, by which the deceased daughter was to be excluded, if all the children had died before the surviving parent, the fund (the wife's money) would have gone to the father." "It is impossible," said Lord Thurlow, "it could be intended (notwithstanding the express words,) that Lord Gower (the father) should take in the event that a young woman of twenty should survive her children.—The intention of the settlement is the truth and honour of the case;" see Clayton v. Earl of Glengall, 1 Dru. & War. p. 15.

(d) The same difference is observable in the doctrines as to satisfaction; 9 Ves. 427.

(e) Lord Eldon, Hope v. Lord Clifden, 6 Ves. 506-8-9; the objects of the portions, as Lord Cottenham remarked (3 My. & Cr. 290), were described to be "all and every the child and children" of the marriage; and see Woodcock v. Duke of Dorset, 3 Bro. 569; more correctly 3 Ves. & B. 83. "These cases, Hope v. Lord Clifden, Powis v. Burdett, and some others, have proceeded upon grounds so peculiar, and have departed so widely from the rule of construing instruments according to the obvious and natural meaning of the words used, that it is not possible to come to a very satisfactory conclusion upon any case which varied at all from former decisions."—Lord Cottenham, 3 My. & Cr. 290-1; and see Willis v. Willis, 3 Ves. J. 54; 5 Mad. 444; and 9 Sim. 58.

at the death of the parent has been held to satisfy the contingency, and to let in children who died before; this is always unsatisfactory, though sometimes adopted to avoid a greater absurdity, as it makes the title of one younger child depend upon some other younger child living till the death of the father, for which there could be no reason (a). In Hope v. Clifden there were children surviving, but Lord Eldon, in Powys v. Burdett, said that he should have come to the same decision in Hope v. Lord Clifden, on the authorities, if that circumstance had not occurred, adding, "I agree it is mischievous to decide these cases upon small circumstances" (b).

In a late case, where Lord Cottenham had to consider the doctrine applicable to the cases last referred to, his Lordship observed, "that the cases upon this subject turn upon such nice distinctions and are so little reconcileable that the only reasonable course is to adopt the rule which has been generally recognised of leaning in favour of a construction which includes all children, if the instrument affords fair ground for doing so; but, if not, to give effect to the plain meaning of the words used" (c). His Lordship added, "In case of doubtful construction upon the whole instrument, the court leans to that which will include children so dying, as most convenient, and most likely to have been the intention of the parties. It may be thought that courts have gone the full length that is justifiable in order to attain this object, but no case has gone so far as to do violence to the words, if no other part of the instrument be found inconsistent with them" (d). The case which produced these remarks, and in which Lord Cottenham reviewed the principal authorities on this subject, was to this effect.—The trusts of a term of 500 years were, that in case the father, J. R. Moore, should die leaving his wife, an eldest or only son who should attain 21, and one or more younger sons or daughters, the trustees should after the several deaths of the father and mother and the commencement of the term, but not before or sooner unless the father should by writing request or direct the same, (but without prejudice to the wife's estate,) raise a certain sum by way of portions for the daughters and younger children, share and share alike, and to survive to the survivors or survivor of them; the shares of the daughters were to be paid at the age of 18 or marriage: until the portions should become payable, the trustees were authorized after the commencement of the

(a) Lord Cottenham, Whatford v. Moore, 3 My. & Cr. 288.

(b) Powis v. Burdett, 9 Ves. 437.

(c) Whatford v. Moore, 3 My. & Cr. 287. In Hotchkin v. Humfrey, 2 Mad. 68, and Fitzgerald v. Field, 1 Russell, 439, 446, which arose on a covenant, the time of vesting was postponed on this principle.

(d) Whatford v. Moore, 3 My. & Cr. 289.

term to raise and levy maintenance not exceeding the interest of the respective portions (a). Lord Cottenham observed, that however inconvenient an arrangement may be which excludes a child attaining its age in the lifetime of its parents, and dying before them, and the court therefore leans to the construction which would include them; in this case it was quite clear that if all the younger children had died before the father, no portions would have been raisable, a feature which distinguished it from Woodcock v. Duke of Dorset, and which afforded a strong argument against any portion being raisable for any younger child dying before that time; it was also distinguished from Howgrave v. Cartier, there being no power of appointment as in that case: and after noticing the difficulty in reconciling the decisions, Lord Cottenham—adopting Sir Wm. Grant's rule in the last-cited case, that where nothing inconsistent with the contingency continuing is to be found in the instrument, the words must have their plain meaning—with that degree of hesitation which necessarily arises from the state of the authorities, felt himself bound to decide that the child under whom the portion was claimed had not become entitled to it, confirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor (b).

As to portions secured by Reversionary Terms, the general rule is that where the portions secured by such a term are made payable at a particular time or on a particular event, and all the contingencies have happened, the portions are to be raised by a sale of the reversionary term during the life of the tenant for life: but this must depend upon the particular penning of the trust and the intention of the instrument (c). The doctrine of the court on this subject has undergone some fluctuations.

The ordinary rules of construction would require that if a portion is directed to be paid at 18 or day of marriage, or any other fixed period, the portion should be raised, and accordingly it was decided in some early cases, as before noticed, that where the term was absolutely vested, then the daughter should not expect during the life of the

(a) There were other provisions which were relied upon in the argument and judgment, too long to be here inserted. One of the daughters died in the lifetime of both the parents, having attained the age of 18, and married; then the father died, leaving a son who attained 21, and three daughters; the representative of the deceased daughter claimed her portion.

(b) 3 My. & Cr. 291. An additional portion to be paid "in the same manner," &c.

was held to be governed by the same construction; and see 7 Sim. 574, the original hearing.

(c) Corbett v. Maydwell, 1 Salk. 159; 1 Eq. Ab. 337; 2 Vern. 656, as it is cited Codrington v. Lord Foley, 6 Ves. 372, judgment of Lord Eldon. In Smyth v. Foley, 3 Y. & Coll. 157, Mr. Baron Alderson has stated the general rule as deduced from the modern cases, and he adds it is much too late to dispute its propriety: but see add. note, No. 3.

father, but it should be sold even in the father's life, although the term were in remainder and not in possession (a). In subsequent cases, these determinations were considered as replete with inconveniences in their application, and that they ought only to be allowed to govern cases precisely similar in all their circumstances (b). Lord Macclesfield thought that the raising of portions in the lifetime of the parents was encouraging disobedience, and therefore not to be countenanced, and that where it was intended to be done it should be so expressed in the instrument, and he said he would not go a step farther than precedents forced him (c). Pains have been taken to make distinctions so as to prevent the portion being raised in the lifetime of the father or mother. Thus it has been held that they should not be raised unless all the contingencies annexed to the gift should have happened (d). In like manner (e), where maintenance has been provided out of the rents and profits after the term limited to raise the portion should take effect in possession, that has been allowed to take the case out of the general rule (f). But if there are inconveniences in raising portions out of reversionary terms, there are also inconveniences in the delay; the inconvenience of a younger child starving for want of his portion, said Lord Northington, is as great as the injuring the estate of the eldest son by raising the portion out of the reversion (g); and as regards considerations of convenience or inconvenience, Lord Cowper remarked that it would be to no purpose for any one to make deeds if the argument of convenience or inconvenience were to prevail to overrule them (h).

Lord Hardwicke, on a review of the authorities, laid down, that as a general rule, if there be a term of years or other estate limited to (a) Greaves v. Mattison, T. Jones, 201; Corbett v. Maydwell, ubi sup.; Gerrard v. Gerrard, 2 Vern. 458; Staniforth v. Staniforth, ibid. 460, in which a series of precedents were produced, v. supra, p. 397.

(b) See Sandys v. Sandys, 1 P. W. 707; Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, Forrest. 31; Hall v. Carter, 2 Atk. 354; Lyon v. Duke of Chandos, 3 Atk. 416; Smith v. Evans, Ambl. 633; and Lord Eldon's observations, 6 Ves. 376, 377.

(c) Lord Macclesfield, Sandys v. Sandys, 1 P. W. p. 709. Lord Macclesfield, in that case, though with reluctance, ordered the portions to be raised by a sale of the term in the lifetime of the father, ibid.

(d) Corbett v. Maydwell, 1 Salk. 159; (6 Ves. 377;) Butler v. Duncomb, 1 P. W. 448; Cox's note, ib. 453; Churchman v. Harvey, Ambl. 335; Reresby v. Newland, 2 P. W. 93. Lord Thurlow's dictum in Conway v. Conway, as reported in 3 Bro. 270, is not to be relied upon, see 6 Ves. 379.

(e) See 2 Fonbl. 201.

(f) Brome v. Berkley, 2 P. W. 484; but see 3 Y. & Coll. 160; Cotton v. Cotton, cited ibid. 149; Stevens v. Dethick, 3 Atk. 39; Lyon v. Chandos, 3 Atk. 416; Goodall v. Rivers, Mosely, 395; and Clinton v. Seymour, 4 Ves. Jun. 464. In Codrington v. Foley, 6 Ves. 373, 378, the cases upon the subject are very fully considered; and by Lord Chancellor Sugden, 1 Conn. & L. 320, et seq.

(g) Lord Northington, Smyth v. Evans, Amb. 633, who said the old rule was right.

(h) See 6 Ves. 377. "What warrant," says Lord Hardwicke, Lyon v. Chandos, 3 Atk. 417, "is there to insert by implication and construction what the parties themselves have not expressed?" not referring of course to necessary implication.

trustees for raising a portion for a daughter payable at a certain time, which is become a vested interest, she shall not stay till the death of the father and mother unless some intention appears upon the instrument to postpone it, and if there does, the court will always take notice of such intention and postpone it accordingly; and for this purpose the court will lay hold of very small grounds that speak the intent of the parties (a) to hinder the raising of the portions in the lifetime of the father and mother (b). And Lord Hardwicke seems to have considered that the court might in this respect legitimately be governed to some extent by the consideration of preserving the parental authority rather than giving license to daughters to marry improvidently (c). Lord Talbot thought that the true rule was this, that it must depend upon the particular penning of the trust, and he agreed with Lord Cowper in thinking that if all the contingencies have happened, the portion must be raised notwithstanding the inconvenience, or that there would be an end of deeds (d). This rule was approved by Lord Eldon, his Lordship adding, that he did not think that the court ought to be eager to lay hold of circumstances, but ought to hold an equal mind while construing the instrument; and his Lordship said he could not agree with what was said by Lord Hardwicke, in Stanley v. Stanley, that very small grounds are sufficient. "If they are sufficient to denote the intention," said his Lordship, "they are not small grounds; if they are not sufficient to denote the intention the court does not act according to its duty by treating them as sufficient, thereby disappointing the true intention of the instrument" (e). "The rule upon the whole," said his Lordship, depends upon this, "whether it was the intention of the

(a) And see Lord Alvanley's statement of the result of the authorities, Lady Clinton v. Seymour, 4 Ves. 460. "Small circumstances and small grounds," said Lord Eldon, "are words I do not like to hear in any court," 6 Ves. 384; et v. sup. p. 403, n. (h).

(b) Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 549, and the cases in Raithby's notes. Lord Macclesfield, in Butler v. Duncomb, 1 P. W. 455, said, declaring the portion should be raised after the commencement of the term implied a negative.

(c) Stevens v. Dethick, 3 Atk. 42, 43; Brome v. Berkley, 2 P. W. 484; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 340, Lord King: it was held that the portion was not to be raised in the mother's lifetime, because the maintenance which was naturally to precede the portion was not to be paid till the trustees were in possession; but see 3 Y. & Coll. 160, et ib. 149; and see 6

Ves. 377, 380.

(d) Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, Forrest. 32.

(e) Codrington v. Foley, 6 Ves. 380. In the case itself Lord Eldon held that the intention was that the portions should be payable at such ages, days, and times as Lord Foley should appoint, so that inconvenience and impolicy were excluded. In Smyth v. Foley, 3 Y. & Coll. 157, Mr. Baron Alderson has stated the rule with somewhat more particularity; and see Mitchell v. Mitchell, 4 Beav. 549, and Lygon v. Lord Coventry, 14 Sim. 45; the case itself, which is special, relates to the title of a portionist to maintenance out of her portion, and to what amount; she was entitled to two funds; maintenance, the amount to be settled by the Master, was given to her out of that which was most for her benefit.

parties to the instrument, attending to the whole of it, that the portion should or should not be raised in this manner; taking it primâ facie to be the intention upon the general rule, if there is nothing more than a limitation to the parent for life, with a term to raise portions at the age of 21 or marriage—if there is nothing more, and the interests are vested, and the contingencies have happened, at which the portions are to be paid—the interest is payable, and the portions must be raised in the only manner in which they can be raised; that is, by mortgage or sale of the reversionary term.”

If the intention (a) appears to have been that the portions should not be raised until the term comes into possession, of course it will be acted upon (b). The trusts of a term were to raise 3000*l.*, and dispose of the same amongst the younger children in such proportions and at such times, and upon such conditions and in such manner as the parents or the survivor of them should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment for the children equally at 21 or marriage; but in case any one should die leaving issue the share of such one to go to his children: the husband died, the eldest son attained 21, and afterwards the widow sold her life-interest to him. She then apportioned the 3000*l.* amongst her children equally. The eldest son then filed a bill to have the portions raised; two of the children had attained 21, others were infants. The Vice-Chancellor, Sir J. Leach, held, that inasmuch as the widow had a power to appoint the 3000*l.* to the younger children by her will, it was plain it was not the intention that it should be raised during her life, and dismissed the bill (c). But in Gough v. Andrews (d), the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce considered that the existence of a joint power was not a sufficient indication of intention that the portion should not be raised in the life of the parents (e).

The circumstance of the child being of tender years so as not to want the portion, will have a material effect in inducing the court not to direct the portion, though vested and raisable, to be raised out of a reversionary term during the life of the mother having a life interest or a jointure upon the estates (f). Lord Hardwicke said he had always refused to raise portions or interest on portions to be

(a) The intention, according to the ordinary rules, must be collected from the instrument itself; Corbet v. Maydwell, 2 Vern. 641.

(b) Butler v. Duncomb, 1 P. W. 448, sup. p. 404; there the words were “from and after the commencement of the term.”

(c) Wynter v. Bold, 1 Sim. & S. 507, inf. 408.

(d) 1 Coll. 59, 68; et v. sup. 397, n. (e).

(e) Mr. Hill, on Trustees (p. 364), observes, “that to prevent any question on the subject, a direction is usually inserted that the portions shall not be raised in the lifetime of the parents.” I would refer the reader to his observations on the precautions to be observed in order to make such direction complete.

(f) Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 669, supra.

raised out of reversionary terms upon construction or implication only (a).

If there be any clause directing that a portion of a child, though vested, shall, in the event of the child dying before the time appointed for payment, go over to the survivors (b), effect will of course be given to such direction, and the portion will be divested on the happening of the event pointed out; but there is no authority which authorizes the court, upon any supposed rule applying to gifts to a class, to hold that the surviving children or child shall take the whole fund without a direction in the settlement for that purpose (c).

Where a fund is given in the way of portion or legacy to a person, as the wife, for life, and after the death of the tenant for life to certain persons in equal shares; and in case any of such persons should die before they become entitled to their respective shares, the share of the person dying is directed to go amongst the children of the person so dying; it is now it seems settled by authority, that the word "entitled" is not to be construed as "entitled in possession;" and the children of a legatee in remainder dying during the life of the tenant for life are not entitled to the share of their parent; the share is vested in the donee on the death of the donor (d): a clause of survivorship would no doubt be construed in the same manner.

Though the Court of Chancery will in general consider a charge on the rents and profits to raise portions, legacies, or debts, as a charge on the land (e), if such charge be not restrained to the annual pro-

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Lyon v. Duke of Chandos, 3 Atk. 416; and see Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 549, and the references; Stephens v. Dethick, 3 Atk. 39.

(b) In general survivorship will be referred to the period when the portions become payable; Lord Cottenham, Whatford v. Moore, 3 My. & Cr. 287; and see Bouverie v. Bouverie, 2 Phill. 349; v. sup. p. 396; et v. p. 400.

(c) Lord Chancellor Sugden, Hynes v. Redington, 1 Jones & Lat. 604; his Lordship added, "I must not only ask what is to be done in the case that has happened, but also what ought to have been done if a different state of circumstances had arisen;" and the court must also look to the gift over where there is one, ibid. 605; and see Evans v. Scott, in Dom. Proc. xi. Jurist, 291; supra, p. 396.

(d) Henderson v. Kennicot, Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, xii. Jur. 848; Fry v. Lord Sherborne, 3 Sim. 243; Charit. Comm. v. Cotter, 1 Dru. & W. 493; 2 Drury & Walsh, 615. This case, in which all the principal authorities are cited, arose on a clause of survivorship under an appointment of lands purchased with the trust fund; in default of appointment the fund was to go amongst the children living at the death of the father the appointor; the case was decided on the authority of Doe v. Prigg, 8 Barn. & Cress. 231. The Lord Chancellor said it was impossible to reconcile all the authorities, 1 Dru. & War. p. 499; et v. sup. p. 400.

(e) "By a liberal construction of 'rents and profits,' in the case of a will, they will usually be considered as including a direction to sell or mortgage, especially when in favour of debts and portions;" see 2 Ves. & B. 75, Sir Wm. Grant; Trafford v. Ashton, 1 P. W. 418, (and see the other cases in Sanders' note to Atk. 1551); it was there said "profits," as applied to raising debts and portions, meant any profits, including what could be raised by sale or mortgage; where a term is created, it is clearly so, though the natural meaning of profits is annual rents and profits; Boottle v.

fits (a), and imply a power in the trustees to sell (b); yet if no time for payment be appointed, as a general rule, a sale will not be decreed, but the portion must be raised in the manner directed (c).

The Court of Chancery will not decree a sale in any case in which the rents and profits (d) distinctly appear to have been exclusively intended to satisfy the charge (e); nor will the court decree a sale if any particular mode is prescribed by the instrument to satisfy the charge, so as to indicate an intention that the estate should be preserved, as if it contain a power to lease or to mortgage the premises for that purpose (f). "In construing the words 'rents and profits' in a will," said Sir Wm. Grant—and it must be the same, it is presumed, in a settlement—"upon such a subject to amount to a power to raise a gross sum of money, the occasion on which the necessity of providing that sum must be observed. The court has, by a technical, artificial, but liberal construction (g) in a series of authorities, admitting it not to be the natural meaning, extended these words when applied to the

Blundell, 1 Meriv. 232-3, (a case of a charge of legacies); or, where the nature of the payment to be made with the sum when raised requires it, as where it is to pay fines for renewals and portions, Allan v. Backhouse, where Sir Wm. Grant examines the authorities, 2 Ves. & B. 73-4-7; see Jarman on Wills, ii. 537; 1 Fonbl. 447; 2 Fonbl. 201. Whenever the words "rents and profits" stand alone without the word "annual," or "mortgage," or "leasing," or some words of restriction to enforce the sense of the preceding words to "annual profits," they are considered as including the land itself. Lord Hardwicke, Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 95; and see Smith v. Evans, Amb. 364: but a gross sum is not necessarily to be raised at once, 1 Atk. 551; see add. note, No. 4.

(a) Anon. 1 Vern. 104; in this case a distinction is taken between a will and a deed, in respect of a charge on rents and profits generally; Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Vern. 420, case of a settlement; the application was by the heir, and opposed by the younger children. Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 506, case of a settlement: Chitty v. Selwyn, 2 Atk. 359; there the trustees had an option to raise by mortgage; Baines v. Dixon, 1 Ves. 42; "As to the intention," said Lord Hardwicke, "there is not one case in ten where the court has decreed a sale on the words 'rents and profits,' that it has been agreeable to the testator's intention;" and see 1 Ves. J. 234; and Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 7, 8.

(b) Meynell v. Massey, 2 Vern. 2.

(c) Trafford v. Ashton, 1 P. W. 418-9; Ivy v. Gilbert, Prec. Ch. 583; 2 P. W. 13, 19; 2 P. W. 672: the Master of the Rolls said, "there was not one single precedent where a sale had been decreed of a trust-term, for a portion to be raised by rents and profits, and no time limited for payment;" and see Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 550, and Mr. Sanders' note; Rivers v. Derby, 2 Vern. 72; Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 1; there the legacy was a bounty and not a portion, p. 7, Small v. Wing, 5 Bro. P. C. 66; trust for payment of debt; Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 M. & K. 121; and see 2 Jarman, 538, et seq.

(d) It is to be observed that a trust for raising portions by the accumulation of rents, is expressly exempted from the operation of the Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98; sup. p. 166.

(e) Small v. Wing, 5 Bro. P. C. 66, where a man creates a term for payment of debts, and declares the trust of that term to be by perception of rents and profits, or by mortgaging to raise sufficient for payment of debts, it restrains it to a payment out of rents and profits merely; but if it had been a trust of the rents and profits the term might have been sold for the satisfaction of creditors. "Where there are other limiting words following rents and profits in a trust for payment of debts," said Lord Hardwicke, "I do not remember any case which would authorize a sale;" Ridout v. Earl of Plymouth, 2 Atk. 104. Lord Loughborough appears to have been of the same opinion; Lingard v. Earl of Derby, 1 Bro. 311; see Fonbl. 447-8.

(f) Ivy v. Gilbert, 2 P. W. 13; Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 1.

(g) Ivy v. Gilbert, ubi sup. Prec. Ch. 583; Rivers v. Earl Derby, 2 Vern. 72; 3 P. W. 672.

object of raising a gross sum at a fixed time, when it must be raised and paid without delay, to a power to raise by sale or mortgage, unless restrained by the words " (a). A power to sell will in general warrant a mortgage, but not where the intention is that there should be a sale out and out (b).

Where portions are to be raised out of real estate in a gross sum, and the whole are vested and some have become actually payable, the court will direct the whole to be raised, unless there be something in the instrument indicating that the others are not to be raised till a future time ; it has been objected that this will prevent the others from having the security of the estate for the full amount of the respective portions as they become payable (c), yet the inconvenience of having 10 or any other number of successive mortgages has been considered to be so great as to induce the court to raise the whole fund at once ; the court, said the Vice-Chancellor of England, considering the investment in Three per Cent. Consols for the others as equivalent to payment (d).

(a) Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 74, 75, 77, affirmed Jac. 631 ; Boottle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 193, 230, 232, Sir T. Plumer ; see also Sheldon v. Dormer, 2 Vern. 310 ; Backhouse v. Middleton, 1 C. C. 175 ; Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 551 ; and Jarman on Wills, ii. 534, et seq., where the whole doctrine is fully stated and considered ; and see Foster v. Smith, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 193. Mr. Justice Story makes the following observations on this doctrine :—" Where a testator directs a gross sum to be raised out of the rents and profits of an estate at a fixed time, or for a definite purpose or object which must be accomplished within a short period of time, or which cannot be delayed beyond a reasonable time, it is fair to presume that he intends the gross sum shall at all events be raised, so that the end may be punctually accomplished, and that he acts under the impression that it may be so obtained by a due application of the rents and profits within the intermediate period. But the rents and profits are but the means, and the question, therefore, may properly be put, whether the means, if totally inadequate to accomplish the end, are to control the end, or are to yield to it. Now if the gross sum cannot be raised out of the rents and profits at all, or not so soon as to meet the exigency contemplated by the testator, it would seem but a reasonable interpretation of his intention to presume that he meant to dispense with the means, and at all events to require the sum to be raised." The same principle, as Mr. Justice Story observes, § 1064, is applied by the Court of Chancery in other analogous cases, as, for example, in cases of charities, where the doctrine of cy pres is applied, and in cases of elegits on judgments under the old law, and in other cases where the debt cannot be paid at all out of the rents and profits, or not within a reasonable time ; see Stileman v. Ashdown, Ambl. 13 ; 2 Atk. pp. 477, 608 ; O'Gorman v. Comyn, 2 Scho. & Lef. 150, " which is taking the profits by anticipation," Lord Hardwicke, Ambl. 17. In Ivy v. Gilbert, supra, the Lord Chancellor said, " Where no time is appointed for the raising of a portion charged only on the profits of the estate, it is due when the profits can raise it ;" and see 1 Atk. 551, sup. p. 407.

(b) See additional note, No. 5.

(c) This was acted upon by Sir J. Leach, in Wynter v. Bold, 1 Sim. & St. 507. There the widow had actually made an appointment by deed, and two of the children had attained 21 ; but as the original settlement gave her the power of appointing by will or by deed, Sir J. Leach thought that was a sufficient indication of the intention that the portions should not be raised during her life, (see the cases, sup. p. 405). In Dickenson v. Dickenson, 3 Bro. 19, the M. R., Lord Kenyon, though he allowed the portions, separately charged, to be raised and invested, gave the infant children a right to resort to the real estate for any deficiency.

(d) Gillibrand v. Gould, 5 Sim. 156. In the settlement in this case there was a clause that no mortgage was to be made until some one of the portions should become payable, p. 153. Sheppard v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 394, does not contradict the rule, as the decision turned Though younger children may not be entitled to have their portions paid until a future time, they may be entitled to interest on those portions immediately, though such interest may not be immediately raisable: it is a constant rule in equity, that whenever a legacy is given by a father to a child as a provision for such child, though the legacy be payable at a future day, the child has an immediate right to the interest of the money; if the legatee were a stranger to the testator it would be otherwise (a).

By the settlement, a term was created to raise portions to take effect immediately on the death of the father; the wife had an annuity secured to her, and the trustees had a power to enter and distrain; the term was limited, subject to, and not after the expiration of that annuity, and then there was a limitation to the first and other sons; the trustees were not to raise the principal of the portions until after the death of both the father and mother, but interest was given for maintenance until and consequently before the portions should become due and payable. The provision for interest was general, without any qualification whatever, but the eldest son contended that interest was not to be paid during the life of the mother; Sir Wm. Grant held that it was. In giving judgment his Honour said the qualification insisted upon by the heir-at-law was not warranted by the words, and would be contrary to the intention: the children are equally in want of maintenance during the mother's life as after her death. If indeed the estate had been limited to her for her jointure, it might have been argued that the limitation for maintenance could not take effect until the term should come into possession; even in that case it would be doubtful whether these strong and general words would not warrant raising maintenance by sale or mortgage of the reversion, or at least raising it afterwards, retrospectively; but where the trustees have the legal right to the rents and profits, and interest is given for maintenance until the portions shall become due and payable, it would be equally contrary to the spirit and words of the settlement to hold that the maintenance should not take place until after the death of the mother. And in answer to an objection arising upon the proviso that the term on certain events should attend the inheritance, Sir W. Grant, referring to Hall v. Carter (b), said, Lord Hardwicke lays no stress on words less qualified than these, observing upon that will,

on the terms of the instruments; it was the heir who sought to raise the whole amount in that case; as in Wynter v. Bold; and see Leech v. Leech, 2 Drury & W. 577, where Lord Chancellor Sugden declined to follow Hays v. Bailey, 3 Sugd. V. and P. 10th ed. p. 4.

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 506; and see Hall v. Carter, 2 Atk. 358; a case of a settlement: Lyddon v. Lyddon, 14 Ves. 566; Staniforth v. Staniforth, 2 Vern. 460.

(b) 2 Atk. 358.

that the intention was that the daughters should have maintenance till the portions became payable, and interest afterwards till they were raised; whence it follows that if you collect from any other part of the will that maintenance was intended to be paid, mere general expressions in a proviso of this kind shall not defeat or counteract that intention (a).

Notwithstanding the latitude of construction that has been resorted to in cases relating to portions, it was held by Lord C. Sugden that when a settlement provides over and over again expressly and carefully, and with all necessary circumstantiality, for the raising of interest in any case in which it appears to have been considered necessary or proper that interest should be raised, it is not possible on such a settlement to conjecture from an ambiguously framed clause, in which nothing is said as to interest, that it was the intention of the parties that interest should be raised, though on the clause standing by itself it would have given interest (b): but interest may be given on the intention without express words (c).

Where a tenant for life has a power conferred on him by will to charge the estate with any sum or sums of money not exceeding 2000*l.*, or any other sum, for the portion or portions of any daughters or younger sons, independently of the stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 46, he may appoint that sum in unequal portions amongst such daughters and younger sons (d).

If an estate on which a portion is charged be together with another estate subject to a mortgage, the estates will be marshalled in favour of the portionist: the party entitled to the portion may say this: "The mortgagee has two funds, and my portion is charged on one of them; and if that one is not sufficient to pay both of us, then I am entitled in equity to compel the mortgagee to resort to the other fund (e), so that the payment of both may be worked out" (f).

The expense of raising portions is generally directed to be borne by the trust estate, and not by the portions themselves (g).

Portions are commonly provided for "Younger children," in respect of which expressions difficulties of construction frequently arise. We

(a) Lyddon v. Lyddon, 14 Ves. 565-7; the portion was directed by the decree to be raised with interest from the death of the father.

(b) Clayton v. Earl of Glengall, 1 Drury & W. 19, affirming the judgment of the Master of the Rolls; see Whatford v. Moore, 3 My. & Cr. 284, Lord Cottenham.

(c) Clayton v. Glengall, 1 Con. & L. 320.

(d) Cotgreave v. Cotgreave, 1 De G. & S. 39.

(e) N. B. Not merely to stand in the place of the mortgagee, v. infra, Marshalling.

(f) Lord Eldon, Lord Ranclyffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. 216.

(g) Michell v. Michell, 4 Beav. 549.

now proceed to the consideration of the rules of construction which have been established by the Court of Chancery in order to determine who are to be considered as "younger children."

The head of portions or any other provision for children, especially younger children, as was observed by Lord Hardwicke, admits of a greater variety of determinations here, and of judgment on circumstances than perhaps any other head (a); and the words "younger children" have received what has been called a prodigious latitude of construction (b). The reason is thus explained:—When a real estate is so settled as that it must, on the death of a parent, go to his eldest son, and provision is made, by that parent or by any person standing in loco parentis, whether by settlement in contemplation of marriage or by will, for the younger children of such parent, the court has considered the presumption that it was intended to make provision for all the children and not to give a double provision to any so strong, as to warrant it in holding that by the word "younger" must have been intended all except the one who succeeds to the estate (c).

Carrying out this principle, the court has felt itself warranted not only in letting in children not strictly "younger," in favour of the manifest intention of including all unprovided for, but also in excluding the child provided for by the family estate, even though such child may be a younger child (d). In such cases—as in determining who are

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Lord Teynham v. Webb, 2 Ves. 206; and see 1 Eden, 450. In Bythewood's Conveyancing, by Jarman, vol. x. page 189, the cases are collected; and see 2 Jarman on Wills, 118-9.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Lord Teynham v. Webb, 2 Ves. 210.

(c) Every one but the heir, or head and representative of the family, is a younger child in equity, Lord Harcourt, Beale v. Beale, 1 P. W. 244; and Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. 210; 2 Atk. 457; in the case before Lord Harcourt, the whole estate had gone away to the remainderman, who was thus hæres factus, and the rule was applied. Butler v. Duncombe, 1 P. W. 451; Lord Teynham v. Webb, 2 Ves. 203-10; Pierson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. 47; judgment of Mr. Justice Maule and Mr. Baron Rolfe, Scarisbrick v. Lord Skelmersdale, 4 Y. & Coll. 113; Peacocke v. Pares, 2 Keen, 698, Lord Langdale. It is to be observed that in Teynham v. Webb, the provision was not by a parent but by a grandmother, by deed, under a power which had been given to her; but she did it, as Lord Hardwicke said, as a parent providing for the younger children of her daughter, and that it must receive the same construction; 2 Ves. 210.

(d) As in Mead v. Cave, 1 Ch. Rep. 224;

Bretton v. Bretton, 2 Freeman, 158; see Scarisbrick v. Lord Skelmersdale, 4 Y. & Coll. 114. In Heneage v. Hunloke, 2 Atk. 457, by marriage articles it was agreed, int. alia, that a freehold estate should be settled by the sister of the plaintiff's grandfather, (who had himself also provided a portion for the younger children,) upon the younger child or children of the marriage of the plaintiff's father and mother, in tail general. A deed was accordingly executed, by which the estate was settled on the younger child or children in tail general. The plaintiff was the only daughter of the marriage, but was older than her brother, the only son. It was admitted that under the limitations in the deed she could not recover at law, but as the articles under which the settlement was made were executory [directory], Lord Hardwicke held he could correct the deed, though of the same date as the articles; and as the plaintiff, under the circumstances, according to the rule above adverted to, was to be considered as a younger child, he ordered that the estate should be conveyed to her in tail general; ibid. 458. In Duke v. Doidge, cited 2 Ves. Sen. 203-4, it was said by the court, "that every child, except the heir, is considered in equity as a younger; and that eldership not carrying the estate with it, is considered not to be considered as "heirs of the body" in marriage articles—the court construes the words in a sense in which, from the nature of the instrument, they must have been understood by the parties (a). But this latitude of construction is only applied to gifts from parents or persons standing in loco parentis; in dispositions by strangers, unconnected with a provision by way of portion, the words "younger children" receive their ordinary literal interpretation (b). This distinction, it has been said, is founded on the moral obligation on the part of the parent to provide for all his children, and not to make a double provision for any, whereas in the case of a stranger no such obligation exists; in the former case, therefore, the court construes the language used so as, if possible, to make the thing done amount to a complete discharge of the moral obligation (c). This latitude of construction is not extended to a legal limitation in a deed (d). It is not every act done by a parent which is to be construed on principles different from those which would have been applied if the same thing had been done by a stranger, but only those acts which the parent does in the discharge of some natural duty (e). But in the case of a legacy by a brother (who in this sense is a stranger) to the youngest child of his sister born within a certain period, on the evident intention, an only child born within the period prescribed was held to take (f). If a testator has given his own construction to the words "younger children" it must be abided by (g).

such an eldership as shall exclude by virtue of such clauses, and it would be hard that the right of eldership should be taken away, and yet not have the benefit of it as a younger child." In that case the estate went by appointment to the third son, and the eldest, being thus deprived of the estate, was considered as a younger child. As regards the correction made in Heneage v. Hunloke, it is to be observed that a settlement made before marriage, if purporting to be made in pursuance of articles, as this evidently was, may be corrected in favour of each child, equally as one made after marriage, Legg v. Godwire, Forrest. 20; Honour v. Honour, 2 Vern. 658; S. C. 1 P. W. 123; though not where the settlement, so executed, is not in pursuance of the articles, but must be taken to be a new agreement. See Cox's note to West v. Errissey, 2 P. W. 355; and see Marquis of Breadalbane v. Marquis of Chandos, 2 My. & Cr. 735-6, 739, 741-2; et v. infra, in this section.

(a) Scarisbrick v. Lord Skelmersdale, 4 Y. & Coll. 114. So an only daughter has been construed to be an only son, and that after the portion given to her had become vested; Earl of Northumberland v. Earl of Egremont, 1 Eden, pp. 435, 449; Spencer v. Spencer, 8 Sim. 99; see Gray v. Earl of Limerick, add. note, No. 6.

(b) See Hall v. Hewer, Amb. 204; 4 Y. & Coll. 116; Lady Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 173; that was the case of a grandmother; and see the other cases cited, ibid.

(c) Judgment of Maule and Rolfe, Barons, 4 Y. & Coll. 116.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Heneage v. Hunloke, 2 Atk. 456. If the words of a deed as they stand are contrary to the clear intent proved by legitimate evidence, as where the deed is made in pursuance of articles, from which it is plain that "younger" was intended in another sense; this, or indeed any other mistake, may be rectified under a distinct head of jurisdiction; 2 Atk. 456; supra, p. 411, n. (d).

(e) Scarisbrick v. Lord Skelmersdale, 4 Y. & Coll. 117; the shifting clause, for instance, in that case was not considered to be one.

(f) Emery v. England, 3 Ves. 232; the gift over was in the event of the sister having no child born within the period prescribed.

(g) See Hall v. Luckup, 4 Sim. 5; but see the strictures on this case, (4 Y. & Coll. pp. 115-6).

When it is said that an elder child unprovided for shall be deemed a younger, it means, as it would seem, an elder child unprovided for by the settlement or will itself, or by means which were in the contemplation of the parties making the settlement or will (a). In Peacock v. Pares (b), a younger child becoming an elder was held not to be entitled to a share under the following circumstances. The younger son before he attained 21, and therefore before his portion vested (c), became an eldest son, and then attained 21; he did not take the estate under the limitations in the settlement, his father and brother having intercepted the limitation under which he would have taken it, by joining in suffering a recovery, though his brother by will had devised the estate to him for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. The younger son insisted that under these circumstances he was not to be considered an eldest son within the clause of exclusion: Lord Langdale, after observing that it was not immaterial that whilst the claimant remained a second son he never had a vested interest in the portion (d), said, The estate which he would have enjoyed under the settlement was defeated by means incident to the estates created by the settlement, but not by any defect of the settlement itself in providing the means to carry the intention into effect; and that it did not appear to him that the event of the recovery could reasonably be considered to have been in contemplation at the time when the settlement was made, so as to entitle the only son to the benefit of that which has been called "a prodigious latitude of construction" (e), which has been adopted in these cases, and appears to be founded on the presumption that it was intended to provide for all the children of the marriage (f). That presumption ought, said his Lordship, always to be had in view, and ought, he apprehended, to be acted upon in all cases in which a loss of provision occurs by an event which can properly be supposed to have been in the contemplation of those by whom the settlement was made, and within their intention to provide for. "All the cases appear to me," added his Lordship, "to be consistent with that view; none of them go the length of deciding that every disappointment of a child's provision, from whatever cause it may arise, is to be made good by construction upon the presumption to which I have referred (g);" and accordingly his Lordship decided against the claim of such eldest son, without reference to the interest in the estate which he had (a) Lord Langdale, Peacock v. Pares, 2 Keen, 699.

(b) 2 Keen, 689, 691.

(c) The portions were to vest at 21, but not to be payable till the death of the father.

(d) As to this point, v. infra, p. 414.

(e) Supra, p. 411.

(f) V. supra, pp. 411-2.

(g) Peacock v. Pares, 2 Keen, 698-701; and see Spencer v. Spencer, 8 Sim. 87.

derived from his brother (a). He had, in fact, become an eldest son within the words of the proviso for accruer; there was nothing in the settlement to alter the natural construction of the words (b), and the presumption under which "elder" has been construed to be "younger" did not apply.

In most (c) of the cases above cited, the portion had not become vested in the child who from a younger son had become the eldest; where the portion has become vested, the application of the rule becomes more difficult.

It is settled, as a general rule, that where provisions are made for younger children to the exclusion of an eldest son, and a child who was originally a younger son becomes an elder son, before the time of vesting, according to some of the authorities (d), or before the time of distribution, (though the time of vesting may be antecedent to that period,) according to others, such younger son is to be excluded (e): whether the time of vesting or the time of distribution is to be taken, in like manner as who is to be taken as an eldest and who a youngest son, will depend on the terms and purport of the instrument, the court taking to its aid, according to the general rule of construction before referred to, the surrounding circumstances.

One Bull, by marriage articles, had a power to appoint the sum of 800*l.* (to raise which a term was carved out) for younger children after the death of the wife; but it was provided by the power "that the eldest son, or the son possessing the estate, should have no share of the 800*l.*" Bull had an eldest son John, a second Anthony, and five other children; he appointed the 800*l.* to Anthony and the other younger children by name. After the appointment, and before the death of the wife, John died, whereby Anthony became an eldest son, and the estate

(a) See Taylor v. Earl of Harewood, 3 Hare, 385; a case arising upon a bequest to a son, to go over in the event of his coming into possession of an entailed estate.

(b) The safe rule of construction, in general, is to interpret the words of wills, as well as of deeds, according to their plain natural import, unless by so doing some manifest absurdity or inconvenience follow, which is sufficient to satisfy the judge that the person using the words must have used them in some sense different from their ordinary meaning, Maule, J., and Rolfe, Baron; Scarisbrick v. Lord Skelmersdale, 4 Y. & Coll. 108; and, they added, if there is nothing to shew that the testator meant to use the word "younger," in any other than its ordinary sense, it matters not whether the trust is executed or executory, ib. 117, v. sup. p. 135; and accordinally in that case, which arose on a shifting clause, "younger" was construed in its natural ordinary sense, younger in age; as to the construction of "besides an eldest only son," see Walcott v. Blomfield, 2 Conn. & L. 577.

(c) Earl of Northumberland v. Egremont, sup. p. 412, is one instance where the portion had become vested.

(d) See Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 277; and the cases in the note 1 Russell, 341, et seq. In Chadwick v. Doleman, 2 Vern. 528, more particularly noticed infra in this section, the Lord Keeper considered the appointment as in its nature defeasible, though no power of revocation was reserved, on the appointee becoming an eldest son before the time of payment arrived, Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, 1 Beatty, 336.

(e) Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. 340.

charged with the same descended upon him. Lord Thurlow held, that Anthony was excluded, though appointed to by name, and that the 800*l.* belonged to the children exclusive of John and Anthony (a).

The case of Matthews v. Paul, before Sir Thomas Plumer, is an important case on this subject. It was the case of a will made by a grandmother (b); the trust was, after the decease of the testatrix's daughter the tenant for life, to transfer the trust fund to all the children of the testatrix's daughter (except an eldest son) equally, the same to be vested interests at 21. John Paul, the actual eldest son at the death of the testatrix, died before the tenant for life and before the time of distribution, leaving an only brother, Walter M. Paul, and sisters surviving. Walter M. Paul had not at that time attained 21, but the eldest sister had attained 21 in the life of the elder son, so that her share at least was vested. The first question was, as W. M. Paul was an only son, and as the estate enjoyed by his elder brother (which had come to him under another instrument) had been devised away from him by his brother, whether he was to be considered as an "eldest" son (c): it was decided that he was. As to the question, whether under the circumstances W. M. Paul should be excluded, Sir T. Plumer observed, that the distribution of the property was to be at a future time (d), so that there was a prospective direction to divide the property amongst the children with an express exclusion of an eldest son. The testatrix appearing by her will to be conversant with the state of the family, (having made a gift to W. M. Paul as the second son,) it must be assumed that by using the words an eldest son she referred not to an individual but a character, and to any one who might sustain it. As to the case of hardship arising from W. M. Paul not having inherited the family estate, the Master of the Rolls said, cases of hardship might be supposed the other way, but the court must proceed upon general principles (e). It had been urged in the argument that the shares were vested under the special clauses in the will, but the Master of the Rolls was of opinion that they were not vested; and his Honour clearly held that the period of distribution was the period to which the exclusion referred;

(a) Broadmead v. Wood, 1 Bro. 78.

(b) Sir T. Plumer expressly noticed this, p. 334.

(c) Duke v. Doidge, cited 2 Ves. 203, sup. p. 411; Lord Teynham v. Webb, ibid. 198; and the other cases cited in the argument, 3 Swanst. 332.

(d) Some part of it was not to be distributed till the termination of certain public annuities. Proximum accipere nos oportet, eo tempore quo bonorum possessio defertur, Dig. xxxviii. 8. 1. l. 6.

(e) See Peacocke v. Pares, 2 Keen, 700, supra, p. 413. "It would be to no purpose to make deeds if this court could construe them according to what may be for the convenience or inconvenience of the parties, Cotton v. Cotton, cited 3 Y. & Coll. 150.

and he said, that even had the words been favourable to W. M. Paul taking a vested interest, yet that a tacit condition was annexed to the gift divesting it in the event of the character of exclusion devolving on one in whom it had vested (a). Some of the cases, said Sir T. Plumer, had gone further than this, as Chadwick v. Doleman (b), an excessively strong case; for there, though the appointment of the portion had been in favour of an individual by name, that individual was held to have become an eldest son; the same doctrine of a tacit condition had been recognized in other cases (c). So that the rule in ordinary cases appears to be that the period of distribution, not the period of vesting, is the time for ascertaining who is to be excluded, liable to be controlled by any words of a contrary tendency appearing upon the instrument: for if it is fairly to be collected from the provisions of the settlement or other instrument that it was the intention of the parties that the shares of the children were to be vested interests, and to remain so whatever might occur afterwards, or if by appointment or otherwise the share has become, within the meaning of the instrument, indefeasibly vested in such younger son before he becomes the eldest, then such elder son will not be excluded, and if he die before the period of distribution, his share will go to his personal representatives, though there be a clause of survivorship (d).

Where a clause in a will is plain and simple in its language the rules of construction, now considered as settled, will not warrant the clause receiving any construction other than according to its ordinary meaning without its appearing satisfactorily from the other parts of the will that the language was used by the testator in some other sense; to induce the court to give to them any other meaning there must be some gross absurdity or glaring inconsistency with the manifest intention of the party making the will: in some cases, therefore, "younger son" has been construed to mean actual younger son, though such con-

(a) Matthews v. Paul, 3 Swanst. 336-40; and see Livesey v. Livesey, 13 Sim. 43. That case, which arose upon a will of a grandmother, was peculiar in its circumstances: and the will, said the Vice-Chancellor of England, evidently consisted of "a mere collection of capricious devises," and the only safe way of deciding was to give the words as they stood in their natural and literal meaning, ib. 43-4; so that it was decided on the general rules of construction; it was more like Matthews v. Paul, 3 Swanst. 328, than any other case, ibid. p. 43.

(b) Supra, 414.

(c) Savage v. Carroll, Lord Teynham v. Webb, Hall v. Hower, Lady Lincoln v. Pel- ham, ubi supra; and Bowles v. Bowles, 10 Ves. 177.

(d) Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. 342, 347; Lord Gifford. In Spencer v. Spencer, 8 Sim. 98, a younger son who became the eldest, was held to be entitled; the amount of the portion and the time at which it was to vest were considered to be in the power of the father; and that on the terms of that settlement the parties meant that the eldest or only son, was that son who should take the estate by virtue of the settlement, which the younger son did not in that case, within the meaning of the settlement; et v. supra, p. 413; see also on this subject Livesey v. Livesey, 13 Sim. 35; and Taylor v. Earl of Harewood, 3 Hare, 372.

struction may have been contrary to what no doubt would have been the provision in case the actual events had been contemplated (a).

Where a parent had the power to raise portions for younger children, and it was left to him to consider how much should be raised, and on his neglecting to give any direction, 3000*l.* was to be raised, payable to sons at 21 and daughters at 21 or marriage: it was held by Lord Hardwicke, that nothing vested in a younger son who had attained 21 and then by the death of his elder brother became the eldest son, but died in the life of his father; for the father had during his whole life to give direction, and he might have excluded the one who had become the eldest (b).

The court naturally looks with jealousy upon any appointment made by the father amongst his children where he may derive a personal benefit from the deaths of the appointees; but this jealousy is not to be extended to the setting aside what may be a fair bonâ fide exercise of the power. "It is said," observed Lord Eldon, in Macqueen v. Farquhar, "that if there is any ground for suspicion that the execution of the power was for the benefit of the party executing, the court must act upon it as a judicial suspicion; I am extremely apprehensive I should make great havoc in many considerable titles by adopting that principle" (c). The Vice-Chancellor, in the late case of Butcher v. Jackson, on Lord Eldon's principle, refused to interfere with an appointment of this description (d).

The question as to within what period children must be born so as to take a share in a legacy, or provision by way of portion, given to children or younger children as a class; and how the distribution is to be made, whether per capita or per stirpes, where a provision is given or secured to the children or younger children of more than one person, though it most commonly arises upon gifts of general legacies, and more properly perhaps belongs to the next section, may be here incidentally noticed.

As to the first of these questions. In cases of portions provided by Settlements, the provision being a debt of nature (e), there can be no doubt, generally speaking, that all younger children to be born of the marriage will be entitled to the benefits by way of portion or otherwise that are given to younger children; but it often becomes a question, where gifts are made by Will to younger children, whether

(a) Bootle v. Scarisbrick, 1 Cl. & Fin. Ho. of L. Ca. 189; Trevor v. Trevor, ib. 267.
(b) Loder v. Loder, 2 Ves. 527.

(c) 13 Ves. 479, v. sup. p. 399, n. (a).
(d) 14 Sim. 455.
(e) See 1 Ves. 114.

those only who are living at the testator's death or at some period prior to the death of the parent are entitled to share in the distribution. Lord Eldon, in reference to this subject, said, The expression "younger children" is not, unless it is so to be taken on the context, equivalent to naming them; that description primâ facie means all the children born after the first (a). Generally speaking, in all cases where the gift is not in possession, that is when a future period of distribution is contemplated by the will or other instrument, all who shall be born during the life of the parent, or until the period of distribution shall arrive, will be entitled to share (b). Whether the gift is to be considered as a present, or an executory gift so as to extend to the period of distribution, must depend upon the construction to be put upon each particular will; very few words will vary the evidence of the testator's intention in these cases, and consequently the meaning of the will. Some general principles may be extracted from the cases on this subject. The court generally takes it that there ought to be a legatee in being, and therefore will not construe a will to extend to persons not in being, unless the testator shows his intention to be such by the words of his will; and the court has been the more induced to adopt this construction by reason of the inconveniences of keeping children out of their provisions when of age to require them (c), and from the consideration that by suspending the period when children are to take the provision intended for them, amongst other inconveniences a greater chance is given of some of the shares going to the father, for whom the bounty was not intended, by the deaths of some of the children in his lifetime (d). In the case from which the latter observations are taken, a legacy was given to younger children on a contingency; Lord Hardwicke determined that on the happening of the contingency there was a present gift, for the legacy upon the face of the will was to be then divided, and consequently all after-born children were excluded (e). There are nice-

(a) Lord Eldon, Lady Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 172.

(b) See Matthews v. Paul, 3 Swanst. 337, 340, dict. of Sir T. Plumer; Weld v. Bradbury, 2 Vern. 705, (Lord Cowper); there, by the terms of the will, all the younger children of the plaintiff, living at her death, were let in, as to their moiety; the other moiety was given to the children of J. S. and J. N.; and the rule was applied as to this moiety, so as to let in all their after-born children. Mr. Raithby, referring to Mr. Sanders's note on the same subject in Heathe v. Heathe (2 Atk. 122), where the general rules are stated, has, in his own note to Weld v. Bradbury, collected the cases as to when children living at the death of the testator alone are included, and when all who shall be born during the life of the parent, or until the period of distribution shall take; 2 Vern. 705, et seq.

(c) In Horsley v. Chaloner, 2 Ves. 83, for this reason, and because the legacies were expressly payable at 21, the Master of the Rolls excluded all younger children who were not living at the death of the testator; the Master of the Rolls also relied upon the words "born, or to be born," being omitted. See on this subject, 2 Jarman on Wills, 98.

(d) Ellison v. Airey, 1 Ves. 114.

(e) Ellison v. Airey, 1 Ves. 111. This case, ties connected with the subject of the period of the vesting and payment of gifts to children as a Class, upon which I do not enter, nor indeed do they belong to this place: the cases have been most carefully examined and distinguished by Mr. Jarman (a), and any further notice on my part would be superfluous.

As to the second question above adverted to, namely, whether the children of two or more persons are to take per capita or per stirpes; it is clear that if a bequest be made to the younger children of two or more persons, equally to be divided between and amongst them, the division will be per capita: and it is the same where the gift is to certain persons who are named, and others, as the children of other persons, who are only described; indeed, such appears to be the general rule in all cases in which children take in their own rights, and not by representation or in substitution for their parents: in the latter case they take per stirpes as regards each class, per capita as amongst the members of each class (b). Where a legacy was given to be divided equally between two persons named and the children of a third, Lord Thurlow held, that the distribution should be per capita (c). The rule as to division per capita has been applied in some instances upon which doubts have been strongly raised; for instance, a gift to a brother and the children of a deceased brother, who in case there had been no will would have taken per stirpes, was held to give to each an equal share. A bequest to the younger children of A. and to the younger children of B. means the same exactly as a bequest to the younger children of A. and B., in each case they will take per capita (d). But the general rule must yield to the intention directly expressed or to be implied from the context, as where the income is given in proportion to the number of the families until the children attain 21, they fortified by numerous other authorities, was followed in Ayton v. Ayton, 1 Cox, 328, by Lord Kenyon, who said that "the rule of construction was settled by that case most conveniently for all parties, and it was this—that so many of the children as come in esse before the time when the fund is distributable, shall be comprehended and no more." In Graves v. Boyle, 1 Atk. 510, Lord Hardwicke included all the younger children, the legacies being given in satisfaction of a bond given in favour of all. Jarman on Wills, vol. ii. p. 73, et seq.

(a) The terms of the gift over, if any, here as in other cases, may be material to help the construction. Madison v. Andrew, cited 2 Ves. 85; see the authorities on this subject, 2 Jarman on Wills, 97, et seq.

(b) Weld v. Bradbury, 2 Vern. 705; Crone

v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 486-7, and cases there cited; Tomlin v. Hatfield, 12 Simons, 171; and see Wyth v. Blackman, 1 Ves. 196, 202; et v. supra, p. 75.

(c) Butler v. Stratton, 3 Bro. 367. In Blackler v. Webb, 2 P. W. 385, the testator's children and grandchildren were held to take per capita, "as if all the grandchildren had been named by their respective names," but there one of the testator's daughters was living, so that her children could not represent her.

(d) Lady Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 175. "I cannot," said Lord Eldon, "safely draw an inference from other parts of the will (relating to other property), introducing distinctions tending to shake the settled doctrine;" ibid. 176.

in the interim taking a proportionate share as a class, the corpus will be divided in the same manner (a). Where there was a gift to the three nieces of the testatrix, "to be by them divided equally, share and share alike, and at their deaths to go equally, share and share alike, to their children, it was held that the words "their children" meant their respective children (b). But the same learned Judge, unwillingly, held that what a testator gave by the words "I give, devise and bequeath the same unto the said Helen Stuart and Agnes Cunningham and their several children, to be divided between them in equal shares and proportions," was given to Mrs. Stuart, Mrs. Cunningham, Mrs. Hay (a daughter of Mrs. Cunningham), and the five children of Mrs. Stuart, equally per capita as tenants in common (c).

A direction that property shall be divided between two or more persons or their children as a person named shall appoint, gives to such individual a power of selection from the whole as a class, but if he do not exercise the discretion the court will not exercise it, but give the whole to the class, each taking an equal proportion (d), not on the ground that "or" is to be construed "and," but upon the principle of the general intention in favour of the whole as a class, as established by frequent decisions (e).

Where a person entitled to a charge under a trust-term becomes the owner of the inheritance, the term, generally speaking, in equity, will merge (f).

This may suffice to give a general view of the doctrine of the Court of Chancery on the important subject of portions, so far as relates to

(a) Brett v. Horton, 4 Beav. 239; and see Flinn v. Jenkins, viii. Jur. 661; 1 Coll. 366; and see Roper on Leg. 161.

(b) Arrow v. Mellish, 1 De G. & S. 355; the Vice-Chancellor considered that this case was distinguishable from Malcolm v. Martin, 3 Bro. 50; Pearce v. Edmeades, 1 Younge, p. 357; and Smith v. Streatfield, 1 Meriv. 358.

(c) Cunningham v. Murray, 1 De G. & S. 370: this part of the decree was not appealed from: there was another point as to a partial intestacy, on which the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, differed from the Vice-Chancellor; see xii. Jur. 547. It was contended, on the part of the plaintiff and Mrs. Hay, that the division should be per capita, on the authority of Brett v. Horton, 4 Beav. 239; Woodstock v. Shillito, 6 Sim. 416; Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 54, and other cases, (see p. 368). The cases cited in favour of the construction that the legatees were to take per capita, and which are the material authorities on the point were (p. 369), Oates v. Jackson, 2 Stra. 1172; Blackler v. Webb, 2 P. W. 383; Dyer v. Dyer, 1 Meriv. 414; Lady Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 167; Jeffery v. Honywood, 4 Mad. 398; (see 2 Jarm. on Wills, 313); Dowding v. Smith, 3 Beav. 541; Crockett v. Crockett, 1 Hare, 451, reversed on appeal, v. supra; Raikes v. Ward, ibid. p. 445; Rickabe v. Garwood, 8 Beav. p. 579; Lenden v. Blackmore, 10 Sim. 626; and Heron v. Stokes, 2 Dr. & W. 89; 1 Conn. & Law. 270; and see Turner v. Hudson, 10 Beav. 222; and see Thomas v. Hole, Forrest. 251. The general subject has been investigated by Mr. Roper, p. 157, et seq. last edit.; and by Mr. Jarman, On Wills, ii. 47; and see Mattison v. Tanfield, 3 Beav. p. 131; and Armstrong v. Stockham, vii. Jur. 230. In each of which cases the claimants were held to take per capita.

(d) Penny v. Turner, 2 Phillips, p. 493; Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 128.

(e) Burrough v. Philcox, 5 My. & Cr. 92.

(f) See additional note, No. 7.

the nature of Portions and when and how they are to be raised, and how and by whom they are to be enjoyed. We proceed to another branch of this subject, so important that it requires a separate discussion; namely, the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to Double Portions.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.—V. supra, p. 396.

Case of Poulet v. Poulet.—Portion to be paid at 21, or Marriage.

The case of Poulet v. Poulet (referred to in the Lex Prætor. 264, 268, sup. p. 396), 1 Vern. 204, 321; S. C., 2 Ventris, 366, (which is cited as a leading case in King v. Withers, For. 122,) was this:—Lord Poulet, by settlement, limited a term to trustees for raising of 4000*l.* apiece for his younger children for their portions, to be paid them at their respective marriages, or ages of 21, which should first happen, and for paying them 100*l.* a year for maintenance in the mean time; and after the portions and maintenance raised then the residue of the term was to be in trust for the heir. The settlor then made a will giving portions in similar terms, but providing that they should not be double; though, in the event of his son having no issue male, the daughters were to have 2000*l.* apiece in addition. One of the daughters died when eight years of age; it was held, that as this was a charge on real estate, her portion ought not to be raised; but if it had been to be raised out of personal estate, it was clear the daughter's representative must have had it. In 1 Vern. 324, a distinction is taken between a will and a deed as to a charge on real estate. As to the point there decided, see Yates v. Phettiplace, 2 Vern. 216; S. C., Prec. Chan. 140, a case of a will affirmed in Dom. Proc., where the Lord Keeper and Master of the Rolls would not recognize the doctrine of the civil law on the words to be paid at 21, &c. (v. sup. vol. i. pp. 542, 582, vol. ii. 395); holding that the intention was the same as where the gift was at 21; but see Lord Rivers v. Lord Derby, inf. next note. A gift of personal estate at 21 is so completely contingent that it will not be forfeited to the crown by a conviction for felony before 21; Stokes v. Holden, 1 Keen, 153.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.—V. supra, p. 397.

Vesting of Portions.

“If,” says Lord Chief Baron Gilbert (Lex Prætor. 270, citing Lord Rivers v. Lord Derby, 1 Eq. Ab. 268, pl. 7; 2 Vern. 74, affirmed in Dom. Proc. ib. 74, Raithby's note), “in a marriage settlement there be a term to raise 100*l.* apiece for younger children, and there be no time limited for the payment, there it is due and payable to such children as soon as ever they are born; and therefore, if they die before 21, it shall go to their executors or administrators, because if it had been raised immediately the money would have gone to their executors and administrators; and where it ought to have been raised immediately it is looked upon in Equity according to the rule of the civil law to be raised, for Qui habet remedium ad rem, ipsam rem videtur habere.” The daughter, in Rivers v. Lord Derby, had attained 17. The Lord Chancellor (Jeffreys) said he would not be bound by Poulet v. Poulet, (supra, preceding note,) though affirmed in the House of Lords; but the case before him does not appear to have interfered with that doctrine.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.—V. supra, p. 402.

Time when Portion should be raised by means of Reversionary Term—Lord Thurlow's Doctrine.

Lord Thurlow stated the rule thus :—Where a man gives portions charged on a term to arise upon the death of a party, it shows that they are not to be paid till after the death of that party, and that though it be upon attaining 21 or marriage, yet it can only be where the term shall come into existence (1): but this doctrine is overruled; see Michell v. Michell, 4 Beav. 549.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. IV.

Portion to be raised out of Rents—Ivy v. Gilbert, v. supra, p. 407.

“The natural meaning of raising a portion by rents, issues, and profits, is by the yearly profits; but to prevent an inconvenience, the word [profits] has, in some particular instances, (Trafford v. Ashton, 1 P. W. 418), been extended to any profits which the land will yield, either by sale or mortgage; but where there are subsequent words to explain and restrain it, as by leasing, I have not heard of any case which has said that any other method shall be made use of for the raising of it. It is as much the intent of the settlement to confine the manner of raising this portion to leasing, as to secure any portion at all; and consequently it would be a plain breach of trust to raise it any other way. And at the time of making this settlement, (which was in 1657,) I do not think that the word [profits] was extended to signify the profits which might be made of land by sale or mortgage. Here is no time appointed for the raising of this portion, and therefore the portion in this case is due, when the profits can raise it; (and see Evelyn v. Evelyn, supra; Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 8; Okeden v. Okeden, supra; Small v. Wing, 5 Bro. P. C.; Gibson v. Rogers, Amb. 95;) and it carries no interest; but when the sum of 1500*l.* is, or might have been, raised by the profits, then it becomes due, and the land is discharged, as having borne its burden.”—Lord King, Ivy v. Gilbert, 2 P. W. 19, affirmed in Dom. Proc., 1 Bro. P. C. 468, reversing Lord Macclesfield’s decree, Prec. Ch. 583.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. V.—Supra, p. 408.

Direction for Sale when it Authorizes a Mortgage.

A direction to sell, unless there be an intention to convert out and out (as to which see Haldenby v. Spofforth, 1 Beav. 390, supra), will authorize a mortgage, and generally speaking, as a mortgage preserves the estate, it is the preferable mode. The following is an abstract of the late case of The Earl of Orford v. The Earl of Albemarle, (xii. Jurist, 811,) on this point.—Estates in Dorsetshire were conveyed to trustees upon trust that they, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of the survivor should, at the request of A. and B., or the survivor of them, or, if both should be dead, at the discretion of the trustees or trustee for the time being, “sell and dispose of all and singular the same hereditaments and premises, either together or in parcels, and either by public auction or by private contract.” The trustees were directed to stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts and for the intents and purposes, &c., declared by a deed of even date. The deed of even date was a settlement of certain estates in Norfolk in strict settlement upon A. and B., and the son of B. in tail male; and the trusts thereby declared of the proceeds of the sale of the Dorsetshire estates were for payment of certain sums of money, some of which were charged upon the Norfolk estates. “And as to the residue (if any) of the money which should arise by such sale, remaining unapplied for the purposes aforesaid,” the same were to be applied in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as the Norfolk estates. And it was declared, that the rents, issues, and profits of the Dorsetshire estates until the same should be sold, or so much thereof as should be remaining unsold, should be paid and applied to the same person, and for the same purposes, as the rents of the lands to be purchased with the residue of such trust money should be payable or applicable to, if such purchase were actually made:—It was held, that this trust for sale authorized a mortgage of the Dorsetshire estates for a sum sufficient to pay off all the charges thrown upon those estates.

(1) Conway v. Conway, 3 Bro. 271; however, in that case, he held that the portion appointed under a power given to the father in that case, was raisable during the life of the widow, saying, “One would go as far as might be upon the rule not to press estates, but still such an intention can never be raised against express declaration.”

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. VI.—Supra, p. 412.

Who is a “Younger Child.”

The following is an abstract of the late case of Gray v. The Earl of Limerick, xii. Jur. 817, referred to supra, p. 412.—By a settlement, 15,000*l.* was directed to be raised for the portions of the child and children of Henry Viscount Glentworth by Annabella, his wife, not being an eldest son, and besides an eldest or other son of Henry Viscount Glentworth by Annabella, who, at the death of Henry Viscount Glentworth and Edmund Henry Earl of Limerick, his father, should be entitled to the said estates. The portions were to vest in sons at the age of twenty-one years. When the settlement was executed Henry Viscount Glentworth had two sons, viz. Edmund Henry Pery, and William Henry Tennison Pery, his elder and second sons. Henry Viscount Glentworth died in the lifetime of the Earl, and Edmund Henry Pery became Viscount Glentworth, and Edmund Henry died also in the lifetime of the Earl. The Earl then died, and was succeeded in the title and estates by William Henry Tennison Pery, who became Earl of Limerick.

Edmund Henry Viscount Glentworth appointed executors, who claimed a share of the 15,000*l.*, on the ground, that although the father, Henry Viscount Glentworth, was eldest son at the time of the settlement, yet he died in the life of the Earl, and Edmund Henry Viscount Glentworth had attained twenty-one, but had died without succeeding to the title.

William Henry Tennison, Earl of Limerick, also claimed a share of the 15,000*l.*, on the ground that he had attained twenty-one while a younger son, and before the death of his father and grandfather:—It was held, that neither the representatives of Edmund

Henry Viscount Glentworth nor William Henry Tennison, Earl of Limerick, were entitled to any share in the 15,000*l.* As to the claim of the latter, the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce in giving judgment, said, "The letter, as I conceive, is plainly opposed to the present Earl's claim. He became heir apparent of the late Earl, and immediately on the late Earl's death the tenant for life in possession under the settlement. But the spirit is not, I think, in this instance, so clear, especially as I believe the present Earl attained his majority in his elder brother's lifetime. The letter is within the rule, unless it is at variance with the spirit. Of such variance, I am not thoroughly persuaded nor convinced. I cannot allow myself to depart from the letter. Abiding by it, I must hold, that the present Lord Limerick, as I have said, is not entitled."

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. VII.

*Rules of Equity as to Merger of Terms, from Gilbert's Lex Prætoria, p. 264 ;
v. supra, p. 420.*

"The rules touching Merger are, that if a man has the same interest and absolute dominion and property in the whole inheritance as he has in the term, or power for raising money out of the inheritance, there it must merge, for a man cannot have power to raise money for my benefit out of that which is mine ; but if there be any difference between the two interests, or any other person intermediate, then there can be no merger. For if there be any merger in the first case, it will change the intent of the conveyance, and in the other case, there being an intermediate estate, there is no merger at law, no more than there is in a Court of Equity in the case of a trust ;" and see Smith v. Frederick, 1 Russ. 174, 209, et seq. ; approved by Lord Chancellor Sugden, in Walcott v. Blomfield, 4 Dru. & W. 239.—As to merger, see the late case of Law v. Urlwin, xii. Jur. 1012.

---

The late case of Legh v. Legh, 15 Sim. 138, may be referred to as an additional illustration ; p. 410, note (e).

§ 2.—Double Portions.—Satisfaction.

The Court leans against Double Portions.

Will First.

Lord Thurlow's Exposition.

Rule as to Ordinary Debt due from Father, (in note).

Settlement First.

Not to be extended in such Cases.

Graves v. Boyle.

Obvious Difference where Settlement first and Will afterwards.

No marked Consequence of the Distinction.

Exposition by Lord Cottenham.

Doctrine in case of Stranger.

Regard to be had to the Circumstances—Case of one only Younger Child.

Not every Advancement within the Rule.

Consideration towards Heir and Devisee.

The Presumption is a Presumption of Law, not to go to a Jury.

The Satisfaction may go in Part only.

Doctrine of Satisfaction depends on Intention.

If Intention can be collected from the Instrument that the first Provision is not final, Child may take both.

Where the Provisions are not ejusdem generis, intention to give both presumed.

Bellasis v. Uthwatt.

Mr. Sanders's Note, and Mr. Swanston's Note, as to the Difference between Performance and Satisfaction, referred to (in Note), et v. infra.

Holmes v. Holmes.

Davys v. Boucher.

Effect of afterwards putting out a Son Apprentice (in Note).

Bengough v. Walker.

Second Gift not so Beneficial in Enjoyment as the First.

Legacy of a Residue.

Lord Glengall v. Barnard.

Distinction between Satisfaction and Performance, et v. supra.

Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, before Sir T. Plumer (in Note).

Trimmer v. Bayne, before Lord Eldon.

Gift of so much of Residue as shall amount to a Certain Sum.

Assumption of Debt of Son.

Effect of Material Differences.

Effect of Slight Differences.

In the First, Provision absolute; in the Second, settled on Child and Issue.

Weall v. Rice.

Booker v. Allen.

Wharton v. Lord Durham, in the House of Lords.

Portion adeemed not set up by mere Republication of Will.

Presumption may be rebutted by Extrinsic Evidence.

Debeze v. Mann.

When Evidence is admitted on one Side it must be admitted on the other.

Evidence of Declarations.

Those before and subsequent admitted, et v. supra, p. 246.

The Law settled as to Admission of Parol Evidence in some cases.

Admitted, where.

Legacy first, and then Advancement of Money without anything more.

Legacy given to Daughter who was Indebted to the Testator (in Note).

Admitted even where there is a Writing in which no Express or Implied Intention is to be found.

Evidence admitted in case of Provision by Husband for Wife, to explain Advancement.

Refused to shew Gift by Will to Wife was Satisfaction of Debt.

Fowler v. Fowler (in Note).

Not admitted.

Where Evidence would contradict Express Intent.

General Rule as to Admission of Parol Evidence in Legatory Matters.

Not admitted where Rule of Construction supports Apparent Intent.

But admitted in all cases where Rule of Construction raises a Presumption against Apparent Intent.

Even it seems where same Legacy given in one Instrument.

Rule that Will shall not be construed by matter de hors.

In Coote v. Boyd Evidence admitted by Lord Thurlow in case of two Legacies by separate Instruments.

Lord Alvanley's and Sir E. Sugden's Strictures on this Case.

Shudal v. Jekyl, before Lord Hardwicke, also objectionable (in Note).

Difference between the Cases last observed upon, and those in which Presumption arises against Double Portions on Distinct Acts—Will and Settlement.

Rather a Presumption of Evidence than of Law.

Primary Presumption may be met by Evidence of Intention.

Further Presumption arises where there is a Substantial Difference in the two Provisions which repels or extinguishes the Primary One.

Question whether Extrinsic Evidence can be admitted in such cases.

Cases bearing by Analogy.

Bigglestone v. Grubb.

Evidence received to explain the Nature of the Subsequent Advance.

Chapman v. Vernon.

Hartopp v. Hartopp.

Not strictly Competent in the First Instance.

But Competent to show from whom Consideration moved.

Effect of this Case.

Cases applying directly.

Weall v. Rice—Settlement first—Sir J. Leach.

The Differences in that Case held not to be substantial.

General Rule of Sir J. Leach.

Effect of his Dictum in that Case.

Hooker v. Allen—Will first.

Lloyd v. Harvey—Will first.

Dictum in Lloyd v. Harvey, and Sir E. Sugden's Strictures on it.

Hall v. Hill.

Evidence rejected, by Sir E. Sugden, where Differences held to be Material.

Wallace v. Pomfret, before Lord Eldon.

Evidence received against Construction and Presumption of Law—Contrary to Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. W.

Effect of this Case.

The Question stated, and Reasons in support of Sir J. Leach's Rule.

Effect of the Presumption may be to destroy Contingent Gift over.

Twining v. Powell.

Election.

Additional Notes.

1. Judgment of Lord Cottenham in Lady E. Thynne v. Earl of Glengall, August, 1848, in the House of Lords.
2. Statute for Extinction of Satisfied Terms.—Remarks upon.

It frequently happens, that after a parent or a person standing in loco parentis has made a provision for a child by his will, the marriage of the child or an opportunity for his advancement in life, causes the parent to make a provision for the same child during his life: or the converse may take place; the parent, on the marriage of the child or on some other occasion, may engage to make a certain provision for his child, and afterwards by his will give to the child a legacy or provision without reference to his previous engagement; thus in each case making, in terms, a Double provision for the same child. The Court of Chancery, in legal phrase, leans strongly against double portions, so that generally the second provision in the former case is treated as an ademption of the first, in the second as a satisfaction, unless an intention to the contrary is shown.

This leaning of the court appears partly to have had its origin, with other doctrines, from the favour which was, in early times, in this court as well as in the courts of law, shown to the heir; portions being in those days usually charged on the lands, double portions would have brought a greater burthen upon the head of the family (a). This doctrine had the additional recommendation—which, with our early Chancellors, would have great weight—that it was in a great degree in conformity with the doctrines of the Roman Law. It is the general nature and the application of the doctrines in regard to double portions, which were adverted to in the former volume (b), that we are now to consider.

The doctrine of the Court of Chancery on this subject was expounded by Lord Thurlow, after Lord Hardwicke and others of his predecessors (a), who were desirous of founding the doctrine on reasonable principles independently of mere authority, as follows:—As regards an advancement following a gift by will, a legacy by a father, or person standing in loco parentis to a child (b), is considered as a portion; it therefore carries with it these qualities, that it is a deliberate distribution amongst his children of such portions as he thinks fit: crediting him for that deliberation, if he advances in his life that sum which he had adjudged to be the due and proper portion for that child; the presumption of law is that he has satisfied that intent, and consequently that it is no longer a ground for any further demand; and the law intends that every testator knows that such is the law, as it intends every man to know its rules (c).

(a) Lord Hardw. 2 Atk. 518; Ambl. 326; Barret v. Beckford, 1 Ves. 520.

(b) Vol. i. p. 568.

The same presumption arises upon a gift by will subsequent to a provision by settlement; but in Graves v. Boyle Lord Hardwicke said that cases of satisfaction of portions secured to a child by subsequent gift by will ought not to be extended further than they had gone (d); and Lord Thurlow observed, that Lord Cowper and Lord Hardwicke had turned the stream of the decisions in regard to satisfaction, and had fixed the law (e). There is indeed an obvious difference in the case of an ademption of a legacy by a subsequent advancement, and of (a) Lord Thurlow seems to have thought, but without looking into it very closely, that this doctrine was adopted from the Roman law (see 1 Bro. 427), and that it was not in accordance with the genius of the law of England, and he did not approve of it (1 Ves. J. 109). The principle may no doubt be found in the Roman law, a circumstance that, as has been remarked in the former volume, would favour its introduction in the view of our early Chancellors. Mr. Justice Story has adverted to this subject: he remarks (§ 1108), “that the doctrine of Satisfaction, and also of the Performance of Covenants by bequests in wills, was well known to the Roman law, and that it was probably derived from that source, with some variations, into our system of jurisprudence;” instancing the case (Dig. xxx. 1. l. 84, § 6) of a portion satisfied by a subsequent legacy of equal amount, and that Parol Evidence of an intention to satisfy the portion was held to be admissible (Dig. xxx. 1. l. 123): and see § 1114, n. (2). The above remarks of Lord Thurlow are also there observed upon, and the rules of the Roman law, as to ademption, and the admission of evidence of intention, are stated, and the differences and agreements in the rules of the Roman law, and those which prevail in the Court of Chancery, are noticed: but favour to the heir on this, as on other occasions, as has already been observed, appears to have had a material influence on the minds of the early Chancellors. A similar doctrine prevails, as already noticed (vol. i. p. 570), in regard to Debts, namely, that, generally, a legacy by a debtor is presumed to be a satisfaction of a debt equal to or less in amount than the legacy; though this rule also has been disapproved (v. int. al. Chancy's case, 1 P. W. 408-10, where the early cases are collected); Clark v. Sewell, 3 Atk. 97; Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. 635; Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 527; Stocken v. Stocken, 4 Sim. 152. Where an ordinary debt is due by a parent to a child the same rules apply as between strangers: Tolson v. Collins, 4 Ves. 491. V. infra, add. note, No. 1; and Plunkett v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 323-4.

(b) V. supra, and 2 Atk. 518: every other person, even a grandfather, a brother, or a sister, is out of the rule.

(c) Lord Thurlow, Ellison v. Cookson, 1 Ves. Jun. 107-10; Lord Hardwicke, to same effect, Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 517; Watson v. Lord Lincoln, Ambl. 326.

(d) Graves v. Boyle, 1 Atk. 509. The Lord Chancellor, in Cuthbert v. Peacock, 2 Vern. 593, had said the same of satisfaction of debts by legacies.

(e) Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. 516.

a legacy given after an advancement, for a legacy of itself imports bounty to the legatee (a); and if the testator takes no notice of the settlement, the presumption can hardly be considered so strong as where he does not advert to his will in a subsequent settlement, which he could hardly be expected to do even if the will were present to his mind; but no very marked consequences of this distinction as regards portions are to be found in the later authorities (b), indeed the rule was established as to cases where the will followed the settlement before it was settled as to the converse (c).

Lord Eldon has characterized this as a sort of artificial rule, in the application of which legitimate children have been very harshly treated, upon an artificial notion that the father is paying to them a debt of nature; for natural children being in the light of strangers, in case double provisions by will and by advancement are made in their favour, neither the reason of the rule nor the rule itself applies, but the legacy is considered to proceed from mere bounty, and therefore has its effect whether it precede or follow the advancement (d).

This doctrine has, in later times, been the subject of much discussion, the more so perhaps from Lord Thurlow, as well as other judges, having expressed some dissatisfaction at its adoption (e). In our time, Lord Cottenham, who has not unfrequently had to consider it, has thus laid down the rule: "All the decisions," says his Lordship, "upon questions of double portions depend upon the declared or presumed intention of the donor. The presumption of equity is against double portions (f), because it is not thought probable, when the object appears to be to make a provision, and that object has been effected by one instrument, that the repetition of it in the second should be intended as an addition to the first; the second provision,

(a) Lord Thurlow, Powell v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. 517; Clark v. Sewell, 3 Atk. 97; Eastwood v. Vinke, 2 P. W. 616.

(b) It is, however, to be observed that Sir E. Sugden's rule for the exclusion of parol evidence, as I understand it, only extends to where the will is last; v. infra, p. 449, note; and see the next note.

(c) Lord Thurlow seems to have made a distinction between cases where the will was first and where the settlement was first. Upon this Lord Alvanley observed, in Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, "I wish this case to be considered as different from the cases of a will and a subsequent advancement. The cases before Lord Thurlow were of the latter kind. I take the rule never to have been departed from, that prima facie a portion to a child, by the will of the parent, if there is any prior provision, is a satisfaction, unless it is shown clearly that it is not so intended," Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 527-9; and his Lordship notices (p. 527) that Lord Thurlow had intimated a doubt, in Warren v. Warren (1 Bro. 308), whether the rule was established where the will was first, and the provision by settlement afterwards, but in subsequent determinations he had said it was too late to question the rule, though it had been carried too far; ibid. p. 526.

(d) See Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 151.

(e) V. supra; and int. alia, 2 Bro. 517; Powel v. Cleaver.

(f) V. supra; and see the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Suisse v. Lowther, 2 Hare, 433; and, as to satisfaction, 3 Hare, 324.

therefore, is presumed to be intended as a substitution for, and not an addition to, that first given; but when the gift is mere bounty, there is no ground for raising any presumption of intention as to its amount, although such amount be comprised in two or more gifts" (a), "and although in some instances the presumption may defeat the intention of the donor, in most cases it is calculated to effect it" (b).

Where it is provided in a settlement, as is frequently the case, that if any advancement be made by the parent on marriage or otherwise to the child in his lifetime, such advancement shall be deemed, according to its amount, in part or in whole of the portion provided by the settlement unless the contrary appear in writing, it has been settled by decision that a legacy given to the child by the will of the parent shall be considered as a satisfaction pro tanto or in full, according to the amount; and it seems that in such case a residue equally as a particular legacy will be held to be a satisfaction (c). The will, being silent in that respect, is not, per se, equivalent to a declaration that a legacy shall not be towards such satisfaction (d). But a share which the child takes on the intestacy of the parent is not held to be a satisfaction, for the share does not go to the child by any act that has been done by the parent in his lifetime (e).

It is to be remarked that in these cases, as in those relating to the raising of portions for younger children (f), Lord Hardwicke considered that the court might take into consideration the circumstances of the case. As for instance, where there is an eldest son (g) and more

(a) V. supra. "I have gone through all the cases," said Lord Thurlow, "and it appears to be the result of them, that where a Stranger gives a legacy by will, and afterwards gives a sum, without any evidence that it is intended for the same purpose, it is not taken as a satisfaction; to make it so, it must appear, at the time of the gift, to be meant as an ademption of the legacy;" Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. 517. And in another case Lord Thurlow said, "Where the question arises upon two provisions for a stranger, the only ground on which a decree can be made is that the intent of the testator, collected on fair grounds," (and as it is presumed from the instruments themselves), "was that the party should not have both," Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. 296; as where a legacy is given in a will for a particular purpose, and another bounty is afterwards given for the same purpose, (Debeze v. Mann, 2 Bro. 521; and see Roome v. Roome, 3 Atk. 183, to same effect). So that in the case of a stranger the onus is upon those who contend that the two provisions are to be considered but as one; see also Wetherby v. Dixon, G. Coop. Rep.

279; and Sir J. Wigram's observations, Suisse v. Lowther, 2 Hare, 434-5.

(b) Pym v. Lockyer, 5 My. & Cr. 34-5-8; Sir J. Leach, in Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 267, also expressed his approbation of the rule as founded on the intention.

(c) Lord Eldon, Leake v. Leake, 10 Ves. 477, 489-90, a very peculiar case; Onslow v. Michell, 18 Ves. 494, Sir Wm. Grant, who considered that the question was first settled by Leake v. Leake: the cases are collected in the arguments and judgment; they are examined, Roper on Leg. 95, 104; and see Golding v. Haverfield, 13 Pri. 593; Fazakerly v. Gillibrand, 6 Sim. 594, 602, a case of money directed to be raised out of real estate.

(d) Golding v. Haverfield, 13 Price, 593; 1 M'Clell. 345; et v. Papillon v. Papillon, 11 Sim. 642.

(e) See the cases in the preceding notes; and Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. 413, 427.

(f) V. supra, int. al. p. 398.

(g) So, as will be remembered, defects in the execution of powers would not be aided, nor would surrenders of copyholds have been children, and the demand is made of such double portions to his prejudice, there the court, said Lord Hardwicke, inclines in favour of satisfaction ; but it is otherwise where there is an only younger child, and no intention is expressed by the father (a). Lord Thurlow also appears to have considered that some difference in construction might take place where it was not an eldest son who was to be burthened ; where, said he, portions are charged on an estate which will go to the eldest son, additional portions on condition shall be like laws made after others, and repeal the former (b) ; but Lord Loughborough and Lord Alvanley considered that the general representative in respect of land or money, upon whom the burthen of the portions would fall, was entitled to the same consideration as the heir (c).

It does not follow that every sum of money which a parent may give in his lifetime is to be considered as a portion. The court has never added up small sums in order to show that if the child claims those sums as well as the larger provision made for him by the parent he would be taking a double portion (d) ; and parol evidence of the circumstances under which the advances were made may, as will hereafter be more particularly mentioned, be let in : if the second gift is accompanied by an instrument in which it is described as a portion or provision or by any similar word, there it will be taken as a portion so as to found the presumption (e). This presumption is a presumption of law—a presumption which the law makes upon the general facts ; therefore it is not to be sent to a jury, as was for a time contended (f) : but, as we shall see, it is not so unbending as is the presumption arising from a rule of law or of construction.

This presumption may be applied so that the portion shall be treated supplied to the disherison of the heir-at-law ; Pike v. White, 3 Bro. 286 ; Rodgers v. Marshall, 17 Ves. 294 ; Carter v. Carter, Mosely, 365.

(a) Bellasis v. Uthwatt, 1 Atk. 427.

(b) Lord Thurlow, Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. 296.

(c) Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 529 ; a devisee is put upon the same footing as the heir in Jennings v. Looks, 2 P. Wms. p. 276, so the hæres factus is equally as the hæres natus entitled to have the general personal estate applied in exoneration of the real estate, Gower v. Mead, Prec. Chan. 2 ; even a devisee of a part of the estate only, Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436 : et v. supra.

(d) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 2 Hare, 434.

(e) Ibid. ; but there is no technical sense attributable to the word "provision," unless where found in a gift by a parent or person in loco parentis, ibid. 435.

(f) See Ellison v. Cookson, 1 Ves. J. 103, 188. Lord Eldon, when Attorney-General, in arguing Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. 514, said, "I am content to agree that the rule of satisfaction, as between parent and child, is a rule of evidence and not a rule of law." Lord Thurlow, in the same case, said, "With respect to the question of ademption, the case of parent and child is a presumption of evidence only, not a presumption of law ;" ibid. 516. But in Ellison v. Cookson, 3 Bro. 63, Lord Thurlow said, it was a presumption of law, and he added, "I say a presumption of law, because it is put that it is proper to go to a jury, but that would be to send to a jury a presumption of law ;" at the same time he said, "It is a presumption capable of being rebutted by evidence : the evidence in this case may be drawn from the language of both gifts," &c.

as satisfied in part only. If, said Lord Eldon, a portion is given to a child by will, or a gift is so constituted as to acknowledge the legal relation, and afterwards an advancement is made on marriage, that is primâ facie an ademption of the whole or pro tanto. His Lordship, however, proceeded to say that “in some cases it has gone the length consistent with principle,—but shewing the fallacy of much of the reasoning—that the portion, though much less in amount than the legacy, has been held a satisfaction in some instances (a); upon this ground, that the father, owing what is called a debt of nature, is the judge of that provision by which he means to satisfy it, and though at the time of making the will he thought he could not discharge that debt with less than 10,000*l.*, yet on a change of his circumstances, and of his sentiments upon that moral obligation, it may be satisfied by the advance of a portion of 5000*l.*” (b).

On this latter dictum of Lord Eldon, Mr. Roper (c) had stated the rule to be that an advance by a father to his child, though less than the legacy given by his will, would be a complete ademption of the legacy (d). In a late case Lord Cottenham examined this doctrine, and he came to the conclusion that there was not sufficient authority to support the supposed rule, and that on the contrary the weight of authority was decidedly against it; and as it could not be supported on authority, and was in its operation generally destructive of the provisions which parents have intended for their children, his Lordship declined to adopt or to follow it, and therefore declared in the case before him that the advancements were to be taken as ademptions pro tanto only of the legacies before given (e): and the law on this point may now be considered as settled.

As the doctrine of satisfaction depends, as we have seen, on the intention, and that intention is to be collected, if possible, by the ordinary rules applicable to construction and evidence, from the instruments; the vigilance of the judges has naturally been directed in the first place to the consideration of the instruments themselves, in order to see whether they afford any indication of an intention one way or the other. If the portions are consistent, and if neither of them can on the face of

(a) Referring probably to Lord Hardwicke's dictum in Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 518 (though his Lordship, in a preceding passage in the same page, adverts to a satisfaction in part), and to Hartop v. Whitmore, 1 P. W. 681; but the report does not accurately state the facts, (see Cox's note); and to Clarke v. Burgoine, 1 Dick. 354; but that case is misreported; see 5 My. & Cr. 41.

(b) Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 148, 151; and see 1 Ball & B. 304.

(c) On Legacies, p. 318; see p. 366, last edition.

(d) It had been held that a legacy might go in part satisfaction of a previous portion; see Warren v. Warren, 1 Bro. 305; 1 Cox, Rep. 41-2; Fonbl. 326.

(e) Pym v. Lockyer, 5 My. & Cr. 55.

the instrument be considered as the ultimate provision intended by the testator to be made for his child, the presumption will not arise, and the child may take both (a): it is the same if a distinct view or purpose for giving the second provision be pointed out (b).

It has always been considered of material importance in reference to the intention, particularly by those judges who have disapproved of the rule, to examine whether the portion subsequently given is of the Same Nature as the portion originally given; for if of a different nature, or in legal phrase not ejusdem generis, it has been presumed that the subsequent gift could not have been intended as a substitution for the first, unless there should be an express declaration or a clear inference from other parts of the instrument, and more particularly in cases of Satisfaction, that such was the intention of the donor.

"When a bequest," said Lord Hardwicke, in a case as to a portion, "is to be taken to be by way of satisfaction for money before due, the thing given in satisfaction must be of the same nature, and attended with the same certainty (c) as the thing in lieu of which it is given; land is not to be taken in satisfaction for money, nor money for land;" and in the case before him, (which was the case of an only child,) his Lordship held that a legacy of 10,000*l.*, payable on the contingency of the child attaining 18, was not, especially as it was the case of an only child, to be considered as a satisfaction for the portion absolutely vested, which was an absolute interest in 300*l.* per annum Exchequer Annuities(d). So in Holmes v. Holmes, a bequest by way of portion of

(a) See Hanbury v. Hanbury, 2 Bro. 352, 533: in that case Lord Thurlow decided that the provisions were cumulative on this principle; and see Baugh v. Read, ubi infra.

(b) Baugh v. Read, 1 Ves. J. 357; stated in Lord Brougham's judgment, Wharton v. Lord Durham, 3 My. & K. 479.

(c) And see Barret v. Beckford, 1 Ves. 521; Masters v. Masters, 1 P. W. 423-4; Crompton v. Sale, 2 P. W. 555.

(d) Bellasis v. Uthwatt, 1 Atk. 426; Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. W. 247; Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 512. In Forsight v. Grant, (1 Ves. J. 298,) a testator gave a bond to pay 2000*l.* three months after his death, in trust for his wife and children; if no children, for the wife absolutely: by his will he devised all his real and personal estate, in trust for his wife for life, then for his children, if any, if none then over to the plaintiffs; and he expressly revoked all former settlements and wills made by him; Lord Thurlow clearly held the widow might take both. See Plunkett v. Lewis, infra.

Mr. Sanders, in his note to Bellasis v. Uth- watt, has collected and arranged the cases down to his time, on the subject of Satisfaction. First, where the portion or provision is secured to a child by marriage settlement, and the parent or person in loco parentis afterwards gives a legacy to the child without express directions; Secondly, where the parent or person in loco parentis bequeaths a legacy to a child, and afterwards gives a portion to or makes a provision for that child in his lifetime, without expressing it to be in lieu of the legacy, (noticing the cases as to the introduction of evidence of intention in either case to repel the presumption). As to the first point, he collects the cases as to the certainty required in the provision given by the will. As to the legacy and the provision being ejusdem generis (as applicable to the second as well as the first description of cases), he states what variances in the time of payment are material—noticing the distinction in this respect between debt and portion—also the cases where a contingent legacy has been held not to satisfy an absolute portion: he also refers to the cases on the then doubt-500*l.* was considered (a) not to be adeemed by an advancement by way of gift by a trader of half of a stock of jewellery made on the occasion of the parent subsequently taking his son into partnership (b); and Mr. Baron Alderson held that where annuities were given to daughters by will, and a subsequent advancement was made on their marriage; to the one by an advance of money by bond, and to the other by a settlement of land (c) and advance of money, the portions were not adeemed (d).

But a legacy which of itself would not be considered as ejusdem generis, may be coupled with such words as will bring it within the rule. In Bengough v. Walker the son was entitled to 2000*l.* as a portion under his father's marriage settlement; the father by his will bequeathed to him a share of his powder works and such a sum of money as should, together with the value of such share in the works, make up to him the full sum of 10,000*l.* It was contended that this was not an advancement ejusdem generis; but Sir Wm. Grant clearly held that this must be considered as a money legacy, and therefore an advancement of so much as the value of the works fell short of 10,000*l.*, and which on inquiry turned out to be much more than 2000*l.* (e). In this ful question, whether a residue was a satisfaction. The cases applicable to the second description of double provisions are next collected.

Mr. Swanston — whose accuracy and research, equally as his judgment, are always to be relied upon—in his note to Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, (1 Swanst. 221,) — a case where the widow's share of a residue was held to be a satisfaction—has collected the principal cases on the question whether a benefit accruing under intestacy or will of the covenantor is a performance of a covenant for securing a sum of money at his death; distinguishing those where such a benefit was held to be a performance or satisfaction, and where it was held to be neither a performance nor a satisfaction.

(a) 1 Bro. 555, Lords Commissioners; 5 My. & Cr. 48.

(b) In Norton v. Norton, (3 P. W. 317, n., A.D. 1718,) it was held by the Lords Commissioners that a father's buying an office for his son, though but at will, as a gentleman pensioner's place, or a commission in the army, were advancements pro tanto, within the custom of London; but in Hinder v. Rose, ibid. it was held that putting out a child as apprentice was not. In Rosewell v. Bennett, 3 Atk. 77, v. infra, a sum advanced to put out a son as an apprentice was held by Lord Hardwicke, under the circumstances, to be an advancement. What is to be considered as an advancement within the Statute of Distributions, 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, (v. supra, vol. i. p. 579,) from which analogies applicable to this subject may be drawn, will be the subject of consideration hereafter.

(c) See Goodfellow v. Burchett, 2 Vern. 298.

(d) Davys v. Boucher, 3 Y. & Coll. 411; and see Grave v. Earl of Salisbury, 1 Bro. 425, 427; Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 512. Mr. Baron Alderson, after observing that he could find no case in which the principle had been extended to devises of real estates, said, "he thought that so to extend it would repeal the provisions of the Statute of Frauds then in force, as to the revocation of wills of real estate," 3 Y. & Coll. 411. In Hoskins v. Hoskins, Prec. Chan. 263, the father, after giving 750*l.* to his son by will, purchased a cornetcy for him for 650*l.*; evidence was let in to explain the act of advancement, and to show that this was intended as a satisfaction pro tanto; and it was decreed accordingly. Thelluson v. Woodford, 4 Mad. 436, is a similar case.

(e) Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 514: in reference to the necessity for resorting to parol evidence to inquire into the amount, Sir Wm. Grant said, "You cannot refer to extrinsic evidence to construe a will, but you may to show with reference to what the will was made;" ibid. 514. Lord Alvanley used similar expressions in Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 525; and see Lord Eldon's observations, case an objection was also raised that the subsequent provision was not equally beneficial, as the provision was subject to an annuity of 20*l.* to another person, and therefore was not taken so beneficially as the portion which was not subject to any burthen; but Sir W. Grant disposed of this objection also by saying, "If I see that the bequest is so large, so far exceeding the portion, that the diminution by the burthen imposed upon it cannot affect the relative proportion, it would be against common sense to say that if a bequest of ten times the amount of the portion is burthened with a charge not the extent of a tenth part, though greatly exceeding the portion, shall not be a satisfaction. The child will have the portion clear, and in as beneficial a manner as by the articles" (a).

There are cases in which, on the principle now under consideration, it has been held that a legacy of a Residue cannot be considered as a portion. A legacy of a portion (b), said Lord Rosslyn, means a legacy of a definite sum, that being, as Lord Rosslyn expressed it in the case before him, its meaning ex vi termini; hence, said his Lordship, a bequest of a residue does not fall within the rule; and he accordingly held, that a bequest of a residue was not satisfied or adeemed by an advancement of a specific sum on the marriage of a child who was one of the residuary legatees (c).

If Lord Rosslyn's doctrine were to be considered as binding, it would seem to follow that a gift of a residue ought not to be considered as an ademption of a portion previously secured. In a case before Lord Thurlow, it had been provided in the articles which secured portions to the younger sons, that if the father should at any time during his life or at his death give to any of his younger children so entitled to portions, money or lands, for or in advancement on marriage or otherwise, the value thereof should be deducted from the portion, unless he should by writing declare the contrary; the testator by his will gave to a son a sum smaller than his portion subject to a life-

Pole v. Lord Somers, 6 Ves. 325; and Lord Thurlow's, Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. 296; and supra, vol. i. p. 557-8.

(a) 15 Ves. 515; there were other circumstances in this case tending to the same conclusion; and see Plunkett v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 322.

(b) Lord Thurlow considered that "portion" meant no more than "fortune," with which it was coupled, in the case before him; Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. 516.

(c) Freemantle v. Banks, 5 Ves. 85; Lord Rosslyn's opinion was chiefly founded on the case of Watson v. Lord Lincoln, Ambl. 325-7; but as to this point, as appears from Mr. Blunt's note, Lord Hardwicke, in his decree, reserved his judgment; the case of Rickman v. Morgan, v. infra, was cited before Lord Rosslyn. Lord Cottenham, adverting to this question, said, "A testamentary gift of a residue or part of a residue is said not to be adeemed by a subsequent advancement, because the amount is uncertain; but," added his Lordship, "in that case the child, if sole residuary legatee, takes as advancement part of what it would, if no such advancement had been made, have taken as residue," 5 My. & Cr. 48.

interest to the widow, and the residue of his estate absolutely; Lord Thurlow having first sent it to the Master to inquire into the value of the residue, was of opinion that in this case the pecuniary legacy and the bequest of the residue must go in satisfaction (a). Lord Thurlow observed, that supposing there was a residue of 100,000*l.*, 500*l.* being in cash, and the rest in various articles outstanding, it would be ridiculous to insist that the residue would not have been a satisfaction of the gift; he added, a point is made that if this residue is considered as a satisfaction, supposing the child was bound to take it as a satisfaction he might wait many years for it; but this was answered by the fact that the child would be immediately entitled to the charge created in his favour by the settlement in all events, and it would only be in the event of the child claiming the whole of the residue when got in, in addition to his portion, that the question would arise, so that he could not be prejudiced in the manner insisted upon (b). These observations appear to evince an opinion on the part of Lord Thurlow that a substantial residue might be considered as a satisfaction, though the case itself depended upon the construction, and the terms of the settlement in reference to the fact of advancement. There seems to have been no doubt that a gift of so much of a residue as shall amount to a sum named ought to be taken as a satisfaction (c).

(a) Richman v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 67.

(b) 2 Bro. 296; and see the same case before Sir J. Buller (2 Bro. 389), under the name of Pearson v. Morgan. In Smith v. Strong, 4 Bro. p. 493, though that was a case of strangers, illegitimate children, Lord Thurlow seems to have thought that a residue, from its uncertain nature, could not be taken as a satisfaction. Lord Kenyon seems to have considered it as settled that a residue should not be taken as a satisfaction of a Covenant; see Devese v. Pontet, 1 Cox, 191-2; S. C. Prec. Ch. note, p. 240, supposed to have been corrected by Lord Kenyon, (and it is so treated by Lord Langdale, Earl of Glengall v. Barnard, 1 Keen, 789,) in the case of an ordinary creditor. But his Lordship considered that provisions secured by husbands for their wives, were subject to other considerations, and that a distributive share of the husband's personal estate, payable to the widow on an intestacy, might be taken, if not as a satisfaction of the provision secured to her, yet as a performance of the obligation to make it; citing Blandy v. Widmore, 1 P. W. 324; but see 1 Swanst. 219; Lee v. D'Aranda, 3 Atk. 419; Garthshore v. Chalie, 10 Ves. 1, see particularly p. 13; and Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 1 Swanst. 211, 218. In the last case Sir Thos. Plumer made the following important observations:—

“An important distinction exists between satisfaction and performance; Satisfaction supposes intention; it is something different from the subject of the contract and substituted for it; and the question always arises, Was the thing done intended as a substitute for the thing covenanted? a question entirely of intent; but with reference to Performance, the question is, Has that identical act which the party contracted to do been done?—what sum was the widow to receive, and when? If she has received the sum stipulated and at the time stipulated, namely, on the death of her husband from his assets, the contract is performed; that is the principle of the cases of Blandy and Widmore, and the rest of that class.” Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 1 Swanst. 219—Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. p. 129, and Devese v. Pontet, ubi supra, Sir Thomas Plumer observed, were cases of testacy, and as a legacy implies bounty they admitted of the presumption that the testator intended to augment the wife's provision by the settlement, and not to satisfy it, ibid. 221, where Mr. Swanston has subjoined his valuable note, before referred to, of the principal cases on the question whether a benefit accruing under the intestacy or will of the covenantor is a performance or satisfaction; and see Plunkett v. Lewis, add. note, No. 3.

(c) 15 Ves. 514. The question whether a

The question as to whether a substantial residue, or what the testator treats as such, can be considered as a satisfaction, lately came before Lord Langdale, and his decision was carried by appeal to the House of Lords (a). In that case the testator Mr. Mellish entered into a bond on the marriage of one of his daughters with Lord E. Thynne, under which he bound himself, his heirs, executors, &c., to secure 2000*l.* a year during his life, and by the same bond he came under an obligation that 66,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* £3 per Cents. should be transferred at his death to the trustees of the settlement, in case his daughter or any child of the marriage should be then living, upon the trusts of the settlement, which was of contemporaneous date. Mr. Mellish then made his will, dated in 1833, by which he gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell his ships, cargoes, and such other parts as they might think advisable (b), and invest the proceeds, and after providing an annuity for his wife out of the dividends, he directed that one moiety of the interest should be paid to his daughter, Lady E. Thynne, for her separate use, with remainder to her children if any, subject to appointment, at 21 or marriage; and in default for his other daughter, afterwards Lady Glengall; the other moiety was settled in a similar manner for the benefit of the testator's daughter, Margarette (Lady Glengall), and her issue in like manner; and he desired that there might be inserted the usual powers with respect to the maintenance and advancement of his daughter's children during their minorities. One question was whether the share of the residue given for the benefit of Lady E. Thynne and her issue should be taken as a satisfaction for the provision secured by the testator's bond given on her marriage in 1830. Lord Langdale, putting aside as inapplicable the cases that related to a gift of a residue as affecting ordinary debts (c), decided, chiefly on the authority of Lord Thurlow's dictum in Richman v. Morgan and Bengough v. Walker, that, in this case, the residue being admitted to exceed the value of the sum secured by the bond, must be taken as a satisfaction (d); and this decision has been affirmed by the House of Lords. An assumption by the parent of a debt which a son was bound to pay, larger in amount than the portion, will be considered as a satisfaction (e).

subsequent gift might be taken as a satisfaction pro tanto only was not then settled; if it had probably Sir Wm. Grant would have expressed himself with less of hesitation.

(a) Had the judgment of the House of Lords been pronounced when the above was written, I should not have entered upon the subject so much at length; see the additional note to this section, No. 1.

(b) These words and those which follow are material to show that the testator considered that he was giving a substantial residue.

(c) Page 789.

(d) 1 Keen, 790-3; see additional note, No. 1.

(e) Ansley v. Bainbridge, 1 Russ. & M. 657.

Where there are material differences in the limitations or as to the mode or time of enjoyment in the provision subsequently given, though ejusdem generis, and where the thing given and alleged to be in substitution is less beneficial either in amount or certainty or substantial value than the thing for which it is to be substituted, these circumstances have been held to be sufficient to show from the latter instrument itself, as compared with the former, that the provision so subsequently given was not intended to be a substitution or satisfaction for the former; but in the case of portions the differences have not been scanned with critical accuracy; the inquiry has rather been whether the two provisions are substantially the same (a); though in the case of the satisfaction of a debt by a legacy, almost any little circumstances are laid hold of by the court to take it out of the rule (b). Satisfaction in respect of double portions, said Lord Eldon, differs from the performance or satisfaction of a covenant (c) or of a debt (d) in this, that the court overlooks small differences in the circumstances of that which is proposed to be given, and that in satisfaction of which it is intended to be given (e): the court does not

Mr. Roper, who has entered fully into the consideration of the satisfaction and release of debts, (vol. ii. p. 28, et seq.; p. 68, et seq.; p. 1026, et seq.), and of the satisfaction of portions by legacies, (p. 1071, et seq., last edit., 1847, by Mr. White,) to which the reader is referred, states, (p. 1071, last edit.,) that the inclination is so strong against double portions, that it has been decided that although no legacy is given by a will, yet if by the intestacy of the parent, a distributive share of his personal or any real estate devolves upon the child, of equal or greater value than the portion, it shall be a satisfaction of the portion. This would be an important proposition if established as here laid down, (see Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. 427, supra, p. 428); but the only authorities he cites are in Sect. IV., which are cases of performance, and generally not cases of children. Wilcocks v. Wilcocks, (2 Vern. 558,) to which he particularly refers, is the case of a covenant by the father to settle lands of the value of 200*l.* per annum, on his first and other sons in tail, remainder to his daughters; he purchased lands of that value, and suffered them to descend upon the son; and this was evidently considered as equivalent to performance as between him and the son, who was the claimant, and therefore a satisfaction, but not because it was a portion; and a covenant to leave a sum of money to a child, as well as in the case of a widow, may be considered to be performed through the intestacy; but satisfaction in its ordinary sense supposes intention, (Sir T. Plumer, 1 Swanst. 219, Goldsmid v. Goldsmid); intestacy can hardly of itself imply intention; v. supra, p. 428.

(a) V. infra; and Atkinson v. Webb, 2 Vern. 478; Blandy v. Widmore, 1 P. W. 324, and Cox's note (1); Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 225-6. If the thing is clearly of much greater value and more beneficial to the decree, the presumption will prevail; see Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 514; Rickman v. Morgan, 2 Bro. 394; supra, p. 434; and the cases 1 Roper on Leg. 317-336; 2 Roper on Leg. 58-108; Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 267-8.

(b) Lord Alvanley, Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. J. 529; et v. Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball. & B. 298; Earl of Durham v. Whar-ton, 3 Cl. & Finnelly, 155.

(c) Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. 132; Hales v. Darell, 3 Beav. 332; but the authority of Haynes v. Mico has been questioned; v. int. al. 4 Mad. 331; and 1 Swanst. 219; et v. sup. p. 434, note.

(d) See Hanbury v. Hanbury, 2 Bro. 352; 1 Keen, 782; v. infra, p. 454, add. note.

(e) Lord Eldon, Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 515. The same principle applies in the case of double portions, by a settlement and a subsequent will; it must be shown, from the different nature of the provision, that the one is not intended to be in lieu and satisfaction of the other; see Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 528; Sparkes v. Cator, 3 Ves. 535.

inquire whether the portion by the will (a) is entirely and absolutely to the child; or which is afterwards advanced in the form of a settlement upon marriage (extending to the children), which not being a performance of a covenant or satisfaction of a debt, yet is a presumed satisfaction of the intended portion (b); although the bequest be not a performance, still it may be inferred that the testator intended it as a satisfaction of the covenant so as to raise a case of Election (c); a gift of a rent-charge may be a satisfaction (d).

Sir J. Leach, in Weall v. Rice, stated that the following principles were to be extracted from the cases, most of which bearing on the point had been cited:—"Where the two provisions are of the same nature, or there are but slight differences (e), the two instruments afford intrinsic evidence against a double provision." "Where the two provisions are of a different nature, the two instruments afford intrinsic evidence in favour of a double provision (f). It is not possible to define what are to be considered as slight differences between two provisions. Slight differences are such as in the opinion of the judge leave the two provisions substantially of the same nature; and every judge must decide that question for himself." However, it may be useful to state some of the instances in which differences have been considered substantial or the contrary.

In the case before Sir J. Leach the difference between the provision by the articles and that made by the will was that Mrs. Rice (the Wife) by the articles was entitled to an estate for life for her separate

(a) Even in the case of a covenant, as between parent and child, the slight circumstance of the portion given by the will being payable three months after the death of the wife, instead of immediately on her death, was not allowed the effect of showing the testator did not mean a satisfaction of a covenant, which was literally performed and more, though as regards Strangers it might not have been held to be a satisfaction; Sparkes v. Cator, 3 Ves. 535; and Lee v. D'Aranda, 3 Atk. 419; 1 Ves. 1, there cited.

(b) Lord Eldon, Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 515-16; and see Baugh v. Read, 1 Ves. J. 263, Lord Thurlow; 5 Simons, 314; and 2 Russ. & M. 315, Lloyd v. Harvey.

(c) Per Lord Chief Baron Alexander, Adams v. Lavender, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 50.

(d) Walcott v. Blomfield, 4 D. & War. 239.

(e) Et v. int. alia, Hartopp v. Hartopp, 17 Ves. 191, Sir Wm. Grant.

(f) Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. p. 266; and see Hartopp v. Hartopp, 17 Ves. 191, where Sir W. Grant considered the differences as not being such as to exclude the presumption; and Lord Glengall v. Barnard, 1 Keen, 793, a like decision by Lord Langdale. On the other hand, in Booker v. Allen, also before Sir J. Leach, where the will was first, the settlement afterwards, and by each 4000*l.* was given; the differences were that under the will the husband took nothing, and the wife took an immediate estate for her separate use; the settlement gave the husband a life interest, and gave the wife nothing till after his death; under the will the children, on the death of the mother, became entitled to the 4000*l.*, in equal shares; under the settlement their interests were postponed till the death of their father, and were subject to a power of appointment; under the will also there was an alternate limitation over on the death of all the children under 21; (see the argument 2 R. & M. 289, and judgment, 298;) these differences were held to be substantial, and consequently that the presumption did not arise; 2 Russ. & M. 299. In Jones v. Morgan, (2 Y. & Coll. 403, 412,) Lord Abinger said, "he knew no distinction as to this point, whether the portion was by deed or will."

use without restriction ; the will imposed the clause against anticipation : as to Mr. Rice (the Husband), though he had an estate for life, equivalent to what he might have claimed under the settlement, the duty of maintaining the children was annexed to it : as regards the Children, under the articles they had an interest by way of cross-remainders in the shares of the other children ; under the will they took only their respective shares, the testator having expressed an intention to give them cross-remainders by an executory devise which was void in law. Sir J. Leach was of opinion that, in this case, the two provisions were substantially of the same nature, the differences being only slight (a). He then proceeded to say that the extrinsic evidence was conclusive of the question ; but, as before observed, the propriety of adverting to extrinsic evidence at all, where the intrinsic evidence, as it is called, is clear on the point to which that evidence is addressed, has been seriously questioned (b).

The question as to what are to be considered as substantial differences lately came before the House of Lords in the case of Wharton v. May. Lord Cottenham has observed (c) that the decision of the House of Lords in that case has settled, that variations such as existed in that case, cannot be relied upon as being substantial. The variations in that case were as follow :—By the will, by which 10,000*l.* was given to Mrs. Wharton for life with remainder to her children, the power of appointing the shares was given to the wife alone ; by the settlement, which was afterwards made and by which she took a portion of 15,000*l.*, the power of appointment was given to the husband and the wife : by the will the 10,000*l.* was settled on the wife and children without the interposition of any interest in the husband ; by the settlement the payment of the portion (15,000*l.*) was postponed till after the father's death : all the children of every marriage which Mrs. Wharton might contract would have been entitled to shares of the 10,000*l.* ; by the settlement portions were provided for the younger children only of that marriage, so that if there had been an only son, nothing would have been raised. Lord Brougham had considered these variations as substantial, though the decision did not turn on that point only. The House of Lords reversed the original decree which Lord Brougham had affirmed (d).

(a) Weall v. Rice, 2 R. & M. p. 268 ; and see Carver Bowles, ib. 303 ; and Lloyd v. Harvey, ib. 315 ; Copley v. Copley, infra, p. 453 ; and Sheffield v. Earl of Coventry, 2 R. & M. 335.

(b) See vol. i. p. 568-9, et v. infra.

(c) 3 My. & Cr. 374.

(d) 3 Cl. & Finell. 146 ; 10 Bli., N. S. 538 ; first reported in 5 Simons, 297 : the testator was liable to pay to his daughter 5000*l.* ; the settlement expressly declared that the 15,000*l.* was to be taken in satisfaction of this sum (v. infra, additional note, No. 3) ; the question was as to the 10,000*l.* This case is also

A provision which is thus extinguished by a subsequent provision, will not be set up by a mere republication of the will. In Powys v. Lord Mansfield the testator, after he had made the advance which was held to have adeemed the portion given by his will, made a codicil by which he confirmed his will; but Lord Cottenham held that this did not revive the portion given by the will; the codicil, said his Lordship, can only act upon the will as it existed at the time; and at the time, the legacy which was revoked, adeemed, or satisfied, formed no part of it; any other rule would make a codicil merely republishing a will, operate as a new bequest (a).

The presumption of satisfaction of a prior by a subsequent provision, though it is, as above noticed, stated to be a presumption of law (b), is liable to be rebutted by evidence (c); "and," said Lord Thurlow, in reference to a subsequent settlement, "the kind of evidence for that is, any demonstration from the conduct and language of the author of both gifts, that he considered the gift by the will as still a subsisting benefit" (d). And where evidence for this purpose is tendered and is admissible, whatsoever instrument may be the first, the business of the judge is duly to determine whether the parol evidence, in each particular case, has sufficient weight and power to overthrow the presumption, which it is admitted must primâ facie be applied (e).

In Debese v. Mann, before Lord Thurlow, which has already been cited, and which is often referred to as a leading case on this subject, the father of the wife told the father of the husband he could only give his daughter 1000*l.* on her marriage, but she would have more thereafter: this was considered sufficient to repel the presumption that the legacy given by the previous will was satisfied, as the only explanation of it was that the daughter would have more at his death (f): it showed in fact that the provision by the settlement was reported 3 My. & K. 472; where (see p. 480,) many of the previous authorities, as to the effect of differences, and what shall be considered as substantial, are stated. Some analogy may be observed in the cases of gifts over in the event of a devisee becoming entitled to a particular estate; see Taylor v. Earl of Harewood, 3 Hare, 372.

(a) 3 My. & Cr. 376; (the Vice-Chancellor had considered that the republication of the codicil was a material circumstance as regards the intention, (6 Ves. 560);) and see Izard v. Hurst, 2 Freeman, 224; Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. Sen. 623; Crosbie v. M'Doual, 4 Ves. 610; Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 293.

(b) V. supra, p. 429, note.

(c) V. sup. vol. i. p. 568; et v. 3 Hare, 324.

(d) Ellison v. Cookson, 3 Bro. 61; 1 Ves. J. 108; Lord Eldon, Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 515. It was equally settled that a legacy given to an executor, though perhaps "originally a stretch," raised a presumption of law against him, that he was intended to be trustee, as otherwise it would be giving him a part and the whole; but the executor also was allowed to rebut this presumption by parol evidence of the real intention; v. int. al. Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 229.

(e) Lord Eldon, Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 515.

(f) 2 Bro. 165; see 7 Ves. 517-8; and 11 Ves. 548-9; and see Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 516; 1 Dru. & W. 120. Ellison v. Cookson, 1 Ves. Jun. 100, also reported 2 Bro. 306, not intended to be final; though Lord Thurlow, on giving his ultimate judgment, seemed disposed to decide the case on construction only, without reference to the evidence.

“When” said Lord Thurlow, “it is laid down that the evidence is admissible on one side, it must be so on the other” (a), and referring to the case of an executor as one instance of the application of this rule, he said, “it cannot be admissible for the executor to show that he was intended to have the residue beneficially as against a presumption to the contrary, and not admissible against him” (b), and this is a settled rule.

In regard to Declarations by the testator, the common evidence produced in these cases, it has been urged that a distinction should be taken between declarations made at the time of executing the will and any other time; for evidence of the intention at one time can hardly be considered as indicating what was the intention at another (c). But as regards the effect of these declarations to repel presumptions, Lord Eldon observed, “To take it in the case where the executor is a trustee for the next of kin, I fear there is no possibility of saying parol declarations, both previous and subsequent, are not admissible, though Lord Coke would hardly have been brought to let them in, as well as declarations at the time; but there is a very great difference, as also upon these marriage treaties, upon the point whether they are all alike weighty and efficacious. A declaration at the time of making the will is of more consequence than one afterwards, and a declaration after the will as to what he had done (I am speaking as to the time merely) is entitled to more credit than one before the will of what he intended to do, for that intention may very well be altered: but he knows what he has done, and is much more likely to speak correctly as to that than as to what he purposes to do; though these parol declarations are all alike admissible, whether consisting of conversations with people who have nothing to do with it, people making impertinent on the original hearing before Lord Kenyon, and 3 Bro. 61, and 2 Cox, 220, which turned on a nice question of intention, is a case where the same judge held the evidence not to be sufficient, confirming Lord Kenyon’s decree. Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 508, before Lord Eldon, is a similar case; in both the doctrine is very fully gone into, and it is fully admitted that the rule does not apply to a niece or other stranger, (see the cases, 1 Ves. Jun. 102,) unless the donor has placed himself in loco parentis.

(a) And see Baugh v. Read, 1 Ves. J. 260, 3 Bro. 192, Lord Thurlow; Mascal v. Mascal,

1 Ves. 323, Baron Powel.

(b) Coote v. Boyd, 2 Bro. 527; sup. vol. i. p. 566: “The question, whether by giving two legacies, in two instruments, the testator did not intend the legatee to take both, is a question of presumption, donec probetur in contrarium, and will let in all sorts of evidence;” Lord Thurlow: this doctrine will be observed upon hereafter; and see the observations of Lord Alvanley and Sir E. Sugden on this dictum, 1 Dr. & W. 125-6.

(c) See 7 Ves. 514; and supra, p. 246, of this volume.

inquiries, and drawing from him angry answers, or in whatever form, they are all evidence, but they are entitled to very different credit and weight according to the time and circumstances" (a). Where the evidence of conversations or declarations, in reference to a subsequent advancement, is let in, in order that it may be acted upon, it ought to show that the testator meant the previous provision to be a subsisting gift (b).

The law is well settled as regards some of the cases in which parol evidence may be admitted in cases of double portions; but as regards others, the authorities have left the law in a state of considerable uncertainty.

In the instance of a legacy first and then an advancement, that is where the first act is testamentary and the second, on the common presumption, operates by way of ademption, where the act of advancement is not accompanied by any written instrument, evidence may clearly be admitted, to show the real intention as against the presumed intention. Thus, where the father, after giving a portion by will, advances a sum of money for putting out his son as an apprentice to a trade, or as clerk in the navy office, or the like, or simply by payment of money, evidence may be admitted; for in such cases the evidence is not given to explain or affect the will, but to show what was meant by the subsequent advancement (c), which, taken by itself, affords no express declaration of intention.

Indeed, in all cases of double provisions of the same nature, even where the second provision is by a written instrument, which does not contain any indications of intention, express or implied (d), and when consequently the presumption of satisfaction arises, evidence may be received to show that the intention was that the child should take both provisions, particularly where the first is given by will, and the

(a) Lord Eldon, Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 518; and see Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 263; Powys v. Lord Mansfield, 3 My. & Cr. 374.

(b) Lord Thurlow, Ellison v. Cookson, 3 Bro. 63. A paper, written some time after, showing the state of the testator's property, but not having reference to his intention, was rejected in Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 251.

(c) Rosewell v. Bennett, 3 Atk. 77; Biggleston v. Grubb, 2 Atk. 48; Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 303; and see 2 Dr. & War. 118. Where a father had advanced money to his daughter, for which he took a bond from her, and then by his will bequeathed her a legacy, evidence was admitted, but without reference to the doctrine as to portions, to show that the bond was in effect given up by the testator, so that it ought not to be deducted from the legacy; this is rather a strong case, for the testator in his will had adverted to the advances; but the evidence was adduced simply in reference to the subsistence of the debt on the bond, Wilmot v. Woodhouse, 4 Bro. 227: the evidence, though admitted, was not considered sufficient to repel the evidence that the testator still considered the debt as a subsisting debt, he having kept the bond in his possession, so that the advance was not by way of portion but as a loan; if the bond had been given up, then the question of double portions might have arisen, but on the case as it stood no distinction was made that the debtor was a child.

(d) As to which, v. infra.

second by advancement by way of settlement during life, for the evidence in each case supports the apparent effect of the will and of the settlement against the presumption which would destroy their apparent effect (a).

Even in cases of a provision by the husband for the wife (b), evidence has been admitted, where such evidence has been considered not to affect the will itself, but only to explain the nature and purpose of the advancement inter vivos. John Mascall agreed to settle 100*l.* per annum on his intended wife, but being ill, he before marriage made his will, and left her 100*l.* per annum: the testator having recovered, the marriage was had and a settlement was executed in pursuance of the agreement. On his death, the wife having claimed both provisions, evidence was tendered to prove that the testator intended but one provision. If this were a question only on a will, said Baron Clarke, who sat for the Chancellor, no doubt but the declaration of what he intended by will could not be read; but as this is not to construe a will, but a question whether or no one is a satisfaction for the other, I should at present think that if you allow parol evidence on one side, you must on the other (c). Baron Clarke afterwards said the evidence was proper to be read; and both the instruments being left subsisting, it was impossible, he said, to come at the facts by which the court is to judge, but by being made out by evidence; nor can the party's intent be proved. He ultimately decided that the widow must make her election, "not that the gift by will was a satisfaction of the previous agreement, but was a completion of the act, and the settlement was a corroboration of the will" (d). So that although direct evidence of the intention of the testator to make the provision a substitute could not be given; yet the court having before it the will and the settlement, and each containing a provision of a similar kind, it was considered that further

(a) See Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 519; dict. of Lord Hardwicke; that having been a case of a stranger, as hereafter more particularly noticed, the evidence appears to have been introduced without any necessity: but if a stranger gives a legacy, to be applied for a particular purpose, and then simply advances money for the same purpose, that is a proper case for evidence; see 1 Ball & B. 303; 2 Bro. 166, 521; Roper, 381, 392; Hurst v. Beach, Sir J. Leach, 5 Mad. 351; Pile v. Pile, (cited in Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. p. 131); 1 Eq. Ab. 204; 1 Chan. Rep. 199: there the will was made after the settlement, the testator had declared, after making the settlement, he would add to his daughter's portions: all the decided cases where evidence has been admitted, that I have met with, or at least observed, except the last, are cases in which the will was first and the settlement afterwards.

(b) V. infra.

(c) As far as appears the only evidence that had been produced was the will, and the wife had relied upon its being uncanceled, as showing her right to both provisions.

(d) Mascal v. Mascal, 1 Ves. 334. In Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. W. 353, on an attempt being made to give evidence to show that a legacy was given to a wife exclusive of a debt then due from the testator to her, Lord Talbot held that a wife was within the general rules, and he refused to admit evidence, saying, for then the witnesses, not the testator, would make the will.

evidence might be given to show that the will was in substance what was incompletely effected by the agreement, and to show that the subsequent settlement was a complete execution of the previous agreement for which the will was a substitute, thus making the whole consistent.

If the evidence would contradict the express words of the instrument, there can be no doubt that parol evidence cannot be admitted (a), for it would be a violation of the settled rule of law. The difficulty arises where there is something in the instruments as compared with one another from which an intention may be implied.

Before entering into this specific subject, it may be useful, though at the expense of some repetition, to recur to the subject of parol evidence as affecting presumptions of law arising upon a will, or a will and codicil, taken by themselves.

Where the presumption of law in legatory cases arises upon the will taken by itself, it would seem, though the dicta are not quite uniform on this subject (b), that evidence cannot be adduced to aid the construction in any case where there is a positive rule of construction which supports the apparent effect; but the general rule is, that it may be admitted in all cases where a presumption of law is raised against the apparent effect of the instrument (c); even, it seems, where the rule of construction applies to the same legacy being repeated in the same instrument (d), for the presumption there arises against the apparent effect (e).

In the case of legacies given by two different instruments, no pre-

(a) See Brown v. Selwin, Forrest. 240, supra, vol. i. p. 567, 570. Lord Hardwicke disputed the authority of this case in Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 272; but it was affirmed by the House of Lords; and see Hurst v. Beach, 5 Mad. 359; supra, vol. i. p. 567, n. (a).

(b) "No person can read Lord Thurlow's reported judgment on this subject without observing that he is often made to contradict himself," Sir J. Leach, 5 Mad. 358; and see Sir E. Sugden's judgment in Hall v. Hill, infra.

(c) See Hurst v. Beach, 5 Mad. 360, 361; Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94; and 1 Conn. & L. 139, 140-1; and supra, vol. i. p. 566-7; and see the note as to evidence in cases of constructive trusts, 1 Conn. & L. 139.

(d) Hurst v. Beach, ubi sup. See Roper on Leg. p. 1025; but whether, according to Sir E. Sugden's doctrine as to the rules of construction, Evidence ought to be received in such case is at least doubtful: v. supra, vol. i. p. 566, and Lord Thurlow's dictum, Coote v. Boyd, 2 Bro. 521, supra, 442, and p. 446.

(e) By the Roman law, where two pecuniary legacies were given by the same will the presumption was considered to be against the legatee and he had to establish by evidence that the legacy was intended to be doubled, so that evidence might be given to repel the presumption so made against the apparent effect of the will. Lord Chancellor Bathurst, Hooley v. Hatton, note to 1 Bro. 390, notices this rule, and in the Report in 1 Dickens, 462, he states that it is the rule of the Court of Chancery, as this court in legatory matters follows the ecclesiastical courts, which adopted the Roman law on this subject, supra, vol. i. p. 194. By the Roman law, where equal sums are given in two distinct writings, both shall pass (Dig. xxii. 3, l. 12, and Gothoffred's note In Diversis Scripturis, Dig. xxx. 1, l. 4); but there nothing is said as to evidence, and on inquiry Sir J. Leach found there was no rule on the subject in the ecclesiastical courts, 5 Mad. 360.

sumption arises against the apparent effect, so that if parol evidence should be admitted, the will or the codicil itself would be construed by the evidence; whereas the rule is clear and almost universal, that a will cannot be construed by anything dehors, that is, extrinsic to the instrument (a); though, as has been observed in the former volume and will be noticed hereafter, extrinsic evidence of the circumstances under which the will was made may be gone into as to collateral points (b).

However, in the case of Coote v. Boyd (c) before cited, Lord Thurlow said he had hitherto understood the result of the cases to be that primâ facie both instruments speak for themselves, but that the probable inference that the testator meant two legacies may be repelled by circumstances; the question whether the testator did not intend the legatee to take both is a question of presumption donec probetur in contrarium, and will let in all sorts of evidence (d). Lord Thurlow therefore seems to have considered the presumption in favour of cumulation not as a rule of law, that is, a rule of construction to be applied to each instrument, but a presumption only. In the case itself Lord Thurlow, before however he had decided on the effect of the instruments themselves, let in evidence to show that the legacies were cumulative, though on the construction of the instruments they were, as he in his final judgment held, clearly repetitions. If the evidence had been sufficient to prove that it was intended that the legacies should be cumulative, the court would have been called upon to come to a decision inconsistent with the clear construction of the instruments themselves, which Lord Thurlow would hardly have done. But if the actual admission of the evidence in this case were to be taken as establishing the course to be pursued in similar cases, it would go some way to remove any doubt as to the admissibility of evidence in cases where the court has to collect the intention as to whether or not portions are to be considered as cumulative or substitutional where there are differences in the two provisions, affording a precedent for evidence being introduced to repel the presumption which arises from

(a) Lord Cowper, in Dyose v. Dyose, 1 P. Williams, 305, looked to the evidence of the state of the testator's property at the time of making his will to construe what was the intent; not to ascertain what was the particular property given (as to which it may be received, see vol. i. p. 556), but to determine the interests which the parties took under the will, on the assumption that the testator at the time of making his will must have known what his residue would amount to, and that he meant the surplus as a legacy to his eldest son; but this case may be considered as overruled. Fonnereau v. Poyntz, 1 Bro. p. 478; Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 466; and see Herbert v. Reid, 16 Ves. 486.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 557.

(c) V. supra, p. 440.

(d) 2 Bro. 526-8; but v. sup. vol. i. p. 567; and Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, there cited.

such differences; though as Lord Thurlow's doctrine was applied to two testamentary instruments which make but one will, it would not directly affect the case of a will and a settlement.

But the accuracy of the report in regard to Lord Thurlow's doctrine, and the propriety of the rule laid down, if accurately reported, have been questioned. Lord Alvanley, in Osborne v. Duke of Leeds (a), examined the question of admissibility of evidence, where the court on construction applies a positive rule. The question in the case before the court was somewhat similar to that in Cooté v. Boyd, namely, whether legacies given by the will and codicils were cumulative. Lord Alvanley held in that case upon the construction that the legacies were not cumulative, as Lord Thurlow had done in Cooté v. Boyd, and therefore that there was no occasion to resort to the parol evidence which was tendered to establish the same conclusion. His Lordship, referring to Cooté v. Boyd, remarked that Lord Thurlow had admitted evidence on that side on which, in Lord Alvanley's judgment, it was not necessary; namely, for the side in whose favour the presumption arose (b). Lord Alvanley seems clearly to have been of opinion that evidence ought not to be received to induce the court to decide against the conclusion of law. If, said his Lordship, it is an established rule that two legacies are cumulative if given by two instruments, it would be a violation of it to admit evidence to raise a presumption against it (c). Sir E. Sugden also, in noticing Cooté v. Boyd and other cases on this subject, observes (d), To admit parol evidence to raise a presumption against a positive rule of construction is to construe a will by parol evidence (e).

(a) 5 Ves. 369, 380.

(b) But is this a correct view of the case? v. sup. p. 446; Cooté v. Boyd, it is to be observed, was a case of father and child.

Some of the cases had previously gone to the extent of allowing parol evidence to be received, to fortify a presumption of law in the first instance, no evidence having been tendered to repel the presumption, as in Rosewell v. Bennett, 3 Atk. 77; and Lord Hardwicke cites three cases in which such evidence had been received (p. 78), but the only objection taken was that it was against the Statute of Frauds; see also Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 305; and see Plunkett v. Lewis, add. note, No. 3.

(c) In Hurst v. Beach, 5 Mad. 351, and Guy v. Sharp, 1 My. & K. 589, Lord Brougham and Sir J. Leach affirmed this principle, and it is strongly supported by Sir E. Sugden; v. sup. vol. i. p. 567.

(d) 1 Dr. & W. 126; et v. sup. vol. i. 567.

(e) In Shudal v. Jekyl, 2 Atk. ubi sup., Lord Hardwicke, referring to previous cases (p. 518), admitted evidence which was offered to show that an advancement by a stranger was intended to be a satisfaction of a legacy previously given: when it was established that this case was to be considered as that of a stranger, and not one of double portions, the reference to the evidence appears to have been open to objection, for, by the general rule of law, every legacy by a stranger implies bounty, and a subsequent gift, without any expression of intent to adeem,—as Lord Hardwicke laid down in the same case,—ought not to be considered as a substitution for a prior gift. It is however to be observed that Lord Hardwicke only referred to the evidence to show that it imported quite the contrary of what it was intended to support, which was that the testator intended the second gift as a satisfaction; see 2 Atk. 518; v. inf. add. note, No. 3.

Perhaps, therefore, it may be assumed in all cases relating to legatory matters, as a general rule, that where the application of the ordinary rules of construction will give to a single instrument or to the several instruments, where there are more than one, their apparent effect, no extrinsic evidence ought to be introduced on the one side or on the other; if evidence is to be admitted in the case of a repetition of the same legacy in the same instrument, it is because the rule of construction, or rather the presumption of law against both being payable, is against the apparent effect of the instrument.

In the cases last observed upon, the objection to the reception of parol evidence was that it was sought to be introduced to affect the construction of the words in a testamentary act, whether by will alone or by a will and codicil, which are so far one that they are comprized in one probate, and in fact make one testament. But the presumption against double portions arising upon distinct acts, as upon a will and a settlement, neither referring to the other, does not arise upon either of the instruments taken alone, each of itself gives a single portion only; it is only by going out of the instrument and giving evidence of the existence and contents of the other, which is of a distinct nature and character, that the presumption arises, so that it is, as Lord Thurlow first called it, rather a presumption of evidence (a) than a rule or presumption of law, and accordingly this primary presumption may, as we have seen, be met by evidence of intention. But another presumption arises where there are such differences between the two provisions (which fact also can only be ascertained by going out of each of the instruments to examine the other) that the court will presume that the one was not intended to be substitutional for the other; so that the presumption which would have arisen from the portions, if ejusdem generis, is repelled or extinguished upon the face of the two instruments. The question arises whether in such case evidence of the actual intention can be given as against the apparent effect of the two instruments.

In order to ascertain how this question stands on the authorities connected with this subject, I proceed to give a short analysis of them with short explanatory remarks, reserving the general conclusion till the cases have been laid before the reader.

A bill was filed by a husband in right of his wife for a legacy of 500*l.* given to her by her father; the father had advanced an equal sum to the husband as a portion; parol evidence was admitted to show that the 500*l.* was given as a satisfaction of the legacy, and the bill was dismissed (a). The case is very shortly reported, but it is to be observed that the only circumstance which prevented the same result upon the mere presumption of law was that the 500*l.* was given to the husband; but evidence being given of that fact in order to raise the presumption that they were distinct gifts, evidence on the other side was let in to prove the actual intention; in this case, however, the presumption was raised and repelled upon parol evidence only, which was addressed to explain the nature of the advance, and to show that though the legacy was admitted to have been given, it was in fact adeemed, therefore in this case the question above adverted to did not pointedly arise.

(a) V. supra, p. 431, n. (f); and see the dictum of Lord Eldon, 7 Ves. 516.

In the case of Hartopp v. Hartopp (b), before Sir W. Grant, 3500*l.* was provided by will, and afterwards the same sum by a settlement. There were what were considered slight differences only, so that the presumption of satisfaction arose (c). To meet this, it was contended that the settlement was the act of the son as well as the father, so as to exclude the case from the rule; on the other hand, parol evidence was tendered of the actual intention that the second provision was to be a substitute for the first. Sir W. Grant doubted whether it was strictly proper in the first instance to give evidence of intention to substitute one provision for another, but he held that extrinsic evidence might be read to show from whom the consideration moved, provided it did not contradict the deed; and on the evidence to this point Sir W. Grant held that the father was really the author of both provisions; and having thus brought the case to one within the ordinary rules, he excluded the evidence of intention, and decided on the ordinary presumption that the first provision was satisfied by the second (d). This case would seem to establish that where evidence is legitimately introduced to prove that one of the gifts is not a portion, so that the presumption of law does not arise, it is not competent to adduce evidence directly to prove that the one was intended to be and he dismissed the bill for the legacy. The Master of the Rolls, it is presumed, was referring to the laxity with which evidence of intention was received by the Roman law, which was generally followed in the Ecclesiastical Courts: v. supra, vol. i. p. 574, n. (4).

(a) Bigglestone v. Grubb, 2 Atk. 48: the bill was dismissed, and with costs, because the husband had refused a fair offer of accommodation. In 2 Vernon, 646, there is a case (Chapman v. Salt,) to the following effect:—Mrs. Salt devised 50*l.* to Mary, the wife of Leonard Chapman; afterwards the testatrix gave a note to Leonard Chapman, the husband, for 50*l.*, payable on demand. Evidence was tendered to show that the note was intended as a satisfaction: the judgment, as reported, is this:—“Master of the Rolls: a testamentary question; evidence may be received;”

(b) 17 Ves. 184.

(c) P. 191.

(d) If the evidence so let in had established that one of the provisions was not a portion, of course a question similar to that in Shudal v. Jekyll, (supra,) would have arisen.

substitutional, or, in other words, to do directly what the presumption would have effected if both had been portions.

The cases which follow directly affect the question now under consideration. In Weall v. Rice (a), which was the case of a settlement first (b) and then a will, the strongest case against the introduction of parol evidence, Sir John Leach is reported to have said, speaking of portions, "Where the two provisions are of the same nature, or there are but slight differences, the two instruments" (that is, together) "afford intrinsic evidence against a double provision—where the two provisions are of a different nature the two instruments afford intrinsic evidence against a double portion, but in either case extrinsic evidence is admissible of the real intention of the testator" (c). The case itself, which has before been referred to, turned upon whether the differences in the limitations in the settlement and those in the will were substantial. Sir J. Leach held that they were not, so that the primary presumption prevailed, and no objection is made to the decision in this case. But the importance of the case, in reference to the present subject, is in the dictum it contains, which seems to import that evidence of intention may be given in all cases and by either party where there are differences in the two instruments, whether those differences are considered to be substantial or the contrary, and whether the will be first or last.

In Booker v. Allen, also before Sir J. Leach, where the will was first and the settlement afterwards, that learned judge was of opinion that the differences were such that the provisions given by the two instruments could hardly be considered as substantially of the same nature so as to afford intrinsic evidence against a double provision; but, acting upon the principle of the dictum in the last-cited case, he admitted extrinsic evidence of the intention, which evidence, in his opinion, excluded the intention of a double provision; and accordingly he declared that the provision by the settlement was a satisfaction (d). So that the apparent effect of the two instruments taken separately,

(a) 2 Russ. & M. 251, 263.

(b) In a settlement it is to be remarked the testator cannot allude to his will; where the will follows the settlement he may advert to it in his will, and his not doing it is something of an argument that he did not mean to interfere with it; v. sup. p. 427.

(c) Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 251; this doctrine is cited with approbation by Lord Langdale, in Lord Glengall v. Barnard, 1 Keen, 793; et v. supra, vol. i. p. 568-9: his Lordship, in another case, in the same volume, (Clementson v. Gandy, p. 316,) refused to admit parol evidence to raise a case of election upon a will, saying, "Parol evidence is not to be resorted to, except for the purpose of proving facts which make intelligible something in the will which, without the aid of extrinsic evidence, cannot be understood:" the instance referred to is perhaps another exception; but the presumption of satisfaction arises upon an extraneous fact, which must be looked to—the fact on which the case of election is sought to be made out is not necessarily brought before the court.

(d) Booker v. Allen, 2 Russ. & M. 270.

and on a comparison of their respective contents, was defeated by extrinsic evidence: this is a direct decision upon the point where the evidence applies to a subsequent settlement (a).

In the case of Lloyd v. Harvey, before the same judge, the testator entered into a bond to pay 5000*l.* to the trustees of his daughter Louisa's settlement within 6 months after his death. By the settlement the 5000*l.* was secured for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children. The testator afterwards by his will, after reciting the bond and that he had paid 2000*l.* part of it, gave to his daughter 5000*l.* in addition to what he had secured on her marriage, without declaring any trusts of that sum; he then recited the provision he had made for one of his other daughters, and gave a legacy to each of his other daughters. Afterwards the testator, reciting that he was desirous of making a further provision for his daughter Louisa (b) and her husband, by deed, dated 18th June, 1823, indorsed on the settlement, entered into a covenant to pay within 6 months after his death 5000*l.* to the trustees of the settlement. The testator then made a codicil, in which he declared that the portions he had secured to his daughters Maria and Emma were to be considered as in lieu of the legacies given to them by his will. The testator's daughter Louisa claimed the 5000*l.* mentioned in the settlement of the 18th June, 1823, and also the legacy of 5000*l.* given by the will. Evidence of conversations was tendered to show that the testator intended that each of his daughters should be provided for equally, and that the plaintiff, Mrs. Lloyd, should have no preference, which intention would have been defeated if the claim had succeeded. Sir J. Leach, referring to Trimmer v. Bayne (c), considered that it was questionable whether the difference in the interests under the two provisions would defeat the primary presumption; but he admitted the evidence, and upon it he decided that it was not the intention of the testator to make a double provision for his daughter Louisa (d): here again the apparent effect was defeated by parol evidence (e).

(a) Sir E. Sugden, following the dicta of previous judges, does not object to the admission of the evidence in this case, it being used to explain the act inter vivos, though in writing, and not directly to affect the will; but as it is to affect the settlement, which is also in writing, I confess that I do not see the ground of the distinction; see 1 Conn. & L. 155.

(b) See p. 312 of the report.

(c) Sup. p. 443.

(d) Lloyd v. Harvey, 2 R. & M. 316. Sir J. Leach, in that case, going beyond his dictum in Weall v. Rice, said, "The evidence of Miss Perceval appears to me admissible, not upon the ground of fortifying or repelling a presumption, but as extrinsic evidence that it was not the intention of the testator to make a double provision for his daughter Louisa." On this Sir E. Sugden says, "According to that, without reference to any rule, extrinsic evidence may be received in all cases in order to construe a will; I do not myself see therefore how it is possible to maintain the rule there laid down." 1 Conn. & L. 156. It is to be observed that Sir J. Leach considered that the codicil rather confirmed the presumption that the testator intended equality.

(e) It is to be observed that Hurst v. Beach

These decisions, as has been observed in the former volume and in the preceding notes, were lately reviewed by Sir Edward Sugden in the case of Hall v. Hill (a). In that case one Boyle Hall executed a bond for securing to John Hall 800*l.*, payable by instalments, and executed a warrant of attorney to confess judgment on the bond; the 800*l.* was for a marriage portion for Boyle Hall's daughter Charlotte. John Hall, on the same day, executed a bond to the trustees of the settlement in the same amount, and by the settlement, that sum was secured for the husband, the wife, and the children of the marriage. Boyle Hall then by will made various devises and bequests to his other children, and gave "to his daughter Charlotte Hall, otherwise Hill, the sum of 800*l.*:" the question was whether this 800*l.* was a satisfaction for the 800*l.* secured to the husband by the bond. Parol evidence was tendered which would have proved, conclusively, that the 800*l.* given by the will was intended as a satisfaction, but Sir E. Sugden, Lord C., rejected it; and though he considered the claim as against honesty, he decided that the legacy could not be considered as a satisfaction, even if the bond were to be treated as a proper portion; because the husband gave a bond to secure the money, and the legacy to the daughter could not be a satisfaction for the husband's bond, nor could it be of the father's bond, for the bond by the father was in consideration of the bond by the husband to the trustee; and even considering it as a debt in the nature of a portion, this security to the son-in-law on the marriage could not be satisfied by a legacy to the wife of the same sum. There the apparent intent was supported, and evidence of intention to the contrary, which probably Sir J. Leach would have admitted, was rejected (b).

There is a case before Lord Eldon (c), which is observed upon by Sir E. Sugden in the last case, which, though not directly in point, in principle very materially affects the question now under discussion. In that case the question was whether a legacy of 1000*l.* was to be considered as a satisfaction of a debt for wages to the amount of 125*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Lord Eldon said, that the presumption, not upon the rule of law (which holds that a debt is satisfied by a legacy to an equal or greater amount, and equally beneficial (d),) but upon the whole will, was that the legacy in question was not in addition to wages, the testator having expressly directed that another legacy to a servant was not referred to by Sir J. Leach in any of these cases; see 1 Conn. & L. 137.

(a) 1 Dr. & War. p. 94; 1 Conn. & L. 137, et seq.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 569.

(c) Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. 546.

(d) See int. al. Brown v. Dawson, Prec. Ch. 240. A gift of an unliquidated residue is not a satisfaction, Devese v. Pontet, 1 Cox, p. 192; Prec. Ch. p. 240, n.

should be in addition to wages. Evidence of declarations by the testator was tendered to establish that the legacy was intended to be in addition to the debt for wages, the reception of which was objected to. On the first hearing, Lord Eldon said the question turned on this point, whether the inference from the express direction that the other legacy should be in addition to wages was strong enough to require a decision, that as to the legacy, the subject of the dispute, the addition to wages was upon the face of the will necessarily excluded. "If it is not," said his Lordship, "then upon the rule as to the satisfaction of portions, &c., this evidence may be admitted; but if admitted, it was," said his Lordship, "to be looked at with great attention to see whether the necessary effect is to beat down the fair inference from the written context, which is the most solemn declaration he can make, particularly as the parol declaration is not cotemporary." At a subsequent period Lord Eldon, on the authorities—particularly Debeze v. Mann (a), which his Lordship stated from his own note—admitted the evidence, and held on that evidence that the legacy was in addition (b). It is to be presumed that the evidence was admitted, because his Lordship did not consider that the inference was strong enough to require a decision that the legacy was not in addition; but even then there was the presumption of law that the debt was satisfied; so that this case, if unimpeached, would go far to establish the admission of evidence of intention in all cases of satisfaction, whether arising upon the rule of presumption or upon the words of the will, where the testator has not expressly declared that the particular gift by will is intended to be a satisfaction for the antecedent debt, and would be a strong authority for the rule laid down and acted upon by Sir J. Leach in the case of double portions, but this is one of the cases which Sir E. Sugden considers as not having been rightly decided (c).

The question appears to resolve itself into this, Is the rule that differences in the nature of two provisions shall be considered as excluding the ordinary presumption of satisfaction a positive rule of construction or only a rule of presumption? If the former, evidence must be excluded; but if the latter only, then evidence may be admitted, either to repel or to fortify the presumption, for then the evidence

(a) Supra, p. 439. Lord Talbot, in Fowler v. Fowler (3 P. W. 354; supra, p. 442, which was also cited by Lord Eldon), had held that even the presumption of satisfaction, arising upon the technical rule of law in the case of a debt and subsequent legacy, could not be repelled by evidence; in the case before Lord

Eldon evidence was received, not in respect of any presumption, but against the construction, which was in accordance with the presumption of law, without reference to any mere technical rule.

(b) 11 Ves. 549.

(c) 1 Conn. & L. 148.

that will be let in on the other side in the latter case will only be such as might have been given directly to repel the presumption. That it is not a rule of law, but a presumption of evidence only, may be contended upon the ground that it does not arise upon the instrument itself, but upon the evidence (a) afforded by a comparison of the provisions in an instrument foreign to that the effect of which has to be determined : the construction of the two instruments taken by themselves is not affected by the evidence, each of them is silent (b) as to what is to be the effect of the one upon the other, the apparent effect of the two is broken down in the ordinary case by the primary presumption, which is raised by resorting to an extraneous fact ; the rule of presumption that the two provisions are so different in their nature as that the one shall not be considered as an ademption or a satisfaction of the other is founded on something dehors the instrument—that is, on extrinsic evidence—equally as is the primary presumption, where there is no such difference. If the conclusion upon the difference of the provisions is arrived at by the introduction of evidence, as it would seem to be, for setting one instrument against the other is introducing extrinsic evidence as to each ; it will follow, according to the ordinary rule, that evidence on the other side ought to be let in ; and though the letting in such evidence goes to defeat the apparent effect of the instrument as ascertained by the presumption arising from the established differences, the direct evidence of intention in this respect does no more than is effected by the primary presumption in cases where there are no differences. But with such high authorities on each side we must wait for a final decision on the subject.

The effect of the presumption, especially when coupled with evidence of the intention as to the act of advancement, may have the effect of extinguishing the legacy, so as to deprive those to whom it may have been given over, on certain contingent events, of the benefit originally intended for them. A testatrix gave to her dear adopted child, Lydia Mosse (to whom she stood in loco parentis), if residing with her at her death or not permanently absent, 10,000*l.* money, and if she should have no children at her death, the testatrix wished that the property she had so left should be given to charity. The testatrix afterwards transferred 12,000*l.* Consols into the joint names of herself and Lydia Mosse ; the question was whether this was an ademption or

(a) V. supra, p. 431, and p. 448.

(b) The case before Lord Eldon, Wallace v. Pomfret, supra, p. 452, would go to the extent of letting in evidence when the instrument itself would afford the means for its construction, where there is no express declaration.

satisfaction of the 10,000*l.* legacy. There was evidence to show that the transfer had been made to save the legacy duty on the legacy—the testatrix had also erased the legacy, but the erasure was not introduced into the probate, not being attested. It was held by the V. C. Knight Bruce that the legacy was absolutely adeemed, so that Lydia Mosse took the 12,000*l.* stock absolutely, and the legacy was extinguished both as regards her and the intended charitable purpose (a).

Where a portion is secured by settlement, and a portion in satisfaction is subsequently given, the child has the option to take one or the other at his pleasure. In Copley v. Copley (b) a daughter, under the settlement of the grandfather, was entitled to 5000*l.* charged on the father's estate. The father after the grandfather's death charged his estate with 8000*l.* for his daughter, and he by will devised his estates to the defendant, charged with 8000*l.* for his daughter, without saying whether it was to be in satisfaction of the portion she was entitled to by the settlement. Although the three provisions were given in different modes as to enjoyment, Lord Harcourt decreed that the daughter was entitled to only one sum of 8000*l.*; but that she might make her election under which instrument she would take. Where a benefit is given to a child in satisfaction of an obligation of the father under a covenant in a settlement or bond, if the child elects to take under the settlement or other obligation, she must give up all the benefits she would take under the will (c); such a case does not admit of the doctrine of compensation being applied, as in the ordinary cases of election (d).

(a) Twining v. Powell, 2 Coll. 263. It will be observed that the parol evidence was here admitted, not to raise or fortify the presumption, but to explain the act of advancement; v. supra, vol. i. p. 568, note (c); and see Sanford v. Sanford, 1 De G. & Sm. 67.

(b) Cited Mosely, pp. 108, 111, reported 1 P. W. 146, (2 Roper on Leg. 70); Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 516.

(c) Graves v. Boyle, 1 Atk. 509. In this case the testator, on his daughter's marriage, had given a bond to leave, at his death, 5000*l.* amongst her younger children; by will he created a term of years in his real estates, in trust to apply the rents for the maintenance of the children of his daughter till they came of age; he then gave his personal estate, in trust for the benefit of his wife for life, and on her death to pay 1500*l.* to one daughter, 3500*l.* to the others, and he declared that the legacies so given to his daughters' children should go in satisfaction of his bond. Lord Hardwicke, on the authority of Jenkins v. Jenkins, before Lord Talbot, and Sheppard v. Phillips, there cited, decided that if the plaintiff (a daughter) insisted on the bond, she "must give up all benefit under the will;" his Lordship at first had entertained doubts whether she was bound to give up the interest given her by the will in the real estate, but ultimately decided as above.

(d) As to election in such case by a married woman, see Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 521, 1 Rop. H. and W. 30, et v. infra, Election.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

The Lord Chancellor delivered judgment, in the case of Lady E. Thynne v. The Earl of Glengall, Aug. 21, 1848, and commenced by stating, that, as to Lord Glengall's appeal, the decree appealed from was clearly right; that there was no concluded contract at the time of Mr. Mellish's death, and no part performance, even if there had been a concluded contract; that the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, the result of which, supposing the decree of the Master of the Rolls upon the appeal of Lady Edward Thynne to be affirmed, would be to divide the property equally between the two daughters of Mr. Mellish, which was certainly his object and intention. His Lordship, after observing that no case could more satisfactorily exemplify the wisdom of the rule of equity against double portions than the present, proceeded as follows:—

“Before I consider the authorities as applicable to the facts of this case, I think it right to throw out of consideration all the cases which have been cited in which questions have arisen as to legacies being, or not being, held to be in satisfaction of debts; for, however similar the two cases may, at first sight, appear to be, the rules of equity as applicable to each are, in fact, quite different. Equity leans in favour of a legacy being taken in satisfaction of a portion; but not so in the case of a debt, the feeling being, that it is improbable that a parent intends a double portion for one child to the prejudice of other children. In the case of debt, therefore, small circumstances of difference between the debt and the legacy are held to negative any presumption of satisfaction; but, in the case of portions, small circumstances are disregarded. Thus it is that a smaller legacy is not held to be in satisfaction of part of a larger debt, but it may be satisfaction pro tanto of a portion. So also a gift of the whole or part of the residue cannot be considered as satisfaction of a debt; because the amount being uncertain, it may prove to be less than the debt. In considering, then, whether this rule applies to portions, the reason of the rule, as applicable to debts, must not be lost sight of; because, as a portion may be satisfied pro tanto by a smaller legacy, the reason given for the rule, as applicable to debts, cannot apply as to portions; and, on the contrary, as the residue must be supposed to have been considered by the testator as of some value, it would appear, upon principle, that it ought to be considered as satisfaction altogether, or pro tanto according to the amount. For why should not a sum given as residue have the same effect upon a larger portion as the same sum given as a money legacy? All reasoning seems to be in favour of satisfaction; but the point must be decided by the authorities. Blandy v. Widmore (1 P. Wms. 324) was a case of intention and performance; so was Lee v. Cox, (3 Atk. 419, and 1 Ves. Sen. 1); so was Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, (1 Swanst. 211). If there are no cases deciding this question in terms, there are several from which the rule of the court may be deduced. In Linguen v. Souray, (Prec. Ch. 400,) a provision for a wife contracted for, of a life interest in 1400*l.*, was held to be satisfied by a gift by will of the residue, the interest from which exceeded the interest upon the 1400*l.* In Barret v. Beckford, (1 Ves. Sen. 519,) the gift of the residue was held not to be a satisfaction, upon the ground of the claim being a debt; and Lord Hardwicke drew the distinction between that case and double portions, seeming to imply, that, in the latter case, the decision would be otherwise. In Rickman v. Morgan (1 Bro. C. C. 63, and 2 Bro. C. C. 394), there was a provision of 8000*l.* in the settlement, with a condition as to deducting any advancement which the father might make; and Lord Thurlow says, in 2 Brown, that it would be ridiculous to say that a gift of residue would not be satisfaction for the 8000*l.*; that it would be strange to say that the gift of the whole residue, being uncertain, shall not be a satisfaction when a moiety of that residue given as a legacy will. In Weall v. Rice, (2 Russ. & My. 251,) Sir John Leach lays down the rule as to portions generally, without making any distinction between money legacies and gifts of residue. It is satisfactory to find the doctrine in these cases so consistent with, and so conformable to, principle; they leave no doubt as to the general rule. It now remains to consider how far the facts of the present case bring it within that general rule. The testator was here bound after his death to transfer to four trustees (two of whom are also trustees and executors under the will) 66,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* £3 per Cents., to be by them held upon the trusts of the settlement made on the marriage of his daughter, the appellant, and by his will he gave to the same two individuals half the residue of his personal estate for the benefit of the appellant, Lady Edward Thynne, and her children, the difference between the two being, that, by the settlement, the appointment amongst the children was to be joint by the husband and wife, and under the will by the wife alone, and that under the settlement the children of the marriage were the only objects of the appointment, and under the will the children of the daughter generally—differences which, according to the rule applicable to double portions, do not negative the presumption of satisfaction. The case of election has been disposed of by the Master's report. It appears to me, therefore, that the Master of the Rolls came to the right conclusion, and that both the appeals ought to be dismissed, with costs," xii. Jur. 807.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

As to satisfied Terms created for securing Portions, &c.

It has already been stated (see vol. i. p. 516), that by analogy to the case of mortgages, when terms for years were created for securing payment of jointures, portions for children, or for any other purpose, they did not without a special provision for this purpose determine by the performance of the trust for which they were raised; but the owner of the fee was entitled to the beneficial interest. It has also been stated that satisfied terms have been extinguished; but that purchasers are entitled under certain circumstances to the same benefit as if the terms affecting the estate purchased had been assigned for his protection. In Doe dem. Cadwalader v. Price, xi. Jur. 131, (see particularly p. 133-4,) Mr. Baron Parke said, the act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, threw on the courts of law the duty of a Court of Equity, without the adequate machinery (Mr. Williams's Treatise, p. 133, had been quoted); but he said this was not the only case in which the courts of law had to judge of equitable as well as legal rights, as in questions of Title, assignees of bankrupts and insolvents taking all property and rights both at law and in Equity. The defendant in the case above cited did not want the protection of the term, but if he had, the judges doubted whether he must not have gone to the Court of Chancery for relief, or have applied to the Court of Exchequer to strike out of the declaration the demise in the name of his trustee, ibid. 131.

It had been settled, though for some time controverted, that a dowress should have the benefit of a satisfied term against the heir, 2 Fonbl. 112; but that a purchaser, with notice of the wife's title to dower, by obtaining an actual assignment of a satisfied term, might defeat the title of a dowress, 2 Fonbl. 113, note (q), Maundrell v. Maundrell, 7 Ves. 567, 10 Ves. 246. Sir Edward Sugden observes in regard to the act above quoted, that the protection given is limited, for that it does not give such protection as a further assignment of it for a purchaser would have conferred, Vend. and P. 651. A trustee of a term assigned to attend the inheritance more than 20 years before the passing of the stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 27, (Stat. of Limitations of Actions, &c.) is within the 3rd section of that statute, Doe v. Phillips, xi. Jur. 692. "The doctrine of adverse possession," said Mr. J. Patteson, ibid. 693, "is at an end." And see on this subject xi. Jurist, part ii. p. 310.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.

Satisfaction of Father's Obligation by Subsequent Settlement—V. sup. pp. 428, 436.

In the late case of Plunket v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 324, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram examined the cases where a particular consideration has been expressed in one of the latter instruments, from which it has been argued that the father could not have intended that the portion given should be taken as a satisfaction of his previous obligation towards his child; particularly Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 521, where Lord Hardwicke went fully into the law upon the broad principle of satisfaction; Seed v. Bradford, 1 Ves. 501, and Chave v. Farrant, before Sir W. Grant, 18 Ves. 8. "They clearly decide," said his Honour, "that neither the expression of natural love and affection as the reason of the gift, nor the ignorance of the husband of his wife's rights, will necessarily prevent the application of the doctrine of satisfaction," though the expression of natural affection may have some weight, 3 Hare, p. 326. The principal authorities on the subject of satisfaction by subsequent advancement are cited, p. 321. His Honour observed, that where the advance was exactly equal in amount to the debt, the expression of natural affection as the motive of the subsequent advance might be very material, at least in conjunction with other circumstances, as shewing that it could not have been made in satisfaction of the debt; but it would rather appear that his Honour would have let in evidence even in such a case. In the same case a point was made that the husband became a purchaser under the settlement by agreeing to settle his own estate; to this his Honour replied: The observation of the Vice-Chancellor of England in Wharton v. Lord Durham, (5 Simons, 314,) is, that where the husband in consideration of his wife's portion settles his own estate, that is the same thing, quoad satisfaction, as if the daughter's fortune were settled, ibid. p. 327.

In this case also his Honour examines the distinction supposed to have been taken by Lord Lyndhurst in Wharton v. Lord Durham, 10 Bli. N. S. 546-7; S. C. 3 Cl. & Fin. 156, that "it was necessary as far as related to this debt (the 5000*l.*, v. supra, p. 440, note (d),) that the provision in satisfaction of it should be in terms expressed, but as far as related to the provision by the will it was not necessary, because that effect is produced by law;" which his Honour considered as applicable to that particular case, and that it was not to be taken as a general rule; V. ibid. p. 328-9. His Honour also held in this case that advances made simpliciter to the son, whilst the trust stock, to a portion of which he was entitled, yet stood in the name of the trustee, and therefore, before any debt in that respect had arisen as against the father, could not constitute any answer to the claim of the representatives of the son for his share in the proceeds of the stock, ibid. 330. There was another point as to the son's share, arising out of the special circumstances, ibid. p. 329.

His Honour recognized the statement of the general rule, as to satisfaction by subsequent advance, 2 Roper on Legacies, p. 57, as correct; but said that it was a presumption that might be rebutted by evidence, ibid. 324, and his Honour held, p. 329, that evidence was clearly admissible to support the presumption, that is, as I presume, where necessary—that is where there are any circumstances that primâ facie would repel the presumption, v. sup. p. 447.

SECTION VIII.—Gifts to Parents and others for the Maintenance of Children—Where the Father, though of ability to maintain his Children, may apply the Income of their Property for that Purpose—Undefined Interests given to Parents and Children—General Rules as to Maintenance.

General Rules.

Maintenance and Education and Bringing-up generally have reference to Minority.

But Maintenance and Education may extend for Life.

Soames v. Martin, 10 Sim.

Maintenance directed to be paid to the Father for his Life to maintain his Children.

Child forisfamiliated.

Interest of Legacy or Portion given for Maintenance, from what Time it runs.

Trustees not authorized to break in upon Capital, sometimes done by the Court.

State of the Family will be considered.

Maintenance given though not apparently authorized by Will.

Bequest in Trust for Infant, to Apprentice him, absolute.

Annual Sum given for Maintenance apportionable.

Discretion given to Trustees in some cases exercised by the Court.

Generally Fund may be paid to the Trustee.

Gifts to Parents for the Maintenance of Children, and to Parents and Children for undefined Interests.

Gift to Wife for the Support of herself and her Family.

Other Instances.

Where Property is given to one, at his Disposal for the Maintenance of Children, he may sell.

Surplus.

Where Children are the Occasions of Bounty only, not the Objects.

Rule that the Father is bound to maintain his Children.

Cases in which he may insist on having the Interest, &c. of Child's Property applied for that Purpose.

Stocken v. Stocken.

Thompson v. Griffin.

Implied Absolute Gift to Donee in particular Cases.

Where Children will be entitled in Remainder.

In Joint Tenancy—Difference between Gift and Contract.

As Tenants in Common.

Where Children take by Substitution.

Question as to whether the Parents and Children are to take per capita or per stirpes.

SOME of the general rules of the court in regard to maintenance have already been incidentally adverted to, and the doctrine in regard to maintenance out of the interest of a portion or legacy directed to be accumulated has been particularly noticed (a). It is now proposed to enter upon the leading doctrines relating to maintenance provided by settlements and wills.

The words maintenance, education, and bringing up, standing together, have reference to minority (b). But where the interest of a fund is directed to be applied for the maintenance and education of a person, though at the time an infant, he is, generally speaking, entitled to the interest during his life (c). In Soames v. Martin (d), a testator directed the interest of a sum of money to be applied for the maintenance and education of his nephew (who was an infant), the testator had made no disposition of the capital. The Vice-Chancellor of England, remarking on the absence of the words "bringing up," held that the child was entitled to maintenance during his life. "All persons," said the Vice-Chancellor, "who have attained 21 are not in a state in which they do not want education, and there is no period of life in which a person does not require maintenance." Education includes maintenance (e). Where maintenance is given during minority, as a general rule it does not cease on the marriage of the child (f).

Where a fund was given to the children born and to be born of a particular person, to be divided between them at 21 or marriage, and the dividends were directed to be paid to the father during his life, and after his death then, during the minority of each child, that the dividends should be retained by the trustees, and should be applied by him or them as the events should happen, in the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of each child in such proportion, &c., as the father, or, as the event might happen, the trustees should think fit: it was held that this was a trust in the father of the income for the maintenance, &c., of his children, which trust did not terminate upon all or any of his children attaining majority during his life: that he might apply the income to the support of the children without reference to his ability to maintain them: and that on any child coming of age he could not claim his distributive share of the capital, not only because it was not clear that after-born children would be entitled to participate, but because the father would be justified, if circumstances called for it, in distributing the income unequally as between the different children (g).

(a) The general rules are stated supra, p. 185. The doctrine, where there is a trust for accumulation, and where there is a gift over, is stated, pp. 186-190.

(b) Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

(c) Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 297; and see Alexander v. McCulloch, 1 Cox, 391.

(d) 10 Sim. 287, and see Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293, 297; Webb v. Kelly, 9 Sim. 469.

(e) Foley v. Parry, 5 Sim. 145.

(f) Conolly v. Farrell, 8 Beav. 347.

(g) Bateman v. Foster, 1 Coll. 118, 126; and see Langmore v. Elcum, 2 Yo. & Coll.

Where the income of property is given to the mother for the maintenance of herself and her children, what is intended is that she shall receive the whole income, and shall maintain the children out of it so long as they form part of her family; but when they are forisfami-liated, as by marriage, they lose the right to maintenance (a).

Where provision for the maintenance of infants is made by a parent or a person in loco parentis, as before noticed, interest will be given from the testator's death (b), unless a contrary intention is shown, as where the parent has by his will made a distinct provision for the maintenance of the child (c): and where a legacy is given to children, provided they shall attain 21, with a gift over if the children should die before 21, if the testator appoints trustees and guardians to the children, particularly with a request that they will attend to their education, the children will be entitled to the interest of the legacies for their maintenance and education until they attain 21, or die under that age (d).

It has been stated to be the settled rule of the court that trustees for infants shall not be permitted of their own authority to break in upon the capital for the maintenance of the infants; the court itself has very rarely broken in upon the capital for the mere purpose of maintenance, though frequently for advancement (e), where the property has been small (f): but Sir A. Hart held, treating the case of Walker v. Wetherell as overruled, that whatever act done by the trustee spontaneously was such as the court would have ordered to be done, that is rightly done, and will be sustained (g).

As the court will allot maintenance for the infant out of the produce of his estate, it will also in so doing consider the circumstances

C. C. 363, 370; there the trust was to permit the wife to receive the rents, &c. for her own use and for the maintenance, &c. of the testator's children, "so long as she shall continue my widow:" it was held that these words applied equally to the duration of the trusts for maintenance as to the interest of the widow; and see Sheppard v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 395.—"What," said the Vice-Chancellor, in the first-cited case, "I should do, if the father were to commit a breach of trust or of duty towards either of the children, it is unnecessary to say."

(a) Bowden v. Laing, (1844,) 14 Sim. 115, where most of the material antecedent cases are cited.

(b) Supra, p. 186, and see Hill v. Hill, 3 Ves. & B. 183, a case of grandchildren; they were described as infant orphans, and some of them illegitimate, Leslie v. Leslie, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 1; also a case of grandchildren, and see Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 101; Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 10; Raven v. Waite is also in 1 Wils. C. R. p. 204, et v. 1 R. & M. 343.

(c) Donovan v. Needham, 9 Beav. 164.

(d) Mills v. Roberts, 1 Russ. & M. 555; S. C., Tambl. R. 476; and see Pett v. Fellows, 1 Swanst. 561, cited as Pell v. Fellows, sup. p. 186; Boddy v. Dawes, 1 Keen, 368; and Brown v. Temperley, 3 Russ. 263; and Ex parte Bowden, Rolls, 1835, cited 1 Keen, 366.

(e) Walker v. Wetherell, 6 Ves. 473.

(f) Ex parte Green, 1 Jac. & W. 253; Harvey v. Harvey, 2 P. W. 22; Barlow v. Grant, 1 Vern. 255; Ex parte Swift, 1 Russ. & M. 575; Clay v. Pennington, 8 Sim. 359. The cases are collected by Mr. Hill, On Trustees, 399, 400; and see Fentiman v. Fentiman, 13 Sim. 171.

(g) Carmichael v. Wilson, 3 Molloy, 84; see Lewin on Trusts, 84.

and state of the family; as where there is an elder son, an infant, and younger children who have no provision, the court will allow a more ample maintenance to the guardian of the eldest son, by which the younger children may be maintained (a). And as the court will, where the legacy is vested (b), order maintenance where none is directed by the will, and though the interest is directed to accumulate (c); so on the other hand, as will be more particularly noticed hereafter, it will refuse to apply the fund for maintenance, though so directed, if the father be living and of sufficient ability to maintain his child, unless it be given to the father (d).

If a bequest be to or in trust for a legatee to apprentice him, or the like, it is an absolute gift to the legatee; so that if he die before it be so applied it will belong to his representatives (e).

As maintenance is given for the daily subsistence of children, therefore, as a general rule, though a sum be directed to be paid half-yearly at stated times for maintenance until the portion of the child shall become payable, the child will be entitled to a proportionate part of the sum directed to be applied during the interval which elapses from the last payment down to the time of the portion becoming due (f). Where an annuity charged upon land is given for the maintenance of children down to the time when the eldest shall have attained 21 or any other definite period, such provision being given for maintenance of children, the children, contrary to the general rule, are entitled to an apportioned part of such annuity for the time between the last payment and the period at which the charge ceases (g).

A question as to apportionment under the late statute came before Lord Langdale a short time since, which it may be well here to introduce. A testator gave his residuary estate to his executors upon trust to apply a competent part, at the discretion of his trustees, of the interest and dividends, for the maintenance and education of his son during his minority, and from time to time to accumulate the residue of such interest, &c., and after he should attain 21 to apply a moiety of such (a) Harvey v. Harvey, 2 P. W. 21; Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atk. 447; Petre v. Petre, 3 Atk. 511; Roache v. Garvan, 1 Ves. 160; Style v. Style, July, 1799, Mad. MS.; Burnet v. Burnet, 1 Bro. 179; 2 Fonbl. 234-5.

(b) See Descrambes v. Tomkins, 1 Cox, 133.

(c) Supra, p. 187. Mole v. Mole, Dick. 310; Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Mad. 253; 2 Fonbl., ubi sup.

(d) Hughes v. Hughes, 1 Bro. 387.

(e) Nevill v. Nevill, 2 Vern. 430; Barlow

v. Grant, 1 Vern. p. 254; Cope v. Wilmot, Amb. 704, and other cases cited Roper on Leg. 1497.

(f) Hay v. Palmer, 2 P. W. pp. 501-2; the Master of the Rolls also referred this case to the general intention appearing upon the instrument, Reynish v. Martin, 3 Atk. p. 330. The rent of a mortgage is of course apportionable, as it is due from day to day; see the notes 2 P. W. 502.

(g) Sheppard v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 395; Reynish v. Martin, ubi sup.

interest, &c. for his support until he attained 25, and on his attaining 25 to pay such residue to his son ; if he should not attain 25, then in trust for his children, if any. On the 11th January, 1844, 548*l.* was received for a half-year's dividends ; the son attained 21 the 31st Oct., 1843 ; the son claimed the whole of the dividends on the ground of their having been received after he attained 21 ; it was contended that under the Stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 22 (a), the son was only entitled to an apportioned part of the dividends which accrued in Jan., 1844 ; for the children of the son, if they should become entitled to the funds, might insist that the son was only entitled to half of that portion of the dividends which accrued after he attained 21 ; but Lord Langdale was of opinion that this was not a case for an apportionment (b).

Where the testator has imposed it as a duty on trustees to take care of an infant, and to provide for him in some business or profession and his future maintenance, and has designated the fund out of which the provision is to be made, the court will, in the event of the execution of the trust devolving upon the court, exercise the discretion which the testator has reposed in the trustee (c).

Where a gift is made to a person and a trust created in that person, the court may, unless in special cases, properly pay over the fund to the individual who is such trustee ; but the person to whom the payment is made in that character is of course answerable for the fund to those for whose benefit the trust is created (d).

Bequests are of frequent occurrence in wills, by which property is given to a parent for the support or towards the support of his children, or to enable him to provide for his children, and the like, and the court has had to define what is to be considered the intention in such cases, and to what extent a trust is imposed, or a gift is to be implied to the father, or to the children, or to both. It has been objected in such cases that the bequest, being only the better to enable the party to perform a given duty, is absolute in the donee ; and so it is held where, to enable the father to afford to his children a proper maintenance is only a motive for the gift (e), as will be seen hereafter. It has also been objected, in some of these cases, that as (a) By that statute where an annuity or dividends of stock are given to one for life, with remainder over, as between the tenant for life and persons in remainder, an apportionment now takes place, which, by the general law, would not be the case ; see 3 Hare, 180-4.

(b) Campbell v. Campbell, 7 Beav. 482.

(c) Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 296 ; and see Foley v. Parry, 5 Sim. 138 ; S. C. on Appeal, 2 My. & K. 138, supra, p. 457.

(d) Woods v. Woods, 1 My. & Cr. 409 ; Cooper v. Thornton, 3 Bro. 96, 98 ; S. C., on Appeal, ib. 186, Robinson v. Tickell, 8 Ves. 142 ; Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, 449.

(e) Benson v. Whittam, 5 Sim. 22, et v. inf.

the donee has the power to dispose of the fund at pleasure to an extent not defined, it brings the case within the rule above adverted to (a), namely, that there is not sufficient certainty as to the subject to enable the court to imply a gift or to raise a trust; but the court has considered itself competent to measure the extent of the benefit thus intended to be conferred on the children, and accordingly the children or other objects have, in many cases, upon the intention, been held to take an interest either by way of direct gift or of trust.

A gift to a wife to support herself and her family (b), or to the end that she may give the testator's children such fortune as she shall think proper or as they best deserve, and suchlike expressions, raises a trust for the objects so pointed out. So a gift by a man to his wife to the intent that she may dispose of the same "for the benefit of herself and our children as she may deem most advantageous" is a trust, but the wife may appoint to some of the children to the exclusion of the others (c).

Where a gift was upon trust to pay into the hands of the father 1000*l.*, to be laid out by him in the education of his two eldest sons for the time being who should be alive at the testator's death; if only one, 500*l.* only to be paid: it was held that the children took a direct interest in the legacy, so that the father having died in the lifetime of the testator it did not lapse (d).

A sum of money was appointed by a married woman to trustees upon trust that they should in the mean time (i. e. before the children should become actually entitled to the property under the appointment) after her decease pay the income of the share of each of her children unto her husband, "in order the better to enable him to support, maintain, and educate each such child until his or her share should become transferable;" if the husband should not be alive, then the trustees were at their discretion to apply the income of each

(a) V. supra, p. 69.

(b) A direction to a son (who was appointed executor) to take care of his sister Ann, who had an express legacy of 5*l.* a year, and to whom the residue was given, subject as aforesaid, was held to give the sister a right to a sufficient maintenance, Broad v. Bevan, note to 1 Russell, 511.

(c) Burrell v. Burrell, Amb. 660; Raikes v. Ward, v. Jurist, 1008; S. C., 1 Hare, 445; Crockett v. Crockett, vi. Jurist, 531; 1 Hare, 451: as to which case v. infra. All the most important cases are cited in those two cases; and see Hadow v. Hadow, 9 Sim. 438; Hodg- son v. Green, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 26th June, 1842, vi. Jur. 819.

(d) Hodgson v. Green, ubi sup.; and see Leach v. Leach, 13 Sim. 304; there the court held that the father was a trustee to the extent of being bound to apply the income for the maintenance of the children; see p. 308; but the Vice-Chancellor was considerably influenced by the circumstance, that in the event of the death of the father, another person was appointed to apply the income in the same manner as the father was directed to do.

child's share for his or her maintenance and education respectively. The wife died, leaving her husband and an only child, an infant, her surviving. Mr. Wetherell, the husband, had assigned all his personal estate to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The question in the cause was, whether the income of his daughter's property so appointed, or any part of it, passed under that deed. It was insisted by the daughter that a trust attached for her benefit on the whole income: the trustees for the creditors insisted that the whole income was given absolutely to the husband: the M. R. held that there was a clear intention to create a trust for the benefit of the children to the extent of the entire income, which was ordered to be paid to the father, to be applied by him for the maintenance of the daughter accordingly (a).

In a case where the testator in substance gave to his wife and two other trustees all his residuary property in trust to pay over the rents, &c. to his wife for the education and advancement in life of any children she might have born by him, after her death the whole of the said property in trust, or arising out of the management of this trust, to be divided amongst his children, and the testator gave his furniture, plate, &c., to his wife absolutely; the V. C. of England was of opinion that the natural construction of the will was, that the whole income should be paid to the wife subject to the burthen of maintaining and educating the children out of it; and he so declared accordingly (b).

Where a testator gave to his wife a sum of money in addition to other property previously settled upon her, "in consideration of the expense and care she will incur in the maintenance of our children," the court held that this was a trust for the children to the extent of maintaining them whilst at home, and the Master, in computing what was proper for maintenance for the children, was directed to have regard to the circumstance that their mother's house was their home; but the Lord C. held that the mother was not liable for the expense of their education, so that she might not be induced to keep them always at home, as the testator could not have meant that she should be laid under a temptation to spoil the boys by keeping them at home (c).

A testator gave all his estate, real and personal, to his wife to hold to her, her heirs, &c. absolutely, "and at her own disposal, for the maintenance of herself and bringing up of my children:" it was held that the widow might sell the real estate (a).

(a) Wetherell v. Wilson, 1 Keen, 86; and the children sought to exclude the mother from any beneficial interest.
see Hammond v. Neame, 1 Swanst. 35.

(b) Gilbert v. Bennett, 10 Simons, 373; (c) Collier v. Collier, 3 Ves. 33.

Where a fund is bequeathed to a parent, subject to a trust to maintain, or to maintain and educate, his children, the surplus will belong to the parent; it is a gift subject to a charge: it may be difficult in some cases to determine whether the gift is to the children or in such terms as to constitute an implied gift to the parent: this, like every such question, must be determined on the intention to be collected from the instrument (b).

In the cases already adduced the children were held to be the objects of bounty; but if they are only the occasions of bounty, the donee will be held to be beneficially entitled, and not to be a trustee; therefore if the motive of an absolute gift to a parent is expressed to be that he may be enabled to maintain his children, no trust will arise; for a mere motive will not constitute a trust (c): at least this will clearly hold if there should have been no children, more especially if it was known to the testator that there were none, at the date of the will (d).

Though the father is undoubtedly bound to maintain and educate his children (e), and he cannot in ease of himself, when capable of properly maintaining them, appropriate their property for that purpose, it is competent for him on his marriage to stipulate that certain property shall be applied to those purposes, and if there be a contract to that effect, the property, the subject of the contract, must be applied for that purpose, notwithstanding the father may be of ability to maintain his children (f). So in the case of a legacy given by a stranger, the interest of it may be so given or directed to be applied expressly for maintenance, as to be in substance a gift to the father, or rather for

(a) Wood v. Richardson, 4 Beav. 174; and see Pratt v. Church, Rolls (1830), ibid. p. 177, to same effect.

(b) See Hamley v. Gilbert, 1 Jac. 354; Gordon v. Rutherford, Turn. & R. 373, 377; and other cases stated Roper on Leg. 1144-5; Bateman v. Foster, 1 Coll. 121.

(c) Hammond v. Neame, 1 Swanst. 35-8. This was a gift to a mother, who, as Sir Wm. Grant observed in his judgment, was under no legal obligation to support her children (Berkeley v. Swinburne, 6 Sim. 615-17, it is presumed, is to be referred to this principle): by analogous reasoning, the purpose for which a legacy is given will not prevent a legacy from vesting in the donee, though the purpose cannot be effected; see, int. al. Barlow v. Grant, 1 Vern. 255; Barton v. Cooke, 5 Ves. 463; Leche v. Lord Kilmorey, Turn. & R. 207.

(d) Benson v. Whittam, 5 Sim. 22, 30, 32. This was a gift to a brother (to enable him to assist such of the children of a deceased brother as the donee might find deserving of encouragement); these words were in a parenthesis in the will, and the Vice-Chancellor considered this to be a material feature, pp. 29, 30; it was held that no trust was created: this conclusion was fortified by other parts of the will, pp. 33-4; and see 3 Hare, 140-1; Thorp v. Owen, 2 Hare, 607; Abraham v. Alman, 1 Russ. 515.

(e) Hammond v. Neame, ubi sup.; et v. sup. p. 460.

(f) Mundy v. Lord Howe, 4 Bro. p. 223; Meacher v. Young, 2 My. & K. 490; Stocken v. Stocken, 4 My. & Cr. 98: et v. Lucknow v. Brown, xii. Jur. 1017; and De Weever v. Rochport, 6 Beav. 391.

his relief. Where a testator gave two fifths of his personal estate to the plaintiff in trust to apply the same for the maintenance and use of his children by the testator's late daughter, it was held that he was entitled to apply such interest for their maintenance, notwithstanding he was of ability to maintain them (a). "If," said Lord Cottenham, in a late case (b) on this subject, "the property of the children had been derived from the bounty of a stranger, there could be no doubt but that the father, being of ability to maintain his children, would not be entitled to any allowance out of the income of their property for that purpose; but the claim of the father rests upon the distinction which has been taken between the cases in which the property of the children is derived from the bounty of a stranger, and those in which they are entitled to it under the marriage settlement of their parents, such as Mundy v. Lord Howe (c), Stocken v. Stocken (d), and Meacher v. Young (e). It appears to me that the distinction between those two classes of cases has been carried quite as far as can be justified upon principle. In some of them it has been said that, in the case of marriage settlements, the father is a purchaser, and therefore entitled to an allowance for the maintenance of his children, and thereby to be relieved from the burthen which the law throws upon him of maintaining them himself. No doubt, he is so if the contract contained in the settlement gives him such a benefit; but, before he can be entitled to it, he must show that such was his contract. So, in the case of a legacy from a stranger, if the intention, to be found on the construction of the will, appears to have been that the father should have such a benefit, the court is bound to give it to him. In both cases, the question is one of construction and intention. In all the cases referred to, there were distinct and positive trusts to apply the income to the maintenance of the children, applicable, according to the construction put upon the whole of the provision, to the case of a surviving father."

In some special cases an absolute gift has been implied on a gift to one person coupled with the purpose of maintenance of another. A testatrix gave 1000*l.* to her nephew to bring up and maintain her

(a) Hawkins v. Watts, 7 Sim. 199.

(b) Thompson v. Griffin, Cr. & Phillips, 320. This was the case of a power given to trustees to apply the income of property settled for the separate maintenance of a married woman for life, for the maintenance of the children. The father contended that the court ought to compel the trustees to execute the power for his benefit. The Lord Chancellor said he could not upon that settlement find any trust for the benefit of the father, or any contract that he should be relieved out of the settled property from the burthen of supporting his children.

(c) 4 B. C. C. 223.

(d) 4 Sim. 152; S. C. 2 My. & K. 489; and 4 My. & Cr. 95.

(e) 2 My. & K. 490.

natural son Frederick; she then gave the residue of her property for the benefit of her four natural children, including Frederick; the testatrix then gave directions for investing the residue and applying it for the benefit of the children: it was contended that a trust of the 1000*l.* for Frederick was created; but the V. C. of England held that the nephew took the 1000*l.* absolutely; when the testatrix meant to give money for the maintenance of her children, she had expressly done so; if Frederick had died in the life of the testatrix, the legacy would not have lapsed (a).

£7000 was given to a man to enable him to provide for his younger children, and if he should die without the testator having made any alteration, then the sum was given to the wife of the same donee for the same purposes, and if both should die before the testator, the testator gave the money to the younger children; it was held that the father (the original donee) was entitled to the 7000*l.* for his life, and that his younger children had an interest in the principal (b).

Where property is so given or settled as that children, either in respect of maintenance or otherwise, and the parents, respectively, have an interest in unascertained proportions, or for interests not defined, the extent and nature of the benefit which the children may be entitled to will of course greatly if not altogether depend upon the circumstances of each particular case.

In some instances where maintenance, or any immediate interest in the children, has not appeared to be the object of the instrument, the parent has been held to take a life interest, and the children to take in remainder; in other cases the parent and the children have been held to take as joint tenants; in others as tenants in common; in others the children have been held only to take in substitution for their parents as distinguished from by way of limitation. And first, as to the cases where the children have been held to take in remainder.

The case of Chambers v. Atkins (c) arose upon a settlement; the fund was to be transferred to the husband, if he should survive the wife, to and for the use and benefit of him and any child or children of the intended marriage. The Vice-Chancellor of England considered, though entertaining some doubts, that the direction to transfer the fund to the husband excluded the idea of joint tenancy with his children, so that he was held to be entitled for life, the children in remainder (a). In Morse v. Morse (b), the bequest was to "my daughter, Anne Morse, and her children, for their sole use and benefit, 5000*l.*;" 3000*l.* was to be paid within a month after his death, the other 2000*l.* within a year after his wife's death; and the testator appointed two persons trustees of those sums, for his daughter and her children: the Vice-Chancellor of England held that the daughter took for life, and that all the children she might have would take in remainder, for if not, different classes of children would become interested in the two portions of the legacy.

(a) Ward v. Biddles, 16 Law J., N. S. 455; xi. Jur. 624.

(b) Brown v. Casamajor, 4 Ves. 498; see 5 Sim. 31.

(c) 1 Sim. & St. 382.

In a very late case (1848), Lord Langdale, in reference to Wilde's case, which had been cited, said, "he believed in all the instances where, in case of there being children living at the time of the gift, the parents had been held to take life interests, with remainder to the children, the gifts had not been simple, but had contained some intimation of an intention that they should so take (c);" a slight indication of such intention is sufficient (d).

As regards Joint Tenancy and Tenancy in Common (e), though it has been said that the advantages given to joint tenancy are against equity (f), and the leaning of the court has latterly been against it (g), yet where two or more persons become jointly interested by way of gift without any words of severance, there the same must be subject to all the consequences of law affecting such an interest (h). But where the question is how portions should be given in pursuance of articles, as joint tenancy is an inconvenient mode of settlement in reference to the time of the minorities of the children, the Court of Chancery will rectify the articles by the presumed intent of the contract, and will permit words that would be construed a joint tenancy at law to create in equity a tenancy in common (i).

A testator gave to Ann Wilson, "together with her little girl Louisa and her little boys, my adopted children, and for their joint mainte-

(a) In Vaughan v. Marquis of Headfort, 10 Sim. 641, the Vice-Chancellor of England held that on the words "to be secured for their use," following words, per se, of joint-tenancy, the court was justified in giving the father an interest for life, with remainder to the children, letting in all who should be born during the life of the father.

(b) 2 Sim. 487; and see Jeffery v. Honywood, 4 Mad. 402, and the cases there cited.

(c) Gordon v. Wheildon, xii. Jur. 988; see Wilde's case, 6 Co. R. 16 b, and Co. Litt. 9 a, and 12 Sim. 188.

(d) Crockett v. Crockett, infra; et vide 1 Conn. & L. 277, Heron v. Stokes.

(e) See particularly 3 Ves. 631, Lord Alvanley.

(f) Arguendo, Barker v. Giles, 2 P.W. 281; and see Partriche v. Powlett, 2 Atk. 55. Sometimes it may be the best way of leaving a legacy; see Morley v. Bird, 3 Ves. 632; Stuart v. Bruce, ibid. 633.

(g) See Morley v. Bird, (ubi sup.) p. 631.

(h) Campbell v. Campbell, 4 Bro. p. 17; 3 Ves. 630; Aston v. Smallman, 2 Vern. 556; Webb v. Webb, 2 Vern. p. 668; Jeffereys v. Small, 1 Vern. 217; D. of Norfolk v. Howard, 1 Vern. 164.

(i) Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Scho. & Lef. 84; Lewin, 55.

nance—their mother to have the care of bringing them up to the best of her power till they are able to do for themselves—30*l.* a year, to be paid to the said mother, as above, half-yearly, or as may best suit, or as her conduct deserves,” &c.; there were three children. It was contended that the words “joint maintenance” applied to the children only, and that it was to last during minority only (a). The Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce held that the effect was to give an annuity of 30*l.* to these four persons for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, with a direction that whilst the three were minors, the fourth, being an adult, should receive it for their maintenance (b).

Where the gift was that all the property of the testator should be at the disposal of the testator’s wife “for herself and children,” with some special provisions; the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the children took an interest in possession, and would be joint tenants with the mother, though the whole income would be directed to be paid to the mother during the infancy of the children, she maintaining the children in a proper manner; and that these words did not give a power of appointment to the mother; consequently when any child attained 21 he would be entitled to receive his share (c). But Lord Cottenham reversed this decision; his Lordship said that, even on a gift to a mother and her children simply (d), a very slight indication of intention that the children should not take jointly with the mother has been thought sufficient to enable the court to decree a life estate to the mother with remainder to her children (e); and his Lordship held that the children had not a present interest in the fund; and said, that the mother, according to his construction of the will and the authorities he had referred to (f), had a personal interest in the fund; and as between herself and her children, she was either a trustee with a large discretion as to the application of the fund, or she had a power in favour of the children subject to a life-interest in herself (g).

(a) On the authority of Badham v. Mee, supra; and Miller v. Woodward, 2 Beav. p. 271.

(b) Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 375.

(c) Crockett v. Crockett, 1 Hare, 451; 5 Hare, 327-8; on a Petition by one of the children, praying payment of his alleged share.

(d) As in De Witte v. De Witte, 11 Sim. 41; Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 184; Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 592.

(e) Morse v. Morse, 2 Sim. 485, supra.

(f) Particularly the cases collected, Chance on Powers, i. p. 40; Anon. Dalis, 58, § 5: in that case a man devised lands to his wife to dispose and employ them on herself, or on his or her son or sons, at her will and pleasure; it was held that the wife took a fee-simple, but that it was conditional, so that if the wife should alien to a stranger, it would be a forfeiture; and see 1 P. W. 152; Daniel v. Ubley, stated 1 P. W. 152; Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, 445; see 2 Phill. 558.

(g) Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Phill. 561. His Lordship there observed upon his judgment in Woods v. Woods, 1 My. & Cr. 401, supra, and the interpretation which the Vice-Chancellor Wigram had put upon that case. His Lordship, p. 556, sums up the circumstances which, in his opinion, were inconsistent with the interpretation put upon the will by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

A gift to W. S., his wife and children, confers a joint tenancy, there being children living; but the husband and wife take but one share (a).

In Jubber v. Jubber, on the words, "for the benefit of herself and unmarried children, that they may be comfortably provided for as long as my wife may remain in this life;" the Vice-Chancellor of England inclined to think that the children took as tenants in common with their mother, but as it would have been premature, no declaration was made as to whether they took as tenants in common or joint tenants (b).

The following are instances where issue have been held to take by way of Substitution.

In Pearson v. Stephen (1831), the testator inter alia gave the residue of his personal estate in trust for his five sons, "and their respective issue, if any such issue, to take per stirpes and not per capita, to be divided amongst them in equal shares and proportions, the shares of such of them as shall have attained 21 to be paid to them forthwith after his the testator's death;" the shares of those under age to be paid at 21. One of the sons was married at the date of the will, and at the death of the testator had living four children, the respondents in the appeal. The Lord Chancellor (Lord Brougham), in advising the House said, "This will cannot have a rational construction unless it creates an absolute gift to the five sons. If any of them should not be living at the time of the death of the testator the issue of such deceased son might take by substitution; that construction would fulfil the intent of the testator. If this decision stands (the Master of the Rolls, Sir J. Leach, had declared that the sons only took for life), Butter v. Ommaney must be overruled;" "but if any of the sons was at that time dead, his issue was to take as the stirpes would have taken, and not on a division per capita." Judgment was entered accordingly (c).

In the late case of Dick v. Lacy, (1845) (d), the bequest was to this effect: As to all the residue of my estate, real and personal, I give the same to Lady Mantell for her life. and after her death I give the same to her nieces, "the daughters of Captain Boyce, and their descendants per stirpes, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns for ever; Lady Mantell and the descendants paying unto Mrs. Le Plastres 50*l.* a-year for her

(a) Gordon v. Whieldon, ubi sup., founded as to the last point on Lit. § 291; Anon. Skin, 182; 4 Vin. Ab. 154, pl. 10; and Back v. Andrew, 2 Vern. 120; and Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233; and see add. note, No. 1.

(b) 9 Sim. 503-7.

(c) Pearson v. Stephen, 5 Bli. N. S. 218; 2 Dow. & Cl. 340; see Sir E. Sugden's observations on this case, Law of Prop. 372, 411-12.

(d) 8 Beav. 214; v. supra, 76, 155.

life." Capt. Boyce had three daughters only, one died in the lifetime of the tenant for life without issue, two of them had issue, whether or not at the date of the will or death of the testator is not stated; no act was done to sever any joint tenancy. Lord Langdale said the words per stirpes not only imported distribution, but also succession or some species of representation; the question then was in what species of succession they were to take, and his Lordship thought that they could only take by substitution, so that it was declared that the daughters took absolute interests in joint tenancy (a). The subject of when donees take per capita and when per stirpes has been considered in a preceding page (b).

If the father receives rents and profits for which he ought to account, and mixes them with his own moneys, and invests those rents and his own moneys so mixed up in land, though the land owing to such admixture cannot be followed (c), yet if the father devises those lands to his children a question of satisfaction will arise (d).

(a) Hedges v. Harpur, 9 Beav. 479, is another instance of children being held to take in substitution and not by way of limitation; see p. 485. In the foregoing cases all the principal authorities are cited; and see Buckle v. Fawcett, 4 Hare, 544; Shailer v. Groves, 6 Hare, 162; and Chipchase v. Simpson, xiii. Jur. 90.

(b) V. supra, pp. 419-20. See add. note, No. 2.

(c) V. supra, p. 221.

(d) Stocken v. Stocken, 4 My. & Cr. 99. His Lordship added, "All cases of satisfaction may raise a case of election in one sense, (that is, the child might claim the amount of the rents and profits, or take the benefit of the devise of the estate in which they were invested,) though not in the sense in which the word is usually understood in this court; as to which, v. supra, vol. i. 639; et v. inf. Election."

ADDITIONAL NOTE, No. I.—V. supra, pp. 469, 471.

Where Husband and Wife take as one Person.—Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern.—Paine v. Wagner, 13 Sim.—The words "Husbands and Families" rejected, Robinson v. Waddelow, 8 Sim.

The case of Bricker v. Whatley was this:—A man, by will, gave the residue of his estate to A., B., and C., and the wife of C., equally to be divided between them. It was proved that the wife only was of kin to the testator and not the husband. The Lord Keeper was of opinion that the husband and wife should take but one third part; and the rather for that he observed the two "ands" in this devise; and though a man may devise to ten persons, and add an "and" betwixt each person's name, yet it is not natural or usual to add an "and" till you come to the last person. In Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 184, (sup. p. 470), the gift was "may be equally divided, share and share alike, Mrs. M., Mr. and Mrs. W. and children, likewise Hannah H.;" the Vice-Chancellor of England held that all persons named were to take as between themselves as tenants in common.

In Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 54, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that on a gift of a residue "equally between my brother T. W., my sister Anne C. widow, my nephew W. H. W., and Emma his wife, their heirs and assigns," the husband and wife, who were equally next of kin, were each entitled to a share; "the number of shares must be determined," said his Honour, "by counting the legatees amongst whom it is equally given:" he thought that that case was not within Littleton's doctrine, by reason that the husband and wife were not the first named, as in Littleton's illustrations; and distinguishable from Bricker v. Whatley, because the word "and" did not occur before the husband's name: and see Attorney-General v. Bacchus, 9 Price, 30; 11 Price, 547, see 571. On a gift of a residue "to be equally divided between my said daughters and their husbands and families:" the latter words were rejected, and the daughters were held to take absolutely; Robinson v. Waddelow, 8 Sim. 137.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, No. II.—V. supra, p. 472.

When Children or Issue take per stirpes and when per capita.—"Issue" construed "Children."—Period to which Survivorship is to be applied.—"Survivors" construed "others."—Cole v. Sewel, in Dom. Proc.

The following cases may be referred to, in addition to those cited pp. 419, 420:—Abbey v. Howe, before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, xi. Jur. 765. In that case there was a gift by will, after a tenancy for life, unto and equally amongst all and every the children of S. W. and S. K., who should be living at the death of S. K., and the lawful issue of such of them as should be then dead: it was held that the donees were to take per capita and not per stirpes; some additional authorities are there cited: see also, on the same point, the late case of Hawkins v. Hamerton, (1848,) xiii. Jurist, pp. 2—4, which was elaborately argued, and where an ample collection of the authorities is to be found. This is also an important case as to the points of "issue" being construed "children,"—the period to which "survivorship" is to be applied;—on which points, see also Buckle v. Fawcett, 4 Hare, 536; Taylor v. Beverley, 1 Coll. 108; Turing v. Turing, x. Jur. 366; 15 Sim. 139; Dorville v. Wolff, 15 Sim. 510; Shailer v. Groves, 6 Hare, 162; and Eno v. Eno, ibid. 171:—and as to "survivors" being construed "others," v. supra, vol. i. p. 541; as to which point, see also Cole v. Sewel, 4 Dru. & W. 1; 2 Conn. & L. 344; S. C. in Dom. Proc. xii. Jur. 927.

In the case of Cole v. Sewel, the House of Lords affirmed Lord Chancellor Sugden's doctrine that where a limitation is by way of remainder which may be barred, the objection of remoteness does not apply; v. supra, vol. i. p. 533.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.—Supra, p. 390.

Mathews on Portions.

I lament that I had not become acquainted with Mr. Mathews's useful Treatise on Portions until the whole of the Section VII. Chap. VII. supra, was printed off. I would particularly recommend it to the student. As to the vesting of portions in default of appointment, see in addition, Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 1 Drury, 122.

SECTION IX.—Of some of the most usual Trusts of Real and Personal Property in Settlements and Wills in favour of Married Women,—of Settlements, Devises, and Bequests of Property to Married Women for their Separate Use,—Provisions against Anticipation,—The Wife's Equity to a Settlement,—and some other Incidental Topics.

Rights of Husband, which he acquires by Marriage over the Real and Personal Property of his Wife.

Choses in Action.

Reversionary Interests.

Reduction into Possession.

Release.

Where the Husband becomes a Purchaser of his Wife's Fortune.

Rights which pertain to the Wife independently of Contract.

Equity to a Settlement.

Rights of Children.

How such Equity may be waived, or extinguished.

Rights which may be secured to the Wife by Contract or by Gift.

Settlement.

Power of Appointment by Deed, or Will, or both.

Limitation to Executors and to Next of Kin in default of Appointment.

Agreement between Husband and Wife before Marriage.

Pin Money.

Gifts from Husband to Wife.

Doctrines of the Court of Chancery as to Separate Estate of Married Women in Real and Personal Property.

As to Real Estate.

Contract of Wife to sell or charge her Real Estate.

As to Personal Estate.

Agreement before Marriage.

Separate Interest acquired by Gift or Bequest.

Technical Words not necessary to confer Separate Interest.

What Expression will and what will not confer a Separate Interest.

Tyler v. Lake, before Lord Brougham.

Blacklow v. Laws, before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

Wife's Power of Disposition over her Separate Property.

Generally the Wife considered as a Feme Sole.

Liability of Separate Estate to Charges and Debts during her Lifetime.

Liability after her Death.

Restraints on Alienation by way of Anticipation.

Where Proviso against Anticipation is annexed to the Power of Appointment only.

Brown v. Bamford, before the Vice-Chancellor of England and Lord Lyndhurst.

Whilst the Original Trust exists, it comes into Operation on every successive Marriage, if not confined to a particular Marriage.

Deeds of Separation.

Observations on Suits for the Recovery of Wife's Separate Property, and on Suits by Creditors to enforce Demands against the Separate Estate of the Wife.

Additional Notes.

No. I.—Power of Husband to sue on Wife's Bills of Exchange or Notes.

No. II.—Course of Practice when the Husband applies to the Court to obtain Principal or Interest to which he is entitled Jure Mariti.

No. III.—Case of Doswell v. Earl.—Power of Wife to pass Reversionary Interest by Consent.

No. IV.—Limitation to Wife's "Next of Kin," "Personal Representatives," &c. and of the Construction of those Words generally.

No. V.—What will amount to a Charge on a Married Woman's Separate Estate.

No. VI.—Bond given to remain in Force in the Event of Reconciliation.

IN entering on this subject it (a) is proper to observe that the consequences of marriage are very different as regards the real, to what they are as regards the personal estate of the wife: as regards the former the husband has no power over the inheritance; his rights are confined to the interest which he acquires during the joint lives (b), and his contingent individual interest as tenant by the curtesy. But by the act of marriage, whether the husband survive the wife or no, the wife's own personal estate, in possession or capable of immediate and tangible possession, which she has at the time of the marriage or which shall come to her during the coverture, not being in either case her paraphernalia, passes to the husband. The husband also acquires the right to dispose of the wife's terms for years or chattels real, and they become his own if he survive (c). As regards Choses in Action the husband's right is only sub modo; in these he acquires the absolute interest only in case he can and actually do

(a) This section was in type before Mr. Bright's work came to my hands, so that I have not been able to make all the use of it which I otherwise should have done. I can refer to the work itself for an industrious collection of the authorities.

(b) See 10 Ves. p. 227; et v. Robertson v. Norris, Q. B. xii. Jur. 556; 17 Law J. 291.

(c) Co. Litt. 351, a. The husband may effectually dispose of the wife's reversionary interest in a term, though he die before the reversion falls in; Donne v. Hart, 2 Russ. & M. p. 360, and see Ex parte Ellison, 2 Y. & Coll. 528, 536; that is if it could fall into possession during his life; Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 122. Whether the property is bound by the husband's contract, has been doubted, see 2 Coll. 226; as to this point, see Steed v. Cragh, reduce them into possession (a). The rule is now fully established, though as regards purchasers it is only lately that it has been settled, that a married woman surviving her husband is entitled to her choses in action not actually reduced into possession, against the assignee of the husband, whether claiming by particular assignment for valuable consideration or his general assignee under the bankrupt and insolvent acts (b): as regards the wife's Reversionary and Contingent interests in choses in action; whether the husband dies in the lifetime of the tenant for life, whereby the chose in action cannot as against the wife be reduced into possession, or whether he survives and dies before it is reduced into possession, the same result will follow; it will belong to the wife surviving him; and that, as against the assignees of the husband for valuable consideration as well as against his representatives (c).

2 Eq. Ab. 37, pl. 3; Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385; Jacob's R. 76; Bates v. Dandy, 3 Russ. 72, note, 2 Atk. 207. The husband may assign a trust of a term belonging to his wife; Turner's case, 1 Vern. p. 7, in the House of Lords; Packer v. Windham, Prec. Ch. 418-19; Inclendon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 435; Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. p. 99; (but not so as to exclude her from her equity to a settlement, Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 1;) even without consideration, ibid.: the husband cannot however charge the chattel real of the wife so as to bind her surviving, Co. Litt. p. 351a. Sir J. Leach held, in Donne v. Hart, ubi supra, that the husband might, by analogy to law, assign the wife's reversionary interest in a trust of a term; but of course equally subject to the wife's equity to a settlement.

Even as regards bills of exchange and promissory notes belonging to the wife before marriage, though the husband may indorse them away (d), yet they are but choses in action, and if remaining such, they

(a) V. supra, vol. i. p. 180; Co. Litt. 351, and Butler's note; Hornsby v. Lee, 2 Mad. 16, 20; Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1; Watson v. Dennis, 3 Russ. 90; Stamper v. Barker, 5 Mad. 157; Stiffe v. Everett, 1 My. & C. 37; Ellison v. Elwyn, infra, n. (c).

(b) Purdew v. Jackson; Honner v. Morton, ubi infra; and see Box v. Box, 2 Conn. & L. 606, and Box v. Jackson, 1 Drury, 55; ibid. 83, where the authorities are collected. In this case an application was made to Lord Chancellor Sugden, on appeal from the Master of the Rolls, to take the consent of a married woman, in court, to the sale of a trust fund in which she had a reversionary interest expectant on the death of her mother and payment to the mother, pursuant to an agreement entered into by all parties interested. The Lord Chancellor directed a bill to be filed to raise the point, and on the hearing called to his assistance the Master of the Rolls, who went into an elaborate investigation of the authorities (page 56, et seq.), as did the Lord Chancellor, (ib. 68, et seq.); both agreed that her consent could not be taken. There is a very useful collection of the cases by Mr. Jos. W. Smith, on the subject of the wife's reversionary interests, to which I would refer the student and the practitioner, in the Jurist, vol. x. part ii. p. 231.

(c) Ellison v. Elwyn; Elwyn v. Williams, vii. Jur. 338; 13 Sim. 309; followed in Ashby v. Ashby, 1 Coll. p. 554; and in Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 10 Beav. p. 328; so that Lord Lyndhurst's dictum in Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. v. 86, (see 13 Sim. p. 313,) as an able writer in the Law Review, vol. iv. p. 249, has observed, is not to be depended upon; it was cited in Ashby v. Ashby. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce would not say what would have been the effect of a release of a legacy for a valuable consideration; as to which, v. infra. In Le Vasseur v. Scrutton, 14 Sim. 118, the Vice-Chancellor of England adhered to his opinion in Ellison v. Elwyn; that was the case of a female who was an infant at her marriage; by marriage articles a chose in action, presently belonging to her, int. alia, was to be transferred to trustees, on certain trusts: after the marriage the husband executed a settlement, according to the articles; but the stock still remained in the names of trustees: the wife was held entitled to it by survivorship: Sir Thos. Plumer's dictum in Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. p. 472, was cited.

(d) See 1 Rop. H. and W. 225: Smith v. Marsack, xii. Jur. 1050; add. note, No. 1. The husband may also assign a mortgage for a term vested in the wife; but it was held, in Burnett v. Kinaston, Prec. Ch. 119, 1 Vern. 396, not only that the husband could not assign the wife's mortgage in fee, but that the husband surviving was not entitled to the mortgage money, the legal estate in the security being in the heir of the wife. A distinction was formerly taken in such cases where there was a covenant to pay and where not, Turner v. Crane, 1 Vern. p. 170; Bosvil v. Brander, 1 P. W. p. 460; but no such distinction now exists, in each case the mortgage forms part of the personal estate of the mortgagee; see Coote on Mortg. p. 617. Lord will survive to the wife; whether the husband or his assignees in bankruptcy sue upon them the wife must be joined, and if execution be not levied in the lifetime of the husband, the benefit of it will survive to the wife: but as regards bonds, bills, or notes given to the wife during the marriage the husband may sue alone (a). It is the same, as it would seem, though there is a decision to the contrary, where there is a decree for payment of money to the husband and wife or to the husband in right of the wife, and that decree has not been acted upon (b), for decrees are only declarations of the court upon the rights of the parties when they began to sue (c). But where there is a decree or order for payment to the husband simply, that it is conceived will clearly give to the husband the absolute property (d).

Hardwicke expressly states that the husband may dispose of the wife's mortgage in fee, (Bates v. Dandy, 2 Atk. 208); but it must be got in, in order to exclude her right by survivorship, see Rees v. Keith, ubi infra. Although, where the mortgage is by a legal term, the wife, as I presume, would not be a necessary party to a bill for foreclosure, (see 3 Atk. 435, 436,) so that she would not have the opportunity of insisting on her equity for a settlement; et v. 1 P. W. 458; infra, 458; if the mortgage is in fee she must be a party; and, according to Sir J. Wigram's rule in Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, p. 5-7, she ought, in such case, to be at liberty herself to file a bill to enforce her equity. As regards the question of Survivorship in the event of the mortgage money not having been got in, Lord Cottenham seems to consider that Walter v. Saunders, (1 Eq. Ab. 58,) is not to be taken as establishing that a mere assignment of a term securing a mortgage debt, defeats the wife's equity, or her right by survivorship: see 5 My. & Cr. 106-7. Lord Hardwicke's expressions (3 Atk. 435,) would imply that the wife's title is excluded; and if the assignee can sue without joining the wife, it would seem that it is; but if it should appear on the proceedings that the mortgage was originally the wife's, and that she is living, would the court make the decree in her absence? this point, in the present state of the law, seems to require a direct decision. The husband may also, for valuable consideration, dispose of a Possibility that the wife is entitled to, (2 Atk. p. 208; and see 1 Bright, Husb. and Wife, 100,) and may transfer her Stock in the funds; see Wildman v. Wildman, 9 Ves. 176.

(a) See 2 Ves. Sen. 677; Gaters v. Madeley, 6 Mees. & W. 423; and Yates v. Sherington, 11 Mees. & W. 42, where the resolution in the case of Miles v. Williams (1 P. W. 249; 10 Mod. 160, 243,) is observed upon. The Court of Exchequer had held that the assignees might bring an action in their own names; this the Court of Exchequer Chamber reversed, that court holding that the assignment in bankruptcy was not a reduction into possession, and that the assignees did but stand in the place of the husband; and see Holloway v. Lightburn, 2 Mad. 135-6, n.; see also the Jurist, vol. ix. part ii. p. 105; and Clancy on Husband and Wife, p. 113, on the subject of actions by the husband to recover the wife's choses in action; and Lord Henley's note, 3 Bro. 362; and Pierce v. Thornely, 2 Sim. 178.

(b) Nanney v. Martin, 1 Ch. Ca. 27, (recognized in Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 46, and in Pierce v. Thornely, 2 Sim. p. 177). In the case of Forbes v. Phipps, 1 Eden, p. 507, Lord Northington states that a decree or an award (Oglander v. Baston, 1 Vern. p. 396,) operates to vest the property; and see 2 Sim. 148. In the principal case a decree had been made for payment of a legacy due to the wife, (who was indebted at the time of the marriage,) to the husband and wife; the husband survived. Lord Northington held that by the effect of the decree the husband was entitled to the legacy by survivorship, free from the claims of the creditors of the wife; the decision therefore did not directly touch the question under consideration. In Heygate v. Annesley, 3 Bro. 361, Lord Thurlow held that an order for payment of money to the husband in right of the wife changed the property; and see the cases cited 1 Vern. 396, and in Raithby's note, and those in note (d) infra.

(c) Lord Eldon, Murray v. Lord Elibank, 10 Ves. p. 90; Sir Wm. Grant, Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 587.

(d) See Hutchings v. Smith, 9 Sim. p. 148; and Forbes v. Phipps, 1 Eden, 502; Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. p. 19. A transfer into court of stock belonging to a lunatic's wife to the credit of the lunacy, was held by Lord Lyndhurst to be a reduction into possession, Re Jenkins, 5 Russ. 187; and see Ryland v.

Reduction into possession as regards choses in action means actual payment to the husband in his character of husband, not as trustee (a), or what is equivalent to it; if the property has been paid to his agent, or so dealt with that the property is no longer a chose in action of the wife, but under the exclusive control of the husband, or has been in the exercise of his exclusive control placed by him in the hands of or transferred to other persons upon some trust inconsistent with the existence of the wife's possible title by survivorship, that will be considered to be a reduction into possession. In case a married woman be entitled to a chose in action, whether legal or equitable, the mere circumstance of the legal title being changed, without more, does not in general affect her; for instance, if her husband, having a floating intention to have the property dealt with in the way of being settled or otherwise disposed of, procures the debtor to give a bond to certain persons to secure the debt, and dies before any trusts are declared: nor will a mere investment consistent with the wife's equities have the effect of a reduction into possession: but if contemporaneously with such a transaction, or with the transfer of stock into other names, a trust is effectually declared, that will be considered as a reduction into possession; it amounts to a receipt and a disposition at the same time (b). The receipt of part of what is due upon the wife's promissory note and of the whole of the interest is not a reduction into possession (c). A minor and her husband before their marriage covenanted to assign to the trustees of the settlement two sums of stock in which the minor had a reversionary interest; one of the sums came into possession and was transferred, that was

Smith, 1 My. & Cr. pp. 53, 56, 57; Wall v. Tomlinson, 16 Ves. p. 413; (see 14 Sim. 27; and 2 Coll. 260). Payment into court, under an order that it be laid out for the benefit of the husband and wife, is not a reduction into possession as regards the principal; Bond v. Simmons, 3 Atk. 20. In Packer v. Wyndham, (Prec. Ch. 418,) the Lord Chancellor seemed to think that where the wife's money is paid into court, by way of caution, to compel him to make a settlement, it must be considered as vested in him by law, though subject to be retained for enforcing the performance of the specific purpose.

(a) Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497.

(b) See Ryland v. Smith, 1 My. & Cr. 53; Burnham v. Bennett, 2 Coll. pp. 258-260; ix. Jur. p. 888; Rees v. Keith, infra; Hansen v. Miller, 14 Sim. 22; viii. Jur. 210. "Reduction into possession means actual payment; but I think payment to the husband's agent would be a good payment to him;" per Vice-

Chancellor of England, ibid. 210, b. (and see 1 Roll. Ab. 342; Clancy, 112). "The effect of the transaction" (the payment of the moneys to trustees upon the trusts declared), said the Vice-Chancellor of England, in the last case, "destroyed entirely the character which the fund previously bore;" and see Glaister v. Hower, 8 Ves. 207: see also Rees v. Keith, 11 Sim. 388, a case relating to the wife's mortgage in fee, where the acts done were considered to be a reduction into possession; and Adams v. Lavender, 4 M'Clelland & Y. p. 41, where the acts were not so considered: and Wombwell v. Laver, 2 Sim. p. 360, but which the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce does not seem to approve; 2 Coll. 260.

(c) Nash v. Nash, 2 Mad. p. 139; Hore v. Woulfe, 2 Ball & B. 425; Hart v. Stephens, Q. B., ix. Jur. 225, where the authorities are collected; and see part ii. p. 502, of the same volume, where the subject is discussed.

considered as reduced into possession : the other remained outstanding ; it was declared that this reversionary interest was not bound by the settlement as against the wife surviving (a) : and where the brother of the wife covenanted in the settlement to pay a sum charged on his estate in favour of the wife to the husband, and he received the interest, but died leaving the principal outstanding, it was held that the wife was entitled by survivorship (b). It seems that if the husband proves the wife's debt in bankruptcy, and dies before a dividend is made, the wife is entitled by survivorship (c).

The husband surviving takes the wife's legal chattles real, and also at law any savings consisting of cash or notes, made by the wife out of her separate estate, in his marital right ; but to obtain her choses in action, which also survive to him, he must clothe himself with the character of her administrator (d).

In a late case the husband and wife had entered into a contract for the sale of the reversionary interest of the wife, to take effect in the event of the reversion falling into possession during the life of husband and wife ; it was part of the contract that the expence of the assignment should be paid out of the purchase money ; the price paid was 76*l.* ; the value set upon it by an actuary (who however had not taken into consideration the contingency that the husband might have died before it was actually reduced into possession) was 131*l.* The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce was of opinion that the objections were not sufficient to set aside the sale (e).

As the husband during the marriage "has all in her right" (f), he may Release any debt which is due to her, also a legacy (g), and as it

(a) Cunningham v. Antrobus, xiii. Jur. 28-9.

(b) Howman v. Corie, 2 Vern. p. 190 : the covenant of the brother was considered only as an additional security, not as making the husband a purchaser ; as to which, v. infra.

(c) Anon. 2 Vern. 707.

(d) Malony v. Kennedy, 10 Sim. 254 ; Betts v. Kimpton, 2 Barn. & Adol. p. 273 ; and see Jones v. Skipworth, 9 Beav. p. 237 ; Carne v. Brice, 7 Mees. & W. p. 183 ; but in Sir Paul Neal's case, cited Prec. Ch. 44, it is said she may dispose of the money saved by her, and any jewels, &c. bought with it, by will ; and see the dictum in Willson v. Pack, ibid. 297 ; but there the wife had survived ; et v. infra, 502. If a woman grant a term to her own use, it will not it seems survive to the husband, but go to the wife's executors or administrators ; 2 Freem. pp. 62, 131 ; Co. Litt. fol. 351, a : Turner's case, sup., which was decided against the previous authorities, (see Hunt v. Pitt, Freem. p. 79,) does not touch this particular point. It may be observed that although the House of Lords will not rehear a particular case, it may review its own decision as a rule of law ; Sugd. Law of Property, p. 24.

(e) Sewell v. Walker, xii. Jur. 1041 ; as to valuations by actuaries in such cases, see Sugd. Law of Prop. 71-2.

(f) Chamberlain v. Hewson, 1 Salk. 115.

(g) Sheph. Touch. p. 333 ; Adams v. Cole, Forrest. 170 ; see Clancy on Husb. and Wife, 111 : other cases are adverted to by Sir Thos. Plumer in Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 49.

Lord Hardwicke, in Bates v. Dundy, (2 Atk. 208,) says, "that the husband may release the wife's bond without receiving any part of the money ; as he may gratuitously dispose of her chattels real." The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, (sup. p. 476, note (c),) seems to point has been held even costs awarded to her during the coverture in a suit instituted by her in the Ecclesiastical Court (a); but the husband cannot, at law or in equity, dispose of or release such part of the wife's personal property as cannot possibly accrue during the coverture (b): an agreement between the husband and the executors, coupled with a receipt, that the wife's legacy shall be set off against the husband's debt, will not defeat the wife's right by survivorship, the legacy not being released (c).

It has been held that the husband may, without the assent of the wife given in court, for valuable consideration absolutely pledge a fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General to the account of the wife (d), but this doctrine is hardly consistent with the later authorities.

The husband may by marriage-settlement become the purchaser of the whole of the wife's fortune of whatever it may consist so as to

at a distinction between a release of a legacy for a valuable consideration and a voluntary one. An assignment was always required to be for valuable consideration, in order to bind the wife; Bates v. Dandy, ubi sup.; see Garforth v. Bradley, 2 Ves. 678; 9 Ves. 99: a release extinguishes the debt or duty, an assignment is a transfer available in equity only, and therefore requires a valuable consideration to induce any court to enforce it; see Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 211: but a distinction has been taken (see Jacob's note, 2 Roper, Husb. and Wife, p. 219,) between a release of a legal and of an equitable demand, to which the Vice-Chancellor probably referred. A trust of a term equally as a legal term may be assigned by the husband gratuitously, 9 Ves. 99.

(a) Chamberlain v. Hewson, ubi sup.

(b) Gage v. Acton, 1 Salk. pp. 326-7. In Hore v. Beecher, 12 Sim. 467, (where there was a valuable consideration,) it was decided that the husband might release an annuity secured to the wife by a bond; but see Thompson v. Butler, Moore's Reports, 522; Com. Dig. Baron and Feme, K., there cited; and Mr. Jacob's observations on that case, pp. 517-18; and the cases referred to by Sir Thos. Plumer, 1 Russ. p. 49. What the wife was entitled to was an annuity, secured by the bond, and by an assignment of an annuity for the life of another person. If the husband and wife had brought an action on the bond, they could only, on the statute of Will. III., have had execution for the arrears, not as in the case of an ordinary debt for the full amount; and the judgment would have survived to the wife, for securing the payments which should accrue after the death of the husband. It is material to observe that the wife was not the obligee, and that the obligees in the bond had not released the estate of the obligor, so that the legal liability subsisted; and the late case of Sturgis v. Champneys, v. infra, seems to have determined, at least as regards the wife's equity to a settlement, that it is of no importance how it happens that the legal interest is outstanding. I confess I cannot—after all the consideration I have been able to give to that case, and notwithstanding the very high estimation in which, in common with the profession at large, I hold the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor of England—convince myself that that case was rightly decided: it was heard as a short cause. I have handed to Mr. Bright, for the new edition of Mr. Roper's work, the completion of which I was obliged to transfer to Mr. Bright, a statement, more in detail, of the reasons which have induced me to doubt the correctness of this decision; see vol. ii. of that work, p. 436; and see Stiffe v. Everitt, 1 My. & Cr. 40; and Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 718.

(c) Harrison v. Andrews, 13 Sim. p. 595; see, on this subject, the dicta, 1 Dru. & W. 109-10, and 5 Hare, 325. As to the power of the husband to release the wife's equitable choses in action, see Mr. Jacob's remarks, 1 Bright, Husband and Wife, 75; ibid. vol. ii. p. 451, Appendix; et v. sup. 479, n. (g).

(d) Sansum v. Dewar, 3 Russ. 91; see the terms of the order, p. 93. The general reasoning in Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 476, is against this doctrine, the dictum is in favour of it, ubi sup.; but that dictum, as will have been seen, has been overruled.

make it his absolute property whether he reduce it into possession or not; but it is now fully established that the husband does not by a settlement become a purchaser even of the wife's present choses in action, much less of those which may come to her after the marriage, as against the wife surviving, unless there be a contract to that effect either express or implied (a): if the settlement be expressed, or imports, to be (b) in consideration of the wife's present fortune or of her fortune as specified and described in the deed itself, property afterwards coming to her, and not reduced into possession by the husband, will survive to her (c): but if the settlement is in consideration of the fortune she is, or may be, entitled to, or the contents of the settlement plainly import that, as much as if it were expressed, in such case, if any thing comes afterwards during the coverture to the wife, the husband is considered as a purchaser, and he or his representatives will take it (d). Where the husband has entered into a covenant on his part to settle property on the wife, and he has become unable to perform his covenant, and yet claims the portion of the wife's property which he is entitled to under the articles, the parties who are entitled to claim the benefit of the covenant have, generally speaking, a right to insist on that portion of the fund being applied in satisfaction of his covenant; but if, when he makes his claim to the property, and an adjudication must take place respecting it, the time for the performance of his covenant has not arrived, for instance, where he has covenanted to leave property to a certain amount on his death, then, although he may have become bankrupt, yet, as such is the contract, his assignees representing him are presently entitled to have the wife's property under the articles; but if the time has arrived when the husband's covenant is to be performed and the consideration-money to be paid, the court will not permit the party to receive that which he has purchased without taking care that he pay the stipulated price for it (e).

(a) Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 395; Corsbie v. Free, Cr. & Ph. 72; and see Newlands v. Paynter, 10 Sim. 377; the appeal did not touch this point. A voluntary settlement after marriage cannot be considered as a purchase, Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atk. 448; but see Sykes v. Meynal, 1 Dick. 368. In Cleland v. Cleland, Pr. Ch. 63, the Lord Chancellor seems to intimate, that even if there be an agreement, the fortune settled must be equivalent; but surely marriage is of itself a sufficient consideration to support an actual agreement; and see Adams v. Cole, Forrest. 170; though adequacy or inadequacy may be material in a doubtful case of construction. In Blois v. Hereford, 2 Vernon, p. 501, the Lord Keeper said, "In all cases where a settlement is equivalent it shall be intended the husband should have the portion." The cases are collected in Hill on Trustees, 411.

(b) Carr v. Taylor, 10 Ves. 579.

(c) Salwey v. Salwey, Amb. 692; Garrforth v. Bradley, 2 Ves. 677; Carr v. Taylor, ubi sup.

(d) Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 95-6; Carr v. Taylor, ubi sup.

(e) Basevi v. Serra, 14 Ves. 317; Corsbie

Generally speaking the arrears due in respect of her separate estate before marriage will belong to the wife as separate estate (a).

A wife, by the general doctrines of the Court of Chancery, has equitable rights, independently of contract or gift, as regards real as well as personal property which it may be proper shortly to advert to, before entering upon the consideration of those rights and powers which she may acquire by contract or by gift; and a very late case before Lord Cottenham, where his Lordship reviewed the leading authorities, enables me to do this sufficiently for the present purpose without entering into any minute examination of the cases on this important subject.

It had long been settled that where the husband or his assigns required the aid of the court to get in an absolute equitable interest of the wife in Personalty (b), the court would refuse to interfere excepting on the terms of a competent maintenance being secured to her and her children out of that or other property, unless she already had a sufficient provision secured to her. The court afterwards recognized this equity as inherent in the wife, and therefore permitted her to enforce it by bill filed by herself; and it has been allowed to her even though she had left her husband, there being no imputation on her chastity (c): and though the decisions and dicta on the subject are conflicting, it seems now to be settled, at least in one branch of the court, that the wife's equity attaches to the life interest of the wife as against the husband, though he is living with and maintaining his wife, and consequently against his assignee for valuable consideration (d). If

v. Free, Cr. & Phill. 73-4-5; and see Burridge v. Row, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 583; and Brett v. Forcer, 3 Atk. 405.

(a) Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 67.

(b) Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 477; Like v. Beresford, 3 Ves. 512; Beresford v. Hobson, 1 Mad. 373; Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. 457; et v. sup. vol. i. p. 596; and see Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 18, Sir William Grant.

(c) V. int. al. 2 Atk. 97; Eedes v. Eedes, 11 Sim. 569; and Lloyd v. Williams, ubi sup. The court will not interfere to enforce the wife's equity where the property is under 200*l.* capital, or 10*l.* a-year; Elworthy v. Wikstead, 1 Jac. & W. 69; Foden v. Finney, 4 Russ. 428; though the husband has deserted her; ibid.

(d) Sir J. Leach decided that the wife could not claim a provision out of her life interest assigned for value by the husband, whilst maintaining his wife; Elliott v. Cordell, 5

Mad. 156, recognized in Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & My. 182. The Vice-Chancellor of England, in Vaughan v. Buck, 13 Sim. 404, more fully reported vii. Jur. 338 (the appeal, 1 Phill. 75, was on a different point), ordered the whole of the income of a legacy given to the wife for life, including the arrears, to be paid to the husband, he living with his wife, though there was evidence of ill-treatment and of facts tending to show that he would squander it, and though he had received and wasted a considerable portion of her fortune: he observed that to order it to be paid to the wife would be equivalent to a divorce a mensâ et thoro. But on this case being called to the attention of Lord Langdale, in Wilkinson v. Charlesworth (see 10 Beav. 327, 328, and Marsack v. Lyster, ibid. 324), his Lordship disapproved of that case so far as it went to deny the wife's equity to a settlement out of her life interest in the legacy. Lord Langdale stated that however the wife have an adequate provision made for her by settlement she can obtain no more out of a mere life interest, though the husband desert her or become bankrupt or insolvent (a). The court, as we have seen, from an early period restrained the husband from proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court, for recovering his wife's legacy, by reason of the inability of that court to enforce a settlement, and for the same reason the courts of law repudiated the jurisdiction to enforce payment of legacies by action (b).

But though this equity was long since established as regards the wife's personal estate generally which the husband could not acquire at law, there was some doubt whether the rule applied to a trust estate in lands; and until the decision in the case above alluded to, an opinion seems to have prevailed that this rule would not apply to a case, where the assignees (c) of an insolvent husband had to come to the court to he considered (referring to Pryor v. Hill, 4 Bro. 139; Jacobs v. Amyatt, 1 Mad. 376, note, and Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 12,) that notwithstanding the dicta, and even the late decision in Vaughan v. Buck to the contrary, it was now settled that the husband is not entitled to his wife's life interest otherwise than subject to her equity for a settlement (and see Lumb v. Milnes, 5 Ves. 517; Brown v. Clark, 3 Ves. 166); and on that ground his Lordship held, that the income of the wife's property being choses in action not reduced into possession, belonged to the wife by survivorship, and not to the representatives of the husband or his assignee; Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 10 Beav. 327; and see p. 326.—His Lordship examined and observed upon Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. 15; Bond v. Simmons, 3 Atk. 20; and Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. p. 560; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 17, and Marsack v. Lyster, reported by the name of Malcolm v. Charlesworth, 1 Keen, p. 63; his Lordship added, "considering it to be now settled" (see Sturgis v. Champneys, infra) "that the husband is not entitled to his wife's life interest, otherwise than subject to her equity to a settlement, I find nothing in these cases to induce me to consider that the ordinary practice of the court" (i. e. giving the wife her equity) "is erroneous as between the husband and wife, both living:" Elliott v. Cordell, and Stanton v. Hall, were cited, but his Lordship did not particularly notice those cases (see the add. note, No. 3). There never was any doubt as to the case of the assignees of the husband in bankruptcy, for when their title accrues, the husband has become unable to maintain his wife; see Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 100; Morley v. Morley, 11 Ves. 18. It is not competent to the husband and wife, even by her consent in court, to dispose of such of the dividends of her life interest as may accrue after the death of the husband; Stiffe v. Everitt, 1 My. & Cr. 41; whether he can release such future payments of an annuity founded on a bond with a penalty, is considered in a preceding page, sup. p. 480, n. (b).

(a) Aquilar v. Aquilar, 5 Mad. 415. The general rule is that assignees stand in the same situation as the husband did, Napier v. Napier, 1 Dr. & War. 410.

(b) Supra, vol. i. pp. 194, 581, 676, et v. int. al. Meals v. Meals, 1 Dick. 373.

(c) There have been cases where the court has restrained the husband from proceeding at law to recover the wife's choses in action; see Clancy, 466, 467, et v. ibid. 463-4. In Winch v. Page, Bunb. p. 86, the father had given a bond to his daughter for her portion; she married without his consent: the husband brought an action on the bond; the court in a suit by the father (the obligor) granted an injunction with a view to enforcing a settlement. Mr. Bunbury's objection to this decree is that the husband was a defendant and was not asking for equity. In Mason v. Masters, cited by Lord Northington, 1 Eden, 506, Lord Nottingham seems to have been induced to interfere by the demerits of the husband, he having stolen the marriage. In Pierce v. Thornely, 2 Sim. 178, the Vice-Chancellor is evidently referring to a suit in equity for recovering the wife's choses in action; but see Story on Equity, note (3) to vol. i. p. 851. In Ex parte Blagden, 2 Rose, 251, Lord Eldon held that, even in case of a legal debt, the wife, if brought into court, might insist on her equity; and see Roper, Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 257-8, and 1 Bright, 231-2, and 1 Fonbl. 99.

enforce their title to the rents of real estate to which the wife was entitled for her life, where the assistance of the court was required, not because it was a trust estate that the wife was entitled to, but merely by reason of the legal estate happening to be outstanding, for instance in a mortgagee, the wife therefore having an equitable as distinguished from a trust estate. It was contended that in such a case the wife's interest could not be considered as an equitable interest so as to come within the rule; it was not a trust estate that she was entitled to, but an estate which must be considered, it was insisted, in the same light as a legal estate and governed by the rules of law, the legal estate being out-standing merely by accident. Lord Cottenham has decided that the assignees are bound to make a provision for the wife out of such life interest. His Lordship examined all the principal authorities and dicta relating to enforcing the wife's right against assignees (a), and then proceeded thus:—"From these authorities and many others recognizing the same principle, it appears that the equity which this court administers in securing a provision and maintenance for the wife is founded upon the well-known rule of compelling a party who seeks equity to do equity (b); and it is not possible to conceive a case more strongly calling for the application of that rule than this. The common law gives to the husband the enjoyment of the life estate of the wife, upon the ground that he is liable to maintain her, and makes no provision for the event of his failing or becoming unable to perform that duty. If the life estate be attainable by the husband or his assignee at law, the severity of this law must prevail; but if it cannot be reached otherwise than by the interposition of this court, equity, though it follows the law and therefore gives to the husband or his assignee the life estate of the wife, yet it withholds its assistance for that purpose, until it has secured to the wife the means of subsistence: it refuses to hand over to the assignees of the husband, to the exclusion of the wife, the income of the property which the law intended for the maintenance of both. Upon the same principle, the ordinary interposition of this court in compelling a settlement of the property of married women was originally founded, although the wife is permitted actively to assert the equity as a plaintiff; and if such be the principle, what difference can it make, where the assignees of the husband are applying to this court for its assistance to obtain the property, that the estate of the wife is not a trust, but that the recovery at law is prevented only by the existence of a prior legal trust estate. It happens, however, that in Oswell v. Probert (a), the estate of the wife was the same as in this case; the testator had devised his estate to trustees in fee upon trust to pay certain annuities and legacies, and the trustees were directed to stand seised to the use of his daughter, the wife of the bankrupt, for her life; the estate had, indeed, been sold to pay the prior charges, but it being evident that the trust was subsisting, and the legal estate in the trustee, the court said, that the assignees were in the place of the husband not maintaining the wife, and declared that a provision was to be made for her" (b).

(a) Bosvil v. Brander, 1 P. W. 458; Burdon v. Dean, 2 Ves. J. 607; Oswell v. Probert, 2 Ves. J. 682; Ball v. Montgomery, 4 Bro. 338; Brown v. Clark, 3 Ves. p. 168;

Freeman v. Parsley, 3 Ves. 421; Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 101; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 21; Elliott v. Cordell, supra, p. 482.
(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 422.

As regards assignees in bankruptcy, if they have to come into equity to obtain any part of the wife's property, she will not be excluded from her right to a settlement, though part of her property may on the marriage have been settled for her separate use (c).

As a general rule the court will not settle on the wife the whole of the income of her property as against assignees (d) or against the husband, though he may have separated from his wife without a cause (e). However, under particular circumstances the wife may have the whole of the income of her remaining property settled upon her, as against the assignees of the bankrupt husband, as where the

(a) Ubi supra.

(b) Sturgis v. Champneys, Lord Cottenham, 5 My. & Cr. 105-6; and see 1 Rep. Husband and Wife, 172. In Hanson v. Keating, (4 Hare, pp. 1, 7; and see pp. 8, 9,) the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, though disposed to hold that equitable estates in land were not liable to the same equity as in cases of mere personalty, upon the broad principle of preserving a strict analogy between legal and equitable estates in land, (v. sup. vol. i. 502,) decided according to Lord Cottenham's doctrine, so that the question may be considered as at rest; and see Newenham v. Pemberton, before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, xi. Jur. 1071. In Hanson v. Keating, as before noticed, (pp. 5, 6, 7,) as in several other instances, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram treats it as an established rule, that a person may assert any equitable right he is entitled to by the doctrines of the court, equally as plaintiff or defendant, that is, where he is calling on another to do equity as where he is called upon to do equity, referring to Brown v. Newall, 2 My. & C. p. 558; and Colvin v. Hartwell, 5 Cl. & Finell. 484; nom. Colvin v. Hartwell; see however Bosvill v. Brander, 1 P. W. p. 458; infra, next note; and infra, title "Mortgages."

(c) Burdon v. Dean, 2 Ves. J. p. 607. It would appear, from the case of Bosvill v. Brander, (1 P. W. p. 458,) that as regards debts due to the wife as mortgagee, the court will not interfere as against the husband or his assignees where the wife claims her equity by bill, but that it will where the husband or his assignees come to ask the assistance of the court to get them in; see Sturgis v. Champneys, 5 My. & Cr. 103, where Lord Cottenham states that this is the effect of the case: but according to Sir J. Wigram's rule (Hanson v. Keating, in the last note), as before mentioned, where the mortgage is in fee she ought to be able to assert her equity bill; v. supra, p. 477.

(d) Beresford v. Hobson, 1 Mad. 379; Napier v. Napier, 1 Dru. & War. 407, overruling Brett v. Greenwell, 3 Yo. & Coll. 230, and other cases noticed by Lord Eldon, 11 Ves. 20.

(e) See Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. 597, 600, 605; one-fourth was given to the husband; and see Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 20; and the other cases, 1 Bright, 241. In Bullock v. Menzies, 4 Ves. 798, where the wife refused, without sufficient cause, to live with her husband, the whole income was given to the husband, though he declined to make a settlement.

husband has had large advances made to him by the wife's father, and has had the benefit of a provision made for his wife by her father's will (a). If the husband desert his wife or force her to leave him without a cause, if she be unprovided she will be allowed a maintenance out of her trust property (b). If the wife elope or be guilty of adultery the court will not interfere to give her any allowance (c). Where a person having no property marries a ward of court without the sanction of the court, the court will generally if not always settle the whole of the property of the wife on the wife and the children of the marriage, and exclude the husband from taking any benefit from the wife's property, unless in the event of there being no child, and then only under the appointment of the wife, and in the event of her dying in his lifetime leaving no child (d); but if the match be not unequal as regards the station and circumstances of the husband, and he is willing to bring an adequate proportion of his own property into settlement, then it becomes a question of discretion as to what interest he shall be allowed to take in his wife's property (e). If both husband and wife are subjects of, and resident in a foreign state the court will order payment of a legacy or other sum of money to the husband or wife as they may be entitled according to the law of their domicile (f).

This Equity in respect of property to which she is equitably entitled in possession may be relinquished by the wife by her giving her consent in court, she being first apprized of the amount of the fund and examined by the judge so as to ascertain that such consent is freely

(a) Gardner v. Marshall, 14 Sim. 575, 584, 587; but as to the general rule, see Napier v. Napier, 1 Dr. & W. 409, 410; sup. 485; the Lord Chancellor (Sugden) there said the assignees of an insolvent stand in the same situation as the husband: and see additional note, No. 4.

(b) Watkyns v. Watkyns, 2 Atk. p. 96; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 23, and the cases there cited; Oxenden v. Oxenden, Prec. Ch. 239; and see 1 Bright, 256, et seq., where the more modern cases are cited, and Oxenden v. Oxenden is observed upon.

(c) Watkyns v. Watkyns, 2 Atk. 97; Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. p. 562; Hunt v. Hunt, MS. 1 Fonb. 95; and see Eedes v. Eedes, 11 Sim. 570; and Duncan v. Campbell, 12 Sim. 638. In Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. J. 191, and Alexander v. M'Culloch, ibid. 192, where the wife was living in adultery, the court would not give the dividends of her property to one or the other, but ordered them to be paid into court.

(d) In such case a power for a wife to appoint by will in default of children ought, it seems, always to be introduced; Birkett v. Hibbert, 3 My. & K. 230; et v. infra, p. 492, dictum of Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

(e) Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 303; Millet v. Rowse, 7 Ves. 419; Wells v. Price, 5 Ves. 398; Birkett v. Hibbert, 3 My. & K. 227. "It is the ward's interest, and that alone," said the Lord Chancellor, "that is to be considered, unless the other and subordinate purpose of protection against the husband could be accomplished without any prejudice to the ward; where her interest would suffer, the punishment of her husband, or the restraining the husband from reaping any advantage, is not to be regarded in settling the wife's estate," ibid. 230.

(f) Sawer v. Shute, 1 Anst. p. 63; and see 1 Bright, Husband and Wife, p. 91: v. sup. pp. 13, 14.

and voluntarily given to the property being paid over to her husband or to any other person (a).

The Vice-Chancellor of England had decided in the cases of Hall v. Hugonin (b), Creed v. Perry (c), and Bishopp v. Colebrook (d), that where a married woman had a reversionary interest in personalty depending on an estate for life, if that estate for life were absolutely assigned to her, the whole fund might, on her consent in court waiving a settlement, be paid or transferred to her husband or any one else. "Suppose," said the Vice-Chancellor of England, in the first-cited case, "that a father gives a sum of stock to a trustee for his daughter Elizabeth for life, remainder to his daughter Mary, a married woman, absolutely, and that immediately after his death Elizabeth assigns her life interest to Mary, are not by that mere act both the life interest of her sister and her own interest in remainder vested in her? I do not put it as a case of merger;" and his Honour held that the married daughter in such case, having the whole interest, would be as capable of dealing with it in this event as if it had originally been given to her absolutely: but the two interests have a distinct character, different equities in favour of the wife attach to each; the transfer of the life-interest to the wife cannot on principle alter the character of the reversionary interest; and accordingly in the late case of Whittle v. Henning (21 Dec. 1848), on appeal from a decision of Lord Langdale (e), Lord Cottenham overruled the decisions of the Vice-Chancellor of England, affirming that of Lord Langdale: so that it may now perhaps be considered as settled that a wife cannot be enabled to part with her reversionary interest by this or indeed any other contrivance: we have seen that she cannot part with it by giving her consent

(a) Edmonds v. Townshend, 1 Anstr. p. 93; Bourdillon v. Adair, 3 Bro. 237, and the other cases; 1 Fonbl. pp. 95, 96; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 477. In Ex parte Higham, 2 Ves. 579, Lord Hardwicke refused to order the whole of the wife's fortune to be paid to the husband; he reserved 400*l.* for the wife, though she was in court, and desired that the whole should be paid to her husband: and see Blackwood v. Morris, cited Forrest, 43, to the same effect; but in Willats v. Cay, 2 Atk. 67, Sir J. Jekyll said, "That where the wife gave her consent, it was never referred to the Master to approve of a settlement, unless circumstances of fraud or compulsion appeared:" and see the other cases cited in Sanders' note, p. 68; and such is now the settled doctrine: see int. al. 10 Ves. 90, Lord Eldon; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 475.

(b) 14 Sim. 595, which was decided after

Lord Langdale, in Story v. Tonge, 7 Beav. 91, had thrown out doubts upon the subject.

(c) 14 Sim. 592.

(d) Jur. xi. 793; and see xi. Jur. pt. ii. p. 405.

(e) Jur. xii. 1080, 2 Phill. The Lord Chancellor relied principally on the doctrine laid down by Sir W. Grant, in Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 586-7, and by Sir T. Plumer in Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1; his Lordship observed that there could not be a Merger (Thorn v. Newman, 3 Swanst. 603; Nurse v. Yerworth, ibid. 608); nor, indeed, had the Vice-Chancellor put it as a case of merger. The Lord Chancellor expressed his decided disapprobation of such attempts to deprive a married woman of the protection of the court, and dismissed the petition with costs: all the preceding authorities are there cited. See additional note, No. 3.

in court (a). The wife may put an end to a voluntary agreement made after marriage by the husband to settle property upon her and her children (b). Where a female ward has married without the authority of the court, she will not in general be permitted to waive a settlement being made out of her property (c).

If the husband has received the property, or it has been transferred to him before a suit instituted, it is too late for the wife to apply for a settlement (d); unless in a case of fraud (e).

Where the court directs a settlement to be made, the property is always secured not only for the benefit of the wife but also of her children: but the right of the children is not an independent right; in no instance are the children permitted to assert an independent equity of their own (f), it can only arise, as it has been said by high authority, out of contract or under an order or a decree (g). Sir J. Leach, however, was not disposed to confine the conferring of a right upon the children simply to a decree, and though denying the existence of any independent right in the children, he held that where a bill was filed by the trustees or any other person, so that the discretion of the executors was taken away, and the wife died before anything more was done, still that the children standing in her place were entitled to have a settlement; the decree, he said, does not give her the equity, she has it independently of the decree; the equity of the wife (and through her of the children), said that learned judge, attaches with the jurisdiction given by the filing of a bill (h): Lord Langdale, however, does not acquiesce in this doctrine, and he has held, contrary to the opinion of Sir J. Leach, that the mere filing of a bill, and even where the share of a married woman has been directed to be carried over to the account of herself and her children, does not of itself entitle the children to a settlement if the wife dies without any reference to the Master, especially if no claim has been made on her behalf for a settlement (i). This point lately came before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram. The question, said that learned judge, is not whether the

(a) Box v. Jackson, supra, p. 467, n. (b).

(b) Fenner v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. p. 190.

(c) See the cases, 1 Bright, 248. In Bennett v. Biddles, x. Jur. p. 534, the wife, who had married with the consent of her guardians, though without the leave of the court, was permitted, by the Vice-Chancellor of England, to waive a settlement; the case was not argued, nor were any authorities cited.

(d) Murray v. Lord Elibank, 10 Ves. 90; see Bright, i. 249, et seq.

(e) See Colmer v. Colmer, and Watkins v. Watkins, infra, p. 491.

(f) Lord Cottenham, Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bli. 105; see Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. 458.

(g) Sir Thomas Plumer, 1 Mad. 459, 466; Scriven v. Tapley, 2 Eden, 337, reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, Amb. p. 509, which reversal is approved by Sir Thos. Plumer, 1 Mad. 464, and by Lord Langdale, 6 Beav. 346.

(h) Steinmetz v. Halthin, 1 Glyn & J. 68.

(i) De la Garde v. Lempriere, vii. Jur. 590, 596; 6 Beav. 344; and see Re Walker, Ll. & Gould, temp. Sugd. 324-5.

wife was bound, but whether the husband was bound; if the husband is bound the children are certainly entitled (i. e. if the wife does nothing to intercept their right) (a), and the question whether the husband is bound must be governed by the ordinary principles of the court (b). His Honour said it is clear that an order referring it to the Master to approve of a settlement binds the husband (c), though it does not necessarily bind the wife (d). In the case before him the wife having required a settlement, and the fund having been carried over subject to the wife's equity to a settlement, if any, and it having been agreed that some third person should settle the amount, the Vice-Chancellor held that the transaction was so far complete as to entitle the children to enforce a settlement (e). So if there has been a decree for a settlement even on the wife only, without mentioning the children (f), and the wife has died before any proposal has been carried in, the children have been held to be entitled to enforce a settlement (g); but if the father in such case die before the settlement is complete, it seems that the children have no right to enforce the order as against the mother (h). According to some early cases, though the wife survive the husband, and a decree has been actually made, and the fund be in court in order to enforce a provision for the wife, the husband's representatives will be entitled to it on the death of the wife without children (i). The wife, as will have been seen, is not bound by a decree for a settlement though followed by a reference to the Master to approve of a settlement (k); she may still, whilst the settlement remains in fieri, and the terms are unascertained, waive it, and as the children have no substantive right, her waiver will bar them (l); but if she do not waive an order for the husband to lay proposals for a settlement before the Master, the children are entitled to the benefit of the order, which they

(a) See Fenner v. Taylor, on appeal, p. 193, cited Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 324.

(b) Lloyd v. Mason, 5 Hare, 153: if this be the principle, the mere filing of a bill can hardly be brought within it, nor any thing short of some recognition of the wife's equity.

(c) See Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bli. 101; Anon. 2 Ves. Sen. p. 671; Martin v. Mitchell, cited 1 Mad. 465.

(d) See Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bli. 103-104, Lord Cottenham; Fenner v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. p. 190; Re Walker, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 325; Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. 458.

(e) And see Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. 457.

(f) For it is the constant course of the court to give interests to the children as well as the wife; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 480; Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. 457; 10 Ves. 90; Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bli. 103.

(g) 6 Beav. 345; Groves v. Clarke, 1 Keen, 138; Rowe v. Jackson, 2 Dick. 604; Murray v. Lord Elibank, 10 Ves. 84.

(h) Phipps v. Lord Anglesea, 1 Fonbl. 97, n.; cited 1 Mad. 461.

(i) See 1 Fonbl. 97, and cases there cited: it seems that if a settlement were directed to be made of the wife's property, it would be in those terms; Wytham v. Cawthorn, 1 Eq. Ab. 392, pl. 1.

(k) V. supra.

(l) Groves v. Clarke, 1 Keen, 139; Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. p. 458; and see 10 Ves. p. 91.

may enforce by a supplemental bill (a). If however the wife has insisted on her equity in a suit and her right has been established and the amount ascertained, and nothing remains to be done but the execution of the settlement, it cannot be waived by her. In a suit by assignees of the husband, where the amount to be settled had been agreed upon, it was considered that the assignees of the husband had done what was equivalent to a concession on their parts of a definite portion of the fund to the wife and the children, and that the children themselves had thereby acquired a right of which the mother could not deprive them (b).

If the husband refuses to execute a settlement, the court will order the interest to accumulate for the benefit of the wife, or that it shall be applied for her maintenance if the husband is not maintaining her, unless the husband is starving for want of maintenance (c). There are indeed cases which would tend to establish that the husband in case of refusal to execute a settlement, is still entitled to receive the whole of the wife's income if he be living with his wife and maintaining her, though all seem to agree that where the husband has deserted his wife, and no provision has been made for her, it is competent to the court to provide for her, out of the funds held in trust, a competent maintenance (d). "In general," said Sir T. Clarke, "where the husband comes into court for his wife's property, or any thing which he claims in her right jure mariti, he is obliged to submit to the terms of the court, and make a settlement or reasonable provision out of that. Various instances have been where the wife has insisted that the husband should have nothing, the court has not thought itself empowered to take from the husband the wife's fortune so long as he is willing to live with her, and to maintain her, and no reason for their living apart. Even when the husband will not come in before the Master, the court will not go so far as to do anything in diminution of the husband's right, so as to take away the produce from him or prevent him from receiving the

(a) Rowe v. Jackson, 2 Dick. 604; followed in Murray v. Lord Elibank, 13 Ves. 9; Groves v. Clarke, 1 Keen, 138; and Groves v. Perkins, 6 Sim. 584.

(b) Barker v. Lea, 6 Mad. 330; Whittem v. Sawyer, 1 Beav. p. 593; and see Lloyd v. Mason, 5 Hare, 149. In the first-cited case the bankrupt had bought from the assignees; on the basis of the wife and children being entitled to one half, there was what was treated as equivalent to a release to the wife and children of the other half.

(c) Bond v. Simmons, 3 Atk. 20; Atherton v. Nowell, 1 Cox, 229; in that case the court allowed maintenance for his wife and child out of the fund, the husband being in prison; Armstrong v. Elveridge, MS., 8 Aug. 1791, 1 Fonbl. 96.

(d) See the cases in the preceding note; and Rishton v. Cobb, 9 Sim. 620. Alimony granted by the Ecclesiastical Court is of a different nature; the order is personally against the husband, and does not specifically affect any portion of his or the wife's property.

interest, but constantly where he maintains the wife accompanies the direction for the suspension, with payment of the interest to the husband. It is otherwise where he leaves her unprovided (a); in the latter case the court will lay hands on the money which is in the power of the court, and direct payment of the interest to the wife until the husband returns and maintains her as he ought" (b), and Sir John Leach's decision in Elliott v. Cordell, above cited, is in conformity with this doctrine; but later authorities seem to have established that even where the husband is maintaining the wife, the whole of the income will not be directed to be paid to the husband (c).

An order for the payment of the money into court does not affect the relative rights of the husband and the wife, and in case there be an order for a proposal for a settlement, if either party dies whilst it rests merely in proposal it does not affect the right of survivorship as between husband and the wife where there are no children (d). If the husband survives, though there may be children, the whole must be paid to the husband as the person to whom it belongs by law (e), unless there be a contract, and a proposal made on the part of the

(a) See Gilchrist v. Cator, 1 De G. & Sm. 191; and see Oxenden v. Oxenden, Prec. Ch. 239; S. C. 2 Vern. p. 493; Nicholls v. Danvers, 2 Vern. 671; 1 Eq. Ab. 68; Williams v. Callow, 2 Vern. 752; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 12; Guy v. Pearkes, 18 Ves. 196; Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. p. 597, where the Vice-Chancellor of England stated that he agreed that it was not the practice, in any case, to give the whole to the wife, excepting "till further order;" ibid. 602-4; and see Green v. Otte, 1 Sim. & St. 250; et v. 1 Dru. & W. 410. If the husband has, by unfair means, procured his wife's fortune to be transferred into the name of trustees for himself only, they will, for the above purpose, be considered as trustees for the wife; Colmer v. Colmer, Mosely, 113; 2 Atk. 98: the wife in that case had obtained a decree for alimony, and yet she had an allowance out of the trust property, having been deserted: and see 3 Atk. p. 295, Head v. Head. In Watkins v. Watkins, 2 Atk. 96, Lord Hardwicke made an order, impounding the property of which the husband had defrauded his wife, for the purpose of securing to her a maintenance out of it. In Angier v. Angier, Prec. Ch. 497, the court decreed the specific execution of an agreement made by the husband, who had ill-treated his wife, to allow a separate allowance to the wife; such order to remain in force so long as they should live separate.

(b) Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. 560; and see Bond v. Simmons, 3 Atk. 20, where Lord Hardwicke stated the rule in similar terms; and see Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. 20, to the same effect.

(c) Lord Langdale, in Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 10 Beav. p. 327, said, "he thought it probable that Lord Hardwicke's observations in Bond v. Simmons, and Sir Thomas Clarke's in Sleech v. Thorington, as well as the order of Lord Alvanley in Macaulay v. Philips, were all of them founded on the notion which has since been overruled, that the life interest of the wife was not a subject upon which her equity to a settlement could attach;" and his Lordship considered that Sir Wm. Grant acted on this impression in Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 17. It seems that a bill by the wife for a discovery of acts of cruelty on the part of the husband, so as to found an equity for a larger provision than her ordinary equity would give to her cannot be sustained, it being the subject of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court; Hincks v. Nelthorpe, 1 Vern. 204: mere separation does not give her any additional equity; Duncan v. Duncan, 19 Ves. 394; S. C., Sir G. Coop. R. 254.

(d) Lord Eldon, Murray v. Lord Elbank, 10 Ves. 91; Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. 19; Lord Eldon, in Murray v. Lord Elbank, notices the inconsistency in some of the cases, in respect of the rights of the children.

(e) Packer v. Wyndham, Pr. Ch. p. 418; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & W. 476; Bond v. Simmons, ubi sup. there cited; Scriven v. Tapley, Amb. 509; Harper v. Ravenhill, Tamlyn R. 144.

husband appears to be equivalent to a contract on his part, or a decree or order directing him to lay a proposal before the Master, which is an adjudication, then as before stated and then only the children will be entitled to enforce a settlement (a). Where the wife's fortune is settled for her separate use for life, remainder to her children, the wife, whatever may be her conduct, is not bound to maintain them (b).

We now proceed to consider the powers which a woman may secure to herself, by Contract with her intended husband before marriage; or with his assent after marriage; or which may be secured to her in respect of property coming to her by gift from strangers. As regards the Real estate of the wife of which she is seised or entitled in fee, and over which she has not secured a particular power of disposition, unless it be conveyed by that kind of deed which has been substituted for a fine, it will descend to her heir-at-law, and that more or less beneficially, for the husband may be tenant for life if they have issue, but still it descends to her heir-at-law (c): no post-nuptial agreement can affect the right of the heir though it may bind the husband. The wife however, by levying a fine or suffering a recovery, had, and now has by means of a deed executed and perfected according to the provision of the late act (d), as full a dominion over her property as a feme sole, in fact (having her husband's assent) she becomes quasi a feme sole in respect of it; her conveyance therefore together with her husband to a purchaser for value, even with notice of the settlement, will defeat all limitations in a settlement to collaterals who are merely volunteers (e). A woman, on her marriage, may so settle her real estate, by way of trust, or power over an use, as to enable her, without the equivalent for a fine, to pass it to others, and prevent its

(a) See Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Mad. p. 459. The dicta and cases referred to by Lord Eldon, in Murray v. Lord Elibank, 10 Ves. 91, and in which he overruled the demurrer, raised a doubt as to the right where there were children. Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case above cited, examined the authorities: he considered Lord Eldon's opinion in Murray v. Lord Elibank, to have been founded entirely on the decree, (ibid. pp. 466-7,) though it was in the power of the wife to have deprived them of such right; see 10 Ves. p. 91. The dictum in Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. pp. 18, 19, would prima facie go to the extent that even where a proposal had been laid before the Master, the husband would be entitled, in the event of the wife's death before a settlement was completed, but in that case there were no children; see 1 Mad. 466: and the dictum no doubt had reference to that state of circumstances. It seems now to be established that where a proposal is carried in, the husband is bound; see Anon. 2 Ves. 671; et v. supra, 489; though an agreement by the husband, equally as a proposal in a suit, may be waived by the wife, according to Fenner v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. pp. 193-6; sup. p. 488.

(b) See Sugd. L. of Prop. 171; Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 328.

(c) See Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 191.

(d) Supra, vol. i. p. 169. It is to be observed that the power of alienation by fine did not contradict the common-law doctrine that the wife cannot contract; a fine (like a recovery, as regards tenant in tail,) assumed that there was a title paramount to that of the wife; see Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 587-8; and see 11 Ves. 221.

(e) Cotterell v. Homer, 13 Sim. 512.

going to her heir-at-law (a). If a woman having a real estate before marriage, and either before, or after marriage with her husband's assent, by a proper conveyance conveys it to trustees in trust for herself during her coverture, for her separate use or otherwise, and afterwards that it shall be in trust for such person as she shall by any writing under her hand and seal, or by any writing in nature of a will, appoint, and in default of appointment for other persons designated, or for her heirs, and she makes such an appointment, that will be a good declaration of the trust, and the heir-at-law, and any other person to whom the estate may have been limited in default of appointment will be excluded (b). The giving such a power to be executed by will is usually in order to protect the person to whom it is given, against her own act, a will being revocable till death, therefore where it is to be executed by will only, nothing but an uncontrolled testamentary act will be a valid execution (c). Though the donee may not have executed her powers with all proper forms, yet the court will supply them in favour of a person having a meritorious consideration, in the same manner as if she were sui juris (d): by the late act in regard to wills, as has been already noticed, all appointments by will under powers must be executed in the same manner, whatever may be the formalities prescribed (e).

In the notion of the law, indeed, a wife cannot make a will (f), yet where she has a separate power over her estate she may dispose of it

(a) Of the doctrines as to the execution of powers by a married woman, see 1 Bright, 54, et seq.

(b) Peacock v. Monk, ubi supra; Wright v. Englefield, Amb. 468; Wright v. Cadogan, Amb. 468, 2 Eden, 259, 1 Bro. P. C. 486; inf. 498; Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 228-9; Dillon v. Grace, 2 Sch. & Lef. 463. The usual course with conveyancers, where property of the wife is settled, is to give to the wife a power of appointment in the event of there being no issue, so as to give her the option of defeating the limitations over of her estate, (Harbidge v. Wogan, 5 Hare, 268); and the court, in decreeing the execution of articles, would insert such a power, or, as Sir J. Wigram has said, put it to the wife to say whether she desired that power to be excluded; ibid. In a marriage settlement of a ward, it would seem that such a power ought always to be inserted; Birkett v. Hibbert, 3 My. & K. 230, sup. 486; she may of course exercise it or not as she pleases, so that its mere insertion does not affect any one. A power may be so given to the wife as to be confined to the then present coverture: Mor- ris v. Howes, 4 Hare, 599, affirmed by Lord Cottenham; Burnham v. Bennett, 2 Coll. 261; and see Winch v. James, 4 Ves. p. 386; and Wells v. Price, 5 Ves. 398. In approving of a settlement under the Marriage Act, 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, a power of appointment ought to be given to the wife, but so as not to interfere with the interests of the issue, if any, of the marriage; Attorney-General v. Lucas, xii. Jurist, 1011.

(c) Lord Eldon, Reid v. Shergold, 10 Ves. 379; 11 Ves. 230, 231; 2 Sugd. on Pow. 96; and see, on this subject, Bright, vol. ii. p. 231, et seq.

(d) Lord Northington, Wright v. Englefield, Amb. 473; Cotter v. Laver, 2 P. W. 625, to same effect; Hervey v. Hervey, 1 Atk. p. 567; and see Dowell v. Dew, 12 Law J., N. S., Ch. p. 159, before Lord Lyndhurst (1842).

(e) V. sup. vol. i. p. 473. On the application of the doctrine of supplying defects in appointments, since the late Wills Act, see Buckell v. Blenkhorn, 5 Hare, 131, 142, 143, 144.

(f) See George, dem. Thornbury, v. Jew, Amb. 628.

by an instrument in the nature of a will (a); though the instrument will not have the effect of a will as regards personalty, unless it be propounded as a will in the Spiritual Court, and then the probate is conclusive in this court as to its testamentary character (b). If the wife has not appointed an executor the court will grant administration to the husband, with the paper or testamentary schedule annexed (c). Whoever takes under such will, takes by virtue of the execution of the power, and by the power coupled with the writing, and as if the limitation in that writing of appointment had been contained in the instrument creating the power. But notwithstanding that, and though such writing is not a proper will, it has the effect and consequences of a will to three intents: First, the words are to have the like construction as if it were a proper will: Secondly, such will is ambulatory until the death of the appointor, and therefore though the party taking thereby takes by virtue of and under the power, yet, notwithstanding that, such appointee must survive the appointor in order that he may take; Thirdly, if he do survive the appointor, he can take only from the time of the death of the appointor, and does not take as from the time of the execution of the power (d).

The existence of a power in the wife to dispose of her estate by way

(a) Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. W. p. 623. If a feme covert has a power of appointment by will with witnesses, in order to establish that there has been a due execution of her power, there must be the judgment of the Ecclesiastical Court that the instrument is testamentary; and proof in the Court of Chancery by the witnesses to the instrument of the due execution: Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 376. The court considers that probate was granted of the instrument only as her will; for though formerly it was held that the will of a married woman, not only need not, but ought not to be proved, and that the probate was of no authority, yet it is now settled that neither courts of law nor courts of equity will act upon such will, if it has not been first proved in the Ecclesiastical Court: see Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 153, and Stone v. Forsyth, Doug. 683, there cited. The new Statute of Wills, as before observed, regulates how the appointment is to be attested.

(b) See Henley v. Philips, 2 Atk. 48; Ross v. Ewer, infra; et v. 1 Jarm. On Wills, 24, 33; sup. vol. i. p. 597.; and Douglas v. Cooper, 3 My & K. 378; 2 Sugd. on Powers, p. 18. The late act as to wills has left the testamentary capacity of married women generally as it was; v. sup. vol. i. p. 473.

(c) Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 156, 160; the rule is the same at law: Stone v. Forsyth, Doug. 683, and the cases cited in the note. "It should seem," says Mr. Sanders, (in his note, 3 Atk. p. 161,) "from some of the cases, that the execution of a power by a feme covert is considered as a testamentary disposition and not properly as a will," citing Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. W. 624, and other cases; but he adds, in Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 75, "Lord Hardwicke said, that a feme covert may not only make a writing in the nature of a will, but also a proper will, if such will be made with the consent of her husband." "A wife," said Lord Thurlow, "may make a will of her chattels real and choses in action not reduced into possession, though if the husband do not assent, it cannot be proved; if he do consent, by matter ex post facto or by contract, that entitles her executor to those things which would otherwise belong to him as administrator;" Hodsdon v. Lloyd, 2 Bro. 543. See, on the subject of probate of the will of a married woman, 2 Bright, 61. In Goldsworthy v. Crossley, 4 Hare, 144, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram intimated that if the Court of Probate should refuse the will of a feme covert under a power to proof, on some ground of form, the Court of Chancery might resume its old jurisdiction, and act independently of the Court of Probate.

(d) Southby v. Stonehouse, 2 Ves. 610-12.

of power over an use, only enables her to do an act under the power conformably to the power; dealing with the subject of the power she deals with all the disabilities of a married woman: the same rule applies as regards all cases where there is a mere power (a).

If property, whether real or personal, be given to trustees upon trust for a woman for life for her separate use, and after her death to convey to such persons as she shall in her lifetime by deed or by will appoint, and in default in trust for third persons, she may at once absolutely convey her life interest and appoint the reversion by deed (b). Where a married woman has a power of appointment by deed, and it is provided that any appointment she may make by deed "shall not come into operation until after her death," these words neither restrain her from anticipation nor prevent her from making an irrevocable appointment (c).

It is to be observed that there is a marked distinction between Power and Property. A feme sole, by settlement, in contemplation of marriage, settled part of her fortune, in trust to pay the dividends to herself for her separate use for life, and after her death for her intended husband; and after the death of the survivor, to transfer the capital according to her appointment by will; and in case she should die without appointment, and her husband should be then dead, in trust for her next of kin, their executors, &c., according to the Statute of Distributions. She married, and afterwards her husband died; she then filed a bill against the trustees, claiming an absolute interest; but it was held, that she had only an interest for life, with a power of disposition by will (d). So where a person bequeathes

(a) Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Coll. p. 575; Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 64; Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 532. In Johnstone v. Lumb, (15 Sim. 315,) the Vice-Chancellor of England held that where the trust was to pay the income of the fund to such persons as the wife should appoint, not by way of anticipation, and in default to her proper hands, for her separate use, an appointment could not be made by her by a testamentary instrument, and therefore notwithstanding such an attempt at appointment, moneys in the hands of the trustees at her death unappointed during her life, were held to be "unapplied" within the meaning of the settlement in that case.

(b) Barford v. Street, 16 Ves. 135-9: an estate for life, said Sir William Grant, with an unqualified power of appointing the inheritance, comprehends every thing. In Irwin v. Farrer, 19 Ves. 86, it was held that where a married woman had a power of disposition over the whole fund, her filing a bill to have the fund paid to her was sufficient without any appointment.

(c) Alexander v. Young, 6 Hare, 394.

(d) Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. p. 532; Socket v. Wray, reported in note 2 Atk. 68, and 4 Bro. p. 483; 2 Sugd. Pow. pp. 237-8: Hansen v. Miller, 14 Sim. 22, 27. In this case the Vice-Chancellor of England disputed the authority of Robinson v. Dugate, 2 Vern. 181: there the court held that a bequest of 200*l.*, to be at the disposal of the testator's widow by her will to whom she might think fit to give the same, gave her the absolute interest, so that her administrator was entitled to it on her intestacy (see Mr. Raithby's note). Maskelyne v. Maskelyne, Amb. 750, by Sir T. Sewell, appears to be a direct authority in support of Robinson v. Dugate. In Reith v. Seymour (see the next note) there was an express an estate for life to a wife, with a power to dispose of the reversion by will or otherwise, she does not take the absolute interest, therefore in order to convey the absolute property, at least to volunteers, she must make an appointment in the mode required for rendering the appointment effectual (a): if she has a power to dispose by a revocable instrument she cannot affect it by an instrument not revocable (b). The distinction is slight which exists between a gift for life, with a power of disposition superadded, and a gift to a person indefinitely, with a superadded power to dispose by deed or will; but that distinction is established; and, in the latter case, the property vests. A gift of personalty to A., and to such person as he shall appoint, is absolute property in A., without an appointment; but if it is to him for life, and after his death to such person as he shall appoint by will, he must make an appointment in order to entitle that person to anything (c).

There is a difference in these cases, between a limitation to a married woman or other person for life, with a power, and in default of execution to the Next of Kin; and where there is a limitation, in default of the execution of the power, to the "Personal representatives," or to "the executors and administrators" of such person. The latter is, it has been said, as to personal property, similar to a limitation to the right heirs, as to real estate (d); but a limitation to the next of kin is like a limitation to heirs of a particular description; which would not give the ancestor, having a particular estate, the whole property in the land (e). The husband is clearly not entitled under a limitation to the wife's next of kin (f), nor is the wife under a limitation to the next of kin of the husband (g).

Although in a limitation in default of appointment the words "Personal representatives" may well be construed next of kin upon the gift for life, with a power of disposition, by will or otherwise; see also Bradley v. Westcott, stated infra.

(a) Reid v. Shergold, 10 Ves. pp. 370-9; Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. p. 266; and see Tomlinson v. Dighton, 1 P. W. 149, 171; and Dowell v. Dew, sup. p. 493.

(b) Sockett v. Wray, 4 Bro. 483; Heatley v. Thomas, 15 Ves. 603.

(c) Per Master of the Rolls, in Bradly v. Wescott, 13 Ves. 453; and see Irwin v. Farrer, 19 Ves. 86; see also Tawney v. Ward, 1 Beav. 568, 570. The appointment of an executor is not a nomination of an appointee to take under the will of a prior testator; 13 Ves. 452; but see Goodere v. Lloyd, 3 Sim. 538; 2 Sugd. Pow. 536.

(d) But see 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 212; and additional note, No. 4.

(e) Per Master of the Rolls, in Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 536-7; Sanders v. Franks, 2 Mad. 155; 2 Sugd. Pow. 6th ed. 237-8; 7th ed. 219; see Mr. Jacob's observations on this doctrine, 2 Rop. Husb. and Wife, pp. 211-13.

(f) Bailey v. Wright, 18 Ves. 49, affirmed 1 Swanst. 39; there the limitation was to the wife's next of kin or personal representatives; Kilner v. Leech, 10 Beav. 367; see additional note, No. 4.

(g) Garrick v. Lord Camden, 14 Ves. 381, 386; Cholmondeley v. Ashburton, 6 Beav. 86; Kilner v. Leech, 10 Beav. p. 367; and see Withy v. Mangles, 10 Cl. & Fin. 215; Sugd. Law of Prop. 122.

context, it is hardly possible that "Executors and administrators" should be so construed, for whether the words are construed as words of limitation or of purchase the persons answering that description take in their representative or official characters, and then the fund is to be applied and administered in the same manner as any other assets that come to them in that character (a); unless indeed the direction should be that they should take "for his and their own use and benefit" (b). If a fund be given to S., the wife of C., for life with a power of appointment, and in default of appointment to her executors or administrators, on her death without making an appointment, the fund falls into her estate, and the husband surviving takes it jure mariti (c). Where a married woman had a power to dispose of a sum of money by will, and in default it was limited to her executors and administrators, and she made a will appointing an executor, but making no disposition of the money, it was held to belong to her executor as part of her assets, not to her husband (d).

In a late case a money fund was vested in trustees upon trust for the wife for her separate use during the joint lives of husband and wife, and after the death of the husband in trust for the wife and her assigns for life in case she should survive him, and after the decease of the wife as to one moiety of the property upon trust for the sole and absolute use of the wife to be disposed of as she should by deed or will notwithstanding her coverture appoint, and in default of appointment upon certain trusts therein mentioned; it was held that the wife during her then coverture could not make an absolute disposition of the moiety of the trust fund (e). If an estate be conveyed to a married woman in fee, with a superadded power of appointment, though it was formerly held that the power was merged in the fee (f), it is now settled that the wife has a power to appoint the

(a) Daniel v. Dudley, 1 Phill. 6; reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, 11 Sim. 163. In Bulmer v. Jay, 3 My. & K. 197, (see pp. 200-1,) on a trust in a settlement to raise, after the death of the wife, 750*l.*, to be paid to such person as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment, to her executors or administrators, it was held, under the circumstances, that the next of kin were entitled: in Daniel v. Dudley, (p. 7,) Lord Cottenham said, "That case stands alone;" but the following expressions of his Lordship, in Attorney-General v. Malkin, (2 Phill. 68,) "For the words being only the media through which the meaning is conveyed, it is immaterial what words are used, if we are sufficiently informed what meaning they are intended to bear," and his Lordship's observations on Bulmer v. Jay, in the same case,

p. 67, seem to show that his Lordship did not mean to decide that in no possible case could the next of kin take under a limitation nominally to "executors," at least so as to exclude the husband; see Attorney-General v. Malkin, 2 Phill. 67-8; x. Jur. p. 955 (1846), where the cases are examined by Lord Cottenham: and see 2 Bright, 198, 202, where the cases are collected; and add. note, No. 4.

(b) Sanders v. Frank, 2 Mad. p. 155: but see Stocks v. Dodsley, 1 Keen, 328, as to the general rule; there the legacy was limited to the executors absolutely.

(c) See 2 Bright, 1.

(d) Churchill v. Dibben, Ram on Assets, 712; see the additional note, No. 4.

(e) Nixon v. Nixon, 2 J. & Lat. 416, 421.

(f) Goodill v. Brigham, 1 Bos. & P. 192.

fee (a). If real estate be devised to trustees in trust to convey to a woman at 21, if she, being married, together with her husband file a bill praying for a conveyance according to the trust, no terms can be imposed on the husband in such case (b).

Lord Hardwicke seems to have considered that a feme covert could not bar her heir by a bare agreement, even before marriage, without doing something to alter the nature of the estate (c). "Suppose," said that eminent judge, "a woman having a real estate before marriage, in consideration of that marriage enters into an agreement with her husband, that she may by writing under her hand, executed in the presence of witnesses, or by will, dispose of her real estate, will this bind the heir-at-law? It rests in agreement; and if she does it, though it may bind her husband from being tenant by the curtesy, that arises from his own agreement; but what is that to the heir-at-law? Still she is a feme, under the disability of coverture at the time of the act done; and if she attempts to make a will, the instrument is invalid. The only question that could arise would be, whether such an agreement between her and her husband would not give her a right to come into a Court of Equity after the marriage, to compel that husband to carry this into execution, and to join with her in a fine to settle the estate, either on such trusts, or to such and such uses; and if it is such an agreement as the court would decree to be further carried into execution by a proper conveyance, then the question may be whether the heir-at-law is not to be bound by the consequences of that agreement? But that is the only way in which it could be brought in. But if the agreement cannot be carried into execution, though she might have power to bar her husband, it being a voluntary claim from her, and the law casting the descent on the heir-at-law, it seems it could not be done" (d). However, the cases of Wright v. Lord Cadogan, before Lord Northington and in the House of Lords (e), and of Rippon v. Dawding (f), before Lord Camden, appear to have settled that the husband and wife may by mere agreement before marriage enable the wife to dispose of her real estate during coverture, and defeat the right of her heir (g): as that

(a) See Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 265; Downes v. Timperon, 4 Russ. 334; 2 Roper, Husband and Wife, 181, and the references.

(b) Lupton v. Tempest, 2 Vern. 626.

(c) See, on this subject, Hodsdon v. Lloyd, 2 Bro. C. C. 543-4; the case itself turned on the will made before marriage being revoked by the subsequent marriage.

(d) Per Lord Hardwicke in Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 191; and see Fettiplace v. Gorges, 3 Bro. C. C. 10.

(e) 1 Bro. P. C. 486, 496, 504; Ambl. 468; 1 Fonbl. 113.

(f) Ambl. 566, Lord Camden.

(g) See Power v. Bailey, 1 Ball & B. 49; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 180, 247; Blunt's note, Amb. 566; 1 Sugd. on Powers, 186-7.

which for valuable consideration is agreed to be done is considered in equity as done (a), it is not necessary that the estate should be actually settled so as to give the power. Though a mere parol agreement before marriage between the husband and the wife, that the wife shall have certain specific articles belonging to her for her separate use cannot be enforced against the husband, yet if the property is placed in the hands or under the power of trustees in pursuance of the agreement it will be binding on the husband (b). How far the wife's estate settled for her separate use, or over which she has a power of appointment, may be bound by her contracts will presently be considered.

An infant being entitled to property to her separate use, the court, upon her marriage under age, settled it on trustees, with a power of sale; it was afterwards held that the court could confer no title on the trustees which the infant would not have had, and that the power could not therefore be well executed during her minority (c).

It is to be observed that where a female infant has been made a ward of court, and a settlement of her property has been approved, it is not competent to the husband and wife, by delaying the marriage until the wife has come of age, to defeat the settlement approved by the court (d). Where a settlement has been made on the marriage of an infant, and on her widowhood she does nothing to repudiate it, it will be binding on every subsequent husband, at least if he have notice of it or it be not concealed from him (e); and if a settlement be made in contemplation of a marriage which does not take place, it will not on that account only be held to be void (f).

A mistake in a settlement, as will be noticed more fully hereafter, will be corrected as well as in any other deed. Where one of the parties had executed the deed upon a clearly proved misapprehension of his interest in a fund, and it appeared that he had no intention that the fund should be dealt with, excepting as he was influenced by such misapprehension; it was held that he was not bound as to his rights over the fund by the execution of such a deed (g).

It is very common in marriage settlements, where the property

(a) V. supra, p. 253, et seq.

(b) Simmons v. Simmons, 6 Hare, p. 358; the parol agreement set up was that the wife should have certain articles of furniture for her separate use; it had been objected that such an agreement was void under the Statute of Frauds (§ 4).

(c) Simson v. Jones, 2 Russ. & M. 365.

(d) Hobson v. Ferraby, 2 Coll. 412.

(e) Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 66.

(f) Lady Strathmore v. Bowes, 2 Cox, 28; S. C. 1 Ves. J. p. 22; 2 Bro. by Eden, p. 345; see Clancy, 615-16-17.

(g) Ashhurst v. Mill, xii. Jur. 1035, affirming the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, ibid. 693; here the misapprehension appeared from the recitals in the deed, and the correspondence which passed at the time. The settled is large, to provide that the wife shall receive, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, a certain annual sum for her private separate use independently of her husband, in order to enable her to provide for her clothing and other continually recurring expenses in regard to the ornament of her person, without having on each occasion to apply to her husband : such a provision is usually called Pin-money(a) : this can only be secured through the medium of the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery ; it may be done by a direction to the trustees of the settlement to pay it, or by a term being vested in trustees, upon trust, out of the rents, or by mortgage, sale, or other lawful means, to raise the appointed annual sum, and to pay it to the wife upon her sole receipt, notwithstanding her coverture.

Lord Hardwicke observed that these separate provisions do often occasion the very evils they are intended to prevent : they are not, he said, to encourage a wife to leave her husband whatever his behaviour may be ; for were this the construction, it would destroy the very end of the marriage contract, and be a public detriment. The court appears to have considered that a control may be exercised in respect of a provision of the nature of pin-money in the event of any misconduct on the part of the wife (b). Where the husband articles to settle such and such lands in certainty on his wife, this is a jointure, and not forfeitable either by an elopement or even adultery(c) ; for the law has not imposed this penalty against her enforcing a positive right : the forfeiture of dower is by legislative enactment : prima facie, therefore, it would appear that any certain settled sum would stand in the same predicament. But pin-money is of a peculiar character : where an annual sum is secured to the wife by way of pin-money, cases as to rectifying mistakes are collected 2 Bright, 218, note.

(a) As to what Pin-money is, see 2 Cl. & Finell. 654 ; and as to its original introduction, Sugd. Law of Property, 165, in the note.

(b) In the case before Lord Hardwicke, which called forth the observations in the text, the wife had left the husband ; but his Lordship was disinclined to stop the proceedings of the trustees to recover the arrears of the pin-money, the wife having simply left her husband apparently on excusable grounds, and there being a case of acquiescence on the part of the husband, by payment of the pin-money to the wife after she had left him ; Moore v. Moore, 1 Atk. 276 ; an injunction had been obtained, which was continued on terms : and see Jodrell v. Jodrell, infra. In Moore v. Moore, the wife had been excommunicated in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights by the husband ; but Lord Hardwicke thought that that suit and the offer then made to take her back were a contrivance to give a foundation for his suit in this court ; distinguishing it in this respect from the case of Whorewood v. Whorewood, (1 Ch. Ca. 250,) where a bona fide offer had been made by the husband to take back his wife ; and see More v. Earl of Scarborough, 2 Eq. Ab. 156 ; and Moore v. Moore, 1 Atk. p. 276 ; and 2 Roper, Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 134-5.

(c) Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. W. 276 ; Blount v. Winter, ibid. 277, in note ; Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. 444 ; Blount v. Winter, MS., 1 Fonbl. 94. Adultery is no bar at law to the trustee recovering maintenance secured for the wife by a legal obligation ; Baynon v. Batley, 8 Bing. 256 ; Field v. Serres, 1 New R. 121 ; and see 1 Roper, Husband and Wife, 137 ; and Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bli. 62 ; 4 Cl. & Fin. 323 ; Sugd. Law of Prop. 171.

she cannot do as she pleases with it; it is her duty to apply it, as it is intended, for her own personal dress, decoration, and ornament; the husband as well as the wife has an interest in its being properly applied; and if the wife neglect her duties, the court, it has been said, will reach the moneys in the hands of the trustees to ensure their performance: and for the same reason she cannot make a sweeping disposition of it as she can of her general separate estate (a). It is on this ground, namely, the special purposes to which pin-money is devoted, that the Court of Chancery refuses to call upon the husband to pay the arrears beyond one year unless it appears that he has withheld the payment without the wife's consent and without any implied acquiescence on her part (b): and though the wife may claim such arrears for one year (c), (unless the husband has provided her with clothes and other necessities (d),) as she may of the income of her separate estate though she has permitted her husband to receive her separate income (e), the personal representatives of the wife are not generally allowed to claim arrears of pin-money even for a year: à fortiori, if the wife becomes insane and remains so until her death, if the husband has maintained and clothed her and taken suitable care of her according to her rank and condition, the court it seems will not give to her personal representatives any arrears of pin-money even secured by a marriage settlement, or indeed allow them to be claimed (f). Pin-money is not liable to a deduction on account of alimony granted to the wife, for if the husband and wife had lived together she would have been entitled to maintenance as well (g).

(a) Howard v. Digby, 2 Cl. & Fin. 634; S. C. 8 Bli. N. R. 242; judgment of the Lord Chancellor, v. infra; Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 55, 62, stated inf.; sed v. inf. note (f).

(b) Ridout v. Lewis, 1 Atk. 268; and see Lady Warwick v. Edwards, 1 Eq. Ab. 140; and Cornwall v. Earl of Montague, ibid. 66; Clancy, 379; see Thrupp v. Harman, 3 My. & K. infra.

(c) Offley v. Offley, Prec. Ch. 26.

(d) Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. W. 355.

(e) Parke v. White, 11 Ves. 225; but see Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 11 Ves. 126; and see Bythewood's Convey. by Jarman, vol. ix. pp. 217, 218, note; Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. 444, and see 2 Roper, Husband and Wife, p. 137. Where the wife has for a long time acquiesced in the husband receiving the rents of her separate estate, though she may have made repeated applications for the arrears, unless the husband has contracted to pay them, no more than one year's arrears can be claimed; a promise on his part without consideration is not sufficient; Thrupp v. Harman, 3 My. & K. 517.

(f) See Howard v. Digby, 8 Bli. pp. 246, 250, 252, 271, reversing the decree of the Vice-Chancellor of England, 4 Sim. p. 588; S. C. 5 Sim. 330, where the subject is elaborately discussed. The Vice-Chancellor's decree was founded on this, that the duchess, having been a lunatic, was incapable of giving her consent, so that no case of acquiescence could be raised against her. A distinct ground, as will be seen, which superseded the question of acquiescence, was taken in the House of Lords; but Sir E. Sugden, in his late valuable work on the Law of Property, (pp. 165, 168, 170,) has made some forcible observations upon the doctrines stated in Lord Brougham's speech in the House of Lords in the first-cited case, which are also applicable in part to Lord Langdale's doctrine; and has examined the decision of the House of Lords, to which he objects upon principle and authority.

(g) Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 305.

The wife may acquire a separate right to personal property during the marriage by the consent of her husband; and the husband may clearly make a Gift to his wife which will be good as against his personal representatives (a), though not against his creditors (b): but to establish such a gift the evidence must be clear beyond suspicion: it must be by a clear distinct act by which he has divested himself of the property by transfer to a trustee, or shewing an explicit definitive intention to hold it himself as a trustee for the wife (c): a voluntary promise by the husband to his wife is no more binding than if it were made to a stranger (d): and it is only reasonable provisions for her that will be supported in equity, not a gift to her by the husband in his lifetime of the whole of his substance (e). Lord Hardwicke considered that ornaments given to a wife by a stranger must be considered as given for her separate use (f).

If the husband in pursuance of an agreement on marriage makes advances to his wife for her clothing and the like, and she lays up a fund out of the savings, on his death the husband's creditors cannot touch it, much less the husband's representatives; and if the husband voluntarily makes advances to the wife for such purposes, though his creditors, in case of a deficiency of his estate for payment of his debts, may take them equally as her paraphernalia under the same circumstances (g), his personal representatives have no claim upon them; the husband might have objected in his lifetime that the money was not properly applied, but after his death no one can be a judge of what he might have considered to be a proper application (h). When the husband gives ornaments to his wife, they are generally to be considered as paraphernalia, and she cannot properly dispose of them during his life, as that would be inconsistent with the purpose of the (a) Lucas v. Lucas, 1 Atk. 271; Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393-4; and see Ram on Assets, 213.

(b) Flay v. Flay, 2 Freem. 64; Lady Tyrrell's case, ib. 304; Slanning v. Style, 3 P.W. 339.

(c) Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 92, 104-7, (to which case Mr. Swanston has appended a valuable note as to what is or is not to be considered a donatio mortis causa, ib. p. 101,) and the cases there cited; M'Lean v. Longlands, 5 Ves. 78-9, cited 2 Swanst. 104-6; Ram on Assets, 212.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Darley v. Darley, 3 Atk. 399: this dictum has not been disputed that I am aware.

(e) Beard v. Beard, 3 Atk. 72: a provision, said Lord Hardwicke, is all that the wife is entitled to.

(f) 3 Atk. 393-4; 2 Rop. Husband & Wife, 143.

(g) V. int. al. Burton v. Pierpoint, 2 P. W. 79; 2 Roper, Husband and Wife, 132.

(h) See Sir Paul Neale's case, cited Prec. Ch. p. 44; Lucas v. Lucas, 1 Atk. p. 271; Willson v. Pack, Pr. Ch. 297: and Slanning v. Style, 3 P. W. p. 338; in this case the husband allowed his wife to sell and take to herself for pin-money, the butter, eggs, &c., not used in the family; there was a clear case of acquiescence on the part of the husband: Offley v. Offley, Prec. Ch. 27, third resolution; the wife had invested her savings in jewels, value 500*l.*, the husband was a man of great estate and consequence; and see 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 137-40; et v. sup. p. 479; infra, p. 503.

gift (a). Where the wife lent her savings to her husband on his note to her trustee, it was held that his assets were liable to pay the note (b). The wife's savings of her pin-money, equally as of her separate estate, are not assets for payment of the husband's debts if she survive her husband (c). A defective execution of a power made by the husband to the wife will be made good in equity, but when made by the wife to the husband it will not be supplied, unless there is some consideration, as a prior contract (d).

A wife may also by agreement before marriage secure to herself the profits of her trade for her separate use; and in such case, though no trustees are interposed, the property will be protected against the husband and the claims of his creditors (e). The wife before marriage may with the consent of her intended husband convey all her stock to trustees to enable her to carry on her business separately, and if the husband do not intermeddle with them and there be no fraud, such effects, though fluctuating, are not liable for his debts; it is not absolutely necessary that there should be an inventory (f). If there be an agreement between husband and wife to this effect after marriage, it must be founded on valuable consideration, in order that the property may be protected from the husband's creditors: if voluntary, it will be good against the husband only (g). If the husband desert his wife, and she carry on a separate trade for her support, the Court Chancery will protect her earnings against her husband (h).

Though a trader cannot on marriage secure a provision for his wife in the event of his bankruptcy to the prejudice of his creditors, yet he may in consideration of his wife's fortune convey property to trustees for his own use until his death or bankruptcy, and in either event for the benefit of his wife; it is in the nature of a mortgage to secure his wife's fortune (i).

We now proceed to consider the general doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to the separate interests of married women in real

(a) Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 394.

(b) Spencer v. Latimer, coram Vice-Chancellor, 7 Feb. 1820, (Mad. P. and P.); and see Slanning v. Style, ubi sup.; Tait v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. J. 111; and 5 Ves. 71.

(c) Herbert v. Herbert, Prec. Ch. 44; Willson v. Pack, ibid. 295-7. At law, property bought by the wife, living with her husband, with her separate property, is liable to execution for the husband's debts, Carne v. Brice, 7 Mees. & W. 183; as is property given for her separate use, without the intervention of a trustee; but not so in equity, Newlands v. Paynter, 4 My. & Cr. 418.

(d) Tollett v. Tollett, 2 P. W. page 489; Moodie v. Reid, 1 Mad. p. 521; S. C. 2 Mad. 156; 1 Bright, Husband and Wife, 31.

(e) See 2 Rop. Husb. and W. 165-6, 171-6.

(f) Jarman v. Woolloton, 3 T. R. p. 618; and see Haslington v. Gill, (3 Doug. R. 415,) ibid. 620, n.; Dean v. Brown, 8 Dow. & R. 95; 5 Barn. & C. 336.

(g) V. ibid. 303-331; see 1 Fonbl. 103.

(h) Cecil v. Juxen, 1 Atk. p. 279; Sir J. Jekyll, Lamphir v. Creed, 8 Ves. 599; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 173.

(i) Higginson v. Kelly, 1 Rose, 368.

and personal property, secured to them by settlement or conferred upon them by gift or devise.

Where real estate is settled upon the wife in fee in trust for her separate use without any special power of disposition, she can only dispose of the inheritance by a conveyance duly acknowledged, the substitute for a fine (a). If a woman has a separate estate in land for her life, she may in equity sell that interest (b), and transfer it without a fine or its equivalent, for such a transaction does not affect her heir; or she may dispose of or charge the rents and profits accruing during her life, of an estate settled upon her, whether in fee or for life, in the same manner as she may the income of personal estate so settled (c): and she may absolutely dispose of an annuity charged on land for her life for her separate use without any special power, in like manner as her separate personal property (d). A devise of an estate to trustees in trust for the separate use of a wife, and to convey to her in fee, free from the control &c. of the husband, does not confer on her a power to devise the estate (e).

It was said by Lord Redesdale that a wife, having a power to appoint an estate not settled to her separate use, could not defeat the right of her heir, by means of a mere contract to convey, entered into after marriage (f): and Sir T. Plumer doubted whether a married woman, having a power of appointment, to be executed in a particular manner, could bind herself by a contract to sell the property, and thus in effect contract to execute the power as prescribed; a contract by a married woman being, as he considered, void (g). But though a contract by a married woman is so far void that it cannot found a personal claim against a wife, it may affect her separate estate (h).

(a) 2 Rep. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 182; and see Jarman's Convey. vi. 39, note, 1st edit., where the authorities are collected, and vol. ix. 102, 362. The practice uniformly is to convey trust estates in fee settled for the separate use of the wife by deed acknowledged, and it is understood that she cannot and never could bind her heirs, without a fine or its equivalent, though it has been contended from some expressions in Mr. Justice Rooke's judgment, Goodill v. Brigham, 1 Bos. & P. 198, that where the legal estate was in trustees she might convey without fine. The act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, § 91, provides for the case of the husband being incapable of joining in the wife's conveyance, and for that of his being separated from her, but is silent as to the case of his refusing to join in her conveyance of her separate estate; it is therefore left to the court to say, in each case, whether a power to appoint the fee is to be presumed, (see Doe v. Staple, 2 T. R. 695, and Jarm. Convey. 9, ubi sup.) or the husband, as her trustee, is to be compelled to join with his wife to perfect her deed; or that her conveyance is sufficient; v. inf. p. 506, n. (c), and 513.

(b) Lord Eldon, Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 232; Grigby v. Cox, 1 Ves. Sen. 517; and see what is said in Burdon v. Dean, 2 Ves. J. 609.

(c) Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. 21.

(d) Major v. Lansley, 2 Russ. & M. 355: there her title was in reversion; she was held to be bound after the death of her husband; et v. Sturges v. Corp, 13 Ves. 190.

(e) Doe v. Scott, 4 Bing. 505.

(f) Dillon v. Grace, 2 Sch. & Lef. 463.

(g) Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & W. 424, and see Sugd. V. and P. p. 230; 12 Law J. Chanc. 158.

(h) Grigby v. Cox, 1 Ves. Sen., 517, Belt's Sup. p. 230.

In a late case, where the husband and wife had joined in a written agreement to appoint and convey land settled to the separate use of the wife for life, by way of mortgage to secure a sum of money borrowed by them; Lord Langdale held that the wife was bound by the agreement (a): and, in a later case, Dowell v. Dew (1842, 1843) (b), the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and Lord Lyndhurst, on appeal, after the death of the wife, enforced the performance of an agreement by the wife to grant a lease, she having had a power to grant such a lease: the Lord Chancellor said he thought there was no sufficient reason why her agreement to execute the power should not have the same effect as if she were unmarried, not indeed as to any remedy against her personally, but as to the estate in respect of which the power was to be exercised. It is now settled that the Court of Chancery will not make a peremptory order on a married woman to execute a conveyance of an estate not settled to her separate use (c).

By the strict rules of the common law, as will have been seen from the introductory remarks in this Section, a wife can have no separate interest (d) in her Personal property; as the husband bears the burthen of supporting her and answering for her debts, he has primâ facie a right to her property (e); and as the law charges the husband with all the burthens, it will not allow a fraud upon him, for instance a secret settlement made previously to marriage, to prevail (f). There is,

(a) Sugd. V. and P. 230; Stead v. Nelson, 2 Beav. 245, 1835. In Grigby v. Cox, supra, recognized by Lord Thurlow, in Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. p. 20, Lord Hardwicke enforced a contract for sale entered into by the husband and wife of part of her separate real estate, which she had power to appoint. In Aylett v. Ashton, 1 My. & Cr. 112, Lord Cottenham is reported to have said, "Although a married woman has a power, and the court has jurisdiction over the rents and profits of her separate property, no case has given effect to her contracts against the corpus of her separate estate;" but these expressions had reference to Lord Thurlow's corresponding dictum in Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. 21, that her general engagements will not affect the corpus of her separate real estate.

(b) Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 345, see 355-6, affirmed 12 Law J., Chan. 164; and though the wife could not grant reversionary leases, and the agreement was made some time before the lease in possession expired, that was held to be no objection, the reason for anticipating the time being satisfactorily explained. On the general subject of granting leases of the wife's estates in reversion, see

1 Roper, Husband and Wife, 134-5.

(c) Jordan v. Jones, 2 Phill. 170; there had been a decree for sale, et v. Aylett v. Ashton, supra.

(d) Et v. sup. vol. i. p. 594.

(e) Kensington v. Dollond, 2 My. & K. 188; 1 Fonbl. 99.

(f) Goddard v. Snow, 1 Russ. p. 485; St. George v. Wake, 1 My. & K. p. 610; and see Strathmore v. Bowes, 1 Ves. J. 28; supra; Edmonds v. Dennington, cited 2 Vern. p. 17; Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 66; and Taylor v. Pugh, 1 Hare, 612; a case where the circumstances were special; the earlier cases on this subject are collected in Clancy on Husband and Wife, ch. xiii. p. 614, et seq. Whether the settlement is fraudulent or not depends in each case on the circumstances; England v. Downs, 2 Beav. 522. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in the late case of Griggs v. Staplee, (xiii. Jur. 29,) a case of complicated and peculiar circumstances (v. int. alia, p. 32), offered the plaintiff an issue, with a view to determine whether a settlement, the execution of which was alleged to have been obtained by a third person, was a fraud on the husband's marital rights, and if the issues were refused, indeed, a notable exception as regards the character sustained by a married woman in regard to the Queen Consort, who, in respect to private rights, is considered as a distinct and separate person from the King. She may sue and be sued alone, and in her own name. She can take directly by grant from the King, or from any other person, without the intervention of trustees; and can execute a bond or other specialty, and may convey her estate without his being a party to such security or conveyance (a).

But the strictness of the common law in regard to private persons has been much relaxed by the doctrines which have been introduced by the Court of Chancery, through the medium of its powers, which can hardly be designated to be other than legislative, in constituting and enforcing trusts, as has been noticed in the former volume (b).

An agreement between husband and wife in writing before marriage, as to her real estate, as we have seen, is good in equity, against the heir, even though no trustees be interposed (c); à fortiori it is good against her personal representatives as regards her personal estate. Subsequent marriage extinguishes any obligation on the part of the husband to his wife at law if it be such as to create a debt or demand during the coverture; but it is good in equity (d). Where there is a contract in writing (e) between husband and wife before marriage, that the wife shall have to her Separate use, either the whole or particular parts of her Personal estate, she may dispose of all that is embraced in the contract in her life, or by will, and she may do it either way, though nothing is said in regard to disposition (f); but if there be a covenant merely that the wife shall dispose of her personal estate, this does not extend to what shall come to her after marriage (g). Although the husband, under his covenant the bill was to be dismissed. See the Vice-Chancellor's dictum, p. 31, as to what conduct in the promoter of an improvident transaction will avoid it, though he may have had no fraudulent intent.

(a) 1 Inst. 133 a.; 2 Roll. Ab. 213; 4 Co. 23 b.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. pp. 419, 595-6-7; and see 1 Fonbl. 94, n.

(c) V. supra, p. 498; and see 1 Fonbl. pp. 102, 113, 114, and cases there cited. In Compton v. Collinson (2 Bro. 377; 1 H. Black. Reports, 344), one of the cases cited, it was held that the wife, living separate from her husband, might alone, under the marriage contract, surrender a copyhold estate settled to her separate use; the husband had covenanted to join in the necessary conveyances, but the court considered it necessary that he should join only to support his interest in her estate.

(d) See the cases 1 Fonbl. 102; so an obligation by the wife to the husband continues good in equity, Cannel v. Buckle, 2 P.W. 244; et v. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swanst. p. 319; More v. Freeman, Bunb. 207.

(e) See Simmons v. Simmons, 6 Hare, 358.

(f) See Lord Hardwicke's judgment in Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190; Norton v. Turvill, 2 P.W. 144; Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 369, 375, 379; Parke v. White, 11 Ves. p. 222, (where Lord Eldon considers the effect of the words "to pay into her proper hands," and the like, and observes upon Lord Rosslyn's decision, Whistler v. Newman, 4 Ves. 129); Tappenden v. Walsh, 1 Phillim. p. 353; and Com. Dig. Chanc. 2 M. 11, p. 391, 4th edit. Of the probate of a will of a married woman of her separate estate, see 1 Jarm. Wills, 25.

(g) Pilkington v. Cuthbartson, D. P. 11

before marriage that the wife shall have certain property for her separate use, becomes a trustee for her in equity, he is not so at law (a).

The wife may not only acquire a separate interest in her own property, or in the property of others, real or personal, settled on her marriage, by the marriage contract; but she may also acquire a separate interest in property real and personal by gift, devise, or bequest, and that without the intervention of trustees; and where the legal estate devolves on the husband, or whatever may be the interest which vests in him as husband, he will be decreed to be a trustee of such estate or interest for the wife, in like manner, as it has been said, as, where lands are charged with debts, the heir takes, but as a trustee pro tanto (b); though Lord Cowper had entertained some doubts whether the husband could be a trustee of pure personalty so given (c): the wife has the same powers of disposition over separate estate so acquired by transfer or by will, as over separate estate conferred by settlement, and that without the assent of her husband or of her trustees, unless such assent is imposed as a requisite by the instrument of gift (d).

Technical words are not necessary (e) to confer a separate estate or interest on the wife; the court will execute a trust for the separate use of a wife wherever the intent is clearly and unequivocally declared (f). It has been held that a bequest, (whether with or without the intervention of trustees is immaterial) for the benefit of a married woman, "to her sole and separate use" (g), "for her sole use and benefit" (h), or for her "sole use" simply (i), "for her own use and at her dis-

March, 1711; Harc. MS.; Mad. P. and P. i. 486, 2nd ed.

(a) Izod v. Lamb, 1 Crompt. & J. 44; Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 375.

(b) See the cases 1 Fonbl. 109, n. (p); Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. Wms. p. 316; Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583; the trust was held to attach upon reversionary leases obtained by the husband, and against a purchaser with notice: see Raw v. Chichester, 1 Bro. 198, sup. 304.

(c) Harvey v. Harvey, 1 P. Wms. 126, and the cases cited in the note; S. C. 2 Vern. 659; Parker v. Brooke, supra; Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. W. 318.

(d) See Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. 20; Fetiplace v. Gorges, 1 Ves. J. 46; 3 Bro. 10; and Lord Henley's note: the wife's power of disposition is more fully considered, infra.

(e) Lord Hardwicke, Darley v. Darley, 3 Atk. 399; Lord Brougham, Tyler v. Lake, 2 R. & My. 188. The cases on this subject are collected by Mr. Hill on Trustees, 424, from which Treatise I have received the greatest assistance in referring to them; Lewin on Trusts, p. 117; Roper on Legacies, by White, 1415-17; and 2 Bright, 210, et seq.

(f) Wills v. Sayers, 4 Mad. 409.

(g) Rollfe v. Budder, Bunb. 187-8; Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583; Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. W. 316. The various forms of expression which have been held, per se, to give the wife a separate interest, are collected 2 Roper on Legacies, 370-71.

(h) Adamson v. Armitage, 19 Ves. 416; S. C. G. Coop. 283 (see 2 Coll. 421); Ex parte Killick, 3 Mon. D. & De G. 480.

(i) Ex parte Ray, 1 Mad. 207; own use is not sufficient, Roberts v. Spicer, 5 Mad. 491-2; Wills v. Sayers, 4 Mad. 409, et v. Rycroft v. Christy, 3 Beav. 241; Beales v. Spencer, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 651.

posals" (a), "independent of the control of her husband," or the like (b), "for her own use and benefit independent of any other person" (c), "her receipt to be a sufficient discharge to the executors" (d), and "to be delivered to her on demand," confers upon her an interest for her separate use (e). But where the expressions do not clearly show that the husband is to be excluded from his marital rights, then the wife will not take for her separate use; therefore a mere trust to pay the interest to her for life, without saying, to her separate use, is not sufficient, the mere intervention of trustees never having had the effect of vesting a sole and separate interest in the wife (f). A trust for a wife's "own use and benefit" is not a trust for her separate use (g), nor, according to modern authority, will a direction to pay into her own proper hands for her own use and benefit have that effect (h). The expressions, said Lord

(a) Prichard v. Ames, Turn. & R. 223, Graham, B.

(b) Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 520; Ogle v. Corthorn, ix. Jur. 325; Simons v. Horwod, 1 Keen, 7.

(c) Margetts v. Barringer, 7 Sim. 482; and see Bain v. Lescher, 11 Sim. 397.

(d) Lee v. Prieaux, 3 Bro. p. 381. Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said, where an estate is given to a husband for the "livelihood" of his wife, it was sufficient to show that it was for her separate use, Darley v. Darley, 3 Atk. 399: this case appears to be incorrectly reported by Mr. Atkins, as regards the facts and the decree; it seems to have turned upon the question as to whether the wife was entitled to dispose of the property by will, under a power alleged to have been given to her; see Lee v. Prieaux, 3 Bro. 384: the claimant's bill was dismissed, so that the dictum appears to be of no value, and was so treated by Lord Alvanley, ubi sup.; and see Wardle v. Claxton, 9 Sim. 525.

(e) Lumb v. Milnes, 5 Ves. 521; Dixon v. Olmius, 2 Cox, p. 414: and see — v. Lyne, 1 Yo. 562; but as to this case, see Lord Cottingham's observations, 2 My. & K. p. 183. Other cases are cited in the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's judgment, set forth in the text, inf. Sir Jos. Jekyl, by all admitted to have been a great judge, held that a direction that the wife "should enjoy and receive" the rents and profits, was sufficient in a note signed by the husband forming part of a marriage agreement; "for to what end should she receive it if it is to be the property of the husband the next moment?" Tyrrell v. Hope, 2 Atk. 561: and see Atcherley v. Vernon, 10 Mod. 531.

(f) Lumb v. Milnes, 5 Ves. 517: "It is necessary," said Lord Alvanley, "to show a decided intention that the husband shall have no interest whatever;" Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 370; Wardle v. Claxton, 9 Sim. 525; see the other authorities, 1 Bright, 206, et seq.

(g) Wills v. Sayers, 4 Mad. 409; Roberts v. Spicer, 5 Mad. 591; Tyler v. Lake, 2 Russ. & M. 183; S. C., 4 Sim. p. 144. This was a strong case, for a direction to pay; "into their own proper hands" was specifically applied to the two married daughters, the previous bequests being to them and their brothers and unmarried sisters; though in a subsequent part of the will similar words were used as regards the bequests to others of the legatees. In Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & M. 175, on the son executing any assignment, which he did, or, in case of his bankruptcy, an annuity was to be paid to the wife during the life of the son, her husband; the Vice-Chancellor of England intimated an opinion (and see 2 Hare, p. 50, to same effect), that the wife was entitled for her separate use. Lord Brougham decided the contrary, and even, following Elliott v. Cordell, supra, held that she was not entitled to a settlement; this also is a strong case: and see Beales v. Spencer, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 651.

(h) Tyler v. Lake, ubi sup.; Blacklow v. Laws, ubi inf.: but Lord Alvanley, as mentioned above, gave effect to the word proper in Hartley v. Hurle, ubi supra. In Kensington v. Dollond, 2 My. & K. 184, the words "for her own use and benefit," in a settlement, were held, by Sir J. Leach, not to create a separate estate; but he held, as I read the judgment, that if the husband had been one of the trustees of the settlement they would; but in the case before him a trust for separate use was expressly created in another part of the instrument.

Brougham, must be such as "to leave no doubt of the intention, and which forbid the court to speculate on what the probable object of the donor might have been" (a): in the same case his Lordship said, "If a sufficient strength of negative words is not to be found in the gift or limitation, you are not allowed to fish about for indications of intention from other parts of the instrument:" though in another case his Lordship said the intention may be inferred from the nature of the provisos annexed to the gift, as where, for example, the property is to be at the wife's own disposal, or her receipts are to be a good discharge (b). The doctrine in the first passage above referred to does not appear to be peculiarly applicable to cases of this description; in no case can the court in fixing the construction speculate on the probable intention, as has been frequently adverted to and particularly in treating of the conversion of real estate out and out so as to exclude the heir-at-law; but the last-cited passage, if it means that there must be negative words annexed to the very gift or limitation, does appear to introduce a strictness of construction which is not applied to other cases of gift (c): however, looking to the language of this dictum, it can hardly be construed to mean that if, upon the entire context of the will there be 'a manifest implication that the marital right was meant to be excluded' (d), that that shall have no effect if there be not negative words in the gift itself. Some discrepancy may be expected in the decisions in cases of this description, as the judge may be influenced, in some degree, by his being favourable or not to the policy of breaking in on the common law in the way that is effected by the separate-use doctrine; and what may be considered sufficient where it can be collected that there was a contract that the wife should have her property for her separate use, may not be considered as sufficient where the question depends solely on the terms of a gift. "The cases," said Lord Cottenham on a recent occasion, speaking generally (e), "require very distinct and unequivocal expressions to create a separate interest in the wife. In Tyler v. Lake (f),

(a) Lord Brougham, Tyler v. Lake, 2 Russ. & M. p. 189; and see Brown v. Clark, 3 Ves. 167.

(b) Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & M. 180.

(c) See the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's judgment in Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare, 50.

(d) See Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & M. 180, Lord Brougham.

(e) Massey v. Parker, 2 Myl. & K. 175. The words there relied upon were under her "sole control," but there was nothing to show that they were used in reference to marriage: it is to be observed that Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & M. 175, to which Lord Cottenham's subsequent observations, as to there being no words of exclusion though the intention was plain, apply, arose upon a will; but his Lordship does not intimate that it would have made any difference had it arisen on a contract. Tyler v. Lake arose upon a settlement; Lord Brougham there observes on the words "own" and "sole" use and benefit; 2 Russ. & M. p. 187.

(f) 2 Russ. & M. 183. It is to be observed the Lord Chancellor says the husband is not to be excluded except by words which leave no doubt of the intention, and of this principle the case of Tyler v. Lake, which is also reported before the Vice-Chancellor, and the case of Stanton v. Hall afford a strong illustration."

In the late case of Blacklow v. Laws, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram examined the authorities in reference to the second of Lord Brougham's propositions cited above. "In Tyrrel v. Hope" (a), said the Vice-Chancellor Wigram (b), "there was an agreement that the wife should enjoy and receive the issues and profits; that is the mere legal consequence of the receipt of the money by her; yet in that case the direction that she should enjoy was held to create a separate use. In Pritchard v. Ames a like decree was made by Sir Wm. Grant, (should be Mr. Baron Graham) upon a similar ground; and in Atcherley v. Vernon (c), to the words 'to be by her laid out in what manner she shall think fit,' the same construction was applied. The gift in Margetts v. Barringer (d) was for her own use and benefit independently of any other person, which was held to exclude the husband. Wardle v. Claxton (e)," continued the Vice-Chancellor, "seems to be the case of a gift to the separate use of the wife within those cases; but the Vice-Chancellor said that the direction to the wife to apply the fund for the maintenance of her children as well as herself prevented the case from being brought within the language of the authorities (f)." In the case before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram the words were "in trust to pay one annuity into the proper hands of my youngest daughter Alice, now the wife of James Laws (one of the trustees) for her own proper use and benefit." It is evident that, but for the later authorities, his Honour would have followed Lord Alvanley's decision in Hartly v. Hurle (g), but he said, advertng particularly to Lord Brougham's doctrine, "the authorities referred to place me in this situation, that I must construe the will in this case with the utmost strictness" (h), and his Honour decided that the property was not conferred on the wife for her separate use. There existed in this case as in Tyler v. Lake, this special circumstance, as the Vice-Chancellor observed, that one could not help seeing, looking to the whole will, that his Lordship does not expressly cite the stronger of Lord Brougham's propositions; see p. 181, 2 My. & K.

(a) 2 Atk. 561.

(b) Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare, 52.

(c) 10 Mod. 518, 531.

(d) 7 Sim. 482.

(e) 9 Sim. 524.

(f) See Kirk v. Paulin, 7 Vin. Ab. 96, pl. 43.

(g) Sir Wm. Grant, in Hovey v. Blakeman, appears to have made a similar decree, 9 Ves. 524; see Lumb v. Milnes, 5 Ves. 517.

(h) See 2 Hare, 51.

that the testator did not know the meaning of the terms he was using.

On the whole perhaps it may be considered as the fair result of the authorities that where such expressions are used, in any part of the will, in reference to the bequest in question, as are clearly inconsistent with the notion that there should be any control over the property on the part of the husband for his own benefit, the wife will be held to be entitled to it for her separate use, but there must be words clearly importing exclusion or the husband's marital right will attach on the property. Where a testator gave several annuities to his nieces with a prohibition against alienation or anticipation, it being the testator's intention, as he expressed, that the annuities should be received as some provision towards the maintenance and support of the several annuitants during their respective lives, and the testator directed that the annuity given to the married niece should be for her separate use, it was held that the annuity given to an unmarried niece was not so given as to exclude the marital right on her subsequent marriage; but the husband having driven away the wife by his cruelty, the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce ordered the whole amount of the annuity to be paid to her till further order (a).

A legacy was given to a daughter "to be settled on her when she married, or to be paid to her on her attaining 21;" she married in the life of the testator before 21; it was held that the legacy ought to be settled on her and her children (b).

Where the donee of a power is authorized to appoint with such conditions, &c. as he shall think fit, he may appoint to a daughter, an object of the power, as such daughter shall by deed or will appoint, and for default of appointment to her separate use (c).

Where land is given for the separate use of a married woman the husband can have no seisin so as to entitle him to a tenancy by the curtesy (d).

A personal gift may be made to a feme covert with a restraint on alienation, as will be more particularly noticed hereafter, or with a limited power (e); if property be given to her absolutely for her

(a) Gilchrist v. Cator, 1 De G. & Sm. 191; see, on the last point, Oxenden v. Oxenden, 2 Vern. 493; Williams v. Callow, ibid. 752; Nichols v. Danvers, ibid. 671; Sleech v. Thornton, 2 Ves. Sen. 562; Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. 597, stated infra in this Section; et sup. p. 190.

(b) Young v. Macintosh, 13 Sim. p. 450;

but in Laing v. Laing, (10 Sim. 315,) on the words there used, the daughter having married was held to be entitled to the capital for her separate use, on attaining 21.

(c) Bray v. Bree, 8 Bli. N. S. 568; Sugd. Law of Prop. 490.

(d) Hearle v. Greenbank, 1 Ves. 298.

(e) Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 524; Hyde separate use, and there be superadded words conferring a general power to appoint, this will not in general detract from the effect of the previous absolute gift: an unlimited power to appoint following a gift for life for her separate use, and a limitation in default of appointment to her personal representatives, has been considered as equivalent to an absolute gift (a); but where she is to take the absolute interest only on a contingency, as in the event of her surviving her husband, she has no power of disposition till the contingency happens (b). Where the separate estate is to be disposed of by the feme covert, only in a particular manner directed by the instrument giving the estate, she cannot charge her separate estate, unless it be done, eo modo, as prescribed by the instrument creating the separate estate (c); and she may be restrained from the power of disposition altogether (d). She is in fact only a feme sole so far as the instrument makes her such (e)· so far as the instrument creating her separate estate makes her a proprietor, so far is she a feme sole; and if she has disposed of or pledged her estate according to her power, the trustees must hold it to the uses she appoints (f): if she do not follow the mode prescribed the property will not pass (g); and if the trustees should act upon an attempted disposition not according to the mode prescribed they will have to replace the fund (h).

In some cases it seems to have been thought that a restriction on a feme covert's power over her separate estate might be inferred, but the settled doctrine now is that the instrument giving her the property must contain express words restricting the wife's general power, in order to effect such restraint. Though the trust be, "to pay the money into the hands of the feme covert from time to time, and take a receipt from her," she has notwithstanding an absolute disposing power over it (i). Per-

v. Price, 3 Ves. 437; and see Mores v. Huish, 5 Ves. 694; and the reference infra in this section.

(a) See Frederick v. Hartwell, 1 Cox, 193, and the other cases, Clancy on Husband and Wife, 294-5; the wife's consent in court seems to have been taken in the above case, only because the gift was to her husband.

(v. infra, p. 514, n. (b) and (d)).

(b) Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 580; and see Medley v. Horton, 14 Sim. 226.

(c) Jones v. Harris, 9 Ves. 497; see also Essex v. Atkins, 14 Ves. 546; Lord Strange v. Smith, Amb. 264.

(d) Rennie v. Ritchie, 12 Cl. & Fin. 204; Sugd. Law of Prop. p. 172.

(e) Socket v. Wray, 4 Bro. 483, (11 Ves. 221).

(f) Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. J. 194.

(g) Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 156; Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 64; Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 532-8; Hopkins v. Myall, 2 Russ. & M. 86. Mr. Clancy (chap. vi. p. 294, et seq.) has brought together and examined the authorities where the estate or interest is given to a feme covert with a limited power of appointment.

(h) Hopkins v. Myall, ubi supra.

(i) In Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jun. 194, S. C. 3 Bro. C. C. 340, Lord Thurlow doubted whether the wife could make a sweeping appointment where the words were that "the rents or interest" should be paid to her from time to time; but subsequent decisions have overruled that doubt: see Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 434; Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Mer. 487; Witts v. Dawkins, 12 Ves. 501; Browne v. Like, 14 Ves. 302; and see Parkes v. White, infra.

sonal property, where it is enjoyed separately, unless the wife is restricted as to the mode of alienation, or as to giving receipts (a), will be so, generally speaking, with all the incidents of property (b); the court, it has been said, will never encourage the locking up of property, which would be the case if separate property could not be disposed of (c). A married woman therefore is to be considered as a feme sole in respect of such her absolute separate property (d): she may charge or convey away personal property settled for her separate use, whether in possession or reversion, and her life interest in real estate (e): nor is it necessary that the trustee should join in the conveyance (f), unless his assent is expressly rendered necessary by the instrument giving her that property (g). She may grant an annuity out of her separate estate and it will be effectual, though her trustees, disapproving of the purpose, may have given notice to the purchaser previously to the completion that they will not pay it to him (h).

(a) If the trust is to pay the rents and profits or interest to her upon any instrument signed by her since the last payment, an instrument signed before will not be sufficient; Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. J. 193, Lord Thurlow. Sir Edward Sugden, on Powers, i. p. 207, et seq., 7th edit., has examined into the distinctions between what upon the authorities is an unalienable personal trust and what is a power of disposition. As to what words will and what will not amount to a restriction on alienation, see Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 520; Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 220; Glyn v. Baster, 1 Yo. & J. 329; Lee v. Muggeridge, 1 Ves. & B. 118; Sturgis v. Corp, 13 Ves. 190; and Mores v. Huish, 5 Ves. 692; and Sockett v. Wray, 4 Bro. p. 483. The authorities on this subject are brought together and observed upon in The Methodist Episcopal Chapel v. Jaques, by Chancellor Kent, U. S.; see 3 Johns, C. Rep. 85-114; and on appeal; referred to, Story on Equity, § 1391, n., which the practitioner may usefully consult: the cases are also stated and examined by Mr. Clancy, p. 289, et seq.

(b) Felliplace v. Gorges, 3 Bro. C. C. 10.

(c) Standford v. Marshall, 2 Atk. 69; case of charge on rents of real estate: and see Allen v. Papworth, 1 Ves. 163; and the other cases referred to by Mr. Sanders; and Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112, infra.

(d) Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. C. C. 21; see 11 Ves. 221-2; and Nantes v. Corrock, 9 Ves. 188; Lillia v. Airey, 1 Ves. Jun. 278; Pybus v. Smith, 3 Bro. C. C. 346; Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. Sen. 191; Sockett v. Wray, 4 Bro. C. C. 486; S. C. note to 2 Atk. 68; Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 524; Witts v. Dawkins, 12 Ves.

501; Sturgis v. Corp, 13 Ves. 190; Heatley v. Thomas, 15 Ves. 596.

(e) Int. alia, see Chesslyn v. Smith, 8 Ves. 183; and Brown v. Like, 14 Ves. 302; Essex v. Atkins, ubi infra; Glyn v. Baster, 1 Yo. & J. 329; and Sturgis v. Corp, 13 Ves. 190, (a case of a reversionary interest in stock,) as to personal estate; and int. al. Acton v. White, 1 Sim. & S. 429, 432 (a leading case), where the words were that "the receipt of the wife alone of what should be paid to her proper hands should be a sufficient discharge;" Witts v. Dawkins, 12 Ves. 501; and Stead v. Nelson, 2 Beav. 245; and Medley v. Horton, 14 Sim. 222-6, as to real estate: but as to the last case, it may be contended (see viii. Jur. part ii. p. 383,) that in this case, under the special terms, there was a restriction on alienation. The doctrine as to reversionary interests in choses in action, has no application to reversionary interests settled for the separate use of the wife: see Stead v. Nelson, 2 Beav. 248; et v. sup. p. 504.

(f) 1 Ves. 518: "notwithstanding Lord Rosslyn's doubt, the established doctrine is, that a married woman can bind her separate property without her trustees, unless their assent is rendered necessary by the instrument giving her the property;" Sir Wm. Grant, Essex v. Atkins, 14 Ves. 547.

(g) Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. J. 193-4; Essex v. Atkins, 14 Ves. 547.

(h) Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 524; Essex v. Atkins, 14 Ves. 542, overruling Mores v. Huish, 5 Ves. 693; Power v. Bailey, 1 Ball & B. p. 49; in these cases the annuities were expressly or by implication charged on the separate estate, but now perhaps that would not

Doubts have been entertained (a), whether a feme covert could part with her separate estate in favour of her husband, but the authorities have established that she may (b). If she enables her husband to receive her separate income, or acquiesces in his receiving it, any balance of such separate income remaining at his banker's, at his death, will belong to his estate, not in favour of creditors only but of legatees, as a gift to him will be implied (c). Where money was vested in trustees, in trust for husband and wife successively for life, remainder to their children, and in default of children to such person as the wife should appoint, a deed of the wife conveying and appointing this contingent interest, to raise money to relieve the husband was, upon a bill filed for that purpose, established (d). The wife cannot, however, transfer to her husband personal property settled in trust for her absolutely on her surviving her husband (e). In one case, where a legacy was given to the wife for her separate use during her life, with remainder to such person and for such uses as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment to her executors, it was ordered, upon her consent, to be paid to her husband (f); but this case has been subsequently overruled, the power of disposition in such case only extends to a disposition by will (g). If a wife charge her estate with the payment of her husband's debts, or apply her separate estate to such purpose, and it does not appear to have been intended by her as a gift to her husband; the Court of Chancery will decree that the husband's assets be applied in be considered to be necessary. Where money was given in trust for a feme covert for life for her separate use, and after her death to her children, it was held, that though she might contract to raise money by loan, she could not by way of annuity for her own life, that being too large an anticipation; and leave was given to redeem the annuity from the beginning, though made irredeemable; Caverly v. Dudley, 3 Atk. p. 541; this case is hardly reconcileable with the current of authorities, for there was apparently no restriction in the will.

(a) By Sir J. Leach, Vice-Chancellor; and see Whistler v. Newman, 4 Ves. p. 129; and Lord Eldon's observations, 11 Ves. 223-4.

(b) Freeman v. More, 1 Bro. P. C. p. 237; Milnes v. Busk, 2 Ves. Jun. 498; and see Pawlet v. Delaval, 2 Ves. 670; Ellis v. Atkinson, 3 Bro. 565; see also Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 209, 222. In Frederick v. Hartwell, 1 Cox, 193, a sum of money in the funds being given by will to trustees for the separate use of a feme covert, and to be subject to her appointment after her death; the wife made an appointment of this money to her husband; and on a bill filed by husband and wife against the trustees to transfer this fund, the court, on examination of the wife, decreed the same; v. inf. n. (d). That a feme covert's separate estate may be bound by a contract of which her husband is to enjoy the benefit; see Masters v. Fuller, 4 Bro. C. C. 19; S. C. 1 Ves. Jun. 513; Standford v. Marshall, 2 Atk. 69; and Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 524.

(c) Beresford v. Abp. of Armagh, 13 Sim. 650; and see Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 155.

(d) Guise v. Small, 1 Anst. 277. The money was ordered into court, to answer the contingent trusts of the settlement, and the wife's consent in court being taken, the deed was established: the examining the wife appears to have been to ascertain whether coercion had been used. The cases on this subject are collected by the Vice-Chancellor of England, 4 Sim. p. 93.

(e) Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 580.

(f) Newman v. Cartony, note 1 to Willats v. Cay, 2 Atk. 68; and 4 Bro. 485.

(g) Socket v. Wray, note 1 to Willats v. Cay, 2 Atk. 68; S. C. 4 Bro. C. C. 486.

exoneration of her estate, or in repayment of the money advanced; evidence of her declarations may be received (a).

As regards the Liability of the Separate estate of the wife. It has been held that if she give a note (b), bill (c), or bond (d), or enter into an agreement (e) to pay, the Court of Chancery acting on the implied intent—for otherwise such documents could have no operation—will decree a satisfaction by the trustees out of her separate property including the rents of her separate real estate (f). It is not necessary that she should make a direct reference to her separate estate: “I apprehend,” said Lord Langdale in a late case, “there are many ways in which a married woman may render her separate estate liable to a charge, without having in the transaction made any direct charge on or made reference to the property settled to her separate use” (g). The bond or other instrument is an acknowledgment of the debt, and takes effect upon the interest in the separate estate by way of trust; but a bond of a married woman is void as a bond, and gives no priority (h). Several eminent judges have considered that the rents of her real estate may, as so much money, be charged by her parol promise not in writing, though this has been a subject of doubt (i).

(a) Huntington v. Huntington, 2 Vern. 437; 1 Bro. P. C. 1; Pocock v. Lee; S. C. 2 Vern. 604; Tate v. Austin, 1 P. W. 264; 2 Vern. 689; Parteriche v. Powlet, 2 Atk. 384; see also Clinton v. Hooper, 1 Ves. J. 185-8; 3 Bro. 545; Astley v. Earl of Tankerville, 3 Bro. 545; and Innis v. Jackson, 16 Ves. 366; 1 Fonbl. 102-3; Lewis v. Nangle; S. C. Ambl. 150; 1 Cox, 240; and see Mr. Blunt's notes, pp. 150-1; et v. supra, p. 306.

(b) Bullpin v. Clarke, 17 Ves. 365; Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112-13; Murray v. Barlee, 3 M. & K. 224; Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 562, where the rule was held good against an appointment by the wife to her husband.

(c) Stuart v. Lord Viscount Kirkwall, 3 Mad. 387.

(d) Standford v. Marshall, 2 Atk. 69, and the cases in the note; Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. 16; S. C. 2 Dick. 560; Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 193; Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. Wms. 144; approved in Socket v. Wray, 4 Bro. p. 486; Heatley v. Thomas, 15 Ves. 596; Murray v. Barlee, ubi infra.

(e) Master v. Fuller, 1 Ves. J. 513; S. C. 4 Bro. C. C. 19; Grigby v. Cox, 1 Ves. Sen. 517; and see the cases cited, 3 My. & K. 223.

(f) In Staniford v. Marshall, and Hulme v. Tenant, the rents of the separate estate were held liable, though there was no specific reference to them in the writing given by the married woman. In Briscoe v. Kennedy, July 21, 1762, Rolls, Mad. MS., a creditor of the wife in respect of a debt contracted before marriage, was decreed a satisfaction out of her separate estate after the outlawry of her husband.

(g) Crosby v. Church, 3 Beav. p. 485; see also Tullett v. Armstrong, add. note, No. 5.

(h) Norton v. Turvill, ubi sup.; Anon. 18 Ves. 258; and see Ram on Assets, 709; Allen v. Papworth, 1 Ves. 163; Lillia v. Airey, 1 Ves. J. 277; Greatley v. Noble, 3 Madd. 94; Stuart v. Lord Kirkwall, ubi sup.; Anon. Mosely, 328; Anon. 18 Ves. 258; and see Owens v. Dickenson, sup. p. 324.

(i) In Clinton v. Wills (1820), (Sugd. on Pow. vol. i. p. 208; and 2 Rep. Husband and Wife by Jacob, p. 245,) Sir T. Plumer was of opinion that it made no difference whether the debt was secured by writing or not, as the estate was not to be charged, only the rents as received. Sir T. Clarke, in Clerk v. Miller (2 Atk. 379), doubted whether there must not be a writing to affect the rents of real estate. Sir T. Plumer's opinion has been sanctioned in later cases; see Owens v. Dickinson, Cr. & Phill. 48; v. supra, p. 324; and Lord Brougham's judgment in Murray v. Barlee, 3 My. & K. 225; infra, p. 516: the separate property there was real estate; Mr. Jacob (2 Rep. Husband and Wife, p. 244,) considered

Where the wife has an interest as well as a power, and where the estate is limited to her separate use in default of appointment, her estate may be affected by her acts, though not such as to amount to an appointment (a).

It was held by Sir John Leach that the separate property of a feme covert is not subject to General demands upon her (b), without any charge on her part, either express or implied: this is consistent with the holding her to be a feme sole as to her separate estate, for in that character no part of her property would be specifically liable without some charge or security upon it: however by reason that her dealings cannot be considered as entered into in respect of any personal responsibility, the course of modern authority has been in favour of holding that all her dealings must be considered as entered into in reference to her separate property, and Lord Cottenham seems to consider it as actually established that her separate property is liable for general demands upon her equally as where she has given a written promise (c).

In the late case of Callow v. Howle (1847) (d), the question was whether an attorney who had been employed to do business in respect of the wife's separate estate could proceed directly against her and her trustees, to be paid out of her separate estate. The bills had been made out as against and delivered to the husband, and the attorney had proceeded against him to recover payment. "In my judgment," said the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, "the mere circumstance of the business being done in respect of the separate property of a married woman vested in trustees is insufficient to show that the property of a married woman is liable directly to the attorney for the expenses incurred in respect of that property; the trustees may be that (of course in reference to the Statute of Frauds, citing Clerk v. Miller, sup.) her separate estate in land could not be affected by parol. The court in no case will charge the corpus of a married woman's separate estate in respect of her general obligations; Aylett v. Ashton, 1 My. & Cr. 112; 9 Ves. p. 189; 1 Mad. 264; supra, p. 505, n. (a).

(a) Handford v. Marshall, ubi sup.; Bulpin v. Clarke, 17 Ves. p. 365; Wainwright v. Hardisty, 2 Beav. 364.

(b) See Greatley v. Noble, 3 Mad. Rep. 79; Stuart v. Lord Viscount Kirkwall, ibid. 387; Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Mad. 418; but see the early case of Kenge v. Delavall, 1 Vern. 326; and see, on this subject, Ram on Assets, 711, note (k); and Roper on Husband and Wife, by Bright, ii. p. 251, et seq.; and the later cases, cited infra.

(c) In Murray v. Barlee, 3 My. & K. 209, 4 Sim. 82 (in which case the rents of the separate real estate were held liable under a general promise contained in letters to the solicitor of the married woman, not referring to her separate property, v. ibid. pp. 212, 220, 224, 225,) Lord Brougham stated that it was not necessary that there should be a written promise. Lord Cottenham, in Lord v. Wightwick, 2 Phill. 111, cites Murray v. Barlee, in reference to this dictum, as if he considered the doctrine as settled, though the point was not argued in that case; and in Owens v. Dickinson, Cr. & Ph. 54, his Lordship intimated the same opinion, though there also it was not a decision; see 1 Sugd. Pow. 206.

(d) Jur. xi. 986.

liable, but it does not, in my opinion, follow that the property of the wife, or that the wife in respect of the property, is necessarily liable." "Here," added his Honour, "is an absence of any proof of liability, and an absence of any ground of inference of liability." In this case, as will have been observed, there were circumstances which showed that the attorney had not done the business upon the wife's responsibility, but the general observations would tend to show that the learned judge did not consider that the law was settled that her estate should be liable for general demands upon her (a).

There is no case where a demand against a married woman, arising out of a fraud, has been decreed to be satisfied out of her separate estate (b); it is impossible to imply a contract to answer out of her separate estate in respect of such a transaction: and it has been held that the wife's separate estate is not liable for moral obligations, though of such a nature as to found the equitable action of assumpsit: where a feme covert granted an annuity charged upon her separate property, and the annuity, owing to the fault of the grantee, failed, it was held that the separate estate was not liable for the consideration money, and that there was no equity specifically to affect the fund (c). In Kingham v. Lee (1846) (d), the testator devised his freehold estates to his wife for life, she keeping the buildings thereon in good repair and doing no manner of waste; she afterwards married again and her husband committed waste; it was contended on the authority of Sir J. Leach's doctrine in Lord Ormonde v. Kynersley (e), that this condition was in the nature of a trust and that the estate of the wife was liable for the acts committed by her husband as her transferree: the Vice-Chancellor of England held, that the condition was not a trust, and that her separate estate was not liable for the acts of her husband (f).

According to the opinion of Sir J. Leach, if the wife having separate estate enter into a general contract to purchase real estate, the purchaser can not, though it be in writing, enforce the payment of the purchase-money out of her separate estate, such a general contract

(a) The question whether the trustees might reimburse themselves was not before the court.

(b) See Greatley v. Noble, 3 Mad. 79; and what is said by the Lord Chancellor in Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Mer. 488.

(c) Jones v. Harris, 9 Ves. 486, 497; see also Duke of Bolton v. Williams, 2 Ves. J. 138; Sperling v. Rochfort, 8 Ves. 164; Socket v. Wray, 4 Bro. C. C. 486; Aquilar v. Aquilar, 5 Mad. 415.

(d) 15 Simons, 396.

(e) 5 Mad. 369.

(f) 15 Sim. 401, sup. 305. The V.-Ch. observed in this case, that where the wife sustains a fiduciary character as executrix or administratrix, she surviving may be sued as well as the representatives of the husband for a breach of trust committed during coverture; ibid. 401. In Clough v. Dixon, 8 Sim. 594, there referred to, the question was not decided, nor was it noticed on the appeal; 3 My. & Cr. 490.

not constituting a charge (a); but this is not reconcilable with the subsequent authorities, which have established that a reference to the wife's separate estate is not necessary in order to bind it (b); and on this ground Lord Chancellor Plunket has since held that the contract is good, and in effect that her separate estate is liable to pay the purchase-money (c).

As regards the liability of the wife's separate estate to general demands upon her after her death (d). If she were to be considered in the condition of a feme sole at her death—as she is generally speaking, as we have seen, during her life—and if the analogy of the common law were followed, even though it should be held that her estate is not liable for general demands upon her during her life, an intelligible and practical rule might be established, favoured by some of the cases, and not, as far as it appears, in conflict with any of the authorities now considered as binding (e). Real estate must of course be put out of the question; for in respect of the wife's real estate there is no analogy to the doctrines of the common law or the statutory enactments affecting real estates with debts, for the real estate of the wife cannot be affected, excepting by an actual conveyance or an appointment under a power, which in the case we are considering it is assumed does not exist. But taking the analogy of the common law as to Personal

(a) Chester v. Platt, Sugd. V. and P. 232, 11th ed.

(b) And see the dicta of Lord Thurlow, in Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. 16.

(c) Dowling v. Maguire, Llo. & G. temp. Plunk. 1; see p. 19. It is to be observed however that it was the purchaser who refused to perform the contract, the objection did not come from the wife's representatives; the separate estate of the wife in that case was a jointure, and as she was dead, the separate estate out of which the purchase-money was to come had ceased to exist; but the heir of the wife, who was the plaintiff, offered to pay the purchase-money.

(d) Lord Cottenham, in his judgment in Owens v. Dickenson, supra, p. 324, intimates that questions might arise in respect of what would be considered as debts due in regard to her separate estate; his words are "the authorities are very vague as to what are to be considered as debts in this sense;" that is, under a charge in the will of a married woman; Cr. & Phill. 55.

(e) In Court v. Jeffery, 1 Sim. & St. 106, Sir T. Plumer held that the appointees of the wife were necessary parties, because they could not be defeated by debts, but that was not a case of the administration of separate estate; Mr. Jacob seems to have misapprehended this case, Rop. Husband and Wife, 245. Since the stat. 1 Vict. c. 110, the objection in Nantes v. Corrock, 9 Ves. p. 189, that stock could not be taken in execution, no longer exists. Lord Eldon's observations in Jones v. Harris, 9 Ves. 497, have reference to specifically charging the separate estate of a married woman in her lifetime. Sir J. Leach's doctrine in Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Mad. p. 418, founded on the assumption that the property of a married woman can only be affected by some act of hers in the nature of an appointment, may now be considered as overruled; v. supra. In Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. W. p. 145, the Master of the Rolls says, with reference to any specific charge, "All the separate estate of a feme covert is a trust for the payment of debts;" and being such a trust, he held that the Statute of Limitations could not be pleaded, the feme was dead. In Court v. Jeffery, 1 Sim. & St. p. 105, the feme covert was living; Lord Thurlow's language in Lillia v. Airey, 1 Ves. Jun. p. 277, would seem to show that in his opinion that would make no difference. See Nurse v. Craig, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 162-3, judgment of Mansfield, C. J.

estate, and treating the wife and her personal representatives, as regards her separate personal estate, as being in the same condition as they would have been had she been a feme sole, her personal estate ought, as it is conceived, to be liable for all her engagements. By the common law, during the life of a person no creditor has any lien on any part of the personal estate of his debtor, without a contract being entered into to that effect; but on his death the whole of his personal estate is liable for the payment of his debts; it would therefore be perfectly consistent to hold (a), that during the life of the feme covert there must be a contract, express or implied, in order to charge the separate estate, but that after her death the simple fact of the contracting of a debt, that is the existence of such circumstances as in case she had been a feme sole would have made her a debtor, should be sufficient, as has been supposed to have been Sir Wm. Grant's opinion from the expressions he made use of in the anonymous case in 18 Ves. above referred to (b). If it should be objected that the person would have a remedy on the death of the married woman which he would not have during her life, this is no more than would have happened, as regards her property, (excepting through the medium of judgment and execution,) in case she had been a feme sole: the exceptions which have been established, exonerating her from particular liabilities to which she would have been liable if a feme sole, might be retained (c). If this analogy be not fully borne out by the authorities as they stand, it requires but little of Chancery legislation to accomplish it, and it is entirely by assuming what is equivalent to legislative authority, that the doctrines as to the wife's separate estate exist as they stand (d). If however it is to be considered as established that the separate estate is liable for general demands even during the life of the wife, and such, as before stated, seems to be Lord Cottenham's opinion, that would seem to settle the matter whether the wife be dead or alive; and undoubtedly in point of honesty and justice it would be the most satisfactory course, for,

(a) See 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, pp. 235, 243; supra, p. 516; Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Mad. 418.

(b) And see Gregory v. Lockyear, 6 Mad. 90, though in neither case was any question raised as to what were debts of the wife. From the argument of Lord Cottenham, in Murray v. Barlee, (3 My. & K. 214,) and his Lordship's judgment in Owens v. Dickinson, before referred to, it is pretty clear, as before noticed, that his Lordship's opinion is in favour of this view; indeed, that the separate estate is liable even during her life. In Gregory v. Lockyear the Vice-Chancellor doubted whether the funeral expenses could be thrown upon the estate of the wife; in Bertie v. Lord Chesterfield, 9 Mod. 31, it was decided that they could not.

(c) Supra, p. 517; it is however to be observed that if a feme covert obtain a transfer of a fund to her trustees by fraud, and the fund remains in specie, it may be followed; Greatley v. Noble, 3 Mad. 79.

(d) V. supra, et inf. p. 525.

generally speaking, her separate estate, and particularly as regards real estate, is extinguished on her death.

The wife, so long as she continues to be a wife, may be absolutely restrained by the terms of the trust from Alienating by Anticipation the rents, dividends, or interest of the property which is given or secured for her separate use (a). The wife, or those claiming under her, can only claim any payments to be made to her in her separate character as the execution of a trust; it would be no execution of a trust if the terms of the trust were not pursued. "A feme covert," said Lord Eldon, "having power to aliene" (which she cannot do at law (b)), "is a mere creature of equity to the extent to which the settlement constitutes her a feme sole and no further" (c); if, therefore, she attempts to aliene in a manner prohibited by or not authorized by the settlement, she is acting as a feme sole without any authority. The qualification of the power of disposition by prohibiting anticipation, though contrary to the general rules of law, was introduced and has been supported by the Court of Chancery, in order to secure to the wife the desired protection against the marital rights, a simple gift to her separate use having been found to be ineffectual for that purpose (d). Such a prohibition is, as we have seen, void as against a man or an unmarried woman (e); each of them has the capacity to take and to aliene by the general law of the land, it is not given by the Court of Chancery; the Court of Chancery has therefore followed the law in treating all attempts simply to restrain alienation of trust property by a person sui juris as absolutely void (f). Every adult unmarried woman being a cestui que trust is entitled to call upon the trustees to convey to her the legal estate, if she is the only cestui que trust; and if it be necessary that the legal estate should remain in the trustee for the security of other persons (g), the office of trustee, as regards the legal estate, is limited by the purpose for which it remains in him; as regards the person immediately interested, he is a mere instrument, and subservient to his will; any trusts or restrictions inconsistent with the enjoyment of the estate given are void: as regards a married woman the character of the trustee is very different;

(a) V. supra, vol. i. p. 597, and p. 90 of his volume. & Cr. 393-4.

(b) V. supra, p. 492, n. (d).

(c) Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Mer. 487.

(d) Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 434; Tullett v. Armstrong, 1 Beav. 23; S. C. 4 My.

(e) Supra, p. 89 n. (b), 90.

(f) The property may, as before noticed, be given over on alienation, or any attempt at alienation, supra, p. 89.

(g) V. supra, vol. i. 496.

he must then act according to the trust as declared, the married woman having no rights either of separate enjoyment or of alienation but what are given to her by the trust. However it is to be observed that a clause annexed to an absolute gift of real estate in fee or for life to a woman, even though at the time married, which simply declares that she shall not sell or encumber, is void, for it is a qualification inconsistent with the gift: it is not by any rule of equity that a married woman is in such case competent to take the estate in the manner in which it is given, not being given for her separate use, therefore there is no ground for the interference of the court in such a case; it is left to the law to govern her rights (a).

The present state of the law in respect of restraints on alienation by way of anticipation was lately expounded by the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in a case where a real estate was devised to a married woman in fee for her separate use and she had joined her husband in granting a lease by way of security, to the following effect (b). With respect to a life interest given to a married woman for her separate use, it is admitted (c) that she may be effectually restrained from effecting, during her coverture, any act of alienation total or partial (without any clause of forfeiture, and without any limitation over taking effect upon such an act (d)); it being clear that a clause prohibiting alienation or anticipation by a married woman of her separate estate, (when there is no such provision of forfeiture or limitation over,) however the prohibition may be expressed, whether in terms confining it to a period of coverture, or in terms general and undefined, or in terms distinctly expressing a period beyond as well as during coverture, has by law validity allowed to it as to a life interest at least, but that this validity is by the same law (whatever the expressions) not permitted to extend to a period beyond coverture, that is, the law of its own force preventing the restriction from operation or effect as to any act done when coverture does not exist (e); and, added his Honour, I am at a loss to discover any sufficient reason why that, which holds good as to a life estate, should not equally hold good as to an absolute estate (f). It was attempted in the case above cited to distinguish the case of real from personal estate on the ground that the wife had a power to

(a) See Baggett v. Meux, 1 Coll. 147-9; and Bradley v. Peixoto, 3 Ves. 325; Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Mer. 487; supra, p. 89, n. (b).

(b) Baggett v. Merry, 1 Coll. 149.

(c) See Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 434; Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Mer. 483.

(d) V. supra, p. 89-90.

(e) See int. alia, Brandon v. Robinson, 18

Ves. 429; 1 Rose, 197; Brown v. Pocock, 2 Russ. & M. 210, reversing S. C. 2 My. & K. 189; S. C. 5 Sim. 663; Jones v. Salter, 2 Russ. & M. 208; Newton v. Reid, 4 Sim. 141.

(f) V. supra, p. 89, note (c); Churchill v. Marks is also reported 1 Coll. 441; and see p. 445 of that report.

dispose of real estate by the common law; but the decision of the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce (a), which was confirmed by the Lord-Chancellor, on appeal, has settled the law on this point (b): so that it is now established that the doctrine as to separate estate, as settled in Tullett v. Armstrong (c), applies as much to an estate in fee as to a life estate, and to real property as much as to personal; the Court of Chancery having, or at least having assumed without contradiction, the power of creating (d), as regards both, a new species of estate, it has been considered as within its jurisdiction in both cases to modify the incidents of that estate (e). The law on this subject appears to be the same in Scotland as in England (f).

Primâ facie, as we have seen, the wife has a right, with some exceptions, to dispose of her separate estate as a feme sole; it is necessary, therefore, that there should be negative words to deprive her of that right. The decisions seem to require, as Lord Cottenham has observed, in such cases alone, that the intention of the testator should be expressed in a particular form of words, and that anticipation should be in terms prohibited (g). A direction to pay the rents or interest from time to time into the proper hands of the wife is not sufficient (h), though the words, "and not otherwise, and that the receipts of the wife alone for what shall be actually paid into her proper hands shall be sufficient discharges," be added (i). A trust to pay to such persons, &c. as the wife shall, by any writing under her hand, appoint, "except in any mode of anticipation," is sufficient (k). The words "the receipt of the lady alone, or of any person or persons to whom she may appoint the same rents and income respectively after the same shall have become due, shall be a valid discharge at law," are also sufficient to restrain her from anticipating the income of the trust property (l). Where there is a sufficient prohibition against anticipation in the clause creating the trust, it is not necessary that negative words should be introduced into the clause relating to the receipts (m). A gift to a married woman for her whole and sole use

(a) 1 Hare, 138.

(b) 1 Phillips, 627.

(c) 4 My. & Cr. 377; supra, vol. i. p. 597.

(d) Ibid.

(e) 1 Phillips, 628; 4 My. & Cr. ubi sup.

(f) Rennie v. Ritchie, 12 Cl. & Fin. 204.

(g) Lord Cottenham, Scott v. Davis, 4 My. & Cr. 89.

(h) Though Lord Thurlow had doubted as to this, see Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. J. 189; S. C. 3 Bro. 340; and see Witte v. Dawkins, 12 Ves. 501; Browne v. Like, 14 Ves.

302; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 232; Hovey v. Blakeman, stated 9 Ves. p. 524: Sir Wm. Grant had held that a direction to pay into the proper hands of a married woman was sufficient; but he seems to have himself departed from this opinion; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 234.

(i) Acton v. White, 1 Sim. & St. 429.

(k) Moore v. Moore, 1 Coll. 54.

(l) Field v. Evans, 15 Sim. 375.

(m) Harrop v. Howard, 3 Hare, 624; ix. Jur. 82. "If it be imperatively necessary," during her life free from the control of any future husband, with a restraint on alienation, has been held to extend as regards both to her then present as well as every future coverture (a).

There was for a time a conflict of opinion as to whether in case a general power of appointment were given, with a proviso against anticipation, and following that a direction in default of appointment to pay the income into the proper hands of the married woman for her separate use, her receipts to be a sufficient discharge, the married woman might not abandon the power, and act upon her interest without reference to the restriction, that not being in terms incorporated with the clause giving the property to her separate use in default of appointment. The Vice-Chancellor of England, in Brown v. Bamford (1842) (b), held that she might (c), and Lord Lyndhurst, on appeal, (in 1844,) affirmed that decision (d). Afterwards the question came before the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce (e), and the case of Brown v. Bamford, which had not yet been affirmed, was cited. There was, said the Vice-Chancellor, a specific difference between the language of the instrument before him and of that in Brown v. Bamford, whether important or material or not he did not say, but he held that the effect of the instrument in the case before him was to restrain the wife from anticipation altogether. In a subsequent case (1844) (f), the Vice-Chancellor of England decided that when the power of appointment was given to a married woman without restriction, but the restriction against alienation was attached, in terms, only to the interest given in default of appointment, she might aliene the property in the exercise of the power. In 1845 the question came before Lord Langdale (g); Brown v. Bamford, which had then been said the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, "that negative words should be used to restrain anticipation, upon which I give no opinion," (and see Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare, p. 49, supra.) "I think such words are sufficiently used in that member of the sentence I am now considering." Pybus v. Smith, 3 Bro. 340; S. C. 1 Ves. J. 189; Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 520; Acton v. White, 1 Sim. & St. 429; and Glyn v. Baster, 1 Yo. & Jer. 329, are instances of the terms being held not to be sufficient to restrain anticipation.

(a) Steedman v. Poole, 6 Hare, 193. Maber v. Hobbs, 2 Yo. & Coll. 326, may be referred to as showing that the husband and wife may by their acts preclude themselves from annulling a settlement to the separate use of the wife, which but for such acts would not have been binding on them.

(b) 11 Sim. 127. In the previous case of Barrymore v. Ellis, 8 Sim. 1, also decided by the Vice-Chancellor of England, there were peculiar circumstances, see 1 Coll. 57.

(c) See, as to the distinction between power and estate, Cox v. Chamberlain, 4 Ves. 631; and Roach v. Wadham, 6 East, 289; supra, vol. i. p. 549; and sup. p. 495 of this volume.

(d) See 8 Beav. 188.

(e) Moore v. Moore, 1 Coll. p. 54. In that case there was a fund (arrear), which was properly charged; the costs of the mortgagees were ordered to be paid out of that fund, as to have given the costs generally would have charged the wife's fund by anticipation.

(f) Medley v. Horton, viii. Jur. 853; S. C. 14 Sim. 222; Moore v. Moore, supra, was cited.

(g) Harnett v. Macdougall, 8 Beav. 188.

affirmed, and Medley v. Horton, and also Moore v. Moore, and Harrop v. Howard (a) before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, were cited: Lord Langdale came to the same decision as the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce. In July, 1846, Lord Lyndhurst, on a rehearing, which he had called for, reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England and his own affirmance in Brown v. Bamford, so that the law in cases of this description is settled (b).

It is no objection that the woman is unmarried at the time of the creation of the trust (c). If however the separate-use clause, either with or without a restriction against anticipation, is confined to the then existing or then intended coverture, a second husband will not be excluded from his marital rights (d); but if the intention is plain that every husband shall be excluded, and that the clause against anticipation shall continue, during coverture, on every successive marriage that the woman may contract, though the woman whilst single and when she becomes a widow has the absolute dominion over the property, yet if she do not dispose of the property so as to put an end to the trust, and she should marry again, not only the separate-use clause, but together with it the restriction against alienation will be revived, and remain in force, with all its consequences, during such subsequent marriage, indeed on every subsequent marriage so long as the property is held upon the original trust; "The one," said Lord Cottenham, "is only a restriction and qualification of the other; the two must stand

(a) 3 Hare, 624.

(b) The clause in Brown v. Bamford was as follows:—"Upon trust, from time to time during the natural life of his daughter Sophia Bamford, or until she should be duly declared a bankrupt or take the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, to pay the clear rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds thereof unto such person or persons for such intents and purposes, and in such manner as Sophia Bamford, by any writing or writings under her hand, when, and as the same should become due, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, should, notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture, direct or appoint; and in default of any such direction or appointment, or so far as the same, if incomplete, should not extend, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independent of the debts, control, or interference of her then present or any future husband; for which purpose, the testator thereby directed that the receipts in writing, under the hand of his daughter Sophia Bamford should, notwithstanding any such coverture as aforesaid, be good and sufficient discharges for the last-mentioned rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds, or so much thereof as should in such receipts, respectively, be expressed to have been received; and from and after the decease of his daughter Sophia Bamford, or such her bankruptcy or insolvency as aforesaid, which should first happen, then in trust for all and every, or such one or more of her children as therein mentioned."

(c) Davies v. Thornycroft, 6 Sim. p. 420; Anderson v. Anderson, 2 My. & K. 427.

(d) Barton v. Briscoe, Jac. 603; Benson v. Benson, 6 Sim. 126; Knight v. Knight, ibid. 121; Bradley v. Hughes, 8 Sim. 149; Jones v. Salter, 2 R. & M. p. 208. In a late case, Re Gaffee's settlement, (xiii. Jur. 39,) which was a settlement very inartificially worded, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram followed these cases. A power of appointment may be confined in like manner; Morris v. Howes, 4 Hare, 599; x. Jurist, 955, on appeal.

or fall together" (a). But the trustees cannot withhold the property from a widow who desires that it shall be transferred to her or to her disponent, on the ground that the clause against anticipation would be good in the event of a future coverture (b).

The income of a wife's separate estate, she being of unsound mind, will be paid to the husband for her support, if he is unable to maintain her (c).

Where property is conveyed by the husband to trustees for the support of the wife as part of an arrangement for separation, this it has been held does not become her separate estate so as to give her the power of alienation; as it is impossible by any contract between the husband and wife or any acts done by them to make her a feme sole and liable to be sued (d), the husband might still be liable to be sued, and to pay money on her account, and it would be plainly contrary to the intention to allow her to denude herself of her property, or to do any act that would have that effect, so that the husband could obtain no indemnity (e).

The doctrine as to a trustee buying the property does not, it seems apply, at least in full force, to a trustee to preserve contingent remainders, and to pay the rents and profits to the separate use of the wife (f).

The mode of administering the estate of a married woman, who has by will charged her separate estate with the payment of her debts, has been adverted to in a preceding page; what are her debts must, it is presumed, in such case be determined on the same principles as if no such charge had been made, which subject has been considered in a former page (g). We now proceed to consider those peculiar trust deeds, arising out of marriage, which are called Deeds of Separation (h).

(a) Tullett v. Armstrong, 1 Beav. 1; S. C. on appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 390; Scarborough v. Borman, 1 Beav. 34; S. C. 4 My. & Cr. 377, the prior authorities are observed upon in Lord Cottenham's elaborate judgment; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Keen, 648; Clark v. Jaques, 1 Beav. 36; Dixon v. Dixon, 1 Beav. 40; Newlands v. Paynter, 4 My. & C. p. 418; Newnham v. Pemberton, 17 Nov. 1847; and see Sugd. on Pow. 203-6.

(b) Woodmeston v. Walker, 2 Russ. & My. 197, overruling the decision to the contrary by Sir J. Leach; Brown v. Pocock, 2 Russ. & My. 210, reversing S. C. 2 My. & K. 189.

(c) Edwards v. Abrey, 2 Phillips, 39.

(d) See Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545; 3 Ves. 343-4.

(e) Hyde v. Price, 3 Ves. 443-4-5.; sed v. inf. 527, n. (c).

(f) Lord Eldon, Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 226; in that case the sale of the wife's life interest, and the ultimate reversion, were supported; see 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, p. 262; but see Davidson v. Gardner. Sugd. V. and P. 890, § 14, 11th ed.; and S. C. 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 260, 2nd ed.; and Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. p. 116: but more particularly Scott v. Davis, (4 My. & C. 87,) before Lord Cottenham; there the sale was set aside; however there were special circumstances in that case.

(g) Sup. p. 324-5; the authorities referred to by Lord Cottenham, where he says the debts are to be paid pari passu, were probably Anon. Mosel. 328; and Anon. 18 Ves. p. 258, which was cited in Murray v. Barlee.

(h) See, on this subject, 2 Bright, 305, et seq.

It not unfrequently occurs that after marriage, differences take place between the husband and the wife which lead to a voluntary separation, in some instances connected with, in others without any reference to, proceedings for divorce in the Ecclesiastical Court. It is usual in these cases to secure to the wife a separate maintenance during the separation. In some cases this provision is secured by a covenant or legal obligation on the part of the husband, in others by an actual transfer of a fund by the husband to trustees in trust for the wife. Where the latter mode is adopted the enforcing of the terms of the arrangement is of course peculiarly the province of the Court of Chancery; when the husband enters into a covenant with trustees on the part of the wife, to secure a certain provision for the wife, this of course brings the subject within the cognizance of courts of law, though the Court of Chancery may be called upon to exercise its jurisdiction in such a case also where the covenant points at the settlement of any specific property. Where the contract is between the husband and the wife, of course there can be no remedy in a court of law, and if the Court of Chancery is resorted to by the wife in such a case, it must be on the ground, as will presently be more particularly noticed, that some consideration has passed from her to the husband (a), or from some one on her behalf. When the subject is brought before the Court of Chancery, that court in almost all cases follows the law in adjudicating upon the validity of the contract, at least in reference to public policy; therefore, although it is not intended to enter at any length into the doctrines of the common-law courts on this subject, the general principles established by the decisions at law must to some extent be adverted to (b).

“If,” said Lord Eldon, in reference to the validity of articles of separation, “the question whether the courts would or would not act upon articles of this sort were not prejudiced by any decision, I should say that I think no court ought to act upon them; for whether the contract of marriage be, as it is represented by some, a civil contract only (c), or whether it be both civil and religious, it is one of a peculiar nature; it is one which the parties cannot dissolve; one by which they impose duties on themselves and by which they engage to perform duties with respect to their offspring, duties which are imposed as much for the sake of public policy as of private happiness.

(a) V. int. al. Hobbs v. Hull, 1 Cox, 445; Nunn v. Ladbroke, 8 T. R. 521; et v. infra.

(b) See Lord Eldon's observations, 5 Bli. N. S. 400.

(c) See Spence's Inquiry into the Origin of the Laws and Institutions of Modern Europe, pp. 366-71.

The circumstance that the complaint against an instrument on grounds of public policy is made by one who was a party to it is of no consequence, for the relief is given to the public, and not to the individual" (a). However, notwithstanding these and similar objections which have been made to contracts in deeds and articles of this description on grounds of morality and public policy, contracts contained in deeds and articles of separation are under certain restrictions supported and carried into effect; their efficacy having been established by the authority of judges of the highest eminence at law and in equity (b).

A contract which contemplates an immediate separation, not amounting to an attempt to release the marriage contract, is good at law, and its provisions, so far as it relates to property, will be carried into execution by the Court of Chancery (c): this is clear where persons competent to contract are parties; for instance, the husband and trustees on the part of the wife: but generally speaking no contract between the husband and wife alone is of any validity at law or in equity as against the wife, she not having the power to enter into a binding contract (d), unless, indeed she have a separate estate, which, as we have seen, she may bind equally as may the husband his own estate (e): but such a contract will be binding on the husband if a

(a) Earl of Westmeath v. Countess of Westmeath, Jacob, 135, and see 138; 141, ibid.; and see Lord Stowell's judgment in Evans v. Evans, 1 Haggard's Consist. R. 36; see however Lord Langdale's observations on the Policy of Deeds of Separation, 9 Beav. 56, 58-60. Mr. Jacob has entered much at large into the consideration of the subject of deeds of separation, in reference to public policy and morality; page 274, et seq. Lord Langdale's views are much in accordance with those of Mr. Jacob; see particularly p. 277 of his note.

(b) See Lord Eldon's observations, Westmeath v. Salisbury, 5 Bli. N. S. 339. The subject of the legality of deeds of separation is discussed much at large in the case of Jones v. Waite, 5 Bing. N. S. 341, in the Exchequer Chamber, and in Hindley v. Marquis of Westmeath, 6 Barn. & Cr. 200.

(c) Jones v. Wade, 9 Cl. & Fin. 101; Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Cl. & Fin. p. 488; Sugd. Law of Prop. 177-79; Wilson v. Wilson, infra; affirmed in the House of Lords, xii. Jur. 467; (S. C., on another point, arising out of the articles, namely, repugnance, 15 Sim. p. 487;) and see 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 269, n. (a). Lord Eldon's commendation of this part of Mr. Roper's work, Jacob's R. 141, and again in the House of Lords, may justify me in merely referring to it. The cases as to the validity of contracts relating to property, founded on the separation of the husband and the wife, are collected by the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Wilson v. Wilson (1845), 14 Sim. 416-18, including Bateman v. The Countess of Ross, 1 Dow. 235; and Jones v. Waite, 9 Cl. & Fin., in the House of Lords; and Clough v. Lambert, before himself, 10 Sim. 174; and Wellesley v. Wellesley, 4 My. & Cr. p. 554; and see Palmer v. Fraser, 3 Y. & Coll. 491, 500. In that case Lord C. B. Alexander strongly states the distinction between a separate provision made on marriage and by deed of separation, as to the power of the wife to raise money upon it, but he thought that the authorities were against any such distinction; sed v. Hyde v. Price, sup. p. 525, but the terms were materially different in that case; it was not cited before the L. C. B.

(d) Legard v. Johnson, 3 Ves. 352 (14 Sim. 416): Lord Rosslyn (ibid. p. 361), and Lord Eldon (11 Ves. 532), expressed their dissatisfaction with Guth v. Guth, 3 Bro. p. 614, in which case Lord Alvanley, after an examination of all the authorities, enforced an agreement entered into by the wife, contained in a deed-poll; the wife however, as after mentioned, may, through her trustees, be indirectly compelled to perform her engagements towards her husband.

(e) V. supra, p. 513; and see More v. Ellis, Bunb. 205; 1 Bro. P. C. 237; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 294.

consideration has passed from the wife (a); and even in some of the cases where no consideration beyond the fact of actual separation appears to have existed, a promise in writing made to a third person on behalf of the wife has been enforced against the husband (b). Adultery, as has before been observed, is no answer to the wife's claim to a separate maintenance which is secured to her by a constituted trust or by a security which may be enforced at law (c).

To support a provision for a wife in a deed of separation, as against creditors or purchasers, a valuable consideration must have passed to the husband (d). If there be a covenant in the deed by the trustees to indemnify the husband from the debts of the lady, that is a valuable consideration (e); but if the deed by mistake or accident be prepared without such a covenant, it seems that the defect is one that cannot be supplied by a court of equity, for it is said that a court of equity cannot correct such a deed (f). The relinquishment by the wife of alimony to which she has become entitled by the misconduct of the husband is a valuable consideration as against creditors (g).

The Court of Chancery will not restrain the husband from suing for the restitution of conjugal rights after an agreement even for a perpetual separation, and à fortiori the wife will not be restrained, for she cannot contract (h); and a covenant in a deed of separation purporting to preclude the parties from instituting any suit for the restitution of conjugal rights would not be enforced at law or in equity (i); in fact, as the breach of the contract, at least on the part of the husband, can

(a) Hobbs v. Hull, ubi infra; and see Angier v. Angier, Prec. Ch. p. 496; et v. infra, p. 530.

(b) Head v. Head, 3 Atk. pp. 547, 551; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, p. 297; et v. infra, ubi sup.

(c) Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. p. 439; Jee v. Thurlow, 2 Barn. & Cr. 547; Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bli. N. S. 62; 4 Cl. & Fin. 323; Sugd. Law of Prop. 171; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, p. 317, note (a); but the husband may maintain an action for crim. con., notwithstanding separation by agreement (Chambers v. Caulfield, 6 East, 244), for such a crime is a bar to their coming together again.

(d) It appears from Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511, (and see Jones v. Marsh, Forrest. 64, there cited,) that if there be any consideration moving from third persons, the court will not nicely weigh the amount: the relinquishing to the wife a portion of the property of the wife, which the husband has acquired by the marriage, cannot be sustained as against creditors; ibid.

(e) Stephens v. Olive, 2 Bro. p. 90 (Jacob, 142); Rop. Husband and Wife, 283, et seq.; Westmeath v. Westmeath, Jac. R. 138, 141; Hindley v. Marquis of Westmeath, 6 Barn. & Cr. 200; Wellesley v. Wellesley, 10 Sim. p. 256. In Elworthy v. Bird, 1 Jac. 143, note; S. C. 2 Sim. & St. 372, an agreement to execute such a deed was enforced against the husband; and see the cases collected, 3 Ves. 359. It will be remembered that all voluntary settlements are considered as fraudulent, and therefore void against creditors and purchasers, under the stat. 13th and 17th of Eliz.

(f) Westmeath v. Westmeath, Jacob, 141; and see Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 424-5; and see S. C. 15 Sim. 494; but the evidence on this point was excluded on general principles.

(g) Hobbs v. Hull, 1 Cox, 445.

(h) See Fletcher v. Fletcher, 2 Cox, 99, 107, Buller, J.; Westmeath v. Salisbury, 5 Bli. N. S. 375, 402; St. John v. St. John, 11 Ves. 526, 534, 535, Lord Eldon.

(i) See Jacob's note, 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, pp. 270-1; and Sugd. Law of Prop. 177; et v. infra, Wilson v. Wilson.

hardly involve any question of property, it seems wholly out of the range of the jurisdiction of the court. Whether a covenant on the part of the husband to resign the care of some of the children to the wife is legal has been questioned (a); but it is presumed that the Court of Chancery, for the reason above suggested, has no jurisdiction simply to enforce such a covenant.

There are conflicting decisions as to the validity of contracts having in view a future separation (b); but in Westmeath v. Salisbury, Lord Eldon and Lord Lyndhurst expressed very decided opinions against the legality of provisions for future separation, and such appears to be the law (c). In one case the validity of a contract in a marriage settlement for securing to the wife a separate maintenance in the event of separation, was established by the House of Lords in Ireland before the Union: the wife was entitled before marriage to two annuities of 400*l.* each; the separation took place by reason of the cruelty of the husband, and it having been provided by the articles that in the event of the separation taking place by reason of the husband's conduct or through his means, the wife should have the whole of her income, the House of Lords gave her the whole; the court below having given her a moiety only, which according to the settlement she was to have if the separation took place by her means (d). A husband and wife who had separated, entered into an agreement to live together upon certain conditions, and it was agreed that if the wife should again accuse the husband of infidelity they should again separate and that (a) See Jacob's note, 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 273; v. infra, p. 532.

(b) See Rodney v. Chambers, 2 East, 283; Durant v. Titley, 7 Price, pp. 577, 590; the Court of Exchequer had held that a covenant contemplating future separation, though at the pleasure of the wife, was valid at law, and gave judgment accordingly; that judgment was reversed in the Exchequer Chamber (1819); and that reversal was followed in Hindley v. Westmeath, 6 Barn. & Cr. 200, (5 Bli. N. S. 394,) and was considered by Lord Lyndhurst to have settled the law; ibid., and p. 414: and see Jee v. Thurlow, 2 Barn. & Cr. 551; (5 My. & Cr. 243;) and the other cases cited, 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, p. 280. Upon the case of Rodney v. Chambers being referred to, in the subsequent case of Chambers v. Caulfield, (6 East, p. 244,) both of which were cited in Durant v. Titley, Mr. Justice Lawrence said, "The court, in that case, only decided that a covenant for separation and separate maintenance, with the consent of the trustees, was good; not that a covenant was good generally that a wife might separate from her husband whenever she pleased, for that would be to make the husband tenant at will to the wife of his marital rights:" and see, on this subject, Mr. Jacob's note, 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 281.

(c) Per Lord Cottenham, Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 5 My. & Cr. 244; and see 5 Bli. N. S. p. 366; 1 Dow. & Cl. 519; Sugd. Law of Prop. p. 178: and Cocksedge v. Cocksedge, 14 Sim. 244: on this case coming on before Sir J. Wigram, (5 Hare, 397,) the cases as to whether a provision in an antenuptial settlement for securing an annuity to the wife in case of separation, is good, were cited; the Vice-Chancellor did not state any opinion, but sent a case for the opinion of a court of law on the point: I have not heard the result.

(d) Hoare v. Hoare, 2 Ridgway's Parl. C. 268. Mr. Clancy (p. 423) observes that this is the only case to be found in the books of an agreement before marriage for a separate maintenance in the event of separation being supported.

in such case the wife should receive the income of her own fortune, which her husband was entitled to receive, and that her mother should indemnify him against her debts—they did live together, and afterwards, as had been anticipated, separated; and the wife having instituted proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court for a divorce obtained a sentence to that effect, and 380*l.* for alimony. The wife during the latter separation accepted a bill for 225*l.* in favour of a person who had supplied her with goods; Lord Cottenham, without deciding whether or not the agreement in respect of the future separation was valid, yet as it had not been disputed, but had been treated as valid and subsisting as between the husband and the wife, his Lordship at the instance of the creditor restrained the husband from paying over the income to the wife till the creditor should have been satisfied (a).

As regards what is a good and sufficient consideration as between the husband and the wife, it is to be observed that an agreement to put an end to a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for nullity of the marriage on the ground of impotency is good, it is not against public policy, for it affirms the status of the parties, and is a good consideration for supporting an agreement for the payment of a separate maintenance to the wife; so is a covenant by a third person to pay the husband an annuity, or to indemnify him against the existing debts of the wife, though not extending to future debts (b); and it seems now to be established that a covenant on the part of trustees to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts contracted and to be contracted is not a necessary ingredient in such cases (c). The waiving of her conjugal rights would also appear to be a sufficient consideration on the part of the wife (d). An agreement by the wife to waive an indictment against the husband for an assault, is not against public policy and does not vitiate an agreement entered into by the husband to provide a separate maintenance for the wife, and it would seem that the wife may obtain a specific performance of a contract entered into by the husband founded on such consideration (e).

(a) Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 5 My. & Cr. 242-3.

(b) Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. pp. 419-20: see also Sugd. Law of Pr. 179-80; that is if instituted bond fide, 14 Sim. 420: S. C., on appeal to the House of Lords, xii. Jur. 467, 470; and see Ros v. Willoughby, 10 Price, 2.

(c) Ibid.; and see the note to Haworth v. Bostock, 4 Yo. & Coll. 6.

(d) See Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 547, 551; Frampton v. Frampton, 4 Beav. 287; Clough v. Lambert, 10 Sim. p. 178; Joddrell v. Joddrell, 9 Beav. 60.

(e) Elworthy v. Bird, 2 Sim. & St. p. 373; there was the additional consideration that the father and brother of the wife had covenanted to indemnify the husband against the wife's debt: and see Westby v. Westby, 1 Conn. & L. p. 547. Mr. Baron Alderson, in Garth v. Earnshaw, 3 Y. & Coll. p. 584, held that such an agreement was void as against public policy, and that it was ineffectual, being made between husband and wife; but Elworthy v. Bird, and the authorities there referred to, were not cited. However, in Keir v. Leeman, Excheq. Chamb., 9 Q. B. Rep. 371, a compro-

It is unnecessary to show any consideration at all where the husband has created a constituted trust for his wife, for, as we have seen, a constituted or executed trust may be enforced by any volunteer, and if the husband has given a bond or other legal security, the wife may compel the trustees to enforce the security at law (a).

In the late case of Joddrell v. Joddrell, (Nov. 1845,) a bill was filed by Lady Joddrell to carry into effect a deed entered into between herself, her husband, and trustees under the following circumstances: In 1836, differences having arisen between Lady Joddrell and her husband, a suit was instituted by her for a divorce; on that occasion an arrangement was entered into whereby Sir R. Joddrell assigned a house in Portland-place, with the furniture, to the trustees in trust to permit Lady Joddrell, during the joint lives, to occupy such house, &c., and to accommodate and provide for the children therein; and Sir Richard assigned all his freehold estates to the trustees in trust to pay to the wife 4000*l.* a year, of which 300*l.* was for pin money and the remaining 3700*l.*, or so much as she might require, for her separate use; the residue of the rents to be paid to Sir Richard: out of the 3700*l.*, Lady Joddrell was to keep up the house in Portland-place, for the benefit of herself and her children, which establishment was to be upon such a scale as Lady Joddrell should think fit, and all expenses she might incur at any place she might temporarily go to out of London; the surplus, if any, to be paid to Sir Richard: and it was provided that so long as Sir Richard should be desirous to reside in Portland-place, and to conform to the spirit and intention of the deed of arrangement, and to partake of the benefit of the establishment to be kept up therein, he should be at liberty so to do. Lord Langdale was of opinion that this arrangement was not against public policy, that there was a sufficient consideration, and that it was sufficiently definite; he therefore over-ruled a demurrer put in by Sir R. Joddrell to a bill filed by Lady Joddrell, founded on this arrangement; and his Lordship was of opinion that the contract might be enforced not only against the husband but against the wife through the trustees (b).

A wife being entitled to separate estate, an agreement for separation was entered into by the husband and wife; the wife by deed, in consideration of the husband releasing his marital right in the future acquired property of the wife, charged her separate estate with an mise of an indictment for riot and assault was held to be an illegal consideration.

(a) Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511; Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. 439; Yea v. Yea, 2 Rop.

Husband and Wife, 297; and see Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare, 78; and supra, p. 52.

(b) Joddrell v. Joddrell, 9 Beav. 45.

annuity to her husband: Sir J. Leach held that the deed was valid, and might be enforced, through her trustees, against the separate estate of the wife (a); but a contract in a separation deed cannot affect the property of the wife if not settled to her separate use, or reduced into possession during the coverture (b).

The court will not directly or indirectly enforce a separation against the parties personally (c). But the court will interfere to prevent the doing of any personal acts which if done would be in violation of an agreement respecting property entered into on the separation (d); it is only however in respect of their contracts as regards property that the court can properly exercise jurisdiction; and such contracts, as we have seen, though accessory to the separation, will be enforced where there is a consideration (e).

If the agreement for separation be for the lives of the parties, or until both agree to live together again, the husband cannot, so far as regards any permanent provision which he has secured to his wife, put an end to the arrangement without his wife's consent (f); indeed to hold that he could do so would be equivalent to saying that such a contract was not binding; but a bonâ fide offer on the part of the husband to take back his wife, there being no substantial reason to prevent her returning to him, will, it seems, release him from his liability where the agreement contemplates a temporary separation only (g).

It is clear, notwithstanding what may be found in some of the Reports, that Reconciliation puts an end to a deed of separation: this rests upon public policy, as it must not be permitted to parties to make agreements for themselves to hold good whenever they choose to live separate (h).

(a) Logan v. Birkett, 1 My. & K. 225.

(b) V. int. al. Stamper v. Barker, 5 Mad. 157.

(c) Wilkes v. Wilkes, 2 Dick. 791; Worrall v. Jacob, 3 Meriv. 268; Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 550; v. sup. p. 529.

(d) In Wilson v. Wilson, (supra; see xii. Jur. 470,) an injunction was granted against the husband, to restrain a personal act; it was to prevent an unjust use being made of the wife's proceedings, instituted for a different purpose, with a view to the agreed arrangement as to property not being disturbed. In Green v. Green, (note to 5 Hare, 400,) the Vice-Chancellor of England granted an injunction to restrain, in effect, the husband from continuing in possession of a house of residence, the wife's personal estate. It has been observed by a learned writer in the Jurist,

(xii. part ii. pp. 69, 70,) that the injunction was something like a divorce a mensa et thoro, and the order is strongly objected to on principle (p. 70): there was violation of contract in that case.

(e) See Worrall v. Jacob, ubi sup.; and see Bateman v. Countess of Ross, 1 Dow. p. 239; Jacob's note to Rop. Husband and Wife, 276; et v. ibid. 288; and Sugd. Law of P. 179.

(f) See 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 314.

(g) Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 547; 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, 314.

(h) Lord Eldon, Lord St. John v. Lady St. John, 11 Ves. p. 537; Bateman v. Countess of Ross, 1 Dow. p. 245; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 2 Cox, 99; Jee v. Thurlow, 2 Barn. & Cr. 547; Angier v. Angier, Prec. Ch. 499; Scholey v. Goodman, 8 Moore, 350; 1 Car. & P. p. 36.

On the subject of Equitable jointures and jointures settled upon Infants, and of the relief granted to jointresses in Equity, I beg leave to refer to Mr. Bright's work, chapter xx. secs. ii., iii., vi.

Generally the husband must be a party to all suits brought against the wife in respect of her separate property; but if her husband be out of the jurisdiction she may be sued alone to make good her engagements in respect of her separate property (a). As already observed, no personal decree can be made against her, the court can only affect her estate in the hands of her trustees; therefore, in all cases where the separate estate of a feme covert is sought to be charged, the trustees must also be made parties (b); where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but only a personal decree against her, the bill is demurrable, and cannot be sustained (c): a writ of ne exeat regno may issue against the wife when sued in respect of her separate estate, though not when sued as administratrix she having no separate property (d).

The husband must not join in a suit to obtain property given for the separate use of the wife, such a suit will be taken to be the husband's suit, and he cannot obtain it in such a suit (e). A bill was filed by the husband and wife in right of the wife to recover some property to which the wife was entitled, making no mention of any settlement; the husband then became bankrupt and the wife filed a supplemental bill, stating that the property had been settled for her separate use by a settlement made on the marriage. Lord Langdale, Master of the Rolls, after remarking that this case furnished an instance of the advantage of not allowing the husband and wife to sue together for claims made in her right, as it constantly gives rise to difficulties and embarrassments, held that the wife would not be entitled to any benefit of the original suit unless her next friend should make himself answerable for the costs which had been incurred in the original suit; and in case any increased costs should have been occasioned by reason of the omission to state the settlement in the original bill, his Lord-

As to what may be the effect of an accidental temporary cohabitation, see Wilson v. Mussett, 3 B. & Ad. p. 743; Westmeath v. Westmeath, 1 Dow. & Cl. p. 519; and see Sugd. Law of Prop. 178-9.

(a) Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. W. 144; Bell v. Hyde, Prec. Ch. 328; Dubois v. Hole, 2 Vern. 613.

(b) See 1 Fonbl. 109-112; Aylett v. Ashton, 1 My. & Cr. 111; Francis v. Wigzell, 1

Mad. 258.

(c) Francis v. Wigzell, 1 Mad. 262; Aylett v. Ashton, 1 My. & Cr. 111.

(d) Moore v. Meynell, 2 Vernon, p. 614, Raithby's note; Pannell v. Tayler, Turn. R. 101; Clancy, 361-2.

(e) Simons v. Horwood, 1 Keen, 9; Wake v. Parker, 2 Keen, 59; Owden v. Campbell, 8 Sim. 551.

ship held that the next friend ought to pay them: on those terms his Lordship made a decree in the supplemental suit (a).

The wife must answer a bill brought against her by her husband in respect of her separate estate (b).

Where the court gives effect to the absolute power of a feme covert over her separate property, no examination in court is deemed necessary, as it is where she is parting with an equity (c). The wife cannot by examination in court exercise any greater or other power over her settled property than is reserved to her by the settlement (d): the contrary doctrine, in M<sup>r</sup> Cormic v. Buller (e), has been overruled (f). In those cases where an examination in court of the wife is necessary, the property does not pass by force of the examination or the intervention of the court, but the equity, by the consent of the wife, being put out of the way, the court makes its decree upon the right of the husband, which is only qualified by the equity so disposed of (g). Whilst it was in doubt whether an assignment for valuable consideration would not bind the wife surviving, her consent was, in some instances, taken to the application of the proceeds arising from the sale of her reversionary interest in stock (h); but, as before noticed, it is now settled that such a sale is not binding on the wife, and that her consent cannot be taken to any disposition of her reversionary interests.

(a) Howard v. Prince, 10 Beav. 296. See also, on the subject of proceedings by and against the wife in her separate character, Daniel's Ch. Pr. by Headlam, int. al. pp. 95-98, 119-122, 161, 170, 813.

(b) Brooks v. Brooks, Prec. Ch. 24.

(c) See Sturgis v. Corp, 13 Ves. 192; Fraser v. Baillie, 1 Bro. C. C. 518; as to the cases where the wife's consent ought to be taken, and where not, see Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. p. 580; and Box v. Box, 1 Drury, 42; supra, p. 476.

(d) Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 583.

(e) Cited in Sperling v. Rochefort, 8 Ves.

170, and since reported 1 Cox, 358.

(f) So stated in Sperling v. Rochefort, 8 Ves. 174, and in Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 583.

(g) See Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 587, supra.

(h) See Woollands v. Crowcher, 12 Ves. 177-8. There Sir Wm. Grant, following the precedents cited to him, but against his own opinion, took the consent of a married woman de bene esse to the application of the proceeds of the sale of a sum of stock, in which she had a reversionary interest; and see Doswell v. Earle, 12 Ves. 473; add. note, No. 3.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.—P. 426.

Power of Husband to sue alone on his Wife's Bill of Exchange or Note.

Smith v. Marsack.

A bill was drawn by one Cath. Warner payable to her order, and accepted by one Marsack, the defendant, and indorsed by C. Warner to the plaintiff. C. Warner before and at the time of the indorsement was a married woman, wife of E. Warner, and he had not sanctioned the indorsement; the question was whether in an action on a bill of exchange by the indorsee against the acceptor it is an answer that the drawer had no capacity to indorse by reason of her being a married woman at the time of the drawing and the indorsing of the bill. The court was of opinion that it was not, because a person cannot dispute the power of another to indorse an instrument when he asserts by the instrument that the other has such power; "But," said Mr. Justice Maule, in delivering the judgment, "we do not mean at all to impugn the proposition that if a bill or note is made payable to a married woman, the property in it will pass by the indorsement of the husband or he may sue on it either joining his wife as a party to the action or in his own name at his option, and consequently it cannot be denied that the defendant may possibly be compelled to pay the bill in question twice; but that was a consequence following from his own act of accrediting the capacity of a married woman to indorse, by his acceptance of the bill payable to her order;" Smith v. Marsack, xii. Jur. p. 1050, Com. Pl. A promissory note given to the wife for money advanced by her during the coverture equally survives to the wife if not reduced into possession, Gaters v. Madeley, 6 Mees. & W. 425.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.—Supra, p. 485.

Course of Practice where Husband applies to the Court to obtain Principal Money or Interest to which he is entitled in right of his Wife.

"Where the husband applies for payment of money, either principal or interest, to which he is entitled in right of his wife, the first questions are whether the money for which he asks is subject to any settlement already made, and if not, whether the wife consents to the payment desired being made to her husband; if she does not, the next question is, what settlement should be made; and if necessary it is referred to the Master to inquire into the subject. Except under special circumstances she has not been held entitled to have the whole of the capital fund settled upon herself and her children, or to have the whole of her income secured to be paid to herself alone, wholly excluding her husband; and there may be cases in which, under the circumstances, she may not be entitled to have any settlement made out of the particular fund in question. The amount or proportion of the sum to be settled or secured is not subject to any fixed rule, although it seems not unusual to agree to a certain proportion." Lord Langdale, Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 10 Beav. 326. As to the affidavit and other requisites, in order to ascertain whether the fund has been the subject of any prior settlement and other points of practice relating to this subject, see 1 Bright, Husband and Wife, 90, and the cases there referred to.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.—Supra, p. 487 and p. 534.

Case of Doswell v. Earle.

In Doswell v. Earle, (12 Ves. 473,) the testator gave a legacy of 250*l.* to his daughter Jenny, a married woman; he then directed that it should be retained by the executors and invested, and the interest paid to the testator's wife for life; he made the same direction as to 250*l.* given to another daughter; and on the death of the wife he gave the two sums of 250*l.* equally between the daughters, which, it is to be observed, was surplusage, as he had before given the legacies to them: the executors, with the consent of the tenant for life, paid the 250*l.* to Jenny's husband. Sir Wm. Grant held that this was a reduction into possession. Here it will be observed that there was a gift of the legacy to the daughter; it was not a gift to or in trust for the wife and on her death to the daughter; she had a present interest, with a postponement of enjoyment, for a particular purpose; so that this case might possibly be supported without interfering with the decision in Whittle v. Henning (but see Box v. Box, 2 Conn. & L. 610). This case however may now perhaps be considered as overruled: and see Brandon v. Woodthorpe, 10 Beav. 464.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. IV.—V. supra, pp. 496, 497.

Limitations of Personal Estate in Default of Appointment to "Executors and Administrators," "Personal Representatives," and the like—and of the Construction of those Words generally; Palin v. Hills, 1 My. & K.; Booth v. Vicars, 1 Coll.

In the late case of Holloway v. Clarkson, the testator had bequeathed legacies to females, some of whom were married and some single, for their separate use for their respective lives, and after their deaths to such persons as they should respectively appoint, and in default of appointment to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns; it was held that all of them, married and unmarried, were entitled on petition (which was considered as equivalent to an appointment) to have their legacies paid to them. In giving judgment the Vice-Chancellor Wigram said, "The disputed cases have generally arisen out of bequests to 'representatives,' 'legal representatives,' 'personal representatives,' and similar words, and not upon the words 'executors, administrators, and assigns,' which occur in the present case. In Bulmer v. Jay (1), and in some other cases, however, a question has arisen upon the effect of the words 'executors and administrators.' If I were compelled to give an opinion upon this part of the case, I should say, that the conclusion to be drawn from the modern, not unsupported by some of the earlier cases, is this,—that under a gift simply to 'representatives,' 'legal representatives,' 'personal representatives' (2), and to 'executors and administrators,' the hand to receive the money is that of the person constituted representative by the ecclesiastical court; but that such person will, in the absence of a clear intention to the contrary, take the property as part of the estate of the person whose representative he is, and not beneficially:" citing Evans Charles (3), Ripley v. Waterworth (4), Wellman v. Bowring (5), Price v. Strange (6), Palin v. Hills (7), Hames v. Hames (8), Grafftey v. Humpage (9), and Daniel v. Dudley (10). "In the last case," continued his Honour, "Lord Cottenham strongly ex-

(1) 4 Sim. 48; S. C. 3 My. & K. 197.

(2) If the intention of the settlement appears to have been to exclude the husband, he will not be permitted to take under the term "personal representative;" Bailey v. Wright, 18 Ves. 56; affirmed, 1 Swanst. 39: "personal representative" has not necessarily the same meaning as "legal representative;" Lord Langdale, Kilner v. Leech, 10 Beav. 368.

(3) 1 Anst. 128, per Eyre, Chief Baron.

(4) 7 Ves. 425.

(5) 1 Sim. & St. 24; 2 Russ. 374; 3 Sim. 328, S. C.

(6) 6 Mad. 159, per Sir J. Leach.

(7) 1 Myl. & K. 470.

(8) 2 Keen, 646.

(9) 1 Beav. 46.

(10) 1 Phillips, 1; S. C. 11 Sim. 163.

pressed his disapprobation of Bulmer v. Jay (1). However, the decisions upon these cases have been by no means uniform. It has some times been decided that the persons intended were the representatives constituted by the ecclesiastical court; sometimes that next of kin were intended; sometimes, that the representatives constituted by the ecclesiastical court took beneficially; and sometimes, that they took as representatives, and consequently as trustees for the estate of the party whose representatives they were. It will be sufficient to refer to the cases generally as they are collected in Saberton v. Skeels (2), and in Grafftey v. Humpage. In considering the cases as they bear only upon the construction of the words (as words of description), and upon the question of the interest which the legatee takes, it will be found convenient to distinguish the cases in which a legacy has been given to an individual, and in case of his pre-deceasing the testator his representatives have been substituted or him, (as in Bridge v. Abbot (3), Evans v. Charles, Palin v. Hills (4),) from the cases of direct limitations to the representatives of an individual named not by way of substitution. In the former cases, the courts appear to have treated the representatives as quasi purchasers, and have thereby excluded all argument upon the words as words of limitation." Then, as applicable to the particular case before him, his Honour said, "In deciding this question, the court must lay wholly out of consideration the circumstance that a life estate is given, in the first instance, to the party to whose representative the corpus is afterwards given. There is no analogy between real and personal estate in this particular: but still, assuming that the executor or administrator is to take, and that he takes as executor or administrator and as trustee only, it would seem to follow that the party whose estate is represented must have a disposing power over this as over other parts of his estate, notwithstanding the peculiar manner in which it becomes part of his estate; and the language of Sir William Grant in Anderson v. Dawson (5), and of Lord Langdale, in Grafftey v. Humpage, with other dicta to be met with, tend obviously to support the principle; although there are some reported cases of an opposite tendency, such as Horseman v. Abbey (6), Wilson v. Mount (7), and Sanders v. Franks (8). I feel more difficulty with regard to the general power of the legatees who are married women. In the case of real estate, the estate for life of A., preceding mesne limitations, and followed by a remainder to the heirs of A., amounts to a fee; but the principle does not extend to give by analogy an absolute interest in personal estate to a married woman on a limitation to her for life, with remainder to her executors, administrators, and assigns. The mere fact of taking a life estate in personal property has not the effect of enlarging the operation of the gift in remainder to the same person. The married legatees may of course exercise the particular power which the will gives them: whether they can during their coverture in any other manner dispose of their shares in the fund, is a question (9) which the authorities induce me to abstain from deciding until it is regularly before me (10)."

It may be useful here to notice the case of Palin v. Hills, 1 My. & K. 470, more especially as the decision of Lord Brougham, reversing that of Sir J. Leach, has not

(1) In that case "executors and administrators" were construed to mean "next of kin."

(2) 1 Russ. & My. 587.

(3) 3 Bro. C. C. 224.

(4) 1 My. & K. 470.

(5) 15 Ves. 532.

(6) 1 Jac. & W. 381.

(7) 2 Sim. & St. 493.

(8) 2 Mad. 147.

(9) See 2 Rop. Husband and Wife, by Jacob, p. 213; ibid. vol. i. p. 254; and Fredrick v. Hartwell, (1 Cox, 193,) there cited.

(10) Sir J. Wigram, Vice-Chancellor, Holloway v. Clarkson, 2 Hare, 523.6; and see Smith v. Palmer, xiii. Jur. 95.

been universally approved. In that case the testator gave several legacies, adding, and in case of the death of any or either of the legatees in his lifetime, "I direct that the legacy given to the legatee so dying in my lifetime shall go and be paid to his executors or administrators." One of the legatees died in the lifetime of the testator, having by will appointed an executor and a residuary legatee. The question was whether the executor of the legatee should take beneficially, or in trust for the residuary legatee, or for the next of kin; the legacy, it will be observed, did not exist at the time of the death of the second testator. Sir J. Leach, apparently not much regarding the authorities, but reasoning on the presumed intention, and assuming that the original testator's objects of bounty might be united to those of his intended legatee in case he should make a will, held that the residuary legatee was entitled, thus in effect enabling a person specifically to dispose of property by will, to or in which the testator at his death had no title or interest whatever (see 1 My. & K. 175). On the appeal before Lord Brougham, the contest was between the next of kin and residuary legatee of the second testator, for it was agreed that the executors could not take beneficially. Lord Brougham, principally on the authority of Bridge v. Abbot, 3 Bro. 224, which was a gift of a residue to certain persons named, and in the event of any one dying in the lifetime of the testator, his share was to go to his "legal personal representatives," reversed Sir J. Leach's decree (see 1 My. & K. 482). Lord Brougham admitted that it is just possible that a person may be enabled to pass property which never by possibility can vest in himself, (ib. p. 485), but only where the words of the original testator are explicit to that effect; but in the case before him that was not done, and his Lordship held that the next of kin were clearly entitled. This case and the case of Bridge v. Abbot do not in any way interfere with the general rule as established by the declared opinion of Lord Eldon in Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 438, and by Daniel v. Dudley, 1 Phillips 1, namely, that executors take in their representative character, and that the funds they so take are to be applied and administered in the same manner as any other assets that come to them in that character; they only qualify the rule to this extent, that in order that the provisions in the will as regards legatees or the claims of creditors may attach, the property sought to be administered must exist at the death of the testator or intestate: a legacy given to the executors of an intended legatee in case of his death before the donor of the legacy, is not property at the death of the donee, it has no existence at all, and cannot therefore be affected by the will of the donee, or attached by his creditors as any part of his property: see the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's judgment, Morris v. Howes, 4 Hare, 606-7. This subject has been considered, not exactly in the same view, by Mr. Jarman on Wills, ii. 41, et seq. and Mr. Roper on Legacies, by White, vol. i. p. 134, et seq.

In the case of Booth v. Vicars (1), the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce had to interpret the words "next legal representatives:" in reference to a similar gift. That learned judge after observing that the word "next" had no connection with executors and administrators, and that from other considerations in that will the executors must be excluded, said, "It follows if this conclusion be right that the words 'next legal personal representative' must in this will import in some form consanguinity; the next question is in what form? Now the words here are not 'next of kin,' there is no word strictly importing kindred: if the words had been 'next of kin' or 'nearest' or 'next in relationship,' it is possible that I might have applied the rule adopted by the Lords Commissioners in Elmsley v. Young, and have held that the representatives of whom the statute speaks were excluded; but that is not so, the words 'legal representatives' are the very words which in the Statute of Distributions are used to designate persons who being of kindred to the deceased come in as representatives of some one else. As to this part of the case I need do no more than refer to the language of the Master of the Rolls in Rowland v. Gorsuch, 2 Cox, 187, and to the expressions so recently used by Lord Langdale in Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Beav. 70, where he says, 'when it is said that the expression 'legal representatives' means next of kin, it is not that such is the force of the words themselves, but because the words are held to indicate the persons who upon the construction of the will are beneficially entitled in the place of the person to whom the gift was first made and who in that sense legally represent such persons. I must therefore refer to the Statute of Distributions, which points out those who are entitled to claim as the legal representatives in that particular sense of the words.' I am also of opinion upon this will that the words 'next legal representatives' mean the persons who by force of law in right of consanguinity would take the personal estate of those persons beneficially. The next question is whether they are to take per stirpes or per capita; my opinion is that they take per stirpes, the word, representatives, itself almost forces that interpretation; and when you consider that if one of the two persons mentioned in the will had survived the tenant for life only a moiety would have gone under the clause of substitution, that construction seems to be rendered absolutely necessary." Where stock was settled in trust for the husband for life, and if he should survive his wife in trust for his executors, &c., for his and their use and benefit, but in case the wife should survive in trust for her for life and after her death for the executors or administrators of the husband for his and their own use and benefit, it was held that the wife, who had taken out letters of administration to the husband, did not thereby become entitled to the corpus of the stock beneficially (1).

(1) 1 Coll. 6.

As to the question, what form of words will or will not enable the executors to take beneficially, see in addition, Bulmer v. Jay, 3 My. & K. 200; Hames v. Hames, 2 Keen, 650, 651: as to where "personal representatives" or "legal representatives" are or are not to be construed as meaning next of kin, see in addition Baines v. Ottey, 1 My. & K. 469, and Robinson v. Smith, 6 Sim. 48; Walter v. Makin, ibid. 151. Lord Alvanley in Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. 402, laid down that these words, "personal representatives," must have their legal meaning, that is, executors or administrators, unless clearly intended to have a different meaning. On the question upon an ultimate limitation to the next of kin, as to whether the next of kin at the testator's death are to take or those at the time when such ultimate limitation is to take effect, see Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 370; where Lord Langdale has examined the authorities, and stated the general principles to be applied in such cases, p. 374, et seq.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. V.—Supra, pp. 515, 516.

What will amount to a Charge on a Married Woman's Separate Property.—Judgment of Lord Langdale in Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 Beav. 323-4.

"It is perfectly clear that when a married woman has property settled to her separate use, she may bind that property without distinctly stating that she intends to do so. She may enter into a bond (1), bill (2), promissory note (3), or other obligation (4), which, considering her state as a married woman, could only be satisfied by means of her separate estate; and, therefore, the inference is conclusive, that there was an intention, and a clear one on her part, that her separate estate, which would be the only means of satisfying the obligation into which she entered, should be bound. Again, I apprehend it to be clear that where a married woman having separate estate, but not knowing perfectly the nature of her interest, executes an instrument by which she plainly shews an intention to bind the interest which belongs to her, then, though she may make a mistake as to the extent of the estate vested in her, the law will say that such estate as she may have shall be bound by her own act. But in a case where she enters into no bond, contract, covenant, or obligation, and in no way contracts to do any act on her part,—where the instrument which she executes does not purport to bind or to pass anything whatever that belongs to her, and where it must consequently be left to mere inference whether she intended to affect her estate in any manner or way whatever, the case is entirely different, either from the case where she executes a bond, promissory note, or other instrument, or where she enters into a covenant or obligation by which she, being a married woman, can be considered as binding her separate estate.” In Crosby v. Church, 3 Beavan, 489, Lord Langdale made use of similar expressions.

(1) Marshall v. Collett, 1 Y. & Coll. 232.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. VI.—Supra, p. 532.

Bond to remain in force in the event of Reconciliation.

A bond was given by the defendant John Mushett, to F. Wilson, conditioned for payment of an annuity by the defendant to Jane his wife, for her life, unless she should at any time molest him on account of her debts or for not cohabiting with him. On the same day a deed was made between the husband, the wife, and the trustee, reciting that the husband and wife had agreed to separate for their lives; and that the husband had agreed to assign certain property to the trustee for the benefit of the wife, and to secure her an annuity as he had done by the bond. The husband then assigned the property according to the agreement. The wife covenanted to maintain herself unless she and her husband should thereafter mutually agree to live together again; but it was provided that in case the husband and wife should mutually agree to live together again, such cohabitation should not affect the trusts of the deed, but it should remain in full force as well during cohabitation as during separation. The husband and wife then cohabited together for six years. The whole Court of King's Bench held that the cohabitation did not destroy the effect of the bond and sustained an action upon it; Wilson v. Mushett, 3 Barn. & Adolph. 750, principally on the authority of Jee v. Thur-

(1) Hulme v. Tenant, 1 B. C. C. p. 16; Heatley v. Thomas, 15 Ves. 596.

(2) Coppin v. Gray, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 205.

(3) Bullpin v. Clarke, 17 Ves. 365; Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112.

(4) Murray v. Barlee, 4 Sim. 82; and 3 Myl. & K. 209; Owens v. Dickenson, Cr. & Ph. 48; and Crosby v. Church, 3 Beav. 485.

It is to be observed that Alimony differs materially from property enjoyed for the separate use of a married woman; the court does not exercise any jurisdiction as regards alimony, excepting in granting the writ of ne exeat regno, Vandergucht v. De Blaquiére, 8 Sim. 322.

low, 2 Barn. & C. 547. The cases relied upon by the defendant were Hindley v. Westmeath; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 2 Cox, 105; Lord St. John v. St. John, Bateman v. Countess of Ross, and Durant v. Titey, ubi sup.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. VII.

What Children will take under Provisions in Deeds of Separation.

Two cases have lately arisen, in which a question was agitated, as to what children were entitled to take under the particular terms of the provisions for children contained in the several deeds of separation referred to in those cases; they are Hulme v. Chitty, 9 Beav. 437, and Swift v. Grazebrook, xii. Jur. 87, Vice-Chancellor of England.

SECTION X.—Miscellaneous Doctrines in respect of Trusts usually found in Wills and Deeds, particularly as affecting Persons who are to take Property for Limited Interests, with Remainders over.

Leaseholds and Copyholds for Lives frequently limited to various Persons in succession.
Trusts for Renewal.

May be Express or Implied.

Instances of Implied Trusts to renew.

Words apparently importing Discretion.

Where there is a Trust for Renewal, but Fund for Payment of Fines, &c. not pointed out.

Modern Rule in the absence of Directions—Expenses apportioned between Tenant for Life, and those in Remainder in proportion to their actual Enjoyment.

Rule where Tenant for Life renews without any Obligation.

No Distinction between Leases for Years and for Lives.

Where there are Directions.

Out of Rents and Profits.

When a Sale or Mortgage may be made.

Playters v. Abbott, before Sir J. Leach.

Where different Modes are pointed out.

Discretion in Trustees.

Mode of arranging, as between the different Parties, where a Mortgage is resorted to.

Greenwood v. Evans, before Lord Langdale.

Direction to raise by Sale.

Jones v. Jones, before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram (1846).

Tenant for Life entitled to Compound Interest on Sums paid for Renewals.

Gift of Residue to several Persons in Succession.

General Rule as between Tenant for Life and those in Remainder.

Conversion—liable to be controlled by the Intention to be gathered from the Will.

Authorities reviewed by the Vice-Chancellor of England in the case of Chambers v. Chambers, 15 Sim. R.

Cases where it has been held upon the Intention that the Tenant for Life was entitled to the Enjoyment of the Actual Income of the Residue in Specie.

Vaughan v. Buck, 1 Phillips.

Sutherland v. Cook, 1 Coll.

Question from what time the Tenant for Life is entitled to Interest, and at what Rate.

Cases reviewed by Sir J. Wigram, particularly in regard to the Question whether the Tenant for Life is entitled to the Actual Income of the Property which is in a proper state of Investment from the Death.

Taylor v. Clarke, 1 Hare.

Caldicott v. Caldicott, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C.

Four different modes of determining what is the Right of the Tenant for Life as regards Income or Interest for the First Year, to be collected from the Authorities.

Hinves v. Hinves, before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 3 Hare.

Wrey v. Smith, 14 Sim.

Interest at 4 per cent. given, in some Cases, on such part of the Estate as was not in a proper state of Investment.

Question, where Specific Property is given, who is entitled to any Extraordinary Profit that may accrue—Bonuses.

Questions between the Tenant for Life and Remainderman as to Right to Timber, and Profits of Mines, &c.

Whether Estate settled or unsettled, no one allowed to take Advantage of his Wrongful Act.

When Tenant for Life entitled to Interest of the Produce.

Miscellaneous Doctrines in regard to Rights of Tenant for Life.

Tenant for Life, as a General Rule, not entitled to charge the Inheritance with Improvements.

Powers of Exchange and Leasing.

Remainderman cannot call upon the Court of Chancery to interfere with Tenant for Life exercising Legal Power of Exchange.

Remainderman may lose his Right to avoid Lease made by Tenant for Life by Acquiescence.

Power to Jointure clear of Charges—What are such Charges.

Power of Sale—Timber not to be sold separately.

Miscellaneous Cases.

As to the due Execution of Power given to Tenants for Life to charge the Estate in Settlement.

Apportionment of Dividends, &c.

Tenant for Life of Residuary Fund where there are Contingent Liabilities.

Gift of Life Annuity, as distinguished from Gift of Capital which would produce such an Annuity.

Additional Notes.

No. I.—Extract from Mr. Dalzell's Work on Conversion.

No. II.—What Rate of Interest or other Benefit, and from what Time the Tenant for Life of a Residue is entitled to—Lord Langdale's Judgment, Robinson v. Robinson, 1848.

No. III.—Apportionment of Rents, Interest, and Dividends between Tenant for Life and Remainderman.

No. IV.—Lord Cottenham's Judgment in Blewit v. Roberts—Gift of Annuity.

THE doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to some of the questions which arise between the tenant for life and those in remainder as regards real and personal property settled by deed and by will, have been incidentally adverted to in the preceding pages, and more especially in the Introductory Chapter; but they are of so much importance and of such constant occurrence that it will be necessary to enter into a more minute examination of the modern authorities in which these subjects have been discussed : it will also be proper here to notice some others of the questions arising between the tenant for life and remaindermen, which are of most frequent occurrence.

It is very common in wills and marriage settlements to limit Leasehold estates and Copyhold estates held for lives, to several persons in succession, and it frequently becomes a question as to whether a trust is imposed for keeping the leases renewed, and as to how the fines and expences of renewal of leaseholds and copyholds are to be raised, and by whom and in what proportions they are to be borne.

Trusts for Renewal (a) are sometimes expressly created, but there may be an implied trust in this as in other cases of trust. Thus, where a testator devised a college lease to his wife for life, with remainder to her son, and directed her to pay an annuity to the son during her life, this was considered as affording a necessary implication that the wife was to renew (b). If leaseholds are settled upon trust for several persons successively ; though the trustees may not be in so many words directed to renew, yet if the means are given, and the purpose expressed, there is no doubt that they are to apply those means to that purpose (c). In a case where the testator declared that it should be lawful for the trustees, "from time to time as occasion shall require, as they shall think proper," during the continuance of the trusts of the property, to apply for renewal and to do their endeavours to renew the leases, Sir John Leach, in giving judgment, said, "It could not be intended that the trustees should have a discretion whether they would or would not renew ; they were appointed for the purpose of protecting future interests and could not abandon them : the expression, that 'it should be lawful for them,' meant only that it should be lawful as against the party in possession and out of the rents and profits to pay the expences of the renewal ;" and his Honour held that the tenant for life and the trustees were bound to renew (d) : but where an absolute discretion is (a) This subject is treated of in Hill on Trustees, p. 438, et seq. ; Lewin on Trusts, pp. 300-317, and Bisset on Estates for Life, chap. 10, p. 246, et seq.

(b) Lock v. Lock, 2 Vern. 666 ; the Master was to settle the proportions of the expenses as between her and the son ; as to this see Jones v. Jones, infra. The case of Hulkes v. Barrow, Tamlyn, R. 264, is another instance.

(c) Verney v. Verney, Amb. 88, 1 Ves. 428 ; Lord Montford v. Lord Cadogan, 17 Ves. 488, Sir Wm. Grant ; S. C. affirmed with some variations, 19 Ves. 638, 2 Meriv. 3. Sir Wm. Grant, in reference to the obligation of trustees to renew, said, "The lease being made the subject of settlement, it was clearly meant that it should be kept on foot by renewals." "The trustees," he added, "are not in so many words directed to renew, but the means being given and the purpose expressed, there is no doubt that they were to apply those means to that purpose. If it was not to be done by the trustees it was not to be done at all, the tenants for life having an interest the other way, as such an application was in diminution of their incomes : " the trustees were held personally liable for not having renewed, the tenant for life being answerable in the first instance : the lease was renewable by custom ; see 19 Ves. 637, 639 ; and see White v. White, 4 Ves. 31, Lord Alvanley.

(d) Lord Milsington v. Lord Mulgrave, 3 Mad. 491 ; 5 Mad. 471 ; and see Colegrave v. Manby, 6 Mad. 87 ; 2 Russ. 238.

clearly conferred the ordinary rule before adverted to must of course be applied to the case (a).

Where there is a trust for renewal, either express or implied, and no specific and explicit directions, as to out of what fund the fines and expences are to be paid or how they are to be raised, are given; in ordinary cases, the estate itself, if there are no directions to the contrary, must bear the burthen, and this can only be done by sale of a part or by mortgage of the estate; the trustees therefore must have impliedly a power for that purpose (b). But how this is to be effected so as to do justice to the tenant for life, and those who are to take in succession after him, is a question which has greatly perplexed the judges who have had to decide the question.

In the absence of any express or definite direction, the modern rule is to apportion the charges for the renewal of leaseholds between the tenant for life and the remainderman, according to their respective interests in the estate; that is in proportion to the actual enjoyment they have of the lease renewed, not an extent of enjoyment to be determined by mere speculation or by a calculation of probabilities (c); and there is no distinction in this respect between leases for years and for lives (d). But there is less difficulty in the case of the renewal of leaseholds held for a term, than of estates held on lives: as regards the former it is known when the amount to be paid for fines, &c. will be wanted, and in most cases what will be the amount, so that what is required may more readily be retained from time to time out of the rents, where that is the mode pointed out (e); but as regards the latter when the sum required may be wanted is necessarily uncertain (f).

Where the tenant for life is one of the cestuis que vie, it seems to be admitted that where he has the legal estate in such leasehold interest,

(a) V. supra, p. 85, &c.; et v. infra. See Lawrence v. Maggs, 1 Eden, 453, as to the extent of discretion conferred by the words "as they shall think proper," and the like; and Polley v. Seymour, 2 Yo. & Coll. 721.

(b) Maynel v. Massey, 2 Vern. 1; Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 75; Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. J. 666; Earl of Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 My. & K. 111; and see the next note.

(c) Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough, supra; Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. p. 65; affirmed by Lord Eldon, (see 5 Hare, 457). In this case Sir T. Plumer, upon the construction, directed a sale, though the trust was to raise the expenses, &c. "out of the rents and profits" of the leasehold premises: the testator declared that the renewed leases should be held on the same trusts as the freehold and copyhold estates, "to the end that they might be enjoyed therewith so long as might be;" but there was nothing else in the will to give to the words "rents and profits" the abridged sense of annual profits: see also Greenwood v. Evans, 4 Beav. p. 44; there the trust was to renew "out of the rents and profits of the premises, or by mortgage thereof, if found expedient," and Jones v. Jones, 5 Hare, 461-63-65; and see Reeves v. Creswick, 3 Y. & Coll. 715; Bull v. Birkbeck, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 447; but in these cases there was no direction for renewal.

(d) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Jones v. Jones, 5 Hare, 460; v. supra, p. 304.

(e) As in Montford v. Cadogan, 19 Ves. 635.

(f) See Earl of Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 My. & K. 121.

it is not competent to the remainderman to call upon him to contribute, because he can have no interest in the renewal, though a doubt has been entertained where it is a trust estate (a). In a case before Lord Thurlow, where a tenant for life, herself being cestui que vie, renewed without any obligation being imposed on her so to do, the money paid as the fine for renewal was fixed as a charge upon the estate (exclusive of the wife's life) with interest from the time of its having been advanced (b). Where the tenant for life not being a cestui que vie renews, as the remainderman takes that interest in the renewed term which is ultra so much of the renewed term as may expire in the life of the person who renewed the term, the remainderman must pay the value of that interest; and, considering that the purchase of that interest is made at an antecedent time, simple interest would not be a satisfaction, as the tenant for life has laid out his money totally, therefore compound interest is given on such a proportion of the amount paid as is equivalent to the proportional value taken by the remainderman (c).

Where there is an express trust for renewal, and the fund is pointed out from which the fines and expences are to be paid, of course those directions must be followed as far as is practicable, and according to a reasonable interpretation; but difficulties have frequently arisen in carrying such directions practically into effect.

Where the fines and expences are directed to be raised out of the rents and profits of the estate settled to one for life with remainder to others in succession, primâ facie this would seem to be a gift to the tenant for life of the surplus of the rents, after so much as shall be sufficient to raise the amount of the requisite fines and other expences attendant on the anticipated renewal shall have been set apart or accumulated. If upon the construction of the instrument the direction for renewal overrides every beneficial estate, then the first and every successive taker must be content to abide by the will, and until the amount required for the fines and expences for the then next anticipated renewal shall have been raised by means of the rents and profits, no person within the limitations can receive anything. This seems to have been the principle on which Stone v. Theed, by Lord

(a) Lord Hardwicke, and see Harvey v. Harvey, 5 Beav. 138-9, and the references; 1 Ves. 429 (4 Ves. 33).

(b) Adderley v. Clavering, 2 Bro. p. 659: 2 Cox, 192; this was a case of a legal estate.

(c) Lord Thurlow and Lord Eldon, Nightingale v. Lawson, 1 Bro. 440; White v. White, 9 Ves. 557: Nightingale v. Lawson is the case in which the modern rule of contribution between the tenant for life and remainderman was settled: and see White v. White, 4 Ves. 32-36; Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 260; Lewin, p. 314; et v. supra, pp. 344, 345.

ThurLOW (a); and Earl Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough (b), by Sir J. Leach, were decided.

It has been already stated that a direction to raise any fund which must be paid in gross, as fines and expences of renewal necessarily must, will authorize a sale, unless there be an express or implied prohibition (c).

In Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough, before referred to, it was held that the trust to renew was confined to the rents and profits: in the late case of Garmstone v. Gaunt, though the trust was to renew by and out of the rents and profits or otherwise, the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce held that the trust authorized a mortgage only and not a sale (d). Where there is no other mode of raising the required amount, there must be a sale of a sufficient part of the estate (e).

Where in the case of leases for lives the renewal is to take effect immediately upon the death of the testator, the trustees must in the first place have recourse to a mortgage, since no rents can have accrued; and Lord Eldon observes, in White v. White, that in such a case there seems no other mode of obtaining from the tenant for life his proportion of the expences of renewal according to his enjoyment than by compelling him to give Security to that effect; for if such security be not given, the remainderman can only resort to the uncertain assets of the tenant for life (f).

Where a man creates a trust term for payment of debts, and declares the trust of the term to be by perception of rents and profits, or by leasing, or by mortgaging, to raise sufficient money for the payment of his debts, according to a reported dictum of Lord Hardwicke, it restrains it merely to a payment out of rents and profits; if it had been a trust of the rents and profits, said his Lordship, the term might

(a) 2 Bro. 243; stated from Reg. Book by Mr. Campbell, 5 Hare, 450.

(b) 2 My. & K. p. 111; Sir J. Leach says (p. 122), that the expence is from time to time to fall upon those who happen to be in possession. I presume it is to be carried out thus: sufficient of the rents, as they are received, must be reserved to effect the next anticipated renewal; when that has been done, the tenant for life will be entitled to the rents from that time: when a life drops, or the term is about to expire, the reserved fund will be applied to effect a renewal, and then the trustees must again commence collecting a fund for the next anticipated renewal; if this be so no testator can know what he is doing in making such a gift. And see Reeves v. Creswick, 3 Yo. & Coll. 715; et v. Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 307.

(c) V. supra, p. 316; and see Allan v. Backhouse, supra, p. 545, n.

(d) Garmstone v. Gaunt, ix. Jur. 78; see the cases cited by Mr. Hill, on Trustees, 442; and see, on this subject, Wilson v. Halliley, 1 Russ. & M. 560; Heneage v. Lord Andover, 3 Yo. & J. 360; supra, pp. 316, 317; and Mondey v. Mondey, 1 Ves. & B. 223; and Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97—cases relating to infants.

(e) Grantley v. Garthwaite, 6 Mad. p. 96; money might have been raised by mortgage with an insurance of the life on which the premises were held, but the Vice-Chancellor said he had no authority to enforce an insurance; see Greenwood v. Evans, infra.

(f) See 2 My. & K. 122.

have been sold (a); but where the trust is created for raising fines for renewal and the like, any such general rule must give way to effecting the purpose of the trust; and where the fines, &c. are directed to be raised primâ facie out of the rents and profits only, still there may be sufficient upon the general intention to be collected from the whole of the instrument, according to the general rules of construction, that a sale or mortgage should be resorted to.

Where there is an express direction that the tenant for life in possession shall renew, he must do so, or he will be liable to the other parties taking in succession for his default; it is the condition on which he takes the estate (b); but where the direction is that the fines, &c., shall be raised out of the rents, it is not the probable intention that the tenant for life or person in immediate possession should bear the whole burthen, and that others should reap the benefit at his expense, and his primâ facie liability may be controlled on the context of the instrument.

In Playters v. Abbott (c), the testator devised his real estates to trustees upon trust out of the rents and profits, or by mortgage, sale, or other disposition to raise such sums as should be necessary for the payment of the fines and expences which his trustees would incur on admission to his copyholds and the other expences of the trust, and subject thereto in trust to pay to his wife an annuity of 250*l.* for her life, and the residue to his daughter for her separate use for her life, with remainders over. The rental of the estates devised was only 800*l.*, the amount immediately required for fines for admission to the copyholds was 1400*l.* Sir John Leach construed this direction to the trustees as giving them an authority to raise the requisite sums by sale or mortgage when that should be necessary, and as the widow's annuity was given in lieu of dower, he considered that she was evidently not to wait for payment until the fines were paid out of the rents, and therefore the tenant for life should not; he therefore directed the fines and expences to be raised by sale or mortgage, and that the daughter, the tenant for life, should bear the interest of the mortgage only, when the money was so raised.

Where a testator points out different modes of raising fines and expenses, all of which have reference to the convenience of the estate, as out of the rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, it seems to be inconsistent with the intention that the parties are to enjoy the estate

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Ridout v. Earl of Plymouth, 2 Atk. 105.

S. C. 5 Sim. p. 181. Wadley v. Wadley, 2 Coll. 11.

(b) Bennett v. Colley, 2 My. & K. p. 225;

(c) 2 My. & K. 97.

in succession, that their rights should be altered by the manner of proceeding, unless there be an inevitable necessity for such alteration (a); but if the testator has empowered the trustees to raise the fines and expenses in the one way or the other, and they should have chosen that which throws the burthen upon one party at the expense of the other, in a manner therefore inconsistent with the general rule, unless upon the construction of the particular instrument it should appear that such an interference would be unauthorized, the court will put the general rule in operation (b).

Where the court has to decide upon a direction to renew a renewable lease out of the rents and profits or by mortgage, there is great difficulty in making any arrangement as regards the interests of the different parties to take in succession. "If a mortgage be resorted to," said Lord Langdale, in a late case (c), "then, if the tenant for life should be held to be bound only to keep down the interest on the mortgage, the person in remainder may become entitled to the lease when near its expiration, and yet have to bear the whole of the principal money raised by mortgage for its former renewal; the remainderman will thus bear a considerable burthen without deriving a corresponding benefit (d); and if the tenant for life pay the interest merely, and no fund is provided for paying off the mortgage, the estate may be wholly exhausted by the accumulation of moneys charged on the estate for the purposes of renewal. And to attempt to make the parties bear the burthen in proportion to their enjoyment, is attended with great difficulty, as in many cases it is impracticable to arrive at anything like an accurate calculation of what ought to be considered as the relative liabilities of the parties. It is almost impossible to determine this ab ante without the hazard of determining wrong" (e). His Lordship in that case gave countenance to the plan of raising the amount to be contributed by the tenant for life by means of an insurance, which had been adopted by Mr. Baron Alderson (f).

A direction that the fines and expenses shall be raised by sale, without more, may be a strong argument for saying that the corpus of the (a) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 5 Hare, 462. His Honour declined to express any opinion as to whether there is any difference as to the application of the general rule between cases which arise under settlements by deed and cases under wills; ibid. 464.

(b) V. ibid. p. 464.

(c) Greenwood v. Evans, 4 Beav. 44. In that case it was proposed that a fund should be provided by means of an insurance on the lives of the cestui que vies; a reference to the Master was directed, so that that proposal might be carried out if found to be consistent with the practice of the court. In Reeves v. Creswick (3 Yo. & Coll. p. 715), before Mr. Baron Alderson, the principle of insurance was adopted and carried out; sed v. Grantley v. Garthwaite, supra.

(d) See White v. White, 9 Ves. 557, Lord Eldon.

(e) And see the dict. of Lord Eldon, 9 Ves. 556-7; et v. infra, Jones v. Jones.

(f) In Reeves v. Creswick, supra.

estate is to bear it, and that the estate is intended to be settled subject to the subordinate direction that it is to undergo a perpetual diminution, with a view to a part being preserved (a).

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram had occasion to consider this subject in the late case of Jones v. Jones (1846), so often referred to;—the testator having renewable leases for lives and for years, directed that the fines for future renewal should be raised out of the rents and profits or by mortgage,—his Honour, in giving judgment, used the following expressions in reference to the general question:—"The tenant for life having paid the whole, if he has not the whole enjoyment, his estate will have a lien for whatever ought to be paid by the remainderman. The case is one of much greater difficulty where the renewal is made by or at the expense of the remainderman, or (which, as to this difficulty, is the same thing,) where the trustee is to raise the money and to charge it on the corpus; in that case, unless some course be taken to protect the interests of the remainderman, the tenant for life may enjoy the estate during his whole life, without bearing any greater charge than the interest on the debt created by the renewal, and he may leave no assets to pay his proportion of the principal money; this is one of the difficulties noticed by Lord Eldon, in White v. White: that inconvenience may perhaps be avoided by requiring the tenant for life to give Security, a course to which Lord Eldon points in that case. The late cases of Greenwood v. Evans, and Reeves v. Creswick (b), are authorities which recognise the course of giving security as a course proper to be pursued where no other means are open for providing for a proper apportionment." His Honour, in answer to the difficulties which would present themselves in that case, said, "The tenant for life may, in the first instance, be required to give security for an amount calculated upon the assumption that his life will last during a portion of the renewed lease; if he should die within the time during which it was assumed that his life would last, the security would of course be more than sufficient to satisfy his proportion of the fine, and it would be void for the excess: if he outlived that time he might, if necessary, be called upon to give a further security, to cover the additional proportion then to be attributed to him" (c). It is therefore left to the judge in each particular case, where there

(a) Vice-Chanc. Wigram, Jones v. Jones, 5 Hare, 461.

(b) Ubi supra.

(c) Jones v. Jones, 5 Hare, pp. 466-7. The decree declared that the tenant for life ought to contribute to such renewal, and to the fines, &c. attending the same, in proportion to such benefit as he had derived or might derive from such renewals; and the Master was to inquire what sum ought to be paid or secured by the tenant for life, in respect of his proportion, and what security he ought to give in respect of the same, without prejudice to whether the tenant for life might not be ultimately are no specific directions, to make such an arrangement as will, in the best manner that circumstances will admit, secure a renewal, and impose the burthen upon those who are to have the enjoyment, in proportion to the actual benefit that they may receive from such renewal. If the tenant for life should die during the continuance of the existing lease, it would seem that he is in no case liable for any of the expences of the anticipated renewal, unless the burthen is expressly imposed upon him in the whole or in part: none of the cases seem to justify that the tenant for life should be made to pay on the basis of any calculation of value looking to the renewals as making one estate, if indeed any such calculation could be made.

Where the remainderman renews, on the omission of the tenant for life, he having been bound to do so, whether he actually could or could not have renewed, his estate must pay a proportionate part of the fine paid for the renewal (a).

If the rents have been directed to be accumulated with reference to a renewal which turns out to be impracticable the accumulation will be stopped, and the tenant for life will receive the whole of the rents (b).

As regard Incumbrances on the estate, the tenant for life is bound to keep down the interest, and, however hard upon him, to pay any arrears that may have accrued prior to his life estate. If the estate be sold, the tenant for life will have the interest of what remains of the money produced by the sale: if the mortgage be paid off he is bound to contribute in proportion to the benefit he derives from the liquidation of the debt; the old rule that he should pay a gross definite sum, equally as in the case of renewals, is entirely at an end (c). The doctrine in regard to the keeping up of a charge paid off by the tenant for life has been stated in a former page (d).

Where the tenant for life had purchased the land-tax, of which he took an assignment to himself, it was held to be part of his personal estate, though he was entitled to the reversion in fee subject to an estate tail in his children (e).

liable to pay more or less than the amount for which the security should be given: ibid. p. 468.

(a) Colegrave v. Manby, 6 Mad. 86-7; Bennett v. Colley, 5 Sim. 181; 2 My. & K. 225.

(b) Tardiffe v. Robinson, stated 2 Russ. 246, and 6 Mad. 83, n.; and Richardson v. Moore, stated ibid.

(c) Lord Alvanley, Penrhyn v. Hughes, 5 Ves. 106-7; White v. White, 9 Ves. 554; v. infra, p. 574. Mr. Justice Story, relying on some American cases and Thynn v. Duvall, 2 Vern. 117, considers that where the tenant for life and remainderman join in a sale without any agreement as to the division of the purchase-money, the principal of the purchase-money is to be divided between them in proportion to their respective interests, to be calculated on the tables as to the probabilities of life; Story on Equity, § 448 a.

(d) Supra, pp. 344-5.

(e) Trevor v. Trevor, 2 My. & K. 678, et v. sup. p. 345.

It may be well here again to advert to the question that is continually arising as between the tenant for life and the remainderman as to a Residue of a testator's estate given to several persons in succession where it consists, in part or in the whole, of property that is wearing out, or of a permanent fund such as Bank Stock, £4 per Cents. or other stock not being £3 per Cents. which latter description of stock is alone recognized by the court as the fund for permanent investment (a).

The general rules on this subject have been adverted to in treating of the duties of trustees in reference to indefinite trusts. Where there is no direction, the general rule, as settled in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, applies (b): but, as before stated, the general principles of sound construction require, that, where an intention is to be gathered from the particular language of the will that although the residue of the personal estate is given in succession to several persons, and it consists of property that is wearing out, yet a portion of the residue shall remain either absolutely or during a limited period in the state in which it was at the testator's death, there such intention should be acted upon (c). It may be well here to state more particularly some of the late cases that have occurred in reference to these rules.

As regards the right of tenant for life to enjoy the actual income accrued, upon the intention to that effect to be collected from the will, the following are the most important modern authorities, and in which almost all the previous cases bearing on the point are referred to.

In Vaughan v. Buck, before Lord Lyndhurst (1841)(d), the testator

(a) £3 per Cent. Consols is the fund which is usually selected by the court for investment, but £3 per Cent. Reduced is frequently resorted to for convenience, as where quarterly payments have to be made.

(b) Supra, p. 42-3. It may be useful to add, in addition to the cases there cited, Fearn v. Young, 9 Ves. p. 552, where Lord Eldon says, "It is clear if the testator had died possessed of a bond, by the condition of which the money had been secured to him, to be paid in two or three years after his death without interest, between the tenant for life and the remainderman, a value must have been put upon it at that time; and of its present worth, at least, the tenant for life would be entitled to interest." In the case itself Lord Eldon gave interest from the death to the tenant for life: see the additional note, No. 1. It should be noticed that in Mehrtens v. Andrews, 3 Beav. p. 72, where there was an express direction for conversion, and part of the property consisted of a leasehold estate to which it was alleged the testator had in fact no title, Lord Langdale directed that a value should be put upon it in reference to the actual enjoyment, not its intrinsic value at the end of the year from the death, as that might have been found to be nothing. Where the property consists of a redeemable annuity not saleable it seems the proper course is to invest the payments; Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sim. 427. Mr. Cooper, in his notes to Turner v. Newport, 1 Rep. temp. Cottenham, has collected many of the cases on this subject.

(c) Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Caldecott v. Caldecott, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 322, referring to Bethune v. Kennedy, Collins v. Collins, and Pickering v. Pickering, stated infra; the general rule is also stated to the same effect by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in the late case of Pickup v. Atkinson, 4 Hare, 628, cited supra, p. 43; and see Turner v. Newport, supra.

(d) 1 Phillips, 75.

first gave to his wife the whole of his property during her life, after her death the whole was to be equally divided between her children, excepting a sum to apprentice his eldest and second son; he then gave to his two sons Henry and Charles, on their coming of age, 100*l.* each, and the same to his daughters, his furniture he gave to his wife; then the will proceeded as follows: "The property, my house, 21 North Street, let on lease at 48*l.* a-year, 1000*l.* New £4 per Cents., 1500*l.* in the £3 per Cent. Consols, 645*l.* in the Threes Reduced, and 24*l.* per annum in the Long Annuities; all this I give to my wife with the residue and interest, should there be any." The testator, at his death, had another leasehold house in the same street, purchased after his will; he had also some gas-company shares, and he had increased the amount of his stock in the funds. The Vice-Chancellor of England declared that the widow was entitled during her life to the income of the general residue, and that the stock and the Long Annuities mentioned in the will, or such of them as the testator should appear to have possessed at his death, formed part of his general residue: the shares in the gas company, and the 24*l.* a-year Long Annuities, and the leasehold houses were ordered to be sold, and the proceeds to be invested. The appeal was against the latter part of the decree; it was contended that the last clause gave to the widow the enumerated particulars absolutely, or at least that it gave her the right, contrary to the general rule, to the enjoyment of them in specie for her life. Lord Lyndhurst held that the natural construction of the will was to consider the last clause as being an enumeration in detail of what he had before given in general terms, so that it was not to be construed to be a distinct gift, and the will would run as if he had given the whole residue enumerating the particulars in the first clause, so that the case was similar to Bethune v. Kennedy (a); the Lord Chancellor therefore reversed so much of the decree of the Vice-Chancellor as directed that the Long Annuities and leasehold house mentioned in the will should be sold, thereby giving the income in specie to the widow.

A testator gave to his wife, during widowhood, the interest of "all the money I have or may possess in the funds or other securities;" the widow was held to be entitled to the dividends on the testator's £3½ per Cent. Stock, East India Stock, and Danish Bonds; the interest of his other property was also given to the widow, that was directed to be converted (b).

(a) 1 My. & Cr. 114, cited supra.

(b) Per Vice-Chancellor of England, Oakes v. Strachey, vii. Jur. 433; 13 Sim. 414, distinguishing it (p. 417) from Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501.

The Vice-Chancellor of England, in the late case of Chambers v. Chambers (1846), reviewed the authorities on this subject. His Honour, after observing that there appeared to have been formerly some fluctuation of opinion on the question, stated that Lord Eldon had laid down the rule very distinctly, in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth; but that Lord Cottenham seemed to have had a disposition to escape from it. In Pickering v. Pickering (a), said his Honour, where there was an enumeration of particulars, Lord Cottenham thought that as the enumeration showed an intention to give the things specifically, the aggregate, though given merely as a residue, was to be treated differently from what it would have been, if the simple word “residue” had been used. That case, continued his Honour, and all the other cases that are deviations from the rule laid down by Lord Eldon, can only be supported by the particular expressions in each will. In Bethune v. Kennedy (b), his Honour observed, there was first of all a gift of a sum of Long Annuities, and in the set of words which constituted the gift of the residue there was a reference to money in the funds and to copyhold estates, which might be a very good reason for saying in that particular case Lord Eldon’s rule should not be adopted. In the case of Collins v. Collins (c), continued his Honour, which was decided by Sir John Leach, we find the emphatic words, “in every shape and in whatever manner it is situated,” which also might have justified the departure from Lord Eldon’s rule. In Collins v. Collins (d), which came before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, the testator directed the whole of the property to be sold in the event of the first taker dying without leaving issue to attain the age of 21 years: Now, observed his Honour, there cannot be two sales of the same property, therefore it was manifest that the directing the property to be sold on the happening of a future and contingent event prevented the operation of the general rule.

With regard to the case itself, it arose upon a will containing very special clauses. The Vice-Chancellor held that, independently of the general rule, the actual words of the will were such as to show that

(a) 2 Beav. 31, confirmed on appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 289. It is to be observed that in Daniel v. Warren, (2 Y. & Coll. C. C. page 293,) the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce expressed his approbation of the principle laid down in this case (pp. 298-9), and decided the case before him on the intention to be collected, that the leaseholds should be enjoyed by the tenant for life in specie.

(b) 1 My. & Cr. 114.

(c) 2 My. & K. 703; and see Alcock v.

Sloper, 2 My. & K. 699. It appears however that what is reported in Collins v. Collins as a decision, was a dictum only, and that when the case came before Lord Langdale, a sale was ordered by consent; 1 Phillips.

(d) Goodenough v. Tremamondo, 2 Beav. 512, stated infra, was a case to the same effect; see as to this case 4 Hare, 631, where Hinves v. Hinves, 3 Hare, 609, stated infra, and several of the cases before cited are observed upon.

the person who was to take in remainder was to take that thing which was to be enjoyed in the first instance by the tenant for life; but as regards the leaseholds, the person to take in remainder could not take the same if the leases under which the premises were held had expired in the lifetime of the tenant for life: therefore, said his Honour, by force of the rule laid down by Lord Eldon, and by force of the particular words to be found in this will, my opinion is that the leaseholds must be sold (a). It was declared that the leaseholds should be sold and the proceeds invested in the £3 per Cent. Consols, and the dividends paid to the tenant for life during her life; the question as to any bygone payments was not adverted to, so that the case forms no precedent on that question (b).

In a late case (c), the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce decided, on the authority of Alcock v. Sloper, Collins v. Collins, Bethune v. Kennedy, and Pickering v. Pickering, that where the property given consisted in part of leaseholds and Long Annuities, and there was an express power to the trustees to sell the leaseholds at such time as they in their discretion should think fit, the gift must be considered as specific both as regards the long annuities as well as the leaseholds—in other words, the tenant for life was entitled to enjoy the income of both in specie—though independently of authority he would have been inclined to a contrary decision as regards the Long Annuities. In the case of Goodenough v. Tremamondo (d), the testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees in trust to permit the rents, issues, profits, &c., thereof to be received by his son Richard for his life, and after his death, upon trust for the two daughters of his son, when they should attain 21, with power for the trustees after the death of the son to apply the rents, &c., towards the maintenance of the daughters until the vesting of their shares: on the force of the use of the word rents, there being no other property but leaseholds to which it could be applied, it was held by Lord Langdale, that the tenant for life was entitled to the enjoyment of the income of the leaseholds in specie: and in the later case of Harvey v. Harvey, it was held by the same learned judge, that a direction that the tenant for life should have the full and entire enjoyment of the testator's real and personal estate,

(a) Chambers v. Chambers, 15 Sim. 189; the Vice-Chancellor of England decided, Benn v. Dixon, 10 Sim. 638 (though his Honour appears to have approved of Pickering v. Pickering) on the same principle: but the authority of that case, and of Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501, has been disputed; see 3 Hare, 611.

(b) It was heard as a short cause.

(c) Burton v. Mount, xii. Jur. p. 934; the same learned judge also followed Alcock v. Sloper, 2 My. & K. 699; sup. 42, in Daniel v. Warren, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 290.

(d) 2 Beavan, 512.

entitled the tenant for life to the income of the testator's leaseholds in specie (a).

In Sutherland v. Cooke (b), the testator gave "all his money in the Long Annuities," money in the funds, securities for money, debts and the residue of his estate, to trustees in trust by sale of a sufficient part to pay his debts and legacies, and subject thereto "to pay to or permit and suffer my said brother Robert Cooke to receive and take the dividends and interest thereof for his own use and benefit during his natural life, and after his death to permit Hannah, the wife of Robert Cooke, to receive the dividends for her life," and after the decease of the survivor he gave the principal of the said trust fund, and the stocks, and securities, wherever the same should be invested, to the children of his brother George Cooke. It was contended, principally on the authority of the last-cited case (c), that the tenants for life were entitled to the enjoyment in specie of the income of the testator's Long Annuities, and also of his leaseholds. No leaseholds were referred to in the residuary clause, and, as the Vice-Chancellor observed, they would not produce dividends or interest. The Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in reference to the use of the word dividends in this will, considered that it could not be considered as having the effect of entitling the tenants for life to the enjoyment of the income of the Long Annuities. His Honour thought it would be raising distinctions of a dangerous nature to hold that there was anything of sufficient substance in this case to justify a departure from the general rule.

In the late case of Hinves v. Hinves, before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, (1844) (d), the testator, after giving the whole of his property to his executors, and directing them to dispose of it in the manner after pointed out and to pay all his debts, bequeathed as follows:—"viz., to my wife Sarah the hole (sic) income of my property of all description whatsoever for her natural life at her own disposal, but not to sell without the hole consent of all parties." After some other bequests and directions, he gave the residue of his property to his five brothers. The testator by a codicil left to his wife all the benefit of his houses at Gravesend—the main question was whether the widow was entitled to the specific enjoyment of such part of the residuary property as consisted of leaseholds and Long Annuities during her life.

(a) Harvey v. Harvey, 5 Beavan, 138-9; and see Att.-General v. Potter, ibid. 164.

(b) 1 Coll. 498; and see Sargent v. Roberts, xii. Jur. 429-30.

(c) Also Alcock v. Sloper, and Bethune v. Kennedy, supra, and Vincent v. Newcombe, Younge, R. 599.

(d) 3 Hare, 609.

Sir J. Wigram, in that case, examined all the authorities in which up to that time the tenant for life had been held, upon the intention to be collected from the will, to be entitled to enjoy the income of the testator's property in specie during his life, noticing also those where a contrary decision had been made (a); and he decided in this case, that looking to the directions the testator had given for the enjoyment of his property by the cestuis que trust and for the management of it, he could not hold that the Long Annuities and leaseholds were not to be enjoyed in specie without in effect deciding against the cases he had referred to.

In the still later case of Hubbard v. Young (b), the testatrix after giving all her property, with some exceptions, to her granddaughter, and then providing that in case she should die without leaving issue, all her property should go over to certain other persons, proceeded thus:—"If my daughter and myself should die before my granddaughter is of age, it is my desire that Mrs. Jane Hubbard may have the care of her till she comes of age, at which time she is to receive the dividends herself, but not the principal; that is not to be spent; my property is in the Bank and India House." The question was whether the granddaughter, as tenant for life, was entitled to the dividends in specie of 1000*l.* East India Stock, and 3090*l.* £3 10*s.* per Cent. Stock, part of the testatrix's estate; it was held that she was. According to the doctrine of the present day, said Lord Langdale, the question does not depend upon the legacy being specific or not; but you are to collect from the will whether the testator intended that the property should at all events be enjoyed by those in remainder after the expiration of the prior interest. His Lordship remarked that the fund was permanent, though not such a species of investment as the court recognises; and his Lordship thought upon the words of the will the granddaughter was to have the dividends of the property as it stood for life, and the others were to take the same, that is the identical property after her, and that the rule of conversion, though of great importance in many cases, was of very little importance in the present.

(a) See particularly pp. 612, 613. The Vice-Chancellor particularly notices (p. 612) those cases in which the disposition of the personal estate being in the same clause as contained a devise of land has been held not to be material, and where it has been held to be material, as in Bethune v. Kennedy, before Lord Cottenham. His Honour said it had always appeared to him that in the more modern cases (unless, perhaps, the cases of Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501, and Benn v. Dixon, 10 Sim. 636, must be excepted) the court in applying the rule had leant against the conversion as strongly as was consistent with the supposition that the rule itself (established by Howe v. Lord Dartmouth) was well founded, 3 Hare, 612; et v. supra, p. 554.

(b) 10 Beav. 203.

Another question arises in these cases, as before adverted to (a), namely, what income, or what amount of interest, and from what time is to be allowed to the tenant for life, in cases where it is admitted that the residue must be converted. Sir James Wigram has reviewed the cases relating to this subject, particularly in the following case, more especially in regard to the right of the tenant for life to receive the income which has actually accrued upon such part of the residue as has been found to be or has been placed within the year after the testator's death in a proper state of investment. "The court, in these cases," said the Vice-Chancellor, "considers the interest of the legatees as the general and primary object of the testator, and treats his direction to convert and invest as a particular and secondary object—a mode, in fact, of carrying the primary object into effect and nothing more; in many cases it would be impossible to get in the property in a reasonable time, in some it could only be done at a ruinous loss to the estate: to obviate this and other inconveniences," continued his Honour, "the court feigns the property to be converted at the end of one year from the death, and from that time at least gives to the tenant for life the precise income which would have been produced if the property were actually so converted and in its proper state of investment" (b).

In Taylor v. Clark (c), the case above referred to, part of the testator's property consisted at his death of capital in a partnership-business in Portugal, which according to the will was to be withdrawn by instalments in the course of three or five years at the discretion of his executors, it bearing interest in the mean time—the testator by his will gave the whole of his residuary estate in Great Britain and elsewhere to trustees in trust to sell and invest the same in the English funds, and to pay the interest as the same should become due, to his wife for life, and after her death the whole of the residuary estate was given to other persons. The principal question was whether the widow was entitled to the whole or any part of a sum of 3378*l.*, of which 2827*l.* arose from interest of the capital of the partnership, and 551*l.* from interest of simple-contract debts; though other questions arose. It was contended, on behalf of the parties interested in the residue, that the widow was not entitled, according to the intention as expressed in the will, in respect of the property in

(a) Most of the cases on the subject now under consideration are collected by Mr. Hill, on Trustees, p. 390, et seq.

(b) V. supra, p. 44; and see 1 Hare, pp.

167-8, and Gibson v. Bott, and Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387, there cited.

(c) 1 Hare, 161, supra, 44

Portugal, to any thing, until it was actually got in and invested. The Vice-Chancellor said, that to such a strict and literal interpretation of the will all authority and daily experience were opposed; and his Honour, following Sitwell v. Bernard, held that the widow was not excluded from taking the interest, to be computed upon the supposition that the whole was converted at the end of one year, not saying however that she would be entitled to receive such interest until the property in respect of which it was payable was actually gotten in: his Honour also held that the widow was not entitled to the actual interest received on the testator's property in Portugal after the first year from the testator's death; he could not, he said, treat the testator's directions as to his property in Portugal as of the essence of his will, and at the same time treat as merely directory those other parts which according to a strict interpretation would exclude her from any benefit until the property was gotten in; it was only by treating the directions for realizing and investing the property as subordinate to the testator's primary object of benefiting his legatees, that the tenant for life, under the general rule of the court, gets an income from the property before it is actually converted (a).

As to the question, What are the rights of the residuary legatee for life during the first year after the testator's death, where the residue is directed to be invested in a particular manner, and the income produced by such investments is to be paid to the residuary legatee? The Vice-Chancellor in the case last referred to adverted to the four possible solutions of this question that may be suggested, and in favour of each of which the highest authorities, and of modern date, may be cited (b). They are as follow, namely—1st. The tenant for life may be held to be entitled to nothing until the expiration of a year from the testator's death in whatever state of investment the property may be (c); this mode of disposing of the question, it may be observed, though objectionable in principle as is hereinafter noticed, has this recommendation, that it affords a definite rule, applicable to all cases. 2nd. He may be entitled to the income of such parts of the estate as are in a proper state of investment, or may become so invested in the course of the year, but not to the income of property not so invested, that part of the income being applied as capital (d):

(a) Ibid. p. 170; and see Tucker v. Boswell, 5 Beav. p. 607; Entwistle v. Markland, 6 Ves. 528, n.: and Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387.

(b) Ibid. v. supra, p. 44.

(c) Stott v. Hollingworth, 3 Mad. p. 161; Taylor v. Hibbert, 1 Jac. & W. 308; and the Vice-Chancellor Wigram thinks that Lord Eldon's language, in Sitwell v. Bernard, supports this proposition (1 Hare, 171).

(d) La Terriere v. Bulmer, 2 Sim. p. 18; see, as to this case, Mr. C. P. Cooper's note, 1 Rep. temp. Cottenham, p. 184.

this is Sir A. Hart's rule in La Terriere v. Bulmer, which, as the Vice-Chancellor Wigram observed, is supported by Gibson v. Bott (a); it is however, as is more fully stated hereafter, liable to this obvious objection, that it makes the income of the tenant for life depend, at least to some extent, upon the activity and regularity of the trustees in making the investments. 3rd. The tenant for life may be entitled to the income of the property for the first year in its existing state (b); a rule, as hereafter observed, that would give to the tenant for life the whole residue in the event of a testator dying in the same year that the Long Annuities will expire if he should have no other property. 4th. The tenant for life may be entitled for the first year to so much interest as would have accrued for that year, on such a sum of £3 per Cent. stock as the residue would have produced if invested in such stock at the end of the year; it was on this principle that Lord Lyndhurst decided Dimes v. Scott (c). His Honour having stated the authorities, expressed his approbation of Sir A. Hart's doctrine in La Terriere v. Bulmer, referred to above; and so far as that decision was impugned by Dimes v. Scott, the latter decision, his Honour thought, was to be regretted. In reference to the 3rd and 4th modes of disposing of the question his Honour observed: "To give to the tenant for life—as in Angerstein v. Martin, and Douglas v. Congreve (d)—the income of property not in a proper state of investment, is to give him," said his Honour, "what the testator has neither given him nor intended him to have (e): to give to the tenant for life an income during the first year, calculated upon the principle of a supposed conversion of the property into £3 per Cent. stock, is to make a distinction between the case of a residuary legatee and all other general legatees: Dimes v. Scott, as far as that point is concerned, is a case of first impression." The Vice-Chancellor in the case before him decided, following to this extent La Terriere v. Bulmer, that the widow was entitled to the income actually produced by such part of the property of the testator as was invested according to his will, from the time of such investments; but, not following that case so far as Sir A. Hart had decided, that the income before such investment forms part of the

(a) 7 Ves. 95.

(b) Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Keen, 410; and see Angerstein v. Martin, Turn. & R. 232 (1 Hare, 171).

(c) 4 Russ. 195.

(d) Ubi supra. Lord Langdale has followed his decision in Douglas v. Congreve, in the late case of Robinson v. Robinson (Nov. 1846), stated in the additional note, No. 2.

(e) Mr. Jarman appears to think that the principle acted upon in the case of Douglas v. Congreve is the more convenient rule as well as the most just, but qu. to whom? vol. i. p. 542; Mr. Jarman's statement of the case of La Terriere v. Bulmer, (p. 542,) it may be observed, does not appear to be quite correct. Fitzgerald v. Jervoise, 5 Mad. 25, applies to a direction for conversion after the death of a third person (v. ibid. p. 542).

capital, his Honour did not exclude the widow, the tenant for life, from any interest in respect of that part which was not in a proper state of investment, though he held that she was not entitled, during the first year, to a larger income in respect of such part of the testator's property as was not so invested than the property would have produced if it had been invested according to the will; following in that respect Dimes v. Scott (a).

This case has been called to the attention of the court, in the more modern cases of Caldecott v. Caldecott (b), Wrey v. Smith (c), Sparling v. Parker (d); to his Honour's attention in Pickup v. Atkinson (e), and to Lord Langdale's in Robinson v. Robinson, (1846) (f). In the first of these cases the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce gave to the tenant for life the income of such parts of the residue as were at the testator's death, and had remained in a proper state of investment (g); so that the rule appears to be settled to this extent, that where conversion is directed expressly or is to be implied, the tenant for life will enjoy, during the first year, the income which shall accrue on such part of the property as is at the death or shall be placed, during the interval, and remain in a proper state of investment. Lord Langdale, in Robinson v. Robinson, seems to have followed, though without any express reference to the point, his decision in Douglas v. Congreve (h). In the case of Wrey v. Smith (i), the testator gave his money, securities for money, moneys in the funds, chattels, and all other his personal estate not otherwise disposed of, to trustees, in trust with all convenient speed to sell and convert into money such parts as they or the survivor of them or the executors of such survivor or their or his assigns should think proper, of any moneys in the funds, and to call in and convert into money all such parts of the rest of his said general personal estate as should not consist of money, and out of his said general personal estate and the moneys to arise thereby, to pay

(a) 1 Hare, p. 175. Such appears to be the effect of the judgment, taking the marginal note as explanatory of it.

(b) 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 320.

(c) 14 Sim. 209.

(d) 9 Beav. 526.

(e) 4 Hare, 626.

(f) See additional note, No. 2.

(g) 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 324. Interest not exceeding four per cent. was given upon such parts as were not in a proper state of investment, as stated in a subsequent note, v. infra, p. 563; four per cent., it is to be observed, was given in Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387; see 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 321, n.; Wrey v. Smith is stated in the text. The points decided in the cases of Sparling v. Parker, and Pickup v. Atkinson, relate to different questions; in Sparling v. Parker, upon the special circumstances, as after stated (inf. p. 562, n.), the actual income was given from the death; in Pickup v. Atkinson the question was whether there was to be a conversion; the special circumstances were not considered as sufficient to give the tenant for life the right to the enjoyment in specie.

(h) The question does not appear to have been specifically raised in Turner v. Newport, before Lord Cottenham, referred to infra.

(i) 14 Sim. 202.

his, the testator's, debts and legacies. The testator then directed that the trustees, and the survivor, &c., should invest the residue of the moneys to arise from his said general personal estate which should remain, after answering those purposes, in their or his names; and that they might from time to time alter and vary, at their discretion, as well the same stocks, funds and securities, as also such of the stocks, funds or securities as they should not think proper to sell and convert into money. The Vice-Chancellor of England observed on these words, that he understood that they gave the trustees an option generally as to what parts of the testator's residuary estate they should sell and convert into money, and what parts they should leave unsold and unconverted; but the first direction to them was to sell and convert the whole into money with all convenient speed; so that they were to exercise a discretion as to what was convenient speed. The testator then directed that the trustees should stand possessed of the testator's said trust moneys, stocks, &c., which should be purchased as aforesaid, and which should remain unconverted, upon trust, during the life of the plaintiff, to pay the interest, &c., as and when the same should be received, to such persons as she should appoint, but without anticipation; and in default of appointment, to her own hands, for her separate use. It was urged by the plaintiff that the Long Annuities, East India Stock, and Bank Stock, of which the estate in part consisted, was not required for the payment of debts and legacies, so that no sale was required. Nothing appeared as to whether the trustees had exercised any discretion in regard to what was convenient speed, beyond the fact that in Sept. 1843 and Jan. 1844, (the testator had died in April, 1843,) the trustees had sold the Long Annuities, &c. above referred to. The Vice-Chancellor said, "It was plain that if the trustees, having exercised their discretion as to what was a convenient time for selling or converting any part of the testator's residuary estate, have not found such a time, the income of that part belongs to the tenant for life, as well as the income of that part which, in the exercise of their discretion, they have found a convenient time to sell or convert; and the decree declared that the plaintiff was entitled to such interest as actually accrued upon the clear residuary personal estate of the testator during the first year after the death of the testator" (a). The decision, as will have been observed, turned upon the peculiar penning of the will.

(a) In this case, Caldecott v. Caldecott, amongst other cases, was cited; but it is to be remarked that, according to the Vice-Chancellor's construction, there was no part of the property which was not, in reference to the terms of the will, in a proper state of investment; the terms of the trust were, as will be seen, special. In Sparling v. Parker (1846), supra, et v. ante, p. 43 (now reported in 9 Beav. p. 524), a similar decree, without Interest has been given, in some cases, to the tenant for life, upon the unconverted property, at four per cent (a). Where a portion of the testator's estate consisted of a debt, and the debtor's estate was insolvent, and for some years nothing was recovered, either for principal or interest, but at length a sum was realized, Lord Cottenham held that the proper order, as regards the tenant for life, was to ascertain what the bond would have realized if the debtor's estate had been administered at the end of a year after the death of the testatrix, and to allow the tenant for life interest at four per cent. on that amount (b): though this was not a direct decision upon the point as regards the amount of interest, for it was in part founded on a suggestion of the counsel of one of the parties, which was acquiesced in by the counsel for the other parties, it may be taken as an indication of his Lordship's opinion as to the rate of interest to be given. Where the executors or trustees have an option to invest on real or government securities, and they have omitted to do either, it is the settled practice in the court of the Master of the Rolls to allow interest at three per cent. only, or such interest as would have been produced by an investment in the £3 per Cent. Consols, though there is no such settled practice in the other branches of the court, and there are authorities which would give to the tenant for life the larger interest which might have accrued from an investment on real security, according to the option given to the trustees (c). It appears therefore that the reference to the general doctrine, was made on the intention to be collected upon the construction of the will, giving the tenant for life the income produced since the death. The property was not of a perishable nature; there was nothing in the will pointing at an immediate sale and investment; the trustees were to sell and invest the personal estate, "as soon as may be," in the purchase of lands most convenient to the estates the testator already possessed; see p. 527.

(a) Caldecott v. Caldecott, and Gibson v. Bott, supra, p. 44. The decree in Gibson v. Bott, ibid. contains a special declaration as to the reason of the exception as to the leasehold estate, on which Lord Eldon directed that a value should be put, and that the tenant for life should have four per cent., from the testator's death, on the value; but it does not appear from the decree what rate of interest was given on the residue of the property, between the testator's death and the conversion; see 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 320, n. By the decree in Caldecott v. Caldecott, on further directions, (1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 738,) as regards the interest on that part of the property not in a proper state of investment, it was declared, that as to the shares in the fire and life insurance companies, the plaintiff was entitled to so much of the dividends, &c. as had accrued since the death of the testator as would not exceed four per cent. per annum on the sums ascertained to be the value thereof respectively, at the end of one year from the testator's death, and to so much of the dividends, &c. thereafter to accrue on the same until they should be sold, as would not exceed interest at the same rate; the same principle was applied to the Bank Stock which had been sold; and see the remainder of the decree, p. 738-9: and see the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's judgment in Sutherland v. Cooke, sup. p. 44; 1 Coll. 505; his Honour, it should be stated, added "and I think that, consistently with Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, and Dimes v. Scott, I may do so in the present case."

(b) Lord C. Turner v. Newport, 2 Phill. 18, on appeal: S. C., 1 C. P. Coop. R. p. 147: no question was raised as to the time from which the interest should begin to run; in fact the Master was directed to make the calculation from the end of one year.

(c) See Robinson v. Robinson, additional note No. 2. In Marsh v. Hunter, 6 Mad. 295, question as to whether the tenant for life shall be entitled to the actual income of the property not converted, or what rate of interest, if any, he shall receive on the unconverted portions of the residue, not being in a proper state of investment, during the first year, is not definitively settled.

If the question—as to what amount of interest the tenant for life should receive, and from what time, where the residue given in succession consists of various particulars, some of which are wearing out or otherwise not in a proper state of investment—had always come for decision with reference to the mere matter of right as between the tenant for life and those in remainder, perhaps there would not have been any discrepancy in the decisions, whether there were an express direction for conversion or not. Where a residue, consisting of particulars of the above description, is given simpliciter, without any indication of intention beyond what the direction that the residue shall be enjoyed in succession implies, it is obvious, that the enjoyment of the property, which is wearing out, cannot be secured to each of the persons to whom it is given, unless it be converted (a); the law therefore implies a direction for conversion, though it be not expressly given (b): as the will speaks from the death, the title of the tenant for life must, it would seem, vest at the death; if so, it is obvious that the conversion, if it be practicable, ought to take place immediately on the death of the testator. In some cases, for instance, where the residuary estate consists of Long Annuities only, this may be done without any loss or sacrifice; and putting loss and sacrifice out of consideration, a conversion, in many cases, might be made immediately; and where it is delayed only to prevent a loss from falling on the corpus of the estate, that ought not, it would seem, in a question of Sir J. Leach held that the executors were only liable for the principal sum omitted to have been invested; and Sir J. Wigram, in Shepherd v. Moults, 4 Hare, 505, followed that case; the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Rees v. Williams (1847), also decided in conformity with Shepherd v. Moults: none of these cases were cited in Robinson v. Robinson, though Lord Langdale appears to refer to them in his judgment, and perhaps the reference to the case in 4th Hare ought to be to Shepherd v. Moults. It would seem to follow from these cases, if they should be taken as the law, that where there is an option to invest in real or government security, and no investment is made, the tenant for life ought not to be confined to the interest which would have accrued on an investment in the funds. This point seems to require to be set at rest by Lord Cottenham or the House of Lords. The interest usually charged against the trustee who commits a breach of trust, such as omitting to convert and invest, not wilfully, is four per cent.; Mousley v. Carr, 4 Beav. 49, 53; and see the other cases, Hill on Trustees, 541.

(a) V. supra, p. 42.

(b) "I cannot read the words 'in trust to be by them (the trustees) from time to time, as they shall think fit, turned into moneys for the payment of my debts and legacies,'" said the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Caldecott v. Caldecott, (1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 322,) "as expressing more than the law would direct or imply without them;" et v. ibid. p. 323.

right, to be allowed to operate to the prejudice of any particular person who has an interest in the property.

Then does an express direction for conversion make any difference? If an express direction is no more than the law implies, the question is answered. But it may further be observed, that if real estate is directed to be converted with all convenient speed, or in words of similar import, though it is well known that, in many cases, it cannot without danger of loss be converted immediately, yet it is treated as converted from the day of the testator's death, and the tenant for life is held to be entitled to the rents and profits from the death of the testator (a); and it is the same where the estate is directed to be converted after the death of a person who has a life interest in the estate (b). Why should a different principle be applied to a direction for the conversion of personal estate with a view to investment, so far as the rights of the parties as between themselves are concerned (c). A year from the day of the testator's death may indeed, as a matter of convenience, be taken, in the latter case, as the time for ascertaining the amount—for, as regards personal estate, time must be given to get it in and to see what is really residue (d);—but, if this be the only reason, surely it ought not to affect any question of right as between the residuary legatees themselves; it does not affect the general legatees so far as regards their title to their legacies, it only affects the question of interest on the legacies; one year from the death of the testator being considered as a reasonable time to be allowed to the (a) Lord Thurlow, Hutcheon v. Mannington, 1 Ves. Jun. 367. (The case itself (see 8 Ves. 655) turned on what was meant by the words "in case the legatee of a residue of personalty should die before he received it;" under the circumstances, which were special, Lord Thurlow held that it vested at the testator's death, though the case ended in a compromise.) Casamajor v. Strobe, 19 Ves. 390, in the note; Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. 554, (v. infra, n. (c)); and see Browne v. De Laet, 4 Bro. 536; Vigor v. Harwood, 12 Sim. p. 172; and see Dalzell on Conversion, p. 50.

(b) Fitzgerald v. Jervoice, 5 Mad. p. 29: the construction was confirmed by the circumstances in that case; the marginal note, as Mr. Jarman has observed, is incorrect.

(c) "Where there is a trust," says Lord Thurlow, in Hutcheon v. Mannington, ubi sup., "that is always considered here as done which is ordered to be done." Where there is a direction for the accumulation of the interest of a residue directed to be laid out, the interest is not given from the death; the tenant for life is there made to wait a year; Sitwell v. Bernard, 541-2. The construction put upon the words "with all convenient speed," as respects personalty, as between the executors and the persons interested in the estate, is, that it is to be considered as converted within a year, that being considered as the time within which in the generality of cases it may be converted with ordinary diligence; Lord Eldon, Gibson v. Bott, 7 Ves. 95-6; see also Sir Wm. Grant's observations, Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. p. 553; the question in that case was as to the vesting of a legacy upon the construction of the words of the will; there the vesting was postponed till after the sale, distinguishing it from Hutcheon v. Mannington. I may here observe that Mr. Jarman on Wills (i. pp. 542-3) draws a conclusion from this case and Sitwell v. Bernard, which I cannot trace to those cases: et v. Brooke v. Lewis, supra, p. 42, and Sitwell v. Bernard, supra, p. 43.

(d) See Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. p. 533, 542, Lord Eldon.

executor for getting in the personal estate and paying the debts, the executor is not considered, before the expiration of that time, as in default for not paying the general legacies; until that time therefore the legatees are not entitled to claim any interest: but no question of interest arises in respect of the tenant for life of a residue; the corpus of the gift to him is a life interest in the residue, commencing, as I apprehend upon every analogy, from the death of the testator, let the amount of such residue be ascertained when and how it may.

Besides, notwithstanding the allowance of the year to the executors, no one denies that the executors may convert the whole the next day after the testator's death, if that be practicable, and not only may they pay the general legacies immediately, but it would seem that where the fund is clear they ought to do so (a); and it is now established, as we have seen, that if they do make such conversion, and invest the proceeds in proper securities, the tenant for life will be entitled to the income of the property so invested. Surely on principle the tenant for life, looking to the matter of right as between himself and those in remainder, is equally entitled to the interest or dividends which might have accrued if a conversion and proper investment had been made: if the question be made to depend on whether such a conversion might have been made, the particulars of every case would have to be examined into, an inquiry that might be "endless and immeasurable" (b), and even if it should appear that an immediate conversion could not have been made without a sacrifice as regards the corpus of the property, would it follow that the tenant for life should be excluded from the benefit which he would derive from such immediate conversion, if he would be the loser, and those only in remainder be the gainers by the delay?—a consequence which in all probability must result if he should be held to be entitled only to that which is in a proper state of investment during the year.

Then, on the other hand, as regards the right of the tenant for life to the actual income of the unconverted property; as modern authority and experience is against the construction that would exclude the tenant for life until actual conversion (c), it seems to be equally contrary to principle that any delay in the conversion should give to the tenant for life the income of property which, at the end of the year, will be or even may be of less value than it was at the death of the testator.

(a) Lord Redesdale, Pearson v. Pearson, 1 Scho. & Lef. 12; Lord Eldon, Garthshore v. Chalié, 10 Ves. 13.

(b) See Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 540.

(c) V. supra, pp. 43-4.

It would appear therefore that, independently of authority, the only true principle would be, in settling the question of right, to disregard the twelve months allowed for collection or to use it only as the medium for ascertaining what the residue actually is, and put it out of the question in determining what the rights of the tenant for life and remainderman are as between themselves. This mode of treating the subject would give to the tenant for life from the time when, as I have assumed, his title equally as that of a general legatee accrues, namely, the testator's death, the interest on the actual residue to be ascertained in the manner above referred to; and this is the principle on which Lord Lyndhurst appears to have founded his decision in the case of Dimes v. Scott, though possibly, as has been intimated by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Lord Lyndhurst may, in coming to that decision, have, to a certain extent, disregarded some of the previous authorities. It is however to be observed, as regards some at least of those authorities, as well as of those which have subsequently occurred (a), that the executors or trustees had, in the particular case, from inadvertence or error in judgment, allowed the tenant for life, for several years, to enjoy the income of the property which ought to have been converted; so that to have applied the strict rule of right would have borne very hard upon the executors and upon the tenant for life, who, after the lapse of several years, had been suddenly informed that he was a debtor. Hence in such cases some principle appears to have been searched for on which to relieve the executor and the tenant for life in the particular instance. Some cases, as will have been seen, have gone so far as to give to the tenant for life, and thus to the executors, the benefit of the year allowed for collection and conversion, and to allow him for that year the income actually received; a purpose which appears to be quite foreign to that for which the allowance of the year was originally introduced, and which, if followed out, as it must be if founded on principle, might, in some possible cases, give to the tenant for life the whole of the residue, as in the instance of the testator dying the year that his Long Annuities or his leasehold interests, of which the entire residue may consist, shall expire. In other cases, in some instances perhaps from similar motives, four per cent. has been allowed upon the value, taking it to have been converted at the death or at the end of the year. Lord Lyndhurst's decision certainly put aside all such merciful considerations: Sir A. Hart's decision in La Terriere v. Bulmer, putting, as it has been held in some of the more modern cases, a forced construction on the direction for conversion, went to the other extreme.

(a) V. int. al. Sutherland v. Cooke, supra, p. 44.

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram appears to object to the principle of the decision in Dimes v. Scott, because it makes a distinction between the case of a residuary legatee and all other general legatees; but as regards the question now under consideration is there not an essential difference between the two? to refuse to the tenant for life any part of the income during the first year is, in effect, to deprive him of part of his capital; the capital of the general legatee is not touched by not allowing him interest for the first year.

There may be cases where the principle of the case of Dimes v. Scott may be found to be difficult of application; if however that principle in all its integrity were finally established, it would furnish a clear and definite rule, applicable without difficulty, in most cases, and perhaps not offering any serious difficulty in any: the case of debts which cannot be collected for years has been overcome (a). It might for a time no doubt bear hard upon executors and tenants for life, in particular cases, where they may have acted upon some of the decided cases; but if the rule were settled, the frequent recurrence of instances in which it would have to be applied would soon make it known to those who have to advise in such cases; and instead of the tenant for life being able to produce decisions or dicta to show that he is entitled to the actual income received, or at least to interest at four per cent., and the remainderman to produce authorities to show that the tenant for life is entitled to nothing until the conversion is made, or to three per cent. or the dividends of a supposed amount of three per cent. stock only, and that only from the end of a year (b), thereby forcing the executor to act under the indemnity of the Court of Chancery, or to act under the peril of personal risk, there would be a definite rule to which each party interested might be referred, and the executor might safely act without resorting to a suit. It is therefore of the utmost importance that some case distinctly raising the question, in which all the authorities might be reviewed, should be, as no doubt will speedily happen, brought for decision before Lord Cottenham.

The principle of Howe v. Lord Dartmouth has been held not to apply to the case of property invested in Indian securities given by a testator resident there, during the time the parties are living in India (c). Where the personal estate is to be converted and invested in the purchase of lands, as a general rule the interest of the personal fund which accrues for the first year only is to be considered as capital, though there be a direction to accumulate until the purchase be actually made (a). Where there is a trust for accumulation which exceeds the legal limits, the accumulations which at the end of the 21 years should have been made upon the principal sum will generally form part of the capital of the residue (b).

(a) See Turner v. Newport, supra; 1 C. P. Coop. R. temp. Cottenham, 151-2, on appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, 14 Sim. 33.

(b) V. supra, p. 559.

(c) Holland v. Hughes, 16 Ves. 111: S. C. 3 Meriv. p. 685; it was held that the infant being resident here, was entitled to have the fund then remitted to this country.

In the case of bequests of specific property to different persons in succession, a question frequently occurs as to who is entitled to any extraordinary profit that may accrue in any particular year. The general rule is that Bonuses, whether given in stock or money, will be considered as capital and must be laid out (c). In Price v. Anderson (1847) (d), the testator gave the dividends and interest of whatever stock he might possess in the Royal Exchange Assurance Company to his granddaughter for life, for her separate use, and after her death the principal was to be sold: the company gave a bonus in addition to the usual dividends, and the question was, whether the tenant for life was entitled to it. "The question," said the Vice-Chancellor of England, "must be determined by the mode in which the company have dealt with their profits. The company might have declared, if they had thought proper, that part of it should be dividend and part capital, but instead of doing so, they have declared the whole to be dividend; and therefore," said the Vice-Chancellor, "the tenant for life is entitled to the whole." The Vice-Chancellor considered that the Lord Chancellor's order of the 4th of April, 1838, applied only to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and not to any other company, and that it manifested that what other companies declared to be dividend should be taken as dividend (e).

Where a sum of stock is given to trustees, in trust, for a married woman for life, with remainder to her children, being infants, the court will not ordinarily give its sanction to the fund being sold out and invested on mortgage, so as to give the tenant for life a greater interest, though power may have been given to the trustees to lay out the property on real security, and though they join in the petition,

(a) Sitwell v. Bernard, ubi sup.; (see Lord Cottenham's observations as to the principle of this case, Casamajor v. Pearson, 8 Cl. & Fin. 94-5;) Noel v. Lord Henley, 7 Price, 241; Kilvington v. Gray, 2 Sim. & S. 396; Vickers v. Scott, 3 My. & K. 500, 1 C. P. Coop. R. temp. Cottenh. 167; Tucker v. Boswell, 5 Beav. 607.

(b) Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sim. 429.

(c) Paris v. Paris, 10 Ves. 185, 190; Clayton v. Gresham, ibid. 288, 290; and see Ward v. Combe, 7 Sim. 634.

(d) 15 Sim. 473; and see Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501.

(e) The case principally relied upon on the part of the tenant for life was Barclay v. Wainwright, 14 Ves. 66.

particularly as in such cases the expenses frequently more than counterbalance the advantage derived by the tenant for life from the increase of income (a).

Questions frequently arise between the tenant for life and those in remainder as to the right to the Timber on settled estates, and in regard to the working of Mines and Quarries. As a general rule, if timber is severed from the estate by the act of a trespasser or a tempest the timber belongs either to the tenant for life without impeachment of waste, if in possession, or to the person who has the inheritance in case there be no such tenant for life (b). But a tenant for life without impeachment of waste, though himself entitled to cut down timber, cannot it seems claim timber severed during the prior estate of a person not entitled to cut timber, it vests in the owner of the inheritance; and a tenant for life impeachable of waste is in the same condition as regards underwood improperly cut by a preceding tenant (c).

Tenant for life impeachable of waste is only allowed to fell timber when, where, and in such manner as that it will be for the benefit of the succession; and perhaps it is almost necessary that he should first apply to the Court of Chancery, in order that the felling may take place and the produce may be laid out under its directions, for the tenant for life is not entitled to the timber when cut (d).

A tenant for life without impeachment of waste may fell trees fit for the purposes of timber, though young and not such as would be felled in a course of husbandlike management of the estate (e); but he will be restrained, though having the legal right so to do, from what has

(a) Barry v. Marriott, xii. Jur. 1043; Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce; and see, In re Fust (1817), C. P. Coop. Rep. temp. Cottenham, 157; et v. ibid. 158.

(b) Vice-Chancellor of England, Tooker v. Annesly, 5 Sim. 241; Bowles's case, 11 Rep. 79; Skelton v. Skelton, (Lord Nottingham,) 2 Swanst. 171 (15 Ves. 427). Lord Talbot, in Bewick v. Whitfield, 3 P. W. 267, says, "to him who has the first estate of inheritance;" but this had reference to a case of simple tenant for life: see Williams v. Duke of Bolton, 1 Cox, 72; 3 P. W. 268, n.; fully stated in Eden on Inj. 215-8; see the other cases, Bisset, 314, 315. As to what is the meaning of the words "voluntary waste excepted," see Garth v. Cotton, 1 Dick. 183; and Bisset, 316. As to injunctions to restrain the tenant for life from committing waste, see Drewry on Injunctions, in which learned work the leading authorities down to 1841 are stated or referred to; et v. supra, vol. i. pp. 671-2; and infra, title Injunction.

(c) Per Buller, J., Pigot v. Bullock, 1 Ves. J. 484; 3 Bro. 539.

(d) Bewick v. Whitfield, 3 P. W. 267; Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Mad. 44; and see Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. p. 264; Knight v. Duplessis, 2 Ves. 362; Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 179, et v. infra. As to the application or laying out of the produce of timber directed to be cut because running into decay, see Eden on Injunc. 218, et seq.; Cowel v. Chambers, Rolls, 1833, Drewry on Inj. 142; and infra, p. 572.

(e) Smythe v. Smythe, 2 Swanst. 251; S. C. Wilson, 426; et v. Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 174, 177; Aston v. Aston, supra. As regards tenant for life of a term of years unimpeachable, see Sir S. Bridges v. Stephens, 2 Swanst. 150, and the next note.

been termed malicious, extravagant, or humoursome waste, for instance, the total destruction of a wood or coppice. So he will be restrained from cutting down trees planted or left standing for ornament, whether really or fancifully ornamental, but not merely because they may be really ornamental: and the protection extends not only to trees about the mansion, but to those in rides and avenues, and to trees and clumps of trees wheresoever growing and though at a considerable distance, if planted or intended for ornament, and though planted by himself (a). It would seem that scarcely any alteration in circumstances can justify such an act on the part of the tenant for life: it makes no difference that the original mansion-house is pulled down; another may possibly be built for the sake of the trees (b): and such an act, and the pulling down of houses, are equitable waste, though the inheritance may have been actually improved by it (c). Whether timber was intended or left standing for ornament by the deviser of a tenant for life may be proved, in case of doubt, from his conduct in regard to it (d). It may be observed however, as previously noticed, that the Vice-Chancellor of England, in a late case, did not acquiesce in Sir John Leach's doctrine in Lord Ormonde v. Kinnersley, that the tenant for life was to be considered, as regards equitable waste, in the light of a trustee for the persons entitled to the inheritance (e).

In all such cases the Statute of Limitations, whether it is to be considered as directly affecting the case, or only as followed by analogy, does not run until the death of the tenant for life so committing the waste (f); and the estate of the tenant for life is liable for the amount received, and interest at four per cent.: there may however be a

(a) Abraham v. Bubb, 2 Freem. 53 (see Lord Eldon's observations on this case, in Williams v. Williams, 15 Ves. 427); Anon. 2 Freem. 278 (cases of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct); Cooke v. Whaley, 1 Eq. Ab. 400; and Bishop of London v. Web, 1 P. W. 527, case of lessee for years without impeachment (and the early authorities are collected in the notes to this case); Marquis of Downshire v. Sandys, 6 Ves. 107, 112; and Wombwell v. Belasyse, cited in note to that case, p. 110; Day v. Merry, 16 Ves. 375: there the trees had been planted to exclude objects from view; Attorney-General v. Marlborough, 3 Mad. 498. It is not sufficient that the timber is in fact ornamental; per Lord Eldon, Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 183; Coffin v. Coffin, Jac. R. 70, 71, on original hearing, 6 Mad. 17; and see Newdigate v. Newdigate, 1 Sim. 131; and Wellesley v. Wellesley, 6 Sim. 497. The leading cases on this subject, down to 1841, will be found in Mr. Drewry's work on Injunctions, p. 142, et seq.

(b) Morris v. Morris, 15 Sim. p. 510; xi. Jur. p. 178, confirmed on appeal, xi. Jur. 196; Wellesley v. Wellesley, 6 Sim. 497, is there observed upon; and see Duke of Leeds v. Lord Amherst, 14 Sim. 357. In Morris v. Morris, it was proved that the copper-works in the neighbourhood had rendered the place unfit for the growth of trees.

(c) Duke of Leeds v. Earl Amherst, x. Jur. 509; 14 Sim. 357: affirmed by Lord Chancellor, 2 Phill. 117.

(d) Lushington v. Boldero, 6 Mad. 149; and see 16 Ves. 173; as to underwood, see Brydges v. Stephens, 6 Mad. 279; et v. infra, title Injunction.

(e) Kingham v. Lee, 15 Sim. 399; v. supra, p. 305.

(f) Duke of Leeds v. Lord Amherst, x. Jur. 509, supra.

release or an abandonment of right on the part of the person injured : in the case from which the last observations are taken it was held that there was nothing amounting to abandonment (a).

It is a settled rule in the Court of Chancery that, whether the estate be settled or unsettled, no person who commits a trespass shall, by his own wrong, have any benefit from the timber cut. With respect to unsettled estates the point was decided in the case of Tullet v. Tullet (b). There an infant was seised in fee, and the mother, who was his guardian, cut down the timber as upon the part of the infant : the heir of the infant brought his bill to have the money which arose from the sale of the timber secured ; and the court held, that no benefit whatever should result to a person who when she did the act might become next of kin of the infant ; but that the money should be reserved for the benefit of the party entitled to the inheritance. With respect to the case of a settled estate, what took place in the case of Williams v. Duke of Bolton (c) shows that a tenant for life who is impeachable of waste shall have no benefit from the timber that has been improperly cut down (d). But if the tenant for life has not done the wrongful act, then he has been permitted to receive the dividends of the stock in which the produce of timber has been invested (e). Where there is a settled estate, and the court has ordered timber to be cut down, (which kinds of orders are made not for the personal benefit of the parties but for the benefit of the estate itself that is the inheritance (f), ) a tenant for life impeachable of waste will have the interest of the produce paid to him for his life (g) : and if the timber be cut by the authority of a trustee in whom the legal fee is vested and who has

(a) Same Case, on appeal (20th Nov. 1846), x. Jur. 957 ; and see, as to the effect of laying by, so as to lead the party committing the unlawful act to suppose that it is acquiesced in, and thus to spend his money on what he may consider to be improvements, Brydges v. Kilburne, cited in Jackson v. Cator, 5 Ves. 689 ; and inf. p. 575, 576 ; et v. 6 Hare, 273.

(b) 1 Dick. 322 ; Amb. 370 ; and see Mason v. Mason, there cited ; and Mr. Blunt's note, ibid. 370.

(c) 1 Cox, 72.

(d) Vice-Chancellor of England, Tooker v. Annesley, 5 Sim. 241.

(e) See the dict. of Sir W. Grant, Wickham v. Wickham, 19 Ves. 423 ; and Osborne v. Osborne, cited 19 Ves. 423 ; 5 Sim. 242.

(f) Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Mad. 44, Leach, Vice-Chancellor ; "The court does not cut timber in such cases, only because a provident owner might do so ;" Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 4 Hare, 382.

(g) Tooker v. Annesley, 5 Sim. 242. In this case the estate was settled on tenant for life, subject to impeachment for waste, with remainders over. By the decree it was referred to the Master to inquire whether there were any and what timber trees standing in the woods and plantations on the testator's estates, which were in a state of decay, and which would not improve by standing, or the standing of which would be prejudicial to other trees, and which it would be for the benefit of all parties interested in the estate to have felled and sold. The Master reported that the timber trees and saplings mentioned in his report were in a state of decay, on that report an order was made for a sale of such timber for sale, and afterwards the order mentioned in the text. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram said he had frequently made similar orders, applying to timber in a state of decay and timber which would be prejudicial to other trees ; 4 Hare, 382.

a superintending control over the estate, and it appears that the timber has been such as the court itself would have ordered to be cut, the tenant for life impeachable of waste will equally be entitled to the interest (a). If the estate be sold to pay debts, the court gives the interest of the surplus to the tenant for life, though the sum is increased by the price of timber which belonged to the inheritance, and would have yielded no profit to the tenant for life (b). Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said, that notwithstanding the tenant for life is without impeachment of waste, he must keep the tenant's houses in repair, unless the charge be excessive: but it has been decided that no account can be had against him for dilapidations (c).

The tenant for life, unless authorized by the will, is not entitled (d) to open or work any Mines of coals or minerals or Quarries which had not been opened or were not in a state of working at the time of the death of his testator; the mines and quarries belong to the inheritance (e). If the tenant for life should open any new mines or quarries, or lease them to others, the remainderman will be entitled to all the moneys realized by the tenant for life, within six years from the filing of the bill, in respect of any coal, stone or minerals gotten by him, and any rent he may have received from the tenants, and an injunction will be granted to restrain the tenant for life from any future acts. But where mines have been opened before the tenancy for life began, the tenant for life may continue the working, and may open new pits or shafts if necessary for that purpose (f).

Where an estate is given to or in trust for a person for life, if the tenant for life shall allege that he has expended money in substantial repairs and improvements, generally speaking the court will not direct an inquiry as to the amount and nature of the improvements with a view to charging the inheritance (g). If the mansion-house is

(a) Waldo v. Waldo, 7 Sim. 262.

(b) Tracy v. Hereford, 2 Bro. 139.

(c) Parteriche v. Powlet, 2 Atk. p. 383, (see Lord Redesdale's observations on this case, Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Scho. & Lef. p. 35); Marquis of Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, 1 Jac. & W. 522.

(d) Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 388. In that case the will gave to the tenant for life liberty to cut down timber and wood, and get stone for buildings and repairs, but for no other purpose, 4 Hare, pp. 345-6. It is to be observed, though in anticipation, that the Jurisdiction in regard to waste, by cutting down timber improperly, where the title is legal, is limited to discovery, unless an injunction is prayed, and then an account also will be directed, Jesus College v. Bloom, 3 Atk. 262; Piers v. Piers, 1 Ves. 521, and the cases in the note, 2 P. W. 241, last ed.; and see 1 Fonbl. 13, 14. The court in such case would decree an account of ore dug, though the remedy at law may have been lost, as by the death of the party; as that is in the nature of a trade, 1 P. W. p. 406; Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, 1 Mad. 116; and see 2 Atk. 630.

(e) See Whitfield v. Bewit, 2 P. W. 241.

(f) Clavering v. Clavering, 2 P. W. 389.

(g) Caldicott v. Brown, 2 Hare, 144; Bosstock v. Blakeney, 2 Bro. 656; Nairn v. Majoribanks, 3 Russ. 582, there cited.

affected by dry rot, it would be a substantial improvement to remove it; but that is an expense to which a tenant for life choosing to occupy the property must submit (a): but where the tenant for life had expended money towards finishing the mansion-house which the testator had begun, an inquiry was directed to ascertain whether it would be for the benefit of those in remainder that it should be completed, and it seems that the real estate might have been charged with this expense if there had been no personalty applicable for the purpose (b).

A tenant for life may have to pay the interest of legacies charged on the estate, though they may not be raisable until after the death of the tenant for life (c).

The relative rights of the tenant for life and of the trustees in whom the legal estate is vested, as regards the possession of the title-deeds, and the possession and management of the estate, have been adverted to in a former page (d).

Powers of sale and exchange, leasing and other like powers are not analogous to cases where there is an attempt to withdraw from present enjoyment the profits of or interest in land (e), and are, as has already been observed, amongst the usual forms introduced into settlements and wills (f): Courts of Equity, it may be observed, are not free in extending powers given to tenants for life to bind a remainderman (g).

Where the estates under a will are legal estates, the exercise of a power of exchange for lands of equal value by a tenant for life in possession and having the legal estate, cannot be questioned in the Court of Chancery on the ground of inadequacy of value by the persons in remainder; the power being limited to lands of equal value, if that value be not obtained the exchange is void, and no estate passes by the conveyance by which the attempt was made to effectuate it; for it is under the power alone that the fee can pass: in law and in equity the conveyances are innocent unless the exchange

(a) Hibbert v. Cooke, 1 Sim. & St. 552, overruling Graves v. Graves, cited ibid. 553 (2 Hare, 145). The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 2 Hare, 146, said, Where a trust fund is to be laid out in purchase of lands cases may occur where it might be more beneficially employed in lasting improvements of the existing estates, so as to induce the court to sanction (on the part of persons not in existence, or not sui juris) such employment of the personal fund.

(b) Hibbert v. Cooke, ubi sup.

(c) Lord Milltown v. Trench, 4 Cl. & Fin. 276; see Sugd. Law of Prop. pp. 438-42, as to this case; et v. supra, p. 323, n. (c), and p. 551.

(d) Supra, pp. 45, 46; Hill, p. 382, et seq.

(e) Supra, p. 142.

(f) Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 381. See Sir E. Sugd. Law of Prop. 465, et seq. as to Powers of Leasing and Jointuring; and as to the doctrine of Remoteness as applicable to this subject, v. sup. p. 93.

(g) Per Master of the Rolls, Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 666, instancing Lady C. Orby v. Lord Mohun, 2 Vern. 531, 542; Jenkins v. Keymis, 1 Lev. 239; S. C., Hardr. 395, and 1 Ca. Ch. 103.

be valid. If an estate at law shall have passed by the conveyance, or if waste or destruction of the property taken or attempted to be taken out of the settlement were threatened or likely to take place, then there will on general grounds be a case for interference (a).

A testator, by his will, devised his real estate to the use of A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail; and he declared it should be lawful for every tenant for life or in tail in possession who should have attained 21, by an indenture to be sealed and delivered by them respectively in the presence of two or more witnesses, to demise all or any parts of the estates to any person or persons for any term not exceeding 21 years, to take effect in possession, and not by way of future interest, and so that there were reserved the most improved rent, &c., without taking any fine, &c., such lease to contain a condition for re-entry on non-payment of the rent, and the lessee to execute a counterpart, and to covenant for due payment of the rent, &c. The tenant for life entered into an agreement to grant a way-leave for 14 years to commence on the determination of an unexpired lease, and died without a lease being executed, but after the expiration of the original lease. On a bill filed by the infant tenant in tail for specific performance, the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce held, that the agreement was ultra vires the deceased tenant for life, and the bill was dismissed with costs (b). Where an estate was devised to trustees with a power of sale, and the trustees, under the supposition that the tenant for life, he being unimpeachable of waste, was entitled to the timber, sold the estate and the timber separately, allowing the tenant for life to take the produce of the latter; this was held to be a bad execution of the power, and that it could not be cured by the tenant for life paying over the produce of the timber. Sir J. Leach, before whom the case was originally heard, said, that although a court of equity will, in favour of a purchaser, supply a defect in the manner of execution, yet that he could not interfere in this case, as a court of law (the decision of the Common Pleas on this point had been affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber) had held that this was no execution of the power. Sir E. Sugden states, in his late valuable work, that this is a case of first impression (c).

If there be tenant for life, with remainder over, and the tenant for life lets the lands for a longer term than he has power to make, and

(a) See Ferrand v. Wilson, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 4 Hare, 385.

(b) Ricketts v. Bell, xi. Jur. 918; x. Law J. Ch. 105; 1 De G. & Sm. 335, 346.

(c) Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 1 Russ. & M.

418; 1 Cl. & Fin. p. 60; Sugd. Law of Prop. 492; this is an important case on other points, viz., as to the knowledge which a person must have of his rights, in order that a case of Confirmation may be relied on against him.

the person who takes the lease makes improvements, and the person entitled in remainder, who is conusant of the settlement under which he derives his title (a), stands by, and either encourages, or does not forbid it, the tenant shall enjoy his term; for Qui tacet consentire videtur, et qui potest, et debet vetare, et non vetat, jubet (b). But where a tenant for life with power to make leases under certain provisions, grants leases not authorized by the power, receipt of rent under those leases by the remainderman in ignorance of their invalidity, will not operate as a new agreement so as to prevent his setting aside such leases (c).

Where a son has a power to make a jointure not exceeding the clear yearly value of so much as he shall receive, the measure of the charges to be deducted is to be taken as things stood at the time of the making of the jointure: land-tax is not a charge from which the jointure is to be cleared; tithe is (d).

In the case of Blake v. Marnell (e) a power was given to a tenant for life, at any time he should think proper, to raise any sum of money not exceeding 1500*l.* without the control of the trustees; the tenant for life, without reference to the power, raised 744*l.* by granting an annuity of 150*l.* out of the lands; it was urged that this was not an execution of the power, it only had reference to his interest; but it was answered that where a person acts for valuable consideration he is understood in equity to engage with the person with whom he deals to make it as effectual as he has power to make it, and where the nature of the instrument is not according to the power, but demonstrates an intent to execute it, or where even it is equivocal, it shall have the operation of charging in the form in which the power allowed him to charge it (f); and it was declared that the deed of rent-charge was a due execution of the power; though Lord Eldon and Lord Redesdale in advising the House of Lords in this case said that it must not be understood that a grant of a rent-charge is in all cases to be taken as a good execution of the power (g).

(a) See, as to this point, Blennerhasset v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 137; and Bennett v. Colley, 2 My. & K. 232.

(b) Lex Prætor. 297; Hanning v. Ferrers, 1 Eq. Ab. 356, pl. 10; Gilb. Eq. R. 85.

(c) Bowes v. E. L. Water Works, 3 Mad. 375.

(d) Earl Tyrconnel v. Duke of Ancaster, 2 Ves. 504. The rule as to other particulars is there stated; and see Trevor v. Trevor, 13 Sim. 136.

(e) 2 Ball & B. 35.

(f) V. ibid. p. 39, note, Lord Redesdale; and ibid. p. 44, Lord Manners; and see Camp- bell v. Leach, Amb. 740, King v. Melling, 1 Vent. 225; and Cox v. Chamberlain, 4 Ves. 631, cited ibid. 45, 46.

(g) 2 Ball & B. 48; affirmed in the House of Lords, 4 Dow. p. 248; approved by Sir E. Sugd. Muskerry v. Chinnery, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 227. Lord Eldon declared that this was as difficult a case as he had ever had to deal with. Lord Redesdale treated the grant as an informal execution of the power; and both Lord Eldon and Lord Redesdale stated that it was not to be taken that a grant of an annuity was in all cases to be held to be a good execution of such a power. Sir E. Sugden, a most

In the case of Ward v. Hartpole (a), which also came from Ireland, a tenant for life had power to make leases for one, two, or three lives certain, or renewable for ever, at the best and most improved rent, without fine, and also a power, with the consent of the trustees, to raise any sum of money, not exceeding 5000*l.*; the tenant for life with the assent of the surviving trustee under the power, in consideration of 300*l.* which was expressed to be in part of the 5000*l.* and a rent, granted to one Vere Ward part of the lands in settlement for three lives, with a covenant for perpetual renewal. The Lord Chancellor of Ireland held that the lease was void (b): but on an appeal to the House of Lords, Lord Mansfield was clearly of opinion, particularly having regard to the established usage in Ireland, that the 5000*l.* might be raised by fines, and that the lease was a good execution of the power; the lease however was set aside on the ground of gross inadequacy and fraud (c).

A tenant for life, who has power to charge for younger children any sum he may think fit, if he sell the estate and give the greatest part of the produce to the younger children, it will be a good execution of the power (d). A power given to a tenant for life to appoint an estate amongst his children for such estates, and in such parts, &c., and with such limitations over, such limitations over to be for the benefit of the same children, and in such form, &c. as the tenant for life shall direct, is well executed by directing the rents to be paid to a married daughter for her separate use for life; and appointing the estate, if she should survive her husband, to her in tail is a good execution of the power (e). But for a full development of the doctrine as to powers given to tenants for life, I must refer the reader to the very learned and elaborate work of Sir E. Sugden on Powers, and his late work which has been so often referred to.

By the stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 22, the representatives or assigns of the tenant for life are entitled to an Apportionment of the rents and the dividends on stock in the public funds, &c., which have accrued since the last day of payment previous to the death of the tenant for life, where the right to the payment is created by any instrument or will competent judge, in his late valuable work, (Law of Property, &c.) to which I would particularly refer the reader, says he is satisfied that the grant was a good execution of the power, assuming it to be a legal one, and a benefit to the remainderman; Law of Property, p. 486.

(a) 3 Bli. 470; Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 227.

(b) 3 Bli. 476.

(c) Ibid. 486, 489-90; Sir E. Sugden, Llo.

& G. temp. Sugd. 228, observes that the doctrine of Lord Mansfield agrees with the decisions in Talbot v. Tipper, Skin. p. 427; and Long v. Long, 5 Ves. p. 445; and see Sugd. Law of Prop. 482.

(d) Long v. Long, 5 Ves. 445; Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 226.

(e) Thornton v. Bright, 2 My. & Cr. 230, 250, et seq., reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England.

executed or coming into operation after the passing of the act. But the act does not apply to rents payable by tenants from year to year, unless the rent is reserved by an instrument in writing (a). Interest due on a bond or mortgage was always apportionable as the interest becomes due from day to day (b).

In the administration of an estate where the residue is to be settled on the tenant for life, with remainders over, it frequently becomes an embarrassing question as to what is to be done in respect of giving any allowance to the tenant for life, where there are contingent liabilities which may exhaust the estate. "It is only with the true residue," said the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in a late case, "that the court can deal as between tenant for life and remainderman. If there are covenants which if broken may exhaust the estate, not only the capital but the interest must be impounded unless the tenant for life can give security to refund" (c).

A late case before the Vice-Chancellor of England, and afterwards before Lord Cottenham on appeal, affords an opportunity of adverting to the general doctrine as regards the distinction between the gift of an annuity for life and the gift of an amount of capital yielding a perpetual annuity to the amount specified. A testator bequeathed to his wife 600*l.* per annum during her life for her separate use, and after her death the said annuity was to be equally divided between A., B., C., D., E., and F., or the survivor or survivors; other annuities were given to the same persons with power to leave the annuities so given to any wife they might marry or any child they might have: the question was, whether the six annuitants were to take annuities for their lives, or were to take the capital of such sum in the  $\text{£}3$  per Cent. Bank Annuities as would be sufficient to produce the sum of 600*l.* It was held by the Vice-Chancellor of England that the annuitants were entitled to so much capital stock (d). But Lord Cottenham reversed this decision, holding that the annuitants were only entitled for their

(a) In re Markby, 4 My. & Cr. 484; and see Michell v. Michell, Rolls, vii. Jur. 887. The statute 11 Geo. II. c. 19, only applies to devises and leases determinable on the death of the tenant for life; see the additional note, No. 3. The act extends to annuities, pensions, moduses, compositions, and all other payments made payable or coming due at fixed periods, and by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, § 86, to rent-charges payable in lieu of tithes: but the act only applies to cases in which the interest of the party entitled to the rents or other periodical payments determines by death or some other means, and does not apply to the case of tenant in fee, or provide for apportionment of rents between the real and personal representatives of such person whose interest is not terminated by his death; Browne v. Amyot, 3 Hare, 173, 182. The act 4 & 5 Will. IV. extends to Scotland, Sugd. Law of Prop. 536.

(b) Edwards v. Countess of Warwick, 2 P. W. 176.

(c) Fletcher v. Stevenson, 3 Hare, 370; and see Hawkins v. Day, and Simmonds v. Bolland, there cited.

(d) Blewitt v. Roberts, 10 Sim. 491.

lives (a). "There is," said Lord Cottenham, "a marked distinction between the gift of the produce of a fund without limit as to time (b), and a simple gift of an annuity: an annuity may be perpetual, or for life, or for any period of years; but in the ordinary acceptation of the term used, if it should be said that a testator had left another an annuity of 100*l.*, no doubt would occur of the gift being an annuity for the life of the donee; it is the gift of an annual sum of 100*l.*, that is, of as many sums of 100*l.* as the donee shall live years" (c). Lord Hardwicke, in Savery v. Dyer (d), states the rule to be that "If one give by will an annuity not existing before, to A., A. shall have it only for life;" which doctrine Lord Cottenham approved and affirmed in Blewitt v. Roberts, above referred to.

A testator bequeathed two leaseholds to trustees, in trust, out of the rents to pay 50*l.* a-year to his daughter-in-law, during widowhood, and to invest the surplus in stock, in trust, for his wife for life, remainder to his granddaughters; and in case of the marriage of his daughter-in-law, to sell and invest the proceeds, in trust for his wife and granddaughters in succession. The lease expired during the daughter-in-law's widowhood; the surplus proceeds had been invested: it was held, that the daughter-in-law was not entitled to have the surplus proceeds so invested, applied towards making good her 50*l.* annuity; it was considered that the testator intended she should have an annuity out of the rents, only in case they should be sufficient to pay that sum; and if more than sufficient, a specific purpose was pointed out for which the surplus should be invested (e).

(a) Blewitt v. Roberts, 1 Cr. & Phill. 274; see the additional note, No. 4.

(b) See Elton v. Shephard, 1 Bro. p. 532; Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463; and Haig v. Swiney, 1 Sim. & St. 487.

(c) In the case of Tweedale v. Tweedale, 10 Sim. 453, which was cited in the case last referred to, the Vice-Chancellor of England had said, "I do not see any substantial difference between a gift of an annuity out of personal estate generally and a gift of an annuity to be satisfied out of a particular fund,—because an annuity when it is given generally, is to be provided for out of all the personal estate; and if a gift of 300*l.* a year out of the testator's funded property, would give to the annuitant the absolute interest in so much of the funded property as would produce 300*l.* a year, what is the substantial difference between that gift and a gift of 300*l.* a year simply to be satisfied out of so much of the personal estate as would produce that sum? I confess I do not see any difference myself; I am very much inclined to think that the true construction is that if it be given simply it is given absolutely;" see however Lord Cottenham's judgment in Blewitt v. Roberts, additional note, No. 4.

(d) Ambl. p. 139; and see Heron v. Stokes, 1 Conn. & L. 278, 279, where Sir E. Sugden enters into the distinctions on this subject, as where the bequest is coupled with a fund; and he there discusses the case of Blewitt v. Roberts.

(e) Darbon v. Rickards, 14 Sim. 539.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.—Supra, p. 565.Doctrine as to Conversion of Personal Estate into Realty as regards the Interest of Tenant for Life.

M. Dalzell—whose work on Conversion was lately highly commended by Sir J. Wigram—thus states the rule:—"It is submitted that, in the conversion by will of personalty into realty, the following conclusions are established by the preceding cases:—

"1st. That, generally, this conversion takes effect from the death of the testator.

"2ndly. That if the fund for this conversion into realty to be settled in strict settlement be constituted by residuary personal estate, with a clause for accumulation of interest until the whole can be collected in a mass for such conversion, in a question between the tenant for life and remainderman the operation of this clause will be restricted to one year from the death of the testator, when the tenant for life will begin to be entitled to the interest, in lieu of the rents and profits until the purchase is made.

"3rdly. That if there be no such clause of accumulation, although this fund be constituted of residuary personal estate, if it be clear and there is no inconvenience, there does not exist any reason why the tenant for life should not commence immediately to enjoy the interest.

"4thly. That upon the doctrine in Gibson v. Bott, if there be any increase of the testator's personal estate in the period between his death and the constitution of the fund for conversion, the tenant for life will be entitled to the benefit of the interest of that part of the fund formed by this increase.

"5thly. If the testator's personal estate to be converted into realty to be settled in strict settlement, should consist of the partnership of any trade, the dissolution of which is to take place, and the profits to be divided at stated periods after his death, in a question between the tenant for life and remainderman, upon the doctrine of Fearns v. Young, 9 Ves. 549, the tenant for life will be entitled to interest at a given rate, and not the profits, until the termination of the partnership; and then to an interest on the capital due to the testator out of the concern, the capital being valued with reference to the periods at which the instalments of it are payable; and if the personal estate should consist of any interest wearing out, or whose enjoyment is future, that a valuation should be made at the death of the testator, and the tenant for life be entitled to the interest arising from the supposed value of such interests, until the produce be laid out in land, when he will be entitled to the rents and profits." And see, on the subject of conversion as between tenant for life and remainderman, Jarman on Wills, i. 541, 552.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.—Supra, p. 563.What Rate of Interest or other Benefit the Tenant for Life of a Residue directed to be invested is entitled to, and from what Time.

In the late case of Robinson v. Robinson, (Nov. 1848,) before Lord Langdale, xii. Jurist, 969; a testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust to convert into money and to invest the proceeds in government or real securities, and to pay the income to his son A. R. during his life, and after his death to distribute the capital amongst such children of A. R. as should attain 21 or be married, with directions as to maintenance, &c. The residuary estate consisted inter alia of Bank Stock, London Dock Shares, money due from the Trustees of the Surrey and Sussex Roads secured on the tolls and toll houses, money due from the Commissioners of Sewers of Surrey and Kent, and secured on the rates. The trustees from 1840 to 1845 paid the income actually received to the tenant for life: in 1845 they converted all but the money due from the Trustees of the Surrey and Sussex Roads, and invested the proceeds in £3 per Cent. Reduced; there was a gain from the delay on the London Dock Stock, and a loss on the Bank Stock and on the debt from the Commissioners of Sewers; the income received from the residuary estate exceeded what it would have yielded if invested in £3 per Cents. at the end of one year, and even if it had been invested on real securities at 4 per cent.—The suit was instituted by the children of A. R. the tenant for life. The tenant for life had voluntarily made good the fund as if it had been invested in the £3 per Cents. at the end of the year; he insisted that he was at least entitled to 4 per cent. on the capital until invested. It was insisted on the part of the plaintiffs that as no investment had been made, the investment ought to be taken as if made in Consols, not as if invested on real securities; Lord Langdale said the result of his decisions was that the cestuis que trust had the option. In giving judgment, his Lordship, after deciding that the road bonds were not real securities within the meaning of the will, held that the trustees were liable for the loss which had been sustained in part, and could not claim for their own benefit the gain that had arisen on the sale of the other part of the funds (1). As regards the amount of interest to be allowed to the tenant for life, his Lordship said there was some difference of opinion (almost all the previous authorities on the subject had been cited), “but my opinion,” he continued, “has undergone no change.” (See Ames v. Parkinson, 7 Beav. 379: the appeal, 2 Phillips, 389, turned on a point of form; and Mehrtens v. Andrews, 3 Beav. 72.) “Here there was a trust to convert and invest in government funds or real securities; the trustees for a considerable length of time did not convert, but allowed the money to remain on securities which were not either government securities or real securities, and the question is, what interest the tenant for life is entitled to from the time when the money ought to have been invested. The tenant for life claims interest at 4 per cent.; it is said that the trustees had an option, and that if it had been invested on real security it might have produced 4 per cent.” “I confess that I could never comprehend how parties acting for cestuis que trust were entitled to have that considered as done which was most for their own benefit, and not for the benefit of the persons for whom they are acting. My opinion is that you cannot regard that which is most beneficial to the trustees and tenant for life.” And accordingly his Lordship held that the tenant for life was entitled to 3 per cent. only from the time the funds ought to have been converted, namely, from the end of the year (2).

(1) Ex parte Lewis, 1 Gl. & J. 69; case of an assignee who had bought in the property without authority; Dimes v. Scott, 4 Russ. 195. The trustees may be excused for the delay in the conversion, from the nature of the property, Buxton v. Buxton, 1 My. & Cr. 80; or in the investment, if they cannot find a good security; Wyatt v. Wallace, 1843, Vice-Chancellor of England, 1 Coop. R., temp. Cottenham, 155. A fund which is directed to be laid out in land, cannot safely be left uninvested in the interval, see Sowerby v. Clayton, 3 Hare, 430; though the decision proceeded on the omission to comply with the directions of the previous orders.

(2) This seems to assume that he was justified in taking the actual income for the first year.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.—Supra, p. 578.

Apportionment of Rent, &c. as between Tenant for Life and Remaindermen.

According to the rule of the common law, as observed in Mr. Swanston's note referred to below, on the death of a lessor tenant for life in the interval between the two periods at each of which a portion of rent becomes due from the lessee, no rent can be recovered for the occupation since the first of those periods (1); and that doctrine rested on two propositions:—1. That an entire contract cannot be apportioned. 2. That under a lease with a periodical reservation of rent the contract for the payment of each portion is distinct and entire; and the doctrine was extended to annuities and dividends on government securities, indeed all cases of periodical payments becoming due at fixed periods and not as in the case of money secured on mortgage or by bond de die in diem (2). From the principle above stated it followed that on the determination of a lease by the death of the lessor before the day of payment had arrived no rent became payable. To prevent this loss the stat. 11 Geo. II. c. 19, was passed, which provided (§ 15) that if the tenant for life should die in the interval between the days of payment, his executors might recover from the undertenant a proportionate part of the rent from the last day of payment. If from any motive the undertenant should pay the entire rent after the death of the tenant for life, it was held that a right arose to take from the person so receiving the payment the portion to which he was not entitled (3). The first section of the stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 22, declares in effect that all rents received and made payable on leases which determine on the death of the person making them, or on the death of the life or lives for which such person was entitled to the lands demised, shall be within the provisions of the act of the 11 Geo. II. c. 19. The second section provides for the apportionment of rents, annuities, and other payments due at fixed or stated periods: it has been held that this clause applies only to cases in which the interest of the person interested in such rents or payments determines by his death or by some other means, as the death of another person, but does not apply to the case of a tenant in fee, or provide for any apportionment between the real and personal representatives of a person whose interest is not terminated by his death (4). The statute 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 22, does not apply to rents payable by tenants from year to year which are not reserved by an instrument in writing (5); but it has been held that where at the death of the tenant in tail the estates are held by undertenants under parol demises, the representatives of the tenant in tail are entitled to an apportionment under the equity of the stat. 11 Geo. II. c. 19.

(1) The cases showing the state of the law prior to the act 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 22, are stated by Mr. Swanston, in his note to Ex parte Smyth, 1 Swanston, 337, (approved 3 Hare, 180).

(2) See the authorities, 1 Swanst. 349-50, n. where the exception as to annuities given for maintenance is noticed.

(3) Aynsley v. Wordsworth, 2 Ves. & B. 335, where the principle was extended to a composition for tithes between two incumbents.

(4) Brown v. Amyot, 3 Hare, 182-3.

(5) In re Markby, 4 My. & Cr. 484.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. IV.

Lord Cottenham's Judgment in Blewitt v. Roberts.

Gift of Life Annuity as distinguished from Absolute Gift, v. supra, p. 579.

"The first gift is 600*l.* per annum to the testator's wife, for her life; and, after her death, the said annuity to be equally divided between six persons named, or the survivors or survivor. The Vice-Chancellor has decided that these six persons are entitled, after the death of the widow, to so much £3 per Cent. stock as would produce 600*l.* per annum. His Honour has decided the same point in Tweedale v. Tweedale (1), and is there made to express his opinion thus: 'I have always thought, that if there be a gift simply of 100*l.* a year to A., it is a gift of that sum which shall be sufficient to produce 100*l.* a year.' The cases referred to in the argument before me of this case, do not support that proposition. In Clough v. Wynne (2), the gift was of the interest of the residue to A. for life, and at her decease to the plaintiff, and Sir Thomas Plumer held, that the corpus of the residue passed. Giving the interest of personalty without limitation, passes the whole interest, unless there are words to confine it to a life interest. Stretch v. Watkins (3), decided by the same Judge, was an unlimited gift of the produce of stock. A very different principle applies to that case; for as the public funds consist only of perpetual annuities, an unlimited gift of the produce of stock necessarily exhausts the whole subject-matter. In Philipps v. Chamberlaine (4), Lord Alvanley thought that the terms used in the residuary clause were sufficient to carry the principal as well as the interest. In Rawlings v. Jennings (5), Sir Wm. Grant relied upon expressions showing an intention to give the capital. Those decisions are founded upon the general principle, that a gift, without limit as to time, of the produce of the fund, amounts to a gift of the fund itself; and when it is clear that the gift of the produce of the fund is without limit as to time, it is impossible not to adopt the conclusion that the fund itself is given; but if expressions are to be found showing an intention that the gift of the produce should be limited as to time, such limit will be the measure of the gift."

"There is a marked distinction between the gift of the produce of a fund without limit as to time, and a simple gift of an annuity. An annuity may be perpetual, or for life, or for any period of years; but, in the ordinary acceptation of the term used, if it should be said that a testator had left another an annuity of 100*l.* per annum, no doubt would occur of the gift being an annuity for the life of the donee. It is the gift of an annual sum of 100*l.*; that is, of as many sums of 100*l.* as the donee shall live years. In Savery v. Dyer (6), Lord Hardwicke says, 'If one give by will an annuity not existing before, to A., A. shall have it only for life.' In that case, the gift was of an annuity to A. during the life of B., and B. having survived A., the question was, whether the annuity had ceased, notwithstanding the express provision that it should be during the life of B."

"It is singular that no other case has been referred to, in which this question distinctly arose; but in Innes v. Mitchell (7), before Sir Wm. Grant, and before Lord

(1) 9 Law Journ. p. 147; now reported in 10 Sim. 453.

(2) 2 Mad. 188.

(3) 1 Madd. 253.

(4) 4 Ves. 51.

(5) 13 Ves. 39.

(6) Ambl. 139.

(7) 6 Ves. 464.

Eldon (1), upon appeal, the annuity was held to be for life only, although there were provisions leading more strongly than anything in this case, to an inference that the capital was intended to be given, such as the direction as to the 5000*l.*; without that direction the gift would be of an annuity of 200*l.* to the use of a mother and her children, for her and their use, and the longest liver of her and her children, subject to an equal division of the interest while more than one of them should live; a gift not very dissimilar from the present; and both those very able Judges held that the annuity determined with the life of the survivor. If the gift simply of an annuity of 100*l.* to A. is a gift of that sum which shall be sufficient to produce 100*l.* a year, there was sufficient in Innes v. Mitchell to give to the mother and her children such a sum as would be sufficient to produce 200*l.* per annum, without reference to the provision as to the 5000*l.*; and yet, notwithstanding that provision, it was held that there was no gift of any principal sum. It seems to have been supposed, that the direction that there should be an equal division of the annuity, implied that the principal producing the annuity was to be the subject-matter of the division; but there was a similar direction in Innes v. Mitchell, and in Jones v. Randall (2); and yet in neither of those cases was there any gift of the principal."

"It does not appear to me that there is any inconsistency in the cases. To hold that a simple gift of an annuity to A. does not give an annuity beyond the life of A., is not inconsistent with holding that a gift of the produce of a fund without limit as to time gives the fund itself. In the former case, there is no allusion to any principal sum. It is, indeed, the course of this court to secure an annuity by investing a capital sum; but a testator with an income much exceeding the annuity given is not very likely to contemplate any such investment. He may indeed be without the immediate means of making it; as, for instance, if his whole property consisted of long leaseholds. If a testator were minded to give 10,000*l.*, can it be supposed that he would set about effecting this object by giving 500*l.* per annum to the intended legatee, without making any mention of the 10,000*l.* or of any other capital sum? To carry into effect the gift of an annuity of 500*l.* by raising 10,000*l.* out of the estate, would, probably, be very foreign from the testator's intention. I feel no disposition to question the doctrine laid down by Lord Hardwicke, and followed in the cases I have referred to; and if I did, I should not feel at liberty to depart from a rule established upon such authority."

(1) 9 Ves. 212. The bequest in that case was as follows:—"I give to Mrs. Janet Innes, relict of my late nephew Alexander Innes, 200*l.* per annum, for the use of herself and children, which annuity is to be paid out of my general effects until it is convenient to my executors to invest 5000*l.* in the funds in lieu thereof, for her and their use, and to the longest liver of her and her children, subject to an equal division of the interest while more than one of them alive;" 6 Ves. 463.

(2) 1 Jac. & Walker, 100.

SECTION XI.—Of the Doctrines as to Election, Satisfaction, and Performance.

Doctrine of Election, in the view of the Court of Chancery, to be considered in Cases where the Property of a Person is disposed of, and a Gift is made to that Person in the same Instrument.

Doctrine as stated by Sir T. Clarke, M.R., Lord Eldon, and Sir T. Plumer.

Rule applies whether done Purposely or by Mistake.

Application of the Doctrine as regards Persons and Subjects.

Applies to cases of Partial Disappointment.

Foundation of the Doctrine—Intention—Illustrations.

Applies to the Execution of Powers.

Where Legatee may renounce a Gift charged with a Burthen, and still take a Beneficial Interest.

Effect of Acquiescence and Laches.

Derivative Interest acquired from a Person who has elected against the Will.

Cases of Express Condition to be distinguished.

Questions of Construction which have frequently arisen upon Wills, where it has been doubtful whether the Property of another was intended to be devised, adverted to.

Extrinsic Evidence not to be admitted in these cases, excepting on General Principles.

Questions connected with this subject which have arisen as to Wife's Title to Dower.

Where the Testator is a Scotchman domiciled in England.

The Nature and Amount of the Property must be ascertained before a Person can be put to his Election.

What Acts will amount to an Election.

Where Interests are given to a Person and his Children in succession.

The Consequences which result from Election to take against the Instrument considered.

Whether Forfeiture or a Liability to make Compensation only.

The Doctrine of Satisfaction.

Satisfaction of a Debt by a Legacy.

Whether Parol Evidence can be admitted.

The Doctrines of the Court of Chancery as to Performance.

Mixed Cases of Satisfaction and Performance.

THE nature of Election, in the various senses in which it is used, has been stated in the former volume (a). The sense in which we are

(a) Vol. i. pp. 639-40. Mr. Swanston, and after him, Mr. Justice Story, § 1073, et seq., have collected the principal passages in the Institutes, Code and Pandects of Justinian, from which this doctrine (with considerable modifications) may be supposed to have been,

now about to consider it, is that in which it is applied to dispositions of property not belonging to the donor or which is subject to claims which he has no right to disturb, coupled with a gift by the donor of property of his own to the person whose rights are interfered with by the donor.

The principle on which the doctrine of election, taken in that sense, rests, is, that he who accepts a benefit under a deed or will is bound to confirm the whole instrument, conforming to all its provisions and renouncing every right inconsistent with them : no one is allowed to frustrate an instrument under which he claims (a). The general rule, said Sir T. Clark, in Clarke v. Guise, (1755) (b), which has obtained since Noys v. Mordaunt (c), is clear, that where a man does by will more than he has strictly a right to do, and gives a bounty to the person to whose prejudice that is done, the person prejudiced by one part shall not insist upon his right, and at the same time upon the bounty. Lord Eldon, in a comparatively late case in the House of Lords, illustrates the rule thus : If I chose to devise my estate to A. B., and in the same will I dispose of an estate which is not mine, but his, a court of equity will say that he shall take no benefit from that will, unless he makes good the whole of the will ; and A. B. therefore will not take, unless he allows the whole of the will to be effectual, that is, suffers his own to be disposed of according to the will, or makes compensation for as much as he takes of mine : that is Election (d). If therefore a party taking what is his own would disappoint the testator's intention, he must elect (e). If the party should elect to take his own property, and thus to disappoint the provisions of the will, the court has considered itself at liberty to dispose of the property given to the person so electing, in such manner as will do justice to the disappointed devisee or legatee ; the language of the judges, says Sir T. Plumer, ascribes to the court an equity to lay hold on the estate thus taken from the devisee by the principle of election, and to dispose of it in favour of those whom he has disappointed ; not merely taking it from one, but bestowing it on another (f).

indeed no doubt was, adopted into our Code of Equitable Jurisprudence. This subject is elaborately treated by Mr. Roper, and Mr. White, his editor, in the Treatise on Legacies : I only propose to state the general doctrines.

(a) See Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. 379 ; confirmed, on appeal, 1 Jac. p. 505 ; and in the House of Lords, 7 Bli. N. S. 325 ; 1 Cl. & Fin. 303. See, as to this case, Sugd. Law of Prop. 450, 453-8.

(b) 2 Ves. Sen. 617 ; see Mr. Swanston's

note, 1 Swanst. 400.

(c) 2 Vern. 581 ; Gilb. Eq. R. 2 ; but which was not, as stated by Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. 14, the first case on the subject ; see 6 Dow. 179 ; et v. sup. vol. i. p. 413, n. (b), and 640.

(d) Lord Eldon, Lord Raneliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. p. 179 : as to what are cases for Compensation, v. infra.

(e) Unett v. Wilkes, Ambl. 432.

(f) V. Sir T. Plumer's judgment, Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 423.

Where the party bound to elect labours under any disability, as infancy or coverture, the court will refer it to the Master to inquire whether it will be most beneficial for the party to take under or against the will or deed, and will decree accordingly (a). Lord Redesdale considered that the rule of election was a rule of law as well as of equity, and that the principal reason why courts of equity are more frequently called upon to consider the subject (particularly in wills) than courts of law is, that at law, in consequence of the forms of proceeding, the party cannot be put to elect (b).

Whether the testator has by mistake devised another person's property (c), or has arbitrarily chosen to give what is not his own, the rule equally applies (d). Lord Northington held that it should appear that the testator knew that he had no right to dispose of the lands, and yet that knowing it, he took upon himself to dispose of them; and he would not allow that general words could be held to come within the rule (e): but Lord Eldon stated the rule to be that if a person, being about to dispose of his own property, includes in his disposition, whether by mistake or not, property of another, an implication arises that the benefit under that will shall be taken upon the terms of giving effect to the whole disposition (f). Lord Bathurst was of opinion that where a person supposes he has a lawful power to dispose of an interest, and this appears on the face of the will, that ought not to be considered as a case of election, as it is incapable of proof that he would have disposed of the estate if he had known he had no power to dispose of it (g); this rule of construction has however, as Sir E. Sugden observes, been very properly rejected (h) upon the ground of

(a) 2 Fonbl. 329, "for otherwise other persons might be injured for want of that election," 2 Sch. & L. 267; et v. infra, p. 588.

(b) Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Scho. & Lef. 450. The authorities on which Lord Redesdale founded his opinion, that election is also a rule of law, have been examined by Mr. Swanston, together with the other authorities bearing on the subject, 1 Swanst. pp. 426-430; note to Gretton v. Haward: looking to these authorities, it would appear that the doctrine itself, at least as administered in the Court of Chancery, has been considered to be exclusively equitable (et v. sup. vol. i. p. 501, 640, as regards Dower); certain it is, that from the earliest times the judges of the courts of law considered that election was exclusively the subject of equitable jurisdiction (v. sup. vol. i. p. 413, note (b), the case referred to is taken from Mr. Cecil Monro's MS. collections). Sir E. Sugden, on the authority of the dictum of Lord Thurlow, Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 Bro. 29, treats the doctrine as purely equitable, though, as he observes, referring to Lord Mansfield's judgment in Doe v. Lord G. Cavendish, 4 T. R. 743, it was once considered as fit for legal cognizance; 2 Sugd. Pow. 146. It is obvious that the principle, so far as regards the consequences of election, could hardly be carried out at law in the simplest case.

(c) Rumbold v. Rumbold, 3 Ves. 69; Strutt v. Finch, 2 Sim. & St. p. 233. "Most of the cases," says Lord Hardwicke, (Bor v. Bor, 3 Bro. P. C. p. 179, note,) "have been founded on the testator's mistake;" and see 2 Fonbl. 328.

(d) Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. J. 371-2.

(e) Forrester v. Cotton, 1 Eden, 535.

(f) Green v. Green, 19 Ves. 667.

(g) Cull v. Showell, Amb. 727, 3 Woodd. Lect. Append. 1, Lord Bathurst, C.

(h) Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. J. 367; and see Wright v. Rutter, ibid. 673; Rutter v. Maclean, 4 Ves. p. 531; and Doe v. Cavendish, 4 T. R. 741, note.

the danger of speculating upon what the testator would have done had he known the fact (a).

As regards the Subject: the doctrine is applied to interests in respect not of their amount, but of the inconsistency with the testator's intention, so that it is not material whether the interests are immediate, remote, or contingent, of value or not of value (b); and the rule applies as well to copyhold as to freehold estates (c); and to deeds as well as wills (d). The doctrine applies even to interests of persons under disabilities, as Infants and Married women (e). A wife though during the coverture she has accepted a provision made for her after marriage in lieu of dower, may still, if she survive, claim her dower at common law; the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, provides that the period of election shall not be till after the right to dower has accrued (f). Cases of difficulty sometimes arise as regards election by married women; and in particular, as in a late case, whether an election of the wife, in respect of personal estate, can prevail against the dissent of her husband (g).

The principle equally applies where the disappointed party has received a partial satisfaction by taking property coming to him against the will, by reason of an election against the will having been made by some other person: thus where a person disappointed of 600*l.* a year, by the election of other persons took an estate of 145*l.* a year not given to him by the will, he was held to be entitled to satisfaction out of the estates in the hands of the court to the extent of the difference between 145*l.* and 600*l.* (h). Though part of the benefits given by the will may fail, the remainder may constitute a case of election (i). The

(a) 2 Sugd. Pow. 147, last ed.; Mr. Swanston's note, p. 407: but in Moore v. Butler, 2 Scho. & Lef. 267, Lord Redesdale seems to adopt Lord Bathurst's doctrine.

(b) Wilson v. Lord J. Townsend, 2 Ves. J. 696-7; Ardesoife v. Bennet, 2 Dick. pp. 463, 467; there a feme covert was held to have conclusively elected; Mr. Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. pp. 407-8, other cases are there cited.

(c) Rumbold v. Rumbold, 3 Ves. p. 65; Wilson v. Mount, ibid. p. 191; Pettiward v. Prescott, 7 Ves. 541.

(d) Moore v. Butler, 2 Scho. & Lef. 249; Green v. Green, 2 Mer. 86; Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. 359; Jac. 505; 2 Sugd. on Powers, 146.

(e) See, on this subject, 2 Sugd. Pow. 154, Mr. Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. p. 413, et seq.; Mr. Jacob's note, 1 Rop. H. and W. 28; and Stalman on Election, 184, where the case may be found, and the mode of putting a married woman to her election is stated.

(f) Frank v. Frank, 3 My. & Cr. pp. 171, 179.

(g) See Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 520-1; in that case a legacy was given to a married woman expressly in lieu of her claim under a settlement to a reversionary interest in stock. See as to the effect of the wife's election on the husband's interest as tenant by the curtesy, 1 Bright, Husband and Wife, 158; and, as to the general doctrine, Mr. Jacob's note to Roper, Husb. and Wife, ibid. ii. p. 475.

(h) Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 432; 2 Sugd. Pow. 147.

(i) Newman v. Newman, 1 Bro. p. 186, on appeal. That was a case of an express devise in satisfaction; a real estate was devised (together with personal estate) to the wife, in lieu of her claims on the settled estates; the devise of the real estate failed, by reason of the will not being duly attested: this cannot now happen, for both would fail.

circumstance that a condition is expressed with reference to one individual and not the other, is not sufficient proof that there was no intention to raise a case of election as regards such other person; and if a case of election is raised by the operation of the will, notwithstanding an express condition may be introduced as to another estate, yet if any other property is given upon which election can be fastened, the court will apply it without express direction, and though there be an express direction with regard to another individual (a). Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said that if a particular benefit is given expressly in satisfaction of a particular claim, this will not exclude that party from another benefit, though it may happen to be contrary to the will, for the court will not construe it as meant in lieu of every thing else when the testator has said it is of a particular thing (b); but the same eminent judge held, that where a particular thing is given in discharge of a demand, the party insisting on his demand must waive not only the particular thing but all benefit which he could claim under the will (c).

The foundation of the equitable doctrine of election is, as will have been observed, the Intention, explicit or presumed, of the author of the instrument to which it is applied (d). It was on the principle that an indication of an intention to devise is sufficient, that the rule applied to the heir to whom an estate was devised prior to the late statute as to descent; so that if an estate were devised to the heir, although by the rule of law the devise was inoperative and he took by descent, still he was put to his election in the same manner as an actual devisee (e). But under the old law, it was held that for the purposes of election, where a person by a will, attested by two witnesses only, devised his real estate from his heir-at-law, and his personal estate to his heir-at-law, though it was a good will as to personal estate, it could not be looked at as containing a devise of the real estate: a judge, as Lord Alvanley expressed it, can say—for the Statute of Frauds enables him and he is bound to say—that if a man by will unattested gives both real and personal estate, he never meant to give the real estate at all (f). However, this question and the doctrine in regard

(a) Lord Eldon, Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 39.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, East v. Cook, 2 Ves. 33, but the judgment is loosely reported; and see Mr. Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. p. 405.

(c) Graves v. Boyle, 1 Atk. p. 509, 510, and see the cases there cited; Jenkins v. Jenkins, one of the cases cited as stated in Eelt's Supp. to Ves. Sen. p. 250, does not go to the full extent of the proposition; et v. inf. 590-1.

(d) See Mr. Swanston's note, p. 401, and the authorities there referred to.

(e) Welby v. Welby, 2 Ves. & B. p. 187; and see Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. p. 369; and White v. White, 2 Dick. 522; Reg. Lib. B. 1775, fo. 650-55; Sugd. Pow. 394, 5th edit.; Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. p. 409; Mr. Swanston's note, p. 404.

(f) Buckeridge v. Ingham, 2 Ves. J. 666; Ex parte the Earl of Ilchester, 7 Ves. p. 372; to gifts of personal estate to an heir on condition that he should confirm a devise by a will not duly executed are put an end to, as regards wills executed or re-published since 1837, by the new Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, by which the same solemnities are required for passing personal and real estate (a): and by the effect of the same statute, which gives a power to devise after-acquired estates, another question formerly of not unfrequent occurrence, as to whether an attempt to devise such after-acquired property would raise a case of election, can never or but seldom arise (b).

The doctrine applies to the execution of Powers; thus if there be a power to appoint to two, and the donee of the power appoints to one only, and gives a legacy to the other, he cannot claim the legacy and also dispute the validity of the appointment (c). But the doctrine of election can never be applied, unless, if an election be made contrary to the instrument, the interest that would pass by it can be laid hold of to compensate for what is taken away; in other words, there must be some free disposable property given to the person which can be applied in the way of compensation for what is taken away: where therefore there is a fund subject to the appointment of the father amongst his children, and the father appoints a part to some of his children, and the other part to persons not objects of the power, this is not a case of election; any child may claim his share of the portion of the fund improperly appointed as in default of appointment, although a specific portion of the fund should have been appointed to him, provided no legacy be given to him by the appointor (d): a case of election does not arise where the person who appoints to persons not objects of the power, adds that he makes the appointment only so far as he lawfully can (e).

A legatee may decline one benefit which turns out to be charged with a burthen not contemplated by the testator, without renouncing

Carey v. Askew, cited 8 Ves. p. 492; 2 Sugd. Pow. 152. The case of Thellusson v. Woodford, (13 Ves. 209; 1 Dow. 249; 2 Sugd. on Pow. 153;) where the heir was held to be bound to confirm the devise of after-purchased estates, has become inapplicable since the passing of the 1 Vict. c. 26; see Sugd. Law of Prop. 448.

(a) The cases by which the doctrine above adverted to was established, are collected in Mr. Swanston's note, p. 406; v. inf. p. 592.

(b) See 1 Jarm. on Wills, 390.

(c) Wollen v. Tanner, 5 Ves. 218; Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. J. 367; Vane v. Lord Dungannon, 2 Scho. & Lef. 118; and see the other cases cited 2 Sugd. on Pow. 148-9, 150; Sir E. Sugden (p. 150) disputes the doctrine of Lord Thurlow in Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 Bro. 344.

(d) Lord Rosslyn, Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. J. 336; 2 Sugd. Pow. 149; and see Routledge v. Dorrell, 2 Ves. J. 366. Sir J. Leach held, in Carver v. Bowles (2 R. & M.), that it was not a case of election, as the testator had made an absolute appointment in the first instance. In Church v. Kemble, 5 Sim. 525, it was held that no case of election arose, because the appointer only intended to appoint to the incapable objects, in case she had power to do so.

(e) Carver v. Bowles, 2 Russ. & M. 301; 2 Sugd. Pow. 151; Church v. Kemble, 5 Sim. 525, supra, note (d).

another benefit unconnected with a burthen given to him by the same will (a); but where a legacy is given charged with a burthen, and there is also a beneficial gift, and it appears that the testator intended that the two should be taken as one gift, or that the testator plainly intended that the burthen should not fall upon his estate, the legatee must take both or neither (b).

A person may be estopped from putting in force even a clear case of election, by Acquiescence or by Laches, just as he may by the same means be deprived of any other equitable right (c). But an act done diverso intuitu will not have the effect of preventing a person from exercising the right of putting the party, who prevents him from enjoying what is intended to be given or secured to him, to his election. A woman on her marriage was entitled to 5000*l.* charged on an estate which was settled on herself for life, remainder to her children in tail; she was also entitled to a sum of stock for her life with remainder to her children absolutely: it being supposed that this sum of stock belonged to her absolutely, she by the settlement made on her marriage released the 5000*l.*, and settled the stock on her husband for life, remainder to her children. After the marriage, the mistake being discovered, the husband and wife signed a memorandum by which it was declared that the stock should remain upon the original trusts, but nothing was said as to the release; the wife died leaving her husband and three infant children surviving. It was held that the husband at the time of signing the memorandum had a clear right to compel the children to confirm the settlement of the stock, if they took the benefit of the release, and that he had not lost that right by signing the memorandum (d).

A person may take derivatively an interest not intended for him without being bound to elect, though he takes a benefit under the will and the election under which he collaterally derives a benefit disappoints some of the provisions in the will: thus, if a wife elects to take a real estate against a will, the estate she takes will be subject to all its incidents in favour of her husband; thus he may take as tenant by the curtesy, though he has accepted benefits under the will (e).

(a) Andrew v. Trinity Hall, 9 Ves. 534.

(b) Talbot v. Earl Radnor, 3 My. & K. 254, v. sup. 589.

(c) V. int. al. Dillon v. Parker, Jacob, 505, 513, on appeal to the Lord Chancellor; 1 Cl. & Fin. 304, on appeal to the House of Lords, see p. 318; and the account may be limited where a party is guilty of laches in bringing forward his claim, Kidney v. Cousmaker, 12 Ves. 158.

(d) Seton v. Smith, 11 Sim. 59.

(e) Lady Cavan v. Pulteney, 2 Ves. J. 544; 3 Ves. 384. In Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 369, the husband was not put to his election in respect of a gift of the wife to him by will, of what she had power to dispose of by will, so as to prevent his claiming by his marital right property given away by the same will, but which she had no power to dispose of by will; but the circumstances are somewhat special.

The benefit of putting a party to his election does not extend to a Residuary legatee of the personal estate (a). The doctrine of election was not generally speaking applicable to Creditors taking the benefit of a devise for payment of debts, and also enforcing their legal claim against other funds disposed of by the will (b).

Cases of election are carefully to be distinguished from cases of express Condition, to which the doctrine of election cannot be applied (c). Thus, if the heir has a legacy upon an express condition that he will confirm the provisions of the will, he must do so or he cannot take the legacy or any part of it; this is not a case for compensation (d). Lord Hardwicke determined that where an express condition was annexed to a personal legacy in a will attested by two witnesses only purporting to contain a devise of real estate, the heir was bound to make good the devise of the realty or give up his legacy (e), and though this doctrine was disapproved on the ground that the devise ought not to have been looked to at all, it was always acted upon (f), but such a question cannot now arise.

In cases arising upon wills it frequently happens where the subject of the devise is not referred to in specific terms, that it is doubtful whether the testator, looking to the words he has used, did intend to devise the property or interest which belongs to the person to whom he has given part of his own property. This question has to be determined not on any principle applicable to cases of election only, but by the general rules of construction; that is, the meaning of the words used has to be ascertained by the application of those rules (g). Primâ facie, said Lord Eldon, it is not to be supposed that a testator disposes of that which is not his own (h); it must be by demonstration plain, by necessary implication—meaning by that the utter improbability that he could have meant otherwise—that the case is raised; but where there is that plain demonstration, that neces-

(a) Lord Rosslyn, Earl of Darlington v. Pulteney, 3 Ves. 385.

(b) Kidney v. Cousmaker, 12 Ves. p. 136; but see Lord Eldon's judgment, in Clarke v. Lord Ormonde, Jac. R. 115. This question may possibly still arise in the case of a charge, though by the act 1 Will. IV. c. 104, real estates are made liable for simple-contract debts.

(c) 2 Sugd. on Powers, 146.

(d) Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. 12; 2 Ves. J. 371; as to Compensation, v. infra.

(e) Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. 12.

(f) Sugd. Pow. 5th ed. p. 399; Wilson v. Wilson, 1 De G. & Sm. p. 154, was decided on the particular circumstances. A question analogous to election may arise, as where a person is to have an estate, on complying with certain requisites, in the nature of a condition precedent; as to which, see Roundell v. Currer, 2 Bro. 73: 1 Swanst. 383. The Master of the Rolls there said, that if it had been a question of election he should have sent it to a Jury.

(g) As to the rules of construction, v. sup. vol. i. chap. viii. § 1; and see on the subject in the text, Doe v. Oxendon, 3 Taunt. 147.

(h) Lord Eldon, 6 Dow. 179; Sugd. Law of Prop. 449; Timewell v. Perkins, 2 Atk. 104; Rutter v. Maclean, 4 Ves. 537.

sary implication, then you must give up all to pass according to the will, or make compensation (a); but it rests upon those who contend for a case of election to show that there is that manifest plain demonstration, that utter improbability (b): "No man ought to be spelt or conjectured out of his property."

The question has most frequently arisen where the testator has disposed of an estate in which he had only a partial interest, or has referred to property in a particular locality in which he had only an interest of minor importance. It is difficult, said Lord Eldon, in any case to apply the doctrine of election where the testator has some present interest in the estate disposed of, though it may not be entirely his own (c). Where a deviser was entitled to a manor and a reversionary interest only in an estate in a particular parish, and his will contained a devise in terms which would have conveyed the whole estate if it had been his own, Lord Eldon said, the utmost construction that could be given to such a devise, primâ facie, was that he meant to dispose of such interests in the parish as were his own, that is, the manor and the reversion; but though it may appear, primâ facie, that the testator meant to pass only what was his own, yet if the context shows that he means to propose a case of election, and chooses to consider that which was not his own as his own for the purposes which he had in view in making his will, the expression "my manor, lands," &c. will not prevent a case of election from being raised (d). Even where a donor declares that each person taking under his will shall be bound to give effect to every disposition contained in it, it must first be ascertained whether anything belonging to the person disputing the will was intended to be affected by it (e). On the princi-

(a) Lord Eldon, Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. 179; Pole v. Lord Somers, 6 Ves. 322.

(b) Lord Com. Eyre, Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. J. 524.

(c) 6 Dow. 185; and see Sir E. Sugden's observations on Dillon v. Parker, in the House of Lords, Law of Prop. p. 455; that eminent lawyer critically examines the doctrines there laid down in reference to the facts of that case: Forrester v. Cotton, 1 Eden, 535-6; though the doctrine in that case, according to modern authority, seems to be too confined.

(d) Lord Eldon, Lord Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. 179. In Lord Rancliffe v. Parkyns the testator had confirmed the settlement under which the devisee was entitled in tail to the estate which was in terms devised to him for life, with every thing therein contained. In Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. J. 514 (see 6 Dow. 185-9), the testator had only confirmed the settlement under which the devisee was entitled in tail, so far as respected certain portions given by the settlement: this it was that occasioned different decisions being made in the two cases; see 6 Dow. 180: "Where," said Lord Eldon, in the first-cited case, "the testator expressly confirms a settlement, and every thing therein contained, you cannot, as against the express declaration of intention, take it by conjecture, call it 'demonstration plain,' or 'necessary implication,' or what you will, but still only conjecture, that he does not mean to confirm; and you cannot reasonably conclude that because he uses expressions which apply to some but not to others of the subjects devised, he contradicts himself, and does not intend to confirm, though he says he does confirm;" ibid. 182: the will did raise a case of election as to certain specific legacies; ibid. 182.

(e) Trollope v. Linton, 1 Sim. & St. 477; as to such provisions, see Cooke v. Turner, 17 L. J. Exch. 106; 14 Sim. 611.

ple that what is not the testator's property in the strict acceptation of the term will not pass by a devise of "his estate," it has been decided that a devise by the testator of his estates does not extend to lands of which the testator was tenant in tail, or to property of which he was joint owner with another, or, under the old law, to copyholds not surrendered (a).

Before the statute for making copyholds liable for debts, a more favourable construction was given to a devise of the testator's "real estate," where the testator had freehold estate as well as copyhold estate, in favour of creditors, than was applied when the devise was in favour of a stranger or even a child: in favour of creditors it was held that where it was necessary to resort to the copyholds for payment of the debts, they should be held to be intended to pass, but not so where the devise was to a younger child if provided for, or to a stranger (b); and accordingly a devise of the residue of "all my real estate whatsoever," &c. was held under such circumstances not to raise a case of election against the heir (c).

Where the testator uses such expressions as all my estate, or all my estate at such a place, and he has estates over which he has not the absolute power of disposition by reason of the Claims which other persons have upon them, whether the person having any such claim shall be put to his election if he take a benefit under the will, must depend on whether in point of construction it is to be taken that the testator was devising the entire corpus of the estate, or his interest in it only. It seems to be settled by authority that as a general rule the words "all my estate," simpliciter, must be construed to extend to the testator's interest only; but if he add a description, shewing clearly that the estate itself was the subject, the words will be applied to the entire corpus (d).

(a) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Allen v. Anderson, 5 Hare, 169; his Honour there refers to the cases on this subject.

(b) Lindopp v. Eborall, 3 Bro. p. 188; Drake v. Robinson, 1 P. W. p. 443, and other cases there cited.

(c) Judd v. Pratt, 13 Ves. pp. 176-7. By the 55 Geo. III. c. 192, copyholders were empowered to devise without a previous surrender to the use of the will; the act 1 Vict. c. 26, affirms the testamentary power of an unadmitted heir and extends the devising power to an unadmitted devisee or surrenderee; see 1 Jarm. Wills, 52-3; and see ib. p. 50-51.

(d) The original decree in Lawrence v. Lawrence, 2 Freem. 234, 2 Vern. 365, S. C. at law, 1 Lord Raym. p. 438, was founded on this principle, that "a gift of all my estates" means the whole corpus, but that decree was reversed by Lord Keeper Wright; Lord Camden refused to interfere with that reversal, and the House of Lords confirmed it; see Hoven-den's note, 2 Freem. p. 235. In Hitchins v. Hitchins, (2 Freem. 241; S. C. Prec. Ch. 133; 2 Vern. 403,) it was held that where a husband had devised to his wife a part of his estate, she should not be put to her election, for that "whatsoever is given her by the will shall be intended as a bounty, and not in satisfaction of what is her right, unless it is so expressed." In Foster v. Cooke, 3 Bro. 351, Lord Thurlow referred the words "all my estate," to the interest, in conformity with the above decisions; in Chalmers v. Storil, 2 Ves. & B. 224, (after stated,) Sir Wm. Grant, as the testator had annexed a description, referred them

As a general rule the intention to dispose of the property of another so as to put him to his election, must appear upon the will itself (a); mere recital, without more, does not amount to a devise or a demonstration of an intention to devise (b): the will now, it is to be remembered, speaks from the death as regards both real and personal estate. It seems to be settled, though there are authorities to the contrary (c), that where the intention to dispose is clearly expressed by the testator, and there is no ambiguity in the expressions he has used, extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that the words used were intended to embrace something more than they import, namely, property to which he was not entitled, is inadmissible (d). But in these instances, as in every other case of construction, extrinsic evidence may be admitted, not to show the intention, but what is the meaning of the words used, and thus to establish that words in themselves equivocal were used for the purpose of disposing of another person's property (e).

The question as to the effect of general words has been very frequently agitated in cases where it has been doubtful upon the terms of the will whether the testator has intended to devise his estate free from the claims of the wife in respect of dower (f): it may be well to refer to some of the decisions, inasmuch as they illustrate the general principles applicable to the subject generally, for a wife is put to her election on the same principle as a stranger (g).

to the corpus; but see Holdich v. Holdich, inf. p. 597, n. (a). In Dowson v. Bell, 1 Keen, p. 764, Lord Langdale says, "When a testator speaks of all his estates, he must be held to mean subject to the legal rights against them."

(a) See Lord Hardwicke's judgment in Bor v. Bor, 3 Bro. P. C. p. 179, n.; Forrester v. Cotton, 1 Ed. 535 (and the cases in Lord Henley's note); Stratton v. Best, 1 Ves. J. 285; Blake v. Bunbury, 4 Bro. 24; Judd v. Pratt, 13 Ves. 174; Hodson v. Merest, 9 Pri. 576 (cases as to copyholds); Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. p. 27; and see Dummer v. Pitcher, 2 My. & K. 262, 274; Lowe v. Carter, 1 Beav. p. 426; sup. vol. i. p. 572; Cooke v. Briscoe, 1 Dru. & Wal. 596; 2 Sugd. Pow. 149; et v. Sugd. Law of Prop. 448-50.

Lord Chief Justice De Grey, in Pulteney v. Darlington, cited 6 Ves. 400, by Lord Eldon, said, "I do not agree to the position laid down, in the general sense of it, that where a man gives all his estate he does not mean to give what is not his; what he thinks his, is, in the sense in which he uses his words, his." Lord Eldon, referring to this passage, said, "I agree to it, if it goes upon a manifestation in the will itself, that he means to call that his own, which, in a legal sense, is not his own;" Pole v. Lord Somers, 6 Ves. p. 322: see Lord Eldon's observations as to evidence to explain what is meant by "my personal estate," ibid. p. 400; as to which, v. infra.

(b) Lord Eldon, Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 41; but see the distinctions taken by the V.-C. Wigram, Adams v. Adams, 1 Hare, 540-1.

(c) Inter alia Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 516.

(d) Stratton v. Best, 1 Ves. J. 285; Clementson v. Gandy, 1 Keen, p. 309, where the previous authorities are cited in the argument; and see Jarm. on Wills, i. 392-3; et v. supra, p. 434, n. (e).

(e) Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 My. & Cr. 38; Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385; and the other cases, 2 Sugd. Pow. 149; Clementson v. Gandy, 1 Keen, 309; et v. sup. vol. i. p. 556, et seq.; and see Ricketts v. Turquand, 1 H. L. Cases, 472.

(f) By reason of the late act as to dower, this question will not in future so frequently arise.

(g) Miall v. Brain, 4 Mad. 125.

It has been decided that where the testator gives to his wife and children all his Estates whatsoever, real and personal, to be equally divided amongst them, the wife ought to be put to her election, on the ground that her claim of dower would disturb the equality of division which is contemplated by the will (a). In the case above cited there was the additional reason for so construing "Estates," that the testator had, as appears by the judgment, described his English estate, thereby, as Sir William Grant considered, excluding the ambiguity which Lord Thurlow, in Foster v. Cook (b), imputed to the words "my estate" (c).

Where the testator directs that a portion of the estate shall be personally enjoyed by one of his devisees, that is an indication of an intention which puts the widow to her election as regards all the estates devised (d); indeed any expressions as to the enjoyment or management of the estate which would be interfered with by the wife's assertion of her paramount right will have the same effect (e): but where she may enjoy her dower consistently with the devise contained in the will, it will not have that effect (f). In order to put the wife to her election, said Lord Alvanley, it ought to be clear and plain and incontrovertible that the testator could not possibly give what he has given consistently with her claim of dower: it is not sufficient for her exclusion that the testator did not think of her dower: it must appear that he did know of it, and meant to bar her; or that what she demands is repugnant to the disposition (g). On this ground

(a) Chalmers v. Storil, 2 V. & B. p. 222; but if the wife takes her dower as her property, it would seem that the equality is not disturbed: see, as to this case, 1 Jarm. on Wills, 401-2; it has however been distinctly recognised and followed in two subsequent cases: Dickson v. Robinson, Jac. 503, and Roberts v. Smith, 1 Sim. & St. 513, 516, which however were perhaps more favourable in their circumstances, but to which Mr. Jarman, on authority, objects, vol. i. 404.

(b) 3 Bro. 347. "Because he gives all his property to trustees, am I to gather," said his Lordship, "from his having given all that he has, that he has given that which he has not?"

(c) See 1 Jarm. on Wills, 400.

(d) Miall v. Brain, 4 Mad. p. 126; and see Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Yo. & C. C. C. 731; and see 1 Jarman, 399, 400.

(e) Roadley v. Dixon, 3 Russ. 192; Butcher v. Kemp, 5 Mad. 61; Hall v. Hill, 1 Conn. & L. 132, 134, (2 Y. & C. C. C. 22); Lowes v. Lowes, 5 Hare, p. 506. These cases were followed by the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in the late case (1849) of Grayson v. Deakin, xiii. Jur. 145.

(f) Lord Langdale, Brown v. Meredith, 2 Keen, p. 532; Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Holdich v. Holdich, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 23.

(g) French v. Davies, 2 Ves. J. 572, 577; Strahan v. Sutton, 3 Ves. 249; Thompson v. Nelson, 1 Cox, 447; Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Scho. & Lef. p. 444 (see 1 Jarm. p. 398, n.); Greator v. Cary, 6 Ves. 615; the cases are collected in Mr. Swanston's note above referred to. In Read v. Crop (1 Bro. 492), Lord Thurlow, according to the report of the judgment, 1 Swanst. p. 402, note from Mr. Cox's MS., thought that the testator having devised his estates in a certain locality did not of itself put his wife to her election, she having estates there, and he none; but, according to the report in Brown, p. 492, there was this additional circumstance, that the testator added, "which he had surrendered to the use of his will;" he had surrendered his own estates.

later authorities have decided that a rent-charge given to the wife, charged upon the property out of which she claims dower, does not of itself put her to her election (a).

Where a testator devised all his Canal shares, and had none but what had belonged to the father of his wife, and which stood in the name of himself and his wife; it appearing that he had always acted as the owner, it was held that there was a clear intention to bequeath these shares, and that the wife surviving was bound to elect (b). But where a testator (c) had during his life transferred two sums of £4 per Cent. and £5 per Cent. stock into the joint names of himself and his wife (d); and by his will gave the interest of, inter alia, all his funded property (e) to his wife for life; and after her death gave to various persons, inter alia, various amounts of £4 per Cent. stock (f), and the testator after the date of his will purchased some other sums of £5 per Cent. stock, which he also transferred into the joint names: the Vice-Chancellor Sir J. Leach, and after him Lord Brougham, were of opinion, though the testator had no other stock and very little other property, that, although in all probability the testator meant to give the stock standing in the joint names, there was not a sufficient indication to that effect upon the will to put the wife to her election.

If an annuity be given to a widow in lieu of dower, or other claims and demands she may have against the testator's estate, that does not prevent her taking a customary estate to which she may be entitled to succeed on the death of her husband according to the custom of the manor, the husband dying intestate as to his real estates (g); and the assets being insufficient, it was held in the same case that the widow was still entitled to be paid her annuity in priority as against

(a) Dowson v. Bell, 1 Keen, p. 761; the authorities are collected in 1 Jarm. on Wills, 405-6. In Holdich v. Holdich, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 21, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce said, "I feel bound, by the present state of the authorities, to say, that a mere gift of an annuity to the testator's widow, although charged on all the testator's property, is not sufficient to put her to her election. I consider myself equally bound, by the authorities, to say, that a mere gift to the widow of an annuity so charged, and a gift of the whole of the testator's real estate, though specified by name to some other person, are not together of themselves sufficient to put the widow to her election: and, moreover, that a gift of a portion of the real estate to the widow, whether for life or during widowhood, is not sufficient, as to the residue of the estate, to put the widow to her election in respect of dower. Whether my opinion would be so if the matter were res integra, it is not necessary to say." And see Grayson v. Deakin, before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, xiii. Jur. 146; et v. sup. p. 594.

(b) Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 My. & Cr. 35; v. sup. p. 595, n. (e).

(c) Dummer v. Fitcher, 2 My. & K. 262, on appeal; 5 Sim. 35, on original hearing.

(d) On the subject of such an act being an advancement to the wife, see Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 360; and Crabb v. Crabb, 1 My. & K. p. 511; and the above-cited case, 272-3: the original transfer was from his own name, which made it stronger; George v. Bank of England, 7 Price, 646.

(e) This was considered to be a general not a specific bequest, (p. 275); the will was considered as speaking from the death: ibid. 277.

(f) These were considered to be pecuniary not specific legacies; p. 276.

(g) Norcott v. Gordon, 14 Sim. 258.

the other legatees: nor does a gift to the widow in satisfaction of all her claims preclude her from claiming her share under the Statute of Distributions in the event of the failure of the bequest of the personalty (a).

In the case of a Scotchman domiciled and making his will in England, if any question of election be raised in respect of any bequest of the testator's personal estate, it must be governed by English law, that is, the law of the Domicil; but real estate is governed by the law affecting the property where it is situate. In a question of election the court will apply the law which governed cases, raising such questions as to copyholds here, to cases relating to real interests in Scotland; therefore a general devise by a testator of all his real estate, will not be considered as having the effect of a declaration of uses of lands in Scotland not previously conveyed so as to allow the will to operate upon them; it therefore will not raise a case of election against the heir taking heritable property not actually affected by the devise, though he may have a legacy given to him by the same will (b).

The Amount or the exact Nature of the property given must be ascertained before a person can be called upon to make his election; nor can a person, generally speaking, be held to have made his election until the amount of the property given has been ascertained, though he may have received gifts made to which he could only have been entitled under the will: the necessity for this as a preliminary is obvious, as election implies the exercise of judgment and choice: the party may file a bill for the purpose of having the clear amount of the fund given to him, in respect of which he is called upon to elect, ascertained (c); and if a person should have elected, supposing the fund taken to be clear, and it is afterwards diminished by the claims of creditors or the like, such person, notwithstanding his election, may resort back to his own property at least for compensation (d).

What acts of Acceptance or Acquiescence amount to an implied election is a matter of fact which must be decided upon the circumstances

(a) Pickering v. Lord Stamford, 2 Ves. J. 272, 581, 3 Ves. 332, 492; 1 Jarm. 407; see particularly p. 408. Of the effect of the late Act as to Dower, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105, upon questions whether the Dowress is to be put to her election, see 1 Jarm. 408-9.

(b) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Allen v. Anderson, 5 Hare, 170; Brodie v. Barry, 2 Ves. & B. 127, 131-2-3. See Sir J. Leach's nice distinction on the subject of a devise of lands to be after acquired, Johnson v. Telford, 1 Russ.

& M. 249; which the Vice-Chancellor Wigram (5 Hare, 169) does not appear to acquiesce in: and Churchman v. Ireland, 1 Russ. & M. 254.

(c) Wake v. Wake, 1 Ves. J. 335; Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. J. p. 371; Butricke v. Broadhurst, 1 Ves. J. 171; 3 Bro. 88; Gretton v. Haward, 1 Meriv. 448; and the other cases, 2 Sugd. on Pow. p. 154, and Mr. Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. 381; see also 2 Fonbl. 329.

(d) Kidney v. Cousmaker, 12 Ves. 136, 153.

of each case. In such cases it will be material to ascertain whether the party alleged to have acquiesced or to have elected was cognizant of his rights; whether he intended election; whether he can restore the individuals affected by his claim to the same situation as if the acts had never been performed; or whether, on the principle, Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium, these inquiries ought to be considered as precluded by lapse of time (a). A testator was entitled, as tenant in common, to a share of certain freehold lands; he entered into an agreement for partition, and then devised his interest in the estate to trustees, directing them to convey to his co-tenant and receive from him a conveyance of his share according to the agreement; he then devised his share, subject to an annuity to his wife for the benefit of his children. The widow after the testator's death joined in a conveyance of a moiety of the estate to the co-tenant in common; by that deed it was provided that her annuity should be charged on the testator's moiety only, and she released the other moiety from all claims. It was held that the widow was entitled to dower out of the devised moiety, but that under the circumstances she was bound to elect: the widow had received the annuity for five years, but as she was in ignorance of her right, she was allowed then to exercise her election (b).

Equivocal acts will not in general be considered as amounting to an election: where the evidence of the intention of the party to retain his own estate is at least as strong as the evidence of his intention to accept the property given to him by another, it is impossible to say that he elects to take the one and renounce the other; the utmost that can be contended is that he has no right to enjoy both,—that he might have been compelled to make an election (c). But such acts as the following will be considered as conclusive. The person entitled to take against the will entered upon the leasehold estate and the residuary estate bequeathed to him, and outlived the term and acquired a new interest in the lease; it was held that he had clearly elected (d).

It seems that acts by which the party himself would not be bound

(a) This I take from Swanston's note to Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. p. 382, considering it to be borne out by the authorities he refers to; but, generally speaking, the representatives of the party, as well as his assignees, may elect, though the person under whom they claim has omitted to do so; see 2 Fonbl. 330.

(b) Reynard v. Spence, 4 Beav. 103.

(c) Sir Thos. Plumer, Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. 380.

(d) Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. p. 241.

The case of Rutledge v. Rutledge, in the House of Lords, 2 Bli. N. S. 352, where it was held that the devisee was not bound to elect, was very special in its circumstances; the principal point related to how far the purchase of the fee of renewable leaseholds by the party entitled affected the right of renewal which the owner had covenanted to settle; Sir E. Sugden, in his late work, Law of Prop. 542, has illustrated and explained the doctrine on which the decision was founded.

may bind his representatives, on the principle of not disturbing things long acquiesced in by families upon the foot of rights, which those in whose place the representatives stand never called in question (a).

If, said Lord Hardwicke, a person be entitled to an estate not well devised from him by will, but by the same will has a legacy given to him, and under a power in the will to a trustee for him during his minority it is paid to the trustee, if he loses that legacy by failure of that trustee, and receives no satisfaction for it, he will not be debarred of his original right (b).

“Where interests are given to a person and to his children after him, the claim of the parent in opposition to the will will not bind the children, who may elect for themselves (c). In one case it seems to have been thought that an election could not be raised upon an estate settled with several limitations, on account of the confusion which would ensue; the devise would sometimes be good, at other times not, as the devisee in remainder submitted to the will or not (d); but this objection is not now attended to” (e).

Under a covenant on marriage to purchase and settle lands of the value of 400*l.* a year to the use of the covenantor for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of their two bodies, with a power to the wife to elect in case the husband should die before a settlement were made, to take the 400*l.* a year or 3000*l.* in lieu of dower and thirds; the husband having died before a settlement made, the wife elected to take the 3000*l.*; yet a settlement of lands of the value of 400*l.* a year on the wife for life, with remainder to the children nunc pro tunc, was decreed against creditors, and though by this means the assets were exhausted (f).

We are now to consider more particularly the Consequences which (a) Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. 382, referring to 2 Ves. 593, 525; and see Dillon v. Parker, Jac. R. 513.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Moore v. Moore, 2 Ves. 603. I have stated what I presume was Lord Hardwicke's meaning; the words of the report are obscure. Lord Hardwicke makes a distinction as regards a Mortgagee; he is entitled to say, where the trustee in possession receives the amount of a charge and becomes insolvent, that the estate has borne the burthen; ibid.; and see Hutchinson v. Lord Massareene, 2 Ball & B. 54-5.

(c) 2 Sugd. on Powers, 147, referring to Ward v. Baugh, 4 Ves. p. 623; and Long v. Long, 5 Ves. p. 445; and see 2 Fonbl. 330. In Ward v. Baugh, the Master of the Rolls had at first entertained the contrary opinion: the provision was such that it could not be considered as a mere substitution, for the interests of the children were vested under the settlement, and the will gave them unequal provisions; and see Long v. Long, 5 Ves. p. 447, and the reasoning of the court in Forrester v. Cotton, Amb. 388, 1 Ed. 532.

(d) Forrester v. Cotton, Amb. 388.

(e) 2 Sugd. on Pow. ubi sup.

(f) Hancock v. Hancock, 2 Vern. p. 605. I presume that the wife was not allowed to take 400*l.* a year, as well as the 3000*l.*, though the report is silent as to this. Mr. Raithby (note, ibid.) considers that this case proceeded on the principle that the children were purchasers, referring to Harvey v. Ashley, 3 Atk. 607; and, as to this point, see Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 My. & Cr. 192.

result from a person taking under his paramount title property devised or settled by will or by deed, thereby disappointing devisees or legatees or donees to whom such property was intended to be given; the doctrines which we shall have to consider in this investigation belong peculiarly to election.

According to the opinions of some of the eminent writers who have investigated the authorities relating to this subject, the election of the party who claims against the instrument is followed by a forfeiture (a) of the whole of what is given by the instrument, for the benefit of the disappointed party (b): according to others the party electing is obliged only to relinquish so much of the property given as will be sufficient to compensate the disappointed party for the loss sustained by the election which the electing party has made (c). To illustrate this by a simple case: A testator gives to A. an absolute annuity or rent-charge of 100*l.* a year, secured on substantial property of his own, and gives to B. a specific sum of stock in the funds producing 100*l.* a year, but which stock really belongs to A. If A. elects to take his own stock, on the principle of forfeiture, which may well be applied to such a case, B. will take the annuity given by the will to A.: but assume that the annuity given to A. amounts to 150*l.* a year, and that for some reason he chooses to keep his own stock; if the principle of forfeiture be applied, the disappointed legatee of the stock, assuming a perpetual annuity and stock producing annually the same amount to be of equal value, would get 50*l.* a year more than he was intended to receive; if however the principle of compensation be applied, which in such a case would appear to be the proper course, on the donee of the annuity of 150*l.* paying to the disappointed legatee as much as will purchase stock yielding 100*l.* a year, he will be entitled to keep his annuity of 150*l.* a year: this would seem to show that no general rule can be laid down as applicable to all cases, a subject which we shall presently more particularly consider.

The process by which Compensation is effected, and the principle on which it is applied, according to Mr. Swanston's (d) interpretation of the authorities, is this: In the event of election to take against the instrument, courts of equity assume jurisdiction to Sequester (e) the benefit intended for the refractory donee, in order to secure compen-

(a) 2 Sugd. on Powers, 144; Mr. Jacob's notes to 1 Rop. Husband and Wife, 568.

(b) See Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 423; and sup. p. 586.

(c) Mr. Swanston's note to Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 433; Jarman on Wills, i.

388; et v. sup. vol. i. pp. 639-40. This subject is discussed, Roper on Leg. pp. 1661-8, last edition, by White; see additional note, No. 2.

(d) In his very able note above referred to.

(e) See 2 Meriv. 94, dict. Lord Eldon.

sation to those whom his election disappoints, and the surplus after compensation is not permitted to devolve as undisposed of, but is restored to the donee, the purpose being satisfied for which alone the court controlled his legal right.

There are many dicta and some decisions which seem to favour the opinion that Forfeiture (a) is the general rule, proceeding on the principle of a tacit condition being annexed to the gift, that the donee shall take nothing under the instrument, unless he confirm the whole of the dispositions it contains, and that the disappointed donee shall have what was intended for the person who has by non-compliance with the condition disqualified himself from taking anything (b): but the great preponderance of authority appears to be in favour of Compensation (c). The technical doctrine of forfeiture (if such could be (a) "Forfeiture" does not appear to be an appropriate expression, see Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 425.

(b) Lord Talbot, certainly an eminent judge, states the doctrine, though the question of compensation as distinguished from forfeiture, was not argued in the case before him, thus: "When a man takes upon him to devise what he has no power over, upon a supposition that his will will be acquiesced under, this court compels the devisee, if he will take advantage of the will, to take entirely and not partially under it, as was done in Noys and Mordaunt's case; there being a tacit condition annexed to all devises of this nature, that the devisee do not disturb the disposition which the devisor has made," Streatfield v. Streatfield, Forrest. 176, 182: this mode of stating the doctrine excludes compensation, for if he is only bound to compensate, the devisee will take partially under the will; see 1 Sugd. Pow. 145. Lord Mansfield's doctrine in Doe v. Lord G. Cavendish, (4 T. R. p. 743,) is to the same effect, "They must renounce all benefit," &c. The case of Noys v. Mordaunt, (2 Vern. 581,) was this:—A. having two daughters, B. and C., devised fee-simple lands to B., and lands which were settled on him in tail to C.; it was held, that if B. should claim a share of the entailed lands, under the settlement, she must quit the fee-simple lands, for the testator having disposed of the whole estate amongst his children, what he gave them was on an implied condition that they should release to each other; but here also no question was raised as to compensation. In Bor v. Bor, (3 Bro. P. C. 178, n.,) Lord Hardwicke, in the House of Lords, stated the general rule thus:—"When a father, disposing of his estate, happens to give a younger son what was settled on the elder, and at the same time gives the elder son some other provision, if the elder will defeat the will in any part, he shall not at the same time take any benefit under it," referring to Noys v. Mordaunt, sup.; but Lord Hardwicke, in illustration, (p. 179,) says, in reference to the custom of London, "If the testator has said that if any of his children shall insist upon the custom, then such child shall only receive so much of his legacy, could a court of equity say he shall forfeit the whole?" Thellusson v. Woodford, (13 Ves. 220,) affirmed in the House of Lords, (1 Dow. p. 249,) as stated by Lord Eldon, (2 Meriv. p. 95,) also seems to proceed on the principle that the party defeating the instrument must renounce any benefit he takes under it altogether. Lord Redesdale, in Moore v. Butler, (2 Scho. & Lef. p. 207,) adopting a dictum of Lord Rosslyn, puts the right to call on the party to elect on the doctrine of an implied condition; and see the dictum of Sir Thos. Plumer, Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. p. 421; of Sir J. Jekyll, Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. W. p. 124; of Lord Hardwicke, Pugh v. Smith, 2 Atk. 43, a case relating to the custom of London, and also Lord Rosslyn's dictum in Cavan v. Pulteney, when that case last came before him (3 Ves. p. 385). If the principle applies to the thing, said Lord Eldon, in Green v. Green (2 Meriv. p. 94), it is very difficult to say that it lies in compensation: see also Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. J. p. 514; 4 Bro. 25, 28; Finch v. Finch, ibid. 40, 49, 51; S. C. 1 Ves. J. p. 534: other cases are cited, Jacob's note, 1 Rep. Husband and Wife, p. 573; and 1 Jarman on Wills, 388, n. (i): and see, on this subject, Mr. Jacob's remarks, 1 Rep. Husband and Wife, 576, note.

(c) "Lord Chief Justice De Grey," said Lord Loughborough, "would not put the doctrine of election upon an implied condition, but considered it as a natural equity;" Rutter v. Maclean, 4 Ves. p. 538; this opens the properly applied) (a), or of implied conditions (for where there is an express condition a rule is given which must be followed), seems to be inapplicable to such cases, which are rather to be decided on principles of equity and conscience (b), or, what is equivalent, of universal or natural justice (c). If such be the true principles on which cases of this description are to be decided, it seems to preclude the laying down of any universal rule. If a testator devises to a younger son an estate, of which he is seised only for life with remainder to the elder son, yielding a clear 100*l.* a year, and to the elder son a fee-simple estate, equally eligible in all respects, yielding 150*l.* a year; the elder doctrine of Compensation: the same noble judge, in Lady Cavan v. Pulteney, (2 Ves. J. p. 560,) observed, that "the Lord Chief Justice De Grey distinguishes the equity of this court from an express condition, which, he says, must be performed as framed, and if it is not, that will induce a forfeiture; but the equity of this court is (as he very well expresses it,) to sequester the devised estate quousque, till Satisfaction is made to the disappointed devisee;" (see 1 Meriv. p. 424). Sir Thomas Plumer, in Gretton v. Haward, (1 Swanst. p. 424,) uses similar expressions: here Compensation is directly pointed at. The same noble judge (Lord Rosslyn), in Whistler v. Webster, (2 Ves. J. 371,) expressly recognised the doctrine in these words: "If a testator disposes of the estate of A., to whom he gives some interest by his will, A. shall not take that unless he give up his estate to that amount." Indeed the majority of the dicta have treated the consequences of taking against the will as imposing an obligation to make compensation only. In an early case, where the subjects were two estates—one fee-simple, devised to the heir; the other held in fee-tail, devised to the younger son, (Anon. Gilbert, p. 15,) the eldest son having elected to take the entailed estate, Lord Chancellor Cowper said, "The youngest son should have an equivalent out of the fee-acre devised to the eldest son." In Lewis v. King, 2 Bro. 603, Lord Thurlow says, "The party taking as his own the property disposed of, must give up that which was given in exchange for it, to reimburse the devisee for his disappointment." In Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. p. 379, Lord Eldon says, "All election goes upon compensation;" but, as Mr. Jacob observes, it is not quite clear in what sense the word was there used, Lord Hardwicke, 3 Bro. P. C. p. 179, uses the word in reference to forfeiture. In Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 49, Wilson's Eq. Rep. 269, Lord Eldon's expressions are explicit; so in Ker v. Wauchope, 1 Bli. p. 26, (1819,) Lord Eldon says, "If A. (the adverse claimant) refuses to comply with the will, B. (the devisee) shall be compensated by taking the property or the value of the property which the testator meant for him, out of the estate devised, though he cannot have it out of the estate devised to him." His Lordship's dictum in Lord Raneliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. p. 149, is to the same effect. Sir Wm. Grant's expressions, in his judgment in Welby v. Welby, 2 Ves. & B. 190-1, (see 1 Bligh, 17, note,) referring to Lord Cowper's decision, quoted above, are to the same effect; as are those of Lord Redesdale, though not so pointedly, in Vane v. Lord Dungannon, 2 Scho. & Lef. p. 130. Sir Thos. Plumer held that there was no distinction in this respect, whether the subject were real or personal. "I cannot," said that learned Judge, "see a principle on which the court could think itself at liberty to sequester and distribute personalty, in the event not given to the individual intended, that would not equally apply to realty; there may be greater difficulty, but the principle is not to be abandoned merely on the ground of the difficulty in reducing it to practice;" see Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 424. Indeed one of the earliest cases was in respect of a devise of an estate belonging to the elder son to his younger son, and of his own estate to the elder; the elder elected to take his own estate, he was allowed the benefit of the devise, making compensation out of it to his brother to the extent to which he was disappointed; Anon. Gilb. Eq. R. 15, sup.; stated 1 Jarm. 385; and see Noys v. Mordaunt, sup.; and int. al. the dict. Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. J. p. 372; but in that case it was a pecuniary benefit that was to be compensated, which is more readily effected.

(a) Mr. Jacob has endeavoured to reconcile the cases on the principle of the application of the doctrine of forfeiture, 1 Rop. Husband and Wife, 571: the reasoning is purely technical; and see Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 422-3.

(b) V. supra, p. 602, n. (c); Forrester v. Cotton, 1 Ed. 535; et v. sup. vol. i. 327, 413.

(c) Mitford, Plead. by Jeremy, 111.

son may well be allowed to take the settled estate, conveying to his brother a portion of the fee-simple estate in all respects equivalent: and where the subject is personal estate the application of this principle is familiar and easy (a). But if the settled estate closely adjoins to a mansion-house to which the younger son is entitled in his own right or by devise from the father, would an estate of equal acreage or of equal marketable value given to him “out of” the estate devised to the elder son be an adequate compensation to him? Certainly not. Would it, I would ask, be possible to calculate the value to the younger son of the land so taken away from him so as to give him compensation? The property if taken by the elder son might be sold for building, or even for a manufactory—are these chances to be estimated? and if that were done could it be said even then that the younger son was compensated for the disappointment to which he had been subjected? In such a case the principles of natural justice would seem to require that the younger son should take all that was devised to the elder son, however much exceeding in nominal value the estate of which he has been deprived (b); and to dispose of such a case in the manner above pointed out would not, as I read the cases, be acting against authority (c).

Where the son who disappoints the provisions of the instrument by withdrawing his own property, takes the benefit in respect of which he is put to his election under a contract entered into by the parents in a marriage settlement executed on their marriage, which contract embraced the property so withdrawn, there it would seem that compensation is out of the question, he must give up the whole of the benefits which he would derive under the settlement (d).

(a) See Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 424; Sir Wm. Grant there said, he saw no distinction between real and personal estate.

(b) It is not denied that “if a clear rule is established, no theoretical objection can be suffered to interfere with it;” but, according to the same authority, “if no rule exists, the court must on principle consider what is to be done in a new case;” Sir Thos. Plumer, Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 421.

(c) See the additional note, No. 2. In one of the last cases on this subject that came before Lord Eldon, Tibbitts v. Tibbitts, Jac. R. 319 (1821), his Lordship said, he had looked through all the cases with great attention, and that they contained dicta which could not easily be reconciled: it would perhaps be too much to say that that should be the rule universally, (and see Jacob’s note, 1 Rep. Husb. and Wife, pp. 572-3;) but he thought the case before him (where the testator had given an inoperative recommendation that his cousins should enjoy parts of the settled property, at the rents at which they held them at his death,) was a case for compensation only: however, he added, “I am of opinion that there may be cases where not only compensation is to be made, but the whole is to be given up:” he thought the principle of the old cases was compensation, (sed. qu.) but it had since been shaken.

(d) Green v. Green, 2 Meriv. 86; S. C. 19 Ves. 667. That case arose upon a settlement: the father, on his marriage, agreed to settle estates, of which he was tenant in tail, thereby, as Lord Eldon observed, becoming a purchaser of the estate of his wife for the purposes of the settlement; but as he had not effectually settled the entailed estate, on his death, the eldest son, though taking benefits,

The doctrine of Satisfaction (a), which we are now about to consider ; has been incidentally noticed in the preceding passages in this volume, and the doctrine, so far as relates to portions, has been fully considered (b).

Satisfaction (c), as Mr. Jarman observes (d), may be described thus : Where a man being under an obligation to do a specific act, as to pay money, does that by will which may be considered as a performance of it, the thing performed being ejusdem generis (e) with that which he had engaged to perform ; the conclusion of law in such case, arising from the circumstances, is, that what the testator has done was intended to be in satisfaction of his obligation. But as this conclusion of law proceeds upon a presumption of intention, the circumstances may be such as to prevent its arising ; thus, if the benefit given to the party be different in specie from that which he is entitled to, or is less beneficial either in amount or certainty or time of payment or otherwise than the thing contracted for, the presumption of its being intended as a satisfaction or substitute will not arise (f). An express declaration will of course have its natural effect.

The strict rule is established that a Legacy given by a Debtor to his Creditor, which is equal to or greater in amount than the debt, shall be presumed to be intended in satisfaction of the debt ; but it must be, not only at least equal in amount, but equally beneficial, and of the same nature (g) exactly (h).

under the settlement, claimed the estates to which he was entitled in tail. Lord Eldon, after adverting to the authorities tending to establish the doctrine of compensation as regards cases of election arising on wills, said, The question is whether he (the son) shall be permitted to take without making good the contract entered into by his father on the marriage ; that the Principle to be applied to such a case was, that " if a person will not give the price which the parties meant he should give, he shall not have the thing which was bargained for ;" and his Lordship, though admitting that his opinion was not directly supported by any prior decision, held, in the case before him, that the eldest son, the heir in tail, must give up all the interests secured to him by the settlement, if he chose to insist upon his title to the entailed estate, 2 Meriv. 95 ; see Mr. Swanston's observations on this case, 1 Swanst. p. 434.

(a) V. supra, p. 204.

(b) Supra, pp. 204, 428, et seq. ; and see Plunket v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 324, stated in the additional note, supra, p. 458. I need scarcely observe that the doctrines of Satisfaction and Performance, in relation to legacies, are stated and examined, at great length, in the last edition of Mr. Roper's work on legacies, to which the practitioner will of course refer.

(c) V. supra, p. 436, note.

(d) 1 Powell on Devises, by Jarman, 433, n. ; et v. supra, p. 436, n., and p. 458.

(e) V. supra, p. 433.

(f) See Powell on Devises, ubi sup. ; and Mr. Cox's note to Blandy v. Widmore, 1 P. W. 323, where he collects the authorities, showing that an act may be considered as a performance in part, though giving something less will not be taken as a part satisfaction ; as to the distinction between performance and satisfaction, see Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 1 Swanst. 219 ; and Mr. Swanston's note to that case, sup. p. 452 ; et v. infra, p. 607.

(g) Byde v. Byde, 1 Cox, 48 ; and see Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 301 ; Platt v. Platt, 3 Sim. 503 ; and Hall v. Hill, 1 Conn. & L. 157 : Mr. Cox has collected the cases, and stated the general doctrines, in his note to Chancey's case, 1 P. W. p. 409. A devise of real estate, though of greater value than a debt, is not a satisfaction, Garret v. Evers, Mos. 364.

(h) Lord Hardwicke, Barrett v. Beckford,

The legacy, in order to satisfy a debt, must be payable immediately on the testator's death (a). If, therefore, the debt be payable one month after the testator's death, and the legacy six months after, it will not be considered as a satisfaction (b). So to be a satisfaction there must be a certainty of payment; a legacy, therefore, on a contingency will not be a satisfaction (c). Where a lady, indebted to a servant for wages, gave by will ten times as much as she owed, or was likely to owe, yet because made payable one month after her death, so that the servant might not outlive the month, though a thing unlikely, the court held it not to be a satisfaction (d); indeed, it was said by Lord Hardwicke, that legacies to servants have never been held to be in satisfaction of debts (e). So where a parent, indebted to his children, gives them twenty times as much in the whole amongst them, but not payable if they do not arrive at twenty-five years of age, or do not marry, this is not a satisfaction (f); there is no difference between a direction to trustees to pay and a gift (g). If the legacy is not equally beneficial as the debt in one particular, as in the time of payment, though it may be more so in another, it will not be considered as a satisfaction (h).

If a legacy be smaller than a debt due to the legatee, it is not, even pro tanto, a satisfaction of the debt (i); nor is a bequest of specific things considered as a satisfaction (k), unless accepted as such; for if a man should give a matter of curiosity or art, as a fine picture, by way of satisfaction of a debt, and the legatee accept it, though the value be less than the debt, there could be no ground for equity to interpose (l). Although a pecuniary legacy is a satisfaction of a debt, provided it be equal to (m), or greater than the debt (n), any little circumstance (in which it differs from the doctrine as to the

1 Ves. Sen. 521; therefore a legacy of a moiety of a residue, whatever may be the amount, is not a satisfaction for an annuity; ibid.: and see Hales v. Darrell, 3 Beav. 324.

(a) Clark v. Sewell, 3 Atk. 98; and see Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. C. C. 296.

(b) Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. C. C. p. 129; and see, on this head, Crompton v. Sale, 2 P. Wms. 552; Barrett v. Beckford, 1 Ves. 519.

(c) Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 301; and see Pullen v. Cresy, 3 Anstr. 830.

(d) Cited by the Master of the Rolls, Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. 636.

(e) Richardson v. Greese, 3 Atk. 69; and see the cases cited, Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. 547-9; Chancey's case, 1 P. W. p. 408, was the case of a servant, but no distinction was taken: see as to this dict. 2 Rep. on Leg. 1053.

(f) Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. 636.

(g) Per Master of the Rolls, Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 301.

(h) Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 300; and other cases cited 1 P. W. 409, n.

(i) Eastwood v. Vinke, 2 P. Wms. p. 616; Mos. 295.

(k) Slaney v. Styles, M. 1733, MS., Mad. P. and P. ii. 54.

(l) Byde v. Byde, 1 Cox, 49.

(m) Brown v. Dawson, 2 Vern. 498; sic dict. Mos. 8.

(n) Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. 544; and see Jeffs v. Wood, 2 P. Wms. 132. In Crompton v. Sale, 2 P. Wms. 555, Lord King held that legacies given by the wife to the husband's nieces could not be taken as in satisfaction of legacies given by the husband to the same nieces, for which the wife was liable, unless so declared.

satisfaction of Portions) is laid hold of by the court to take it out of the rule (a), it having been considered by some distinguished judges, as not founded on sound principle (b) and even by some judges as absurd (c).

Wherever there are circumstances on the face of the will affording a presumption that the testator's intention was not that the legacy should be an ademption of a debt, as where it is given for a particular purpose, diverso intuitu (d), it will not be held to be a satisfaction (e); so where the testator creates a fund for the payment of his debts, and, subject to the same, charges his legacies thereon (f): the intention, express or presumed, is the rule, so that if the intention clearly is to give, it cannot be contradicted by saying that the donor is paying a debt (g).

If the debt due to the legatee be upon an open or running account, so that it might not be known to the testator whether he owed any money to the legatee, the legacy will not be considered as a satisfaction of the debt; nor is a legacy a satisfaction of a debt contracted after the making of a will; for in such cases the legacy could not, as it has been considered, be intended as a satisfaction (h).

Lord Talbot would not allow of parol evidence to show that the testator designed to give the legacy exclusive of the debt (i): indeed on general principles it would seem that such evidence ought not to be admitted, though Lord Eldon in one case, as before noticed, upon the authorities, admitted parol evidence to repel the presumption of satisfaction of a debt by a legacy, notwithstanding that the general presumption was fortified by other provisions in the will (k).

(a) Hinchliffe v. Hinchliffe, 3 Ves. p. 529; but see Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. p. 547, where Lord Eldon says, "If this rule of presumption was once established, and understood to be the rule, it would have been infinitely better that it should not be destroyed by small observations upon small circumstances; the court trying to find out a distinction. It would have been better either to have abided by the rule, or to have said boldly, it should exist no longer."

(b) See Lord King's judgment in Chancey's case, 1 P. Wms. 410.

(c) Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. p. 636; Gaynon v. Wood, 1 Dick. p. 331; Barclay v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. 466; and see Eastwood v. Vinke, 2 P. Wms. 616; Richardson v. Greese, 3 Atk. 66; Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. 354; and Barrett v. Beckford, 1 Ves. 521.

(d) Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. p. 635; Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 301; 3 Atk. 68.

(e) Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. p. 635; but there the condition originally annexed to the greater legacy being afterwards released, it was held to be a satisfaction.

(f) Chancey's case, 1 P. Wms. 408; Richardson v. Greese, 3 Atk. 66, 68; Hinchliffe v. Hinchliffe, 3 Ves. 529, cited 2 Fonbl. Tr. Eq. 325, n. (l); Field v. Mostin, 2 Dick. 543; but a covenant to pay six months after the testator's death, will not be considered as a debt in this sense, Wathen v. Smith, 4 Mad. Rep. 325; and see Gaynon v. Wood, ubi sup., and in note (1) to 1 P. Wms. 409.

(g) See Treatise on Equity, vol. ii. 330-1; and Mr. Fonblanque's references.

(h) Rawlins v. Powel, 1 P. Wms. p. 299; Thomas v. Bennet, 2 P. Wms. 342; Cranmer's case, Salk. p. 508; Mascal v. Mascal, 1 Ves. 324; Cole v. Ashborne, 1 March, 1744, MS.; Mad. P. and P. ii. p. 56; and see Chancey's case, 1 P. Wms. p. 409, and the references in the margin.

(i) Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. p. 354; and see Hales v. Darrell, 3 Beav. p. 329; and Hall v. Hill, sup. p. 452.

(k) Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. 542-48; sup. vol. i. p. 570; but see as to this case, ibid. p. 575; and see Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 268; et v. supra, pp. 444, 452.

A legacy is not an extinguishment of a negotiable security (a). And though a legacy to an executor excluded him from the undisposed surplus of the testator's estate, it was not allowed to operate for two purposes, and so as also to be a satisfaction for a debt due from the testator (b). Though a gift of a legacy may, as in the civil law (c), be so framed as to release a demand; yet where the demand was in respect of a bond debt, uncanceled in the testator's possession, the bond was held not to be released by a legacy, no intention to release appearing upon the will (d).

A legacy given by the will of a parent to his child (e), or by a husband to his wife (f), is not considered upon any different footing from that of a legacy by any other person, as to the satisfaction of a debt.

Where a fund settled in trust for the father for life, remainder to his son and daughter, was sold out by the father, who on the marriage of the daughter settled funds of much larger amount than the daughter's interest in the trust fund on the daughter, and to which settlement the daughter being of age was a party, it was held that this was to be considered as a presumed satisfaction of her interest, and that such presumption would not be affected by the ignorance or knowledge of the husband as to the rights of his wife in respect of the trust fund, or by the consideration of natural affection being introduced into the deed; but the Vice-Chancellor seemed to consider that evidence might have been adduced to rebut or support the presumption (g).

The distinction between Satisfaction and Performance has already been adverted to (h).

A case has lately occurred before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram (i) which seems to remove all doubt, if any such existed, as to the actual state of the law in reference to Performance, as regards a distributive share in personal estate taken by a person having a claim upon the intestate for a fixed sum, or for an annuity. That learned judge considers that it is settled by authority (k), though upon a principle which is purely arbitrary, that in the case of a covenant by the hus-

(a) Carr v. Eastbrooke, 3 Ves. 564.

(b) Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. 637.

(c) Just. Inst. ii. 20, 13.

(d) Wilmot v. Woodhouse, 4 Bro. C. C. 227; see on this subject, Aston v. Pye, in note to Smyth v. Eden, 5 Ves. 350.

(e) Tolson v. Collins, 4 Ves. 490-2; Chave v. Farrant, 18 Ves. 8.

(f) Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. 353.

(g) Plunkett v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 316, 324-5, there is a full examination of the cases in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment; the student will do well to read this case, and the cases there referred to, with attention.

(h) V. supra, p. 436, n. (b); et v. 10 Ves. 4.

(i) Salisbury v. Salisbury, xii. Jur. 671, Vice-Chancellor Wigram; v. supra, 436, n. (b), where "and" in the last line but five should be substituted for "but."

(k) Blandy v. Widmore, 1 P. W. p. 324; S. C. 2 Vern. p. 709; Garthshore v. Chalié, 10 Ves. 1; Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 1 Swanst. 217; (v. sup. p. 434, n., 436, n.); that was a case of virtual not intentional intestacy; Lord Eldon, band that on his death his wife shall receive a gross sum, the distributive share of the widow in the case of absolute intestacy, if equal to the sum covenanted to be paid, is to be considered as a Performance of the covenant; so that the widow cannot first insist upon her rights as a creditor and then claim her distributive share, treating the two claims as distinct and as depending on distinct titles; if her distributive share is equal to or greater than the debt, the debt is extinguished, if less she must take her distributive share in part: but the shares of the next of kin are liable to make good the deficiency if any: this principle is applicable to every other person who is entitled to a distributive share in the covenantor's estate on his intestacy (a). In the same case the Vice-Chancellor Wigram considered it as equally settled, though not satisfied that there is any solid reason for the distinction, that where the covenant is that an annuity shall be paid or secured to such person after the testator's death, the distributive share which such person may take on the intestacy of the covenantor is not a performance (b); it is not treated as a satisfaction, because satisfaction, as before observed, implies that something is done from which an intention to satisfy the covenant may be presumed, and even a gift of a sum of money, not being ejusdem generis with a fixed sum, is not a satisfaction. The gift of an annuity to a married woman, even though the amount and days of payment are precisely the same, will not be held to be a satisfaction of an annuity to a like amount charged on the donor's estate, if the annuity so given is charged upon property of a different nature, and if the annuity given be made payable to the donee generally, the annuity to which the donee was previously entitled being payable to her separate use (c).

Where the debt arises in the husband's lifetime, as where he covenants within two years after marriage to pay a certain sum and he outlives the two years, a distributive share will not be a performance or a satisfaction of the covenant (d), nor is an orphanage part, for it is not in the father's power (e).

A distributive share on intestacy, it will be remembered, is not an advancement to a child during life (f).

in Gartshore v. Chalié, said, this court had infused an intention into the husband's contract which a court of law could not; v. sup. et infra.

(a) See Gartshore v. Chalié, 10 Ves. 16; Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. Sen. 411, treats it as a strict performance.

(b) Couch v. Stratton, 4 Ves. p. 391, Lord Rosslyn; Salisbury v. Salisbury, sup. p. 608.

(c) Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 154-5.

(d) Oliver v. Brighthouse, cited by Lord Hardwicke, 1 Ves. Sen. 1; and see Lang v. Lang, 8 Sim. 465.

(e) Case on Mrs. Parson's will, cited 1 Ves. Sen. 2.

(f) Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. 427; sup. p. 430.

There is a sort of mixed case, as Lord Eldon observed, between performance and satisfaction; for instance, said his Lordship, if there be a covenant to purchase and settle lands upon the first and other sons in tail male, and the party purchases lands, not being copyhold (a), of less, equal, or greater value than the sum he covenanted to lay out, taking a conveyance to him and his heirs, and dies leaving a son who would be tenant in tail under the settlement, and a granddaughter by an elder son upon whom no settlement being made the lands descend, that will bar the demand against the assets of the grandfather in the whole or in part according to the amount: the granddaughter must give up the estate (b). Other cases have decided that a subsequent purchase by the covenantor, of lands of a smaller value (which are at his death left undisposed of) shall be intended to be a part performance of such covenant, as it may be presumed he meant to purchase more lands afterwards and to settle the whole according to the covenant (c). Evidence however may be given to rebut the presumption (d): a sale of the lands is sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption (e), a devise is not. Where there is a covenant on marriage to settle specific lands, generally it will not be satisfied by suffering other lands of equal value to descend (f); but where a man covenants to settle lands on the eldest son of the marriage, and suffers lands to descend to him in fee, that is a performance so far: so where lands descend to an heir-at-law who claims in place of his ancestor a sum of money to be laid out in land (g).

Where a husband covenants that lands to be settled are of a certain annual value, it amounts to a covenant on his part to settle and make good to that extent in case of deficiency, for the covenantee might have damages; but the value is to be calculated at the date of the settlement, not of the death of the covenantor, if the covenant be in general words (h). If a person under such an obligation devise to the cove-

(a) Attorney-General v. Whorwood, 1 Ves. 541.

(b) Garthshore v. Chalié, 10 Ves. 8; Lord Eldon is there reported to have said, "any demand," without exception or qualification; see on this subject Wilcocks v. Wilcocks, 2 Vern. 558 (2 Atk. p. 634); Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. 323; Sowden v. Sowden, 1 Bro. 582 (10 Ves. 8, 9, 10); v. sup. pp. 204, 205; and see Wilson v. Foreman, imperfectly reported, 2 Dick. 593, stated from Reg. Lib. 10 Ves. pp. 519, 520; Lechmere v. Lechmere, Forrest. 80.

(c) Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. Wms. 211; Cox's note to Blandy v. Williams, 1 P.

Wms. 324.

(d) Lord Eldon, Garthshore v. Chalié, 10 Ves. 10.

(e) Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. p. 327; Tooke v. Hastings, 2 Vern. p. 97; and see Speake v. Speake, 1 Vern. 217, n.; and the other cases cited, 2 Vern. 97.

(f) Trevor v. Trevor, Dom. Proc. 5 Feb. 1719, Harc. MS., 1 Mad. P. and P. 501.

(g) Dict. Lord Hardwicke, Prime v. Stebbing, 2 Ves. Sen. 411; this and similar cases appear to proceed also upon the leaning against double provisions; Lord Hardwicke, 3 Atk. 421, referring to Wilcox v. Wilcox, supra.

(h) Speake v. Speake, 1 Vern. 217.

nantee lands which are not of that value, as he could not intend that they should be a satisfaction or performance, it will be taken as an accumulated bounty and not even as a part performance, unless so declared in the will (a).

The period of time specified in the covenant has been in cases of satisfaction considered as material; in cases of performance little regard has been paid to it by the court; and the court will not look upon the slight difference between "leaving" and "paying" (b).

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Prime v. Stebbing, 2 Ves. 411.

(b) Lord Eldon, Garthshore v. Chalié, 10 Ves. 7, 13.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, No. I.

Judgment of Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in Savill v. Savill.—Election.—Sup. p. 586.

Upon the marriage of a man with an infant ward of the court, who was entitled jointly with her sister to real and personal estate held by trustees in undivided moieties, he, with the sanction of the court, covenanted that upon the wife coming of age her real property should be settled upon himself and herself, and the children of the marriage, with an ultimate limitation in default of issue of the marriage to the heirs of the wife; he also covenanted to settle the personal property in the same manner, except that there was an ultimate limitation in default of issue to the next of kin of the wife. The marriage took effect, the wife attained twenty-one, and about a month after the marriage died, without issue, and without executing a settlement of the real estate, leaving her sister, who was also an infant ward of court, her sole heiress and next of kin. The Vice-Chancellor, in giving judgment, said, "Among the causes before me on this occasion is the cause in which the proposals and articles for a settlement, in contemplation of the marriage of Mrs. Parker, then a ward of this court, were approved by the court, a circumstance, perhaps, not immaterial. She never had any issue, and has been survived by her husband, who is her administrator. The persons who were her next of kin at her death were her heiress-at-law and others. Mr. Parker, who, subject to any contract that may have been made concerning his wife's personal estate, has the sole title to his wife's personal estate, is willing to abide by the proposals and articles, provided that all their terms and provisions be carried into effect as they would have been if he and Mrs. Parker, in her lifetime, after her majority, had joined in making a settlement conformably to the proposals and articles. The heiress-at-law and her husband insist on withdrawing the real estate from the proposals and articles, and are entitled to do so. For this the other next of kin are not answerable and are not to blame. But one question is, whether the rights of the issue of the marriage being out of the case (for there was not any issue of the marriage), the next of kin, who are 'volunteers' or in a sense 'volunteers,' can be allowed in these suits to claim the benefit of part of the contract against the husband, who is not permitted to have the benefit of the whole of it. And my opinion is, that, there having been no issue of the marriage, the next of kin have not a better equity to take from him the personal estate, for the purposes of the proposals and articles, when the real estate is withdrawn from the proposals and articles, than he has to keep out of their influence so much at least of the personal estate as may be sufficient to compensate him for that interest in the real estate which the proposals and articles purport to give him, but which he is not allowed to have," Savill v. Savill, 2 Coll. 721, 726-7.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Compensation.—Extract from Mr. Swanston's Note to Gretton v. Haward.
Supra, p. 604.

"The intention," says Mr. Swanston, speaking of a devise, "having become impracticable in the prescribed form, is executed by approximation, or, in the technical phrase, cypres. The devise to the stranger, rendered void as a gift of the specific subject, is effectuated as a gift of value and effectuated at the expense of the heir by whose interference its strict purpose has been defeated. By this management the intention of the testator in favour of the stranger, though defeated in form, is in substance accomplished; his intention in favour of the heir, equally express, remains to be considered. If the value of the estate retained by the heir exceeds the value of the estate designed for him his own act is his indemnity: the benefit which he enjoys transcends the intention of the testator: but if the value of the estate of which the court deprives him exceeds the value of the estate of which he deprives the devisee, what disposition is to be made of the surplus? Considered as a gift of value (and on that principle the equitable arrangement is founded) the devise to the stranger entitles him to an equal amount, but is no authority for bestowing on him more," which would be the effect if the principle of forfeiture to the disappointed devisee were adopted; therefore, what is not transferred to the devisee must remain with the heir. The condition not expressed in the will is supplied by the construction of the court for the single purpose of executing the presumed intention. "The case of specific gifts," adds Mr. Swanston, "may involve some difficulty of appreciation, by the rejection of local attachments which admit neither accurate estimation nor adequate compensation. But it is on the principle of appreciation that the court interferes to transfer to one party that which is expressly, and at law effectually, given to another, and the difficulty has been repeatedly encountered. Should any case present impediments of this nature, practically insurmountable, the doctrine of compensation might become in that instance inapplicable, but would not for that reason cease to be the general rule of the court." In conclusion Mr. Swanston states that by the doctrine of Compensation the intention, so far as is practicable, is effected; by Forfeiture that intention will be defeated. Note to Gretton v. Haward, 1 Swanst. 443.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF MORTGAGES AND LIENS.

SECTION I.—Of the Creation of Mortgages—Sale with Condition to secure Repurchase—Conditional Sale—Loan on Grant of Annuity—How Attempts on the Part of the Mortgagor to introduce Special Terms are viewed—Mortgage for Costs—Mortgage with Power of Sale—Defective Conveyances by way of Mortgage, and other incidental Topics.

Property capable of being Mortgaged.

Mortgage at Common Law.

Mortgage by Creation of Terms.

Welsh Mortgages.

What constitutes a Mortgage.

Sale with Right of Repurchase.

Loans upon Annuity.

Sales of Rent-Charges with Right of Repurchase.

General Rules.

Mortgagee not entitled to any Benefit beyond his Principal, Interest, and Costs.

Right to Redeem cannot be clogged with any By-Agreement.

Mortgage of Advowson.

Mortgage of West India Estate.

Stipulation for Consignments—Commission.

Mortgage to Solicitor for Costs.

Leases from Mortgagor to Mortgagee.

Mortgage with Power of Sale.

Mortgage of Stock.

Mortgage of Leaseholds—Fixtures, &c.

Mortgages under Power to raise Money by Sale or Mortgage.

Grant of an Annuity under such a Power.

Mortgage prevails over Voluntary Settlement.

Mortgagee taking with Notice of Fraud.

Defective Securities—Equitable Relief.

WE are now to enter upon the consideration of a kind of equitable estate or interest called an Equity of Redemption, which, as will appear on reference to the thirteenth chapter of the Third Book of the Second Part of this work (a), originated in Chancery legislation, but which may now be considered as founded on an implied contract; and of the subject of mortgages and securities generally.

Lands by whatever tenure they may be held (b), advowsons, tithes, rents, tolls, reversions, and possibilities coupled with an interest (c), may be mortgaged. So may personal chattels, ships (d) and freight, stock in the funds, debts, policies and other choses in action, and with some exceptions (e) salaries and pensions. Indeed generally every kind of interest in property, real or personal, which is capable of absolute sale may be the subject of a legal mortgage or its equivalent in equity (f). Where the mortgage is by assignment of a leasehold interest, the mortgagee, unless there be a special provision to the contrary, as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, takes the interest subject to the covenants and obligations contained in the original lease (g): but the mortgagee, though he may not have entered, is liable to all the covenants which run with the land, though the landlord will have no assistance in equity in such case; taking an under lease for a shorter term will protect the mortgagee (h).

A mortgage of freehold land at common law was by feoffment in fee, upon condition to be void if the feoffor or his heirs should on a fixed day

(a) V. supra, vol. i. p. 601.

(b) See Jarman on Conv. by Sweet, vol. v. pp. 234, 510. This volume, together with Mr. Coote's learned work on the same subject, contains such a mass of authority and fund of information on the subject of mortgages, incumbrances and liens, as almost to supersede the necessity for any further reference. Mr. Sweet spontaneously gave me permission to make use of this, indeed of all his works, at pleasure; and it will be seen that I have largely availed myself of his kind and liberal offer.

(c) Lord Eldon held, in Carleton v. Leighton, (3 Mer. 670,) that an expectancy of an heir presumptive or apparent (the fee simple being in the ancestor) was not an interest, or a possibility, nor was it capable of being the subject of an assignment or a contract; that is, that such an interest could not presently be affected by any conveyance or contract; and see Meek v. Kettlewell, stated infra, though that was not a mere expectancy: but a man may make a binding contract, as in Beckley v. Newland, 2 P. W. 182; Hobson v. Trevor, 2 P. W. 191, that if he should become possessed of a particular estate, he will execute a security upon it; the interest which passes by the covenant in such case is not an interest in the land till it comes in possession, but a right under the contract; Duckle

v. Baines, 8 Sim. 525.

(d) Thompson v. Smith, 1 Mad. 395; and see Stringer v. Murray, 2 Barn. & Ald. 248: mortgages of chattels will be treated of in a separate section.

(e) As half-pay and the like; Stone v. Lidderdale, 2 Anst. 533; Lidderdale v. Duke of Montrose, 4 T. R. p. 248; Priddy v. Rose, 3 Meriv. 102; and see Wells v. Forster, 8 Mees. & W. 149; Hill v. Paul, 8 Cl. & Fin. 307; Palmer v. Bate, 2 Brod. & B. 673; Davis v. Duke of Marlborough, 1 Swanst. p. 79; and Tunstall v. Boothby, 10 Sim. 549.

(f) Jarman's Convey. by Sweet, v. 508-9, 510, 657 (which will be quoted in future, Jarman Mortgage, by Sweet); ibid. 235, et seq.; ibid. 312, et seq.; ibid. 298; ibid. 294, 302, 458, et seq.; ibid. 225; ibid. 441. The references in this note will direct the reader to the peculiarities affecting mortgages of these several subjects; practical directions are there given for the guidance of those who may be engaged in such transactions.

(g) See Haig v. Homan, 4 Bli. N. S. 380, 423, 426, 429.

(h) Sparkes v. Smith, 2 Vern. 275; Pilkington v. Shaller, ib. 374; and see Jenkins v. Portman, 1 Keen, 454 (8 Sim. 524); Powell on Mortgages, 178-9; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 429, 431.

—and if no day was fixed, then any time within the feoffor's life was understood (a)—pay the debt and interest agreed upon to the feoffee or his representatives. Non-payment at the day (b) gave to the mortgagee an absolute estate in fee for ever discharged from the condition (c). In later times it became usual to insert a proviso in the mortgage deed, that on payment of the debt at the appointed time the mortgagee should reconvey the estate: the condition for making the conveyance void, or the proviso for reconveyance, was sometimes contained in a separate instrument; but whatever form the transaction assumed, the terms of redemption were strictly abided by at law, and if they were not complied with to the very letter the estate of the mortgagee became indefeasible (d). If the mortgagor tendered the money on the day, at such convenient time that it might be counted, it was sufficient, and he might tender it in bags, and if the mortgagee miscounted it, or there were any counterfeit coin, still if the mortgagee accepted the money tendered, the condition was considered as fulfilled (e).

The creating of Terms for years (f), for the purpose of securing money lent, was introduced with a view to obviate the inconveniences which were found to arise from the ancient mode of making mortgages by charter of feoffment with a condition of defeasance; for by such mode, if the condition were not performed, the estate becoming absolute was thenceforth subject at law to all the real charges and incumbrances of the feoffee, and, as some thought, to the dower of his wife (g). If an estate be demised for a term of years with a proviso, making the term void on payment of a sum of money with interest, before or upon a certain day, the condition is not considered at law as complied with unless the money be paid on the day; the subsequent payment, though it gives the mortgagor the equitable right to the estate, does not at law affect the legal con-

(a) Co. Litt. 208, b.

(b) The stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 70, gives to the assignees of a mortgagor the power of paying before the day, which the mortgagor has not (in the passage, vol. i. p. 603, "before" must therefore be altered to "on"); but the statute does not give them power to revest the estate, by payment after the day; Dunn v. Massey, 6 Ad. & Ell. 481. The mortgagee may enter at law before default of payment; Rogers v. Grazebrook, 8 Q. B. 895.

(c) The nature of a common-law mortgage, and the rigour with which at common law the condition was enforced, and the general feeling which called for some modification of the common-law doctrines, have been adverted to in the former volume, pp. 154, 600-3.

(d) Supra, vol. i. pp. 601-2; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, pp. 79, 80.

(e) Wade's case, 5 Co. 115; and see Shepard's Touchstone, 143. A tender in bank notes is now good under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 98, § 6: as to what, on the general law, amounts to a good tender, see Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 380, et seq.

(f) As we have seen in the preceding chapters, the creation of terms for raising portions, and the like, is a common practice.

(g) 2 Fonbl. 104; 2 Bla. Com. 158; 1 Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, p. 7.

tinuance of the term (a); though by the late act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, terms of this kind as well as all other satisfied terms have been extinguished (b). Mortgages for long terms for years are attended with this particular advantage, that on the death of the mortgagee the term and the right in equity to receive the mortgage debt vest in the same person; whereas where the mortgage is in fee, the estate on the death of the mortgagee goes to his heir or devisee, and the money is payable to his executor or administrator; this produces a separation of rights which is often attended with great inconvenience both to mortgagor and mortgagee (c): but there being also inconveniences in mortgages for terms, and the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 69, and Will. IV. c. 60, having afforded a remedy for the inconveniences attending the mortgaged estate descending to an infant heir or other persons from whom formerly a re-conveyance could not have been obtained, mortgages in fee have again become the more usual form of security (d).

The history of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over mortgages has been traced, and the general character of a mortgage in the view of the court has been stated in the former volume (e); we are now to enter into a practical consideration of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery, principally in reference to what is called the Equity of Redemption.

It may be proper to state in the outset that, in the view of the Court of Chancery, whatever be the nature of the mortgage, it is only a personal contract, and the mortgagee, generally speaking, is considered as having no interest beyond the obtaining his money (f).

There is a kind of mortgage called a Welsh Mortgage, which however has now fallen into disuse, in which there is no condition or proviso for repayment at any time; the agreement is that the mortgagor to whom the estates is conveyed shall receive the rents till his debt is paid: in such case the mortgagor and his representatives are at liberty to redeem at any time (g). A conveyance of the inheritance for securing a sum of money in trust that the party to whom the estate is conveyed shall continue in possession till, by perception

(a) See Butler's note (1), Co. Litt. 290, b. § 13.

(b) Supra, vol. i. 292-3, 516.

(c) Butler's note, Co. Litt. (961), Co. Litt. 205, a.; 2 Foul. 256: one way of obviating this inconvenience, which has been resorted to, is by making the mortgagor covenant, in default of payment, to convey the fee, discharged of all equity of redemption, to the mortgagee, or as he shall appoint; Butler's note.

(d) Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, p. 8.

(e) V. supra, vol. i. pp. 603-4.

(f) Brown v. Gibbs, Prec. Ch. 99.

(g) Yates v. Hambly, 2 Atk. 363; Longuet v. Scawen, 1 Ves. 406.

of rents and profits, he shall be satisfied the principal and interest upon such sums as he has already lent or shall thereafter lend, and subject thereto for the mortgagor for life, with remainders over, is in the nature of a Welsh Mortgage, and subject to the rules which are applicable to a mortgage of that description (a). In such mortgages there is usually no covenant for the payment of the money (b); but in this, as in ordinary cases of mortgage, that is no obstacle against redemption (c), the loan creates a debt whether there be a covenant or not (d).

Though there is in such cases, generally speaking, a perpetual right to have back the estate when the debt is satisfied, the mortgagee cannot compel the mortgagor to redeem, nor can he foreclose (e). The mortgagor may apply to the Court of Chancery for an account of the profits received, as on an elegit the conuzor has a right to come here to see if the conuzee upon the extended value has received satisfaction for his whole debt, and if there be a surplus to have it paid to him; and where the debt has been extinguished he will have possession decreed to him without being driven to an ejectment at law, though the transaction be such as that possession might be recovered at law (f). If the value be excessive the court will decree an account notwithstanding it be part of the agreement that the mortgagee shall retain the profits in satisfaction of the interest (g): indeed where the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists it is hardly possible that an agreement under which the mortgagee is to hold the land at a rent as an equivalent for interest can be supported; it being considered, independently of the question as to usury, to be against public policy that such agreements should be permitted to take place between parties one of whom has an obvious advantage over the other (h).

(a) Yates v. Hambly, sup.

(b) Lawley v. Hooper, 3 Atk. 280; as to the effect of the absence of such a covenant, as between the real and personal representatives, see Howell v. Price, Prec. Ch. 423; and 1 P. W. 294, n.; and S. C. Prec. Ch. p. 477; where it was ultimately decided that the heir was entitled to have the estate exonerated out of the personal estate; for the general rule is (see the exceptions, note to Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. p. 435, and infra,) that every mortgage implies a debt, for which the mortgagor's personal estate is liable; King v. King, 3 P. W. 361; and Cox's note.

(c) Mellor v. Lees, 2 Atk. p. 495; King v. King, 3 P. W. 360: but it may be a material circumstance, as explanatory of the intention of the parties, in a doubtful case, as to whether the transaction is a sale or a security; 2 Atk. 495.

(d) Lex Præet. 310-11; supra, n. (22).

(e) Lord Hardwicke, Longuet v. Scawen, 1 Ves. 406; Teulon v. Curtis, 1 Yo. 610: that transaction was held to be in the nature of a Welsh mortgage; no time was fixed by the proviso for the payment of the money, and there was a covenant that the mortgagee might enter and receive the profits till paid; he had filed a bill for foreclosure, which was dismissed: the case of Hartpole v. Walsh, 5 Bro. P. C. 267, there cited, was one of peculiar circumstances: both cases are stated, Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 101.

(f) Lord Hardwicke, Yates v. Hambly, 2 Atk. 362-363.

(g) Fulthrope v. Foster, 1 Vern. 476; and see Talbot v. Braddill, 1 Vern. 183, 395; see the observations on that case, Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 93; and ibid. 96.

(h) See Webb v. Rorke, 2 Scho. & L. 668; Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. p. 117, infra; and see Belcher v. Vardon, 2 Coll. 162, 172.

In these cases where the mortgagee is in possession, generally speaking, time is no bar; there is nothing for the Statute of Limitations to operate upon, for there is no forfeiture (a): though if it should appear after the account taken that the mortgage had been satisfied by perception of profits more than twenty years before, and that the mortgagee had continued in possession ever since, it would seem that the Statute of Limitations, or the equitable bar from length of time adopted by analogy to it, if pleaded (b), would operate as a bar to the recovery of the estate (c).

As regards mortgages in general, it may be considered almost as an universal rule, that wherever a conveyance or assignment of an estate is originally intended as a security for money, whether this intention appears upon the deed itself, or by any other instrument, or even by parol evidence, it will ever after be considered in equity as a mortgage, and therefore redeemable on the usual terms, though at the time of the loan or as part of the same transaction there may have been an express agreement between the parties that it shall not be redeemable, or that the right of redemption shall be confined to a particular time or to a particular person or description of persons (d). If a man make a mortgage and by the same deed covenants that it shall not be redeemed but during his life, yet it is a mortgage and shall always be redeemable as well after his death as before; if the agreement be that A. or his heirs male may redeem, the heir general or assignee may redeem (e). In short, according to the doctrine of the Court of Chan-

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Yates v. Hambly, 2 Atk. 363; Fenwick v. Reed, 1 Meriv. 120; Orde v. Heming, 1 Vern. 418.

(b) Where the Statute of Limitations is not set up by plea, demurrer, or answer, it cannot be insisted upon at the hearing; Roch v. Callen, xii. Jur. 112; xiii. Law Jour. Chanc. 144, Vice-Chancellor Wigram (Mitf. on Pl. 273), "though the courts will, in cases which allow of the exercise of discretion, use the statute as a rule to guide that discretion;" ibid.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Yates v. Hambly, ubi sup. The application of the Statute of Limitations to ordinary mortgages will be the subject of distinct consideration: on the subject of presuming a conveyance, see Fenwick v. Reed, 1 Meriv. 125; S. C. 5 Barn. & Ald. 233.

(d) See 5 Bacon's Abr. p. 5, et seq., where the cases are brought together. One of the earliest cases is Clench v. Witherly, Ca. temp. Finch, p. 376 (1678); it was a case of an absolute surrender; a judgment was given as a further security, and there was a previous memorandum signed, showing that a mortgage was intended; and see Bonham v. Newcomb, 1 Vern. 7, 215; Howard v. Harris, 1 Vern. p. 33; on rehearing, 190; Talbot v. Braddill, 1 Vern. 183, 394. In the last-cited case the day of payment on redemption was limited to the year 1688; but the estate having, by the dropping-in of lives, become much more valuable, the mortgagor was permitted to redeem several years before the day limited, though the mortgagee could not have foreclosed before that day, and though the general rule is, that the right of foreclosure and redemption ought to be reciprocal (see 2 Freem. 150; Price v. Perrie, 2 Freem. 258; Francklyn v. Fern, Barn. p. 30; and see 2 Fonbl. 263; Goodman v. Grierson, 2 Ball & B. 279): but it is now settled as a general rule that the mortgagor cannot redeem before the day; v. infra.

(e) Com. Dig. Mortgage, 4 A. 1 and 4 A. 2; Howard v. Harris, 2 Ch. Ca. 61, 148; S. C. 1 Vern. 33, 190; Price v. Perrie, 2 Freem. 258.

cery, the parties cannot by special agreement alter what the court says are the special terms of the contract: the equity of the mortgagor is part of the law of England, so that it cannot be in any way provided by agreement that the Court of Chancery shall not give its usual relief (a). Provisoes for redemption by separate deeds are discouraged, being liable to suspicion that an unfair or improper use of the principal deed is intended to be made (b).

From what has been above observed it will be seen that in many cases the court will have first to determine the fact whether the conveyance was intended to be an absolute transfer or only a security for money (c). Any circumstance which tends to show that the transaction was by way of security, or indeed which is inconsistent with the notion of the grantee having been intended to take as owner, and particularly where such circumstances are apparent from the grantee's own acts, will be sufficient (d); but any after arrangement or promise is to be carefully distinguished from what passes at the time of the original transaction (e). So early as the time of Lord Nottingham there was a known distinction between a mortgage and an absolute conveyance with a collateral agreement to reconvey upon payment of the purchase money (f), and that distinction is still recognised (g): in such case no account of back rents will be decreed: but the transaction must be clearly a sale with a distinct stipulation for a liberty to repurchase; if there be any circumstances showing that the transaction was in any way intended as a security for money, it will, as above mentioned, be treated as a redeemable interest and as a security only (h). Mere parol evidence is admissible to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties at the time, though the conveyance be in form absolute, more especially if it is suggested that the defeazance was omitted by fraud (i). The principle on which evidence is admitted

(a) Lord Thurlow and Lord Eldon, 7 Ves. 273; Seton v. Slade, Com. Dig. ubi supra, et vide 9 Ves. 271. So it is a maxim of law "that the law will not suffer its rules to be contradicted, but will supersede the intent and reduce the gift to its own operation, such as it will allow;" 1 Ves. 146.

(b) See Baker v. Wind, 1 Ves. 161. Lord Hardwicke made the mortgagee who had disputed the mortgagor's title to redeem pay the costs.

(c) See the late case of Williams v. Owen, 5 My. & Cr. 303.

(d) V. int. al. Goodman v. Grierson, 2 Ball & B. 278, and the criteria there stated; England v. Codrington, 1 Eden, 169.

(e) See Copleston v. Boxwill, 1 Ch. Ca. 1; 2 Freem. 150; Barrell v. Sabine, 1 Vern. 269;

Ensworth v. Griffiths, 5 Bro. P. C. 184; and see 1 P. W. 269.

(f) Lord Nottingham, Thornboro' v. Baker, 1 Ch. Ca. 286. See, on this subject, Sugd. V. and P. p. 221, §§ 24, 25, 26. In Orby v. Trigg, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 599, § 24; S. C. 9 Mod. 2, a right of preemption on the part of the mortgagee, under a covenant to that effect, appears to be recognised as one that may be enforced, but how is the price to be fixed, must the mortgagee take it at the price asked?

(g) 1 Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, p. 138, n.: there is a form of such a conveyance in the third volume of the same work.

(h) Vernon v. Bethell, 2 Eden, 113; Goodman v. Grierson, 2 Ball & B. 278.

(i) For instance, to show that although the conveyance was absolute, the party, in-

in these cases against the import of the deed, appears to be, that from the relative helplessness of the borrower it is likely that the lender may have omitted to cause the deed to be so prepared as to represent the real nature of the transaction. Evidence may also be let in of other circumstances indicating fraud or mistake (a). If it shall appear upon evidence that the money paid by the grantee was clearly not a fair price for the absolute purchase of the estate conveyed to him; if he was not let into the immediate possession of the estate; if instead of receiving the rents for his own benefit he accounted for them to the grantor and only retained an amount equivalent to interest; or if the expence of preparing the deed of conveyance was borne by the grantor; each of these circumstances has been considered by the court as evidence showing with more or less cogency that the conveyance was intended merely by way of security (b). If, having a due regard to the nature of the instrument and the extraneous facts, it shall appear that the parties intended a mortgage, the party from whom the estate has passed and those claiming under him will be allowed to redeem notwithstanding the conveyance may be in the form of a sale (c), and notwithstanding that the mortgagor may have bound himself that on some future event, as failure in payment on a particular day, it should operate as a purchase (d); but a bonâ fide sale with a stipulation for re-purchase stead of entering into possession, demanded interest; Sir G. Maxwell v. Lady Montacute, Prec. Ch. 526; fraud, Lord Hardwicke, Walker v. Walker, 2 Atk. p. 99; mistake, Joynes v. Statham, 3 Atk. 389; Baker v. Wind, 1 Ves. p. 160; England v. Codrington, Spurgeon v. Collier, ubi infra; Vernon v. Bethell, 2 Eden, 110; it may also be received to show undue influence on the part of the mortgagee, ibid. p. 113; see other cases, 2 Fonbl. 263.

(a) In Irnham v. Child, 1 Bro. 92, the parties purposely omitted a clause making the annuity purchased redeemable; Lord Thurlow would not on such evidence vary the deed; and see Lord Portmore v. Morris, 2 Bro. 219, and Phillips v. Eastwood, 1 Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. p. 288; and Lord Eldon's observations in Marquis Townshend v. Stangroom, 6 Ves. 332. The rules as to the admission of extrinsic evidence without reference to fraud, are stated sup. vol. i. p. 555, et seq. A mistake may be such as to avoid a transaction altogether; thus in Carpmael v. Powis, 10 Beav. 36, evidence was let in to show a mutual mistake in computation, and that having been proved, the transaction, a sale of an annuity, was set aside altogether.

(b) See the authorities cited infra. The early authorities are collected in Mr. Butler's note, No. 96, Co. Lit. 205 a, § 2; some, however, of the cases cited in that note have but a remote bearing on the text.

(c) Sevier v. Greenway, 19 Ves. p. 414; Fulthrope v. Foster, 1 Vern. 476.

(d) Bowen v. Edwards, 1 Ch. Rep. 222; Jennings v. Ward, 2 Vern. 520; Manlove v. Bale, 2 Vern. 84, nearly 20 years had elapsed since the first conveyance: the stipulation was that the grantee was to be redeemed, if at all, within one year, the leases under which the property mortgaged was held had been twice renewed by the party who claimed as vendee; Exton v. Greaves, 1 Vern. 138; Francklyn v. Fern, Barnardist. 30; Willett v. Winnell, 1 Vern. 488; Price v. Perrie, 2 Freem. 258; Fulthrope v. Foster, 1 Vern. 476; Spurgeon v. Collier, 1 Eden, 59; and see the cases collected in the note, ibid. p. 60; Vernon v. Bethell, 2 Eden, 113. "There is great reason and justice in this rule, for necessitous men are not truly speaking free men, but to answer a present exigency will submit to any terms that the crafty may impose upon them," Lord Northington (2 Ball & Beat. 278); and see Williams v. Owen, 10 Sim. 386, though under the circumstances that decision was reversed (ibid. p. 668; 5 My. & Cr. 303), the transaction being considered as a sale. How-on fixed terms, introduced into an agreement for sale at the time or at a subsequent period, will have its natural construction (a). Where the transaction appears on the face of it to be an absolute conveyance, it will not be easily presumed that the transaction was by way of mortgage, especially if the possession and enjoyment have gone along with the conveyance (b). It has been said, that where the person charged to be mortgagee has no remedy to recover his money, the person alleging himself to be mortgagor shall not enforce a redemption, for the remedy ought to be reciprocal; but this is liable to some qualification, as we have seen as regards Welsh mortgages (c). In a late case it was held that where the grantee of lands, subject to a limited power of redemption, has not the remedies of a mortgagee by which he might enforce repayment of his principal and interest, the conveyance will not be treated as a mortgage but as a conditional sale. Thus where some lands were conveyed in lieu and satisfaction of a portion charged on them, with a clause of redemption if the portion were paid in ten years, and there was no covenant for payment of the portion, or any collateral security; a redemption was refused after one year had elapsed from the end of the ten years, on the ground that if the produce of the sale of the lands were insufficient to discharge the portion, the grantee could have no remedy against the grantor in covenant, assumpsit, or otherwise, to recover the deficiency (d). If the putting upon the transaction the semblance of a sale appears to have been ever, in Tasburgh v. Echlin, which was a clear case of a mortgage, though without a covenant for payment, (which is a circumstance which may be material as regards the intention, see Mellor v. Lees, 2 Atk. 496; Floyer v. Lavington, 1 P. W. 272; and Goodman v. Grierson, 2 Ball & B. 278,) the proviso was that if the mortgagor did not pay within five years, he should be absolutely barred at law and in equity; after the lapse of many years the heir of the mortgagor sought to redeem, and it was refused (2 Bro. P. C. p. 265); but independently of the great lapse of time, there were other special circumstances (v. ibid. 267, 268) operating against the claim; and see Coote, p. 31.

(a) Supra, 619; Tasburgh v. Echlin, sup.; Perry v. Meddowcroft, 4 Beav. 202; but such an agreement, if contemporaneous, will usually be treated as meaning redemption; 1 Phill. p. 434.

(b) Cotterell v. Purchase, decree of Master of the Rolls, affirmed Forrest. 61, the defendant had been in possession, recovered by ejectment, for 16 years; there was evidence distinct from the deed that it was a purchase, p. 63; England v. Codrington, 1 Eden, 169; and Williams v. Owen, 5 My. & Cr. p. 308; on appeal, and the cases cited by Lord Cottenham, 306-7. Baker v. Wind, 1 Ves. Sen. 160; and Spurgeon v. Collier, 1 Eden, 55, to the contrary, were decided upon clear evidence of intention, and partly on the ground of fraud.

(c) Dict. Copleston v. Boxwill, 1 Ch. Ca. 1; 3 Salk. 241. In Comyn's Digest, Mortgage, 4 A. 3, Bonham v. Newcomb is cited, as supporting the proposition that a deed shall not be deemed a mortgage if there be not a mutual remedy for the mortgagor to have a redemption, and for the mortgagee to enforce payment of his money; but there are many cases, as will be hereafter mentioned, to show that this dictum, though it has often been relied upon in argument, (v. int. alia, Copleston v. Boxwill, 1 Ch. Ca. 1, 2; Talbot v. Braddill, 1 Vern. p. 394,) is not universally applicable; v. int. al. Talbot v. Braddill, 1 Vern. pp. 183, 395, where it is stated that though the mortgagee could not foreclose before the expiration of a certain time, the mortgagor might redeem within that time; sed v. infra.

(d) Goodman v. Grierson, 2 Ball & B. 274, 277-9; the leading authorities are there referred to: and see 5 My. & Cr. 307-8.

with a view to deceive the creditors of the mortgagor or others, that of course will have its effect on the decision (a). If the transaction be subsequently recognised by the pretended purchaser as having originally been as a security only, that will, generally speaking, be sufficient to give the conveying party a title to redeem (b).

An absolute assignment with common deed-stamps was made by a woman to a creditor of her son-in-law in consideration of 10*l.*; it was held, on parol evidence and leases granted by both parties, that the deed was to be considered as intended to be a security for 1500*l.* due at the time from the son-in-law to the creditor, that on the one hand the grantor could not claim by way of resulting trust, and on the other, that the donee was entitled to the assignment as a security only for the 1500*l.* (c).

If there be an incongruous covenant in a deed, as that the vendor would not agree to any partition of the estate, that alone, as it has been held, will not turn a purchase into a mortgage (d); and it seems to be settled that a bonâ fide purchase of an estate or interest will not be considered as a mortgage on account of a right of Repurchase being given to the vendor, though at an advanced price (e).

An absolute conveyance will not be deemed to be a mortgage or held to be a security only, though it be for an Undervalue (f), (if it be not so gross as to show that necessity, or pressure amounting to fraud (g), could alone have induced the person to enter into such a con-

(a) Baker v. Wind, supra; 5 My. & Cr. 308.

(b) Sevier v. Greenway, 19 Ves. p. 413 (5 My. & Cr. 307). As to recognitions by will and otherwise, as affecting the right to redeem, v. infra. The old rule is stated by Lord Thurlow, Perry v. Marston, 2 Bro. 399.

(c) Gordon v. Selby, 11 Bli. N. S. p. 351; and see, as to this case, Sugd. Law of Prop. p. 578.

(d) Cotterell v. Purchase, Forrest. 61.

(e) Butler's note, Co. Litt. p. 205, a, § 2: dict. Lord Redesdale, Verner v. Winstanley, 2 Sch. & Lef. p. 394: this case arose upon a purchase of an annuity; and see ibid. p. 395 (note), a similar case; et v. Sugd. V. and P. 221, § 24. Lord Redesdale refers to Lord Hardwicke's decision in Lawley v. Hooper, supra, (3 Atk. p. 278,) as having proceeded partly on the additional sum to be given on the repurchase; and in M'Ghee v. Morgan, ibid. 395, note, he said that that case had not been followed. In the case itself (Verner v. Winstanley), Lord Redesdale, on the circumstances, held the transaction to be a loan: it was not a creation but an assignment of an existing charge, in consideration of 300*l.*, with a clause for repurchase on a certain day, contemporaneous (within two days) with a loan of 200*l.* on bond: the plaintiff, as surety, had also executed a bond for payment of the 350*l.* (the money fixed for repurchase) on the day fixed, and for the payment of the rent-charge. Lord Redesdale said, "What vitiated the transaction was, the purchaser not taking upon himself the risk of the annuity, but securing himself by the bond for 700*l.*; and that he should, on the hearing, as then advised, direct an account of what was due on the 500*l.* and interest, and the receipts on the footing of the annuity to be set off."

(f) See M'Ghee v. Morgan, 2 Scho. & Lef. 395-6, a case of an annuity purchased at an under-value: Lord Redesdale treated the decision to the contrary in Heathcote v. Paignon, 2 Bro. p. 167, as of no authority; and see the note, p. 179.

(g) Drought v. Eustace, 1 Molloy, p. 337, 342, 343; dict. of Sir Anth. Hart, Chancellor: mere inadequacy of price is not even a sufficient ground for refusing specific performance to a purchaser; Sugd. V. and P. 311; but see ibid. 326; and 2 Bro. 176.

tract) (a), unless it shall appear to have been so intended at the time of the making, by condition in the same or by other writing, or by other sufficient evidence (b); and though the purchaser afterwards declare that he will take the money given as the consideration of the conveyance at any time with damages for it, or the like; for if it be not a mortgage in principio it shall not be so by parol agreement afterwards (c). But where a man made a conditional surrender of a copyhold to be void on payment of 200*l.* at such a day, and at the same time gave a bond that, if he should not pay it then, on payment of 78*l.* additional in 10 days the mortgagee should have the estate as a purchaser, and the surrenderor died before the day of payment, and the 200*l.* not being paid, the surrenderee paid the other sum to his administrator; nevertheless it was held, that the transaction continued to be a mortgage, and that the heir of the surrenderor should be permitted to redeem on payment of the whole principal and interest (d). It seems to have been admitted from the earliest times that if the transaction is to be considered in the light of a mortgage as to one party it must as regards the other (e).

Where the transaction is clearly one of purchase with a right of repurchase, the time limited ought precisely to be observed, and there is no principle on which the court can relieve if it is not (f). Where a person had released his equity of redemption to the mortgagee for a valuable consideration, and it was agreed that if the mortgagor should by a certain day repay the mortgage money and the additional sum paid for the equity of redemption; it was held that this agreement did not open the release, and that the mortgagor not having paid the money at the day, was not entitled to any relief (g).

In one case, where the conveyance was absolute on the face of it, and there was no agreement for redemption, but the defendant who had advanced the money stated in his answer, that there was a parol agreement that on payment of the money secured the estate should be settled on the grantor's wife and children; the plaintiff insisted

(a) See Astley v. Reynolds, 2 Strange, 915; dict. Lord Thurlow, Heathcote v. Paignon, 2 Bro. p. 175; but see the last preceding note; Stilwell v. Wilkins, Jac. R. 282 (see 1 Molloy, 338). The doctrine of the Roman law (supra, vol. i. 323, n. (e)), appears to have had some influence; see the argument in Heathcote v. Paignon, 2 Bro. C. C. 174.

(b) Dict. Com. Dig. Mortgages, 4 A. 3.

(c) Com. Dig. ubi sup.; Barrell v. Sabine, 1 Vern. 268.

(d) Com. Dig. Mortgage, 4 A. 2; Willett v. Winnell, 1 Vern. 488.

(e) See Howard v. Harris, 2 Ch. Ca. p. 148.

(f) Barrell v. Sabine, 1 Vern. p. 268; et v. sup. p. 621.

(g) Ensworth v. Griffiths, 2 Eq. Ab. 595; 15 Vin. Ab. 468, § 8; 5 Bac. Ab. 595; affirmed, 5 Bro. Par. Ca. 184; the payment had been delayed for 16 years: and see Copleston v. Boxwill, 3 Salk. 241; 1 Ch. Ca. 1; and Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 84, where the leading cases are collected; and Coote, p. 28: see also Sabine v. Barrell, ubi supra. In Tasburgh v. Echlin, in Dom. Proc. 2 Bro.

that this was sufficient to show that the defendant, the grantee, was not entitled to retain the estate as purchaser, and so the court held; but it was decreed that upon the defendant being satisfied the consideration money, the estate should be in trust for the grantor's children (a).

This important consequence results in the event of the transaction being one of repurchase and not of redemption, that if the purchaser die seised and then the right of repurchase be exercised the money will go to the real representative, not to the personal representatives, as it would in the case of a mortgage (b).

As the subject of procuring money on the grant of Annuities is intimately connected with the doctrines last adverted to, it may be well here to introduce some of the leading authorities applicable to that subject.

It appears that in the time of Lord Harcourt purchases of Annuities began to be very commonly resorted to instead of mortgages, and, as it would appear, with a view to avoid the Statutes against Usury (c). The mode of borrowing money upon annuity is now of common occurrence: the effect of the transaction is, that the money borrowed is to be repaid by instalments consisting partly of interest, partly of principal: whether the annuity be for a term of years or for a life or lives, the transaction is in substance the same; the value of the life in respect of its probable duration is a matter of calculation, and as the principal is put in hazard, the amount of the interest is not regulated by the Statute of Usury, which is the only material distinction (d). A purchase of an annuity will never be treated as usurious if the principal and interest are both put in hazard (e). It was formerly held that a proviso for repurchase actually vitiated the annuity by

Par. Ca. 265, it was held that where the right of redemption was limited to a certain specified time, and no application had been made for a considerable time afterwards, the mortgagee had an absolute estate: as to this case, see Coote, 31; and Powell on Mortgages, 4th ed. vol. i. p. 183. Lord Harcourt said, "He did not see why a contingent right of redemption, leaving it at the election of the mortgagor whether he would redeem within a certain time, might not be purchased upon fair and reasonable terms," Floyer v. Lavington, 1 P.W. 272; that was a grant of a rent-charge, with the right of re-purchase during the grantor's life; it had taken place sixty years before.

(a) Hampton v. Spencer, 2 Vern. 289: the court held against the grantor, that he was not entitled by way of resulting trust, he having —as was taken to be a fact, on the defendant's statement in his answer, from which alone the plaintiff could make out any case—declared the trust at the time; see the decree in Raithby's note: the plaintiff was a pauper.

(b) See Thornborough v. Baker, 1 Ch. Ca. 286; 2 Freem. 143; S. C. 3 Swanst. pp. 628, 631, append.; St. John v. Wareham, cited 2 Freem. 126.

(c) Arguendo, Heathcote v. Paignon, 2 Bro. 176. Lord Hardwicke said (3 Atk. 279) "he thought that ninety-nine cases out of one hundred of grants of annuities were only colourable to evade the Statutes of Usury."

(d) Lord Cottenham, Bulwer v. Astley, 1 Phill. 433.

(e) Murray v. Harding, 2 Bl. Rep. 856; 3 Wils. 395-6; Drought v. Eustace, 1 Mol. 337.

converting the sum advanced into a loan at usurious interest, but it is now established that such a proviso is not illegal (a); an annuity will not be set aside for mere inadequacy of price, if not such as to be evidence of fraud, no actual fraud being proved (b). But if the purchaser do not pay the consideration money at the time and manner as stated in the deed, the sale will be set aside; evidence cannot be received of an agreement to pay it in any other manner: purchases of annuities and of reversions are not cases for giving interest by way of compensation for delay in payment (c).

The distinction between an absolute sale of an annuity or rent-charge for a life or lives, and the grant of an annuity or rent-charge as a security only for the money advanced, leads to important consequences, it is therefore necessary in every case to ascertain to which class it belongs. Although the deed may be in form a grant of an annuity, or of a rent-charge on an estate, where it appears that the transaction was really a loan, and that the form of annuity or rent-charge was adopted for the purpose of securing a larger rate of interest or remuneration for the loan; for instance, if there be a stipulation that the grantor shall pay the expences, or there be a personal covenant to pay the annuity; or if the proviso for repurchase or redemption be accompanied with a stipulation for six months' notice so as to allow time for the lender "to find out another hand to take the money;" each of these circumstances has been considered as evidence that the transaction was in effect a security for a loan; and a warrant of attorney given at the time to confess judgment for double the amount of the money advanced, is a circumstance tending to the same conclusion (d): the grantor and the grantee in such case will stand in the relative situations of debtor and creditor; the annuity, if clearly a security, will be treated as redeemable, like a Welsh mortgage (e). The court will not admit evidence of an agreement that an annuity should be redeemable, though such was the agreement, if the parties knowingly prevented its being inserted in the deed, though evidence may be admitted where the clause giving the right of redemption was omitted by fraud (f).

(a) Murray v. Harding, supra, where the doctrine as to what is and what is not usurious, is stated; Irnham v. Child, 1 Bro. 92; and see Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. 411; and as to what is usury, see Belcher v. Vardon, 2 Coll. 172.

(b) Low v. Barchard, 8 Ves. 133: there five years had elapsed; the bill was dismissed with costs; and see Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 248; and Floyer v. Sherrard, Ambl. 18.

(c) Drought v. Eustace, 1 Molloy, 342-3; Sugd. V. and P. 325; and see Darley v. Sin- gleton, Wightw. R. p. 29; et v. supra, p. 622, note (g).

(d) See Lawley v. Hooper, 3 Atk. 278, v. sup. p. 622, n. (e); Mellor v. Lees, 2 Atk. p. 496; Bulwer v. Astley, 1 Phillips, 435.

(e) Longuet v. Scawen, 1 Ves. 402: the annuities had been granted in discharge of a debt; the grantor was not to be personally liable, but liberty to redeem the annuities was reserved to him; et v. infra, p. 626, n. (b).

(f) See Irnham v. Child, and Lord Portmore v. Morris, supra.

In some early cases it was considered that there was less inconvenience in decreeing a redemption after a great lapse of time, where the security was in the form of an annuity, than where it was by way of conveyance of an estate with possession; for the yearly payments being fixed, the account could be easily taken (a).

When the transaction, though in form a grant of an annuity, is really meant only to secure the repayment of the loan with interest, whether usurious or not, it will be treated as a loan throughout, and will therefore be redeemable on payment of principal, interest, and costs (b). In Searle v. Lord Carpenter, the plaintiff, being necessitous, in May 1732, in consideration of 800*l.*, demised to the then late Lord Carpenter his estate for 99 years, if the plaintiff should so long live, and Lord Carpenter redemised for 98 years three-quarters at a rent of 120*l.* afterwards reduced to 100*l.* a year, payable quarterly, redeemable at the end of one year. Another annuity which had been granted in like manner to one Fellowes, but redeemable at the end of three years and a half at the soonest, was assigned by him to Lord Carpenter. In 1750 the plaintiff confessed judgment to the defendant, son of the grantee, to secure the arrears, and now, being sued for arrears, brought his bill against the defendant to be relieved from the annuity on payment of principal, interest, and costs. There was no suggestion of fraud, except what might arise from the act itself. The court, said Lord Hardwicke, leans against these sort of annuities as much as possible, being the means of avoiding the Statute of Usury, and of ill consequences, and his Lordship granted an injunction on payment into court of the principal, interest, and costs (c).

On the administration of the assets of the grantor, if there be an annuity charged on the real estate, only as a security for a loan, the tenant for life is entitled to have the annuity valued, and the amount will be a debt, which the personal estate will be the first fund to pay; and the tenant for life is only bound to keep down the interest of so much as is raisable out of the estate (d).

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Mellor v. Lees, 3 Atk. 496 (et v. 1 P. W. 270); but in that case, as in Floyer v. Lavington, 1 P. W. p. 268, on appeal, the annuity was, under the circumstances, held not to be redeemable; a great length of time had elapsed, in the latter case sixty years, and the reporter considered that that was the main ground; v. infra, p. 628. The 18th section, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, extends to mortgages of rents.

(b) See Floyer v. Sherard, Amb. 18. Lord Hardwicke, in one case, said: "When the annuity is redeemable, the court looks upon it as an evasion of the statutes of usury, and only a loan of money," Lawley v. Hooper, 3 Atk. 278, 279, 280, 281; but Lord Redesdale disputed the authority of this dictum, v. supra, p. 622: Lord Hardwicke added, Whenever there is the least tincture of fraud in these oppressive bargains, the court will relieve; ibid. 279, and see p. 281; Searle v. Lord Carpenter, Amb. 243; Longuet v. Scawin, supra, Lord Hardwicke; Phillips v. Eastwood, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. p. 288; Bulwer v. Astley, 1 Phillips, 433-4-5; and see Saunders on Uses and Trusts, note H. vol. ii. p. 312.

(c) Amb. p. 248, et v. 2 Coll. 172-4.

(d) Lord Cottenham, Bulwer v. Astley, 1

“A clause of repurchase in the grant of an annuity,” says Mr. Saunders in his work on Uses and Trusts (a), “is introduced upon the same principle that a vendor of an estate in fee simple stipulates with his vendee that he may be at liberty within a given time, and for a certain sum to repurchase the estate. An annuity granted subject to a clause of repurchase, differs from a mortgage or security for money in these points: in a mortgage the principal debt still continues until the equity of redemption be foreclosed; but upon the purchase of an annuity the principal is gone for ever, and consequently, if the repurchase be made, the money paid on that occasion is not in discharge of a debt, but as the consideration for a new purchase.”

As regards contracts for the Grant of a Rent-charge; if the transaction be really and bonâ fide a sale of a rent-charge issuing out of land with the usual powers of distress and entry, the land will be the fund from which the annuity is to be paid; the arrears due at the death of the grantor only may be recovered as a debt against the general estate of the grantor, under the covenant or other obligation to pay: there may be a valid contract even contemporaneous that the grantor shall be at liberty to repurchase the rent-charge at a certain period on certain terms, as there may be for the repurchase of an estate, as has already been mentioned; but if the clause, though in form for a repurchase, is really to be construed as a clause for redemption, it has always been considered a very strong if not a decisive circumstance to show that the transaction was in reality a loan, and that the conveyance was intended only as a security (b): however if the transaction be really a contract for repurchase not one for redemption, then the grantor must comply with the conditions on which he is to entitle himself to repurchase, just as the vendor of an estate with a power of repurchase; and the Court of Chancery in such a simple case can give no relief unless the conditions are complied with (c).

A mortgage was made by the plaintiff's grandfather Thomas Miller, in 1689, to John and James Whitehead; afterwards in the same year they mortgaged the premises to J. Cartwright and Heywood, Thomas and John Miller his son joining in the deed, to secure 200*l.* charity

Phill. 435. There were various circumstances in that case to show that the annuity was intended as a security only; but the question did not arise directly on the right of redemption, the question was whether the annuities were to be valued, and the amount of the valuation paid as a debt under the charge for payment of debts in the grantor's will.

(a) Vol. ii. p. 312; p. 139, last edit.

(b) Lord Cottenham, Bulwer v. Astley, 1 Phill. 433.

(c) See Barrell v. Sabine, 1 Vern. p. 269; Sugd. V. and P. p. 221, § 26; and no account will be given of back rents, v. supra.

money lent which was held in trust to be laid out in the purchase of lands in fee; Cartwright and Haywood, in order to secure themselves the interest, leased the premises to the plaintiff's father in June 1689, for 5000 years, at a rent of 12*l.* a year for the first three years, and 10*l.* a year for the remainder of the time, and it was provided that if at the end of three years the 200*l.* were repaid, the premises should be reconveyed; the 10*l.* a year was paid down to 1730, receipts were given sometimes for rent and sometimes for interest; in 1738 the plaintiff gave notice to pay off the principal, and so get rid of the rent-charge. At this time the value of the premises had increased from 500*l.* to 900*l.* The Master of the Rolls first, and then Lord Hardwicke refused to let the plaintiff redeem the rent; Lord Hardwicke said there was a difference between such an agreement as this, which related to a rent-charge issuing out of land, and an agreement which relates to the land itself; so likewise the case of creating a rent-charge out of lands, and mortgaging a rent-charge is of a different consideration; here the land itself was not parted with, but it was merely selling a rent-charge, strictly adequate to the consideration given, and instead of having a chance for the whole estate the lender of the money is contented to buy the interest for ever by way of rent-charge; it was plain that the intention of the parties was that after the end of the three years, the interest should be changed into a rent-charge and be irredeemable (a).

The Right to Redeem a mortgage cannot be clogged with any by-agreement, since this, as it has been considered, would let in all manner of extortion and usury, for necessitous men may be induced to agree to almost any terms (b). As a trustee cannot be permitted to make any benefit out of the trust fund, so neither shall a mortgagee be allowed to obtain any advantage out of the security beyond his principal and interest (c). Nor can the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage stipulate for a collateral advantage, as that if the interest be not paid at the time it shall be converted into principal (d): a doubt has been entertained whether a subsequent agreement to that effect, even after

(a) Mellor v. Lees, 2 Atk. 494-5; but length of time had great influence on this decision, and some weight was given to the special trust to which the 200*l.* was liable (p. 496): there was no covenant to pay; and see Floyer v. Lavington, 1 P. W. p. 268, supra, p. 626, note, cited in the above case.

(b) Bowen v. Edwards, 1 Ch. Rep. p. 222; Croft v. Powell, Comyn's R. p. 603; Jennings v. Ward, 2 Vern. 520; and Exton v. Greaves,

1 Vern. 138; and see Spurgeon v. Collier, ubi supra; and the cases collected in the note, 1 Eden, 60.

(c) Lord Redesdale, Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Scho. & Lef. 217.

(d) Bosanquet v. Dashwood, Forrest. p. 40; Broadway v. Morecraft, Mosely, 247; Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. p. 271; and see Ex parte Champion, 3 Bro. p. 440; and Brown v. Barkham, 1 P. W. 652.

the interest is due, is not usurious (a). But where a mortgage is given to secure a banker's balance and the accounts are rendered according to the usual course, striking balances at the end of every year, or even every half-year, such being the custom of the bankers in their dealings, (at the end of three months would be usurious,) and computing interest on the balances so constituted, and those accounts are not objected to, the ultimate balance thus brought out will be payable under the security (b).

On the principle that the mortgagee only holds the estate as a pledge for the payment of money, where an Advowson is mortgaged, in case the living should become vacant prior to foreclosure, the mortgagee will be compelled in equity to present the nominee of the mortgagor, so far therefore till foreclosure the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor (c), and that although nothing but the advowson be mortgaged to him, and the deed contain a covenant that on any avoidance the mortgagee should present (d). The reason is that it is not to be presumed that any advantage is to be made of the presentation which the mortgagee cannot bring to account, and if he were allowed to present he would gain an advantage beyond the securing his principal money and lawful interest (e): a mortgage of an advowson is therefore, as Lord Hardwicke observed, an indifferent security; but it is so far aided by the court that the mortgagee may pray a sale of the advowson (f). If, however, the mortgagee should present, the court will not after the statutable period disturb the presentation, and will nevertheless give the mortgagee the whole of his principal, interest, and costs (g).

A mortgagee of a West India estate may stipulate that the consignments shall be made to him: the principle on which this is allowed,

(a) In Sackett v. Bassett, 4 Mad. 58, Sir J. Leach sent the question to a court of law: but see Blackburn v. Warwick, 2 Yo. & Coll. 92. A written charge is necessary to convert interest into principal, so that the estate in the land may be charged therewith; Brown v. Barkham, 1 P. W. p. 652.

(b) Lord Clancarty v. Latouche, 1 Ball & B. 420; Ex parte Bevan, 9 Ves. 223; Ruford v. Bishop, 5 Russ. 346; see Sir J. Leach's observations on the case of Ex parte Bevan, ibid.

(c) Jory v. Cox, Prec. Ch. 71, Finch's ed.; but there a bill to redeem had been filed: Amhurst v. Dawling, 2 Vern. p. 401; Attorney-General v. Hesketh, ibid. 550; and see Boteler v. Allington, 3 Atk. p. 456; Hobart v. Selby, 1 Stra. p. 403; S. C. 2 Freem. p. 273; Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Scho. & Lef. 218.

(d) Mackenzie v. Robinson, 3 Atk. p. 559, overruling the doctrine in Gardiner v. Griffith, cited ibid. p. 559; and S. C. 2 P. W. p. 404; Mosely, 16; this case is stated by Mr. Maddock, P. and P. ii. p. 646, to have been affirmed under the name of Gardner v. Cooke, in the House of Lords, A. D. 1728; but the decree was not to the effect stated by Mr. Maddock; that was only a dictum; the decree proceeded upon this, that it was too late to disturb the presentation, (not affirming the right of the mortgagee to present,) and therefore the mortgagee was entitled to his principal, interest, and costs.

(e) Mackenzie v. Robinson, ubi sup.

(f) Ibid.; but not pending an avoidance; see Fonbl. ii. 528; and see Thexton v. Betts, 2 Freem. 87.

(g) Gardner v. Griffith, 2 P. W. 404; recognized, on this point, in Mutter v. Chauvel, 1 Meriv. 493.

as stated by Lord Eldon, is, first, because it furnishes him with a security for his debt; and next, because the commission which he receives is supposed to be only a fair compensation for his trouble (a). A mortgage creditor out of possession may take a certain reward for the Management of the estate, provided he do not make that employment a condition; but when the mortgagee takes possession, he assumes a different character; all that he does is for himself, and independent of the point of usury or tendency to usury, he is not at liberty to charge the mortgagor whom he has ousted with the trouble which he takes on his own account; such a proceeding would be like making a charge against himself, it would open a door to imposition and even oppression (b), he cannot therefore charge or stipulate for commission on consignments, insurance, and the like, and he stands precisely in the same situation as a mortgagee in possession of an English estate (c).

A Solicitor may take a mortgage security from his client for Costs already due (d); but a security for the costs of such actions and suits as the solicitor may afterwards prosecute and defend is not supportable (e). Whether such a security, where it is given generally to secure subsequent costs, is good to the extent of moneys actually paid in conducting subsequent actions and suits is at least doubtful (f). In the case of Daly v. Kelly, an attorney agreed to advance moneys to his client who had no funds of his own to carry on the necessary proceedings for prosecuting his claims, and to maintain him and his family in the mean time; a mortgage was given by the client to the attorney to secure his present debt, amounting to 6000*l.* and upwards, and such other sums as should be advanced by the attorney or become (a) Bunbury v. Winter, 1 Jac. & W. 261.

(b) Lord Brougham, Leith v. Irvine, 1 My. & K. 288; and see, on this subject, Cox v. Champneys, Jac. R. 576.

(c) Leith v. Irvine, ubi supra; the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held, in Faulkner v. Daniel, (3 Hare, 218,) that the decision in this case was binding on the court, notwithstanding Sayers v. Whitfield, 1 Knapp, p. 133. An executor or trustee may be appointed consignee, with the usual profits; Morison v. Morison, 4 My. & Cr. 224. As to the remedies of a consignee, see Farquharson v. Balfour, 8 Sim. 210; Brown v. Anderson, 2 Moore, Pr. C. R. 249.

(d) Williams v. Piggott, Jac. p. 600; see 2 Dru. & W. 189.

(e) Jones v. Tripp, Jac. p. 323, on appeal; the Vice-Chancellor had sent the question of fact whether the deed was fraudulently obtained to a jury; Lord Eldon held that it was a case in which an issue ought not to be directed, the deed being for future costs on the face of it was not supportable, Pitcher v. Rigby, 9 Price, 83.

(f) The dictum of the Lord Chancellor Eldon, and the reference made by him in Pitcher v. Rigby, 9 Price, 84, and the dicta, 84 and 86, by the Lord Chief Baron Richards, and Baron Graham, seem to be in favour of the validity of the security to that extent. But Sir E. Sugden, in Uppington v. Bullen, (2 Dru. & W. 188,) seems to have entertained very strong doubts of, if his opinion was not in fact against, the validity of the mortgage even to that extent; though he seems to consider that the holding that a solicitor cannot, pending the suit, take a security for future costs, was originally a great stretch of jurisdiction, Law of Prop. 576.

due to him for costs. Lord Manners, in a suit by the attorney alleging that the client was fraudulently endeavouring to deprive him of the benefit of his security altogether, declared that the attorney was entitled to the benefit of the mortgage for the payment of his costs and advances. On an appeal to the House of Lords this part of the decree was not disturbed, though Lord Eldon observed that it was a transaction to be viewed with great jealousy (a). Sir Edward Sugden justly observes that this decree went beyond what had been done in any former case, so that it must depend upon its own particular circumstances (b). Where the deed does not fairly state the nature of the transaction, that is when it purports to be a sale, whereas it ought to have been a mortgage, it will not of course be supported (c); such a deed will not even be allowed the effect of showing what is the amount due to the attorney; indeed it would seem that the consideration must be proved in every case where the solicitor seeks to enforce a security against his client (d). If the attorney, being also the general manager for his client, takes a security from his client, the accounts being unsettled, the client will clearly be entitled to a general account without regard to the security (e).

An agreement to limit to the mortgagee a further interest in the mortgaged property, by way of additional security in default of payment, is not liable to objection, as the additional interest so derived will be subject to the same equity of redemption as that created by the original mortgage (f); and the mortgagee is at liberty to stipulate for the option of preemption in case the mortgagor should determine to sell (g).

A verbal agreement for the reduction of the interest on a mortgage may be binding (h). A stipulation that the mortgagee shall receive interest at 4 per cent. if regularly paid, but 5 per cent. if default be made, is good and may be enforced, if 5 per cent. be reserved by the deed (i). But if 4 per cent. only is reserved, a stipulation that 5 per cent. shall be paid if the interest be not regularly paid, is in the nature of a penalty, and the court will relieve against this as other like penalties, placing the mortgagee (as it is considered) in the same situation as regards the amount of interest reserved as if it had been actually paid, by giving him interest on the interest unpaid at 4 per cent. (k).

(a) Daly v. Kelly, 4 Dow. p. 417; see pp. 420, 421, 431, 440.

(b) Sugd. Law of Prop. 575.

(c) Uppington v. Bullen, 2 Dru. & W. p. 184; Dunstan v. Patterson, xi. Jur. 96.

(d) Lewes v. Morgan, in Dom. Proc. 5 Price, 143; Lawless v. Mansfield, 1 Dru. & W. 557; see Sugd. Law of Prop. 576.

(e) Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. 584.

(f) Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 83.

(g) Ibid.; Orby v. Trigg, 9 Mod. p. 2; 2 Eq. Ab. 599, pl. 24.

(h) Milton v. Edgeworth, 5 Bro. P. C. 313.

(i) See Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 644.

(k) Jory v. Cox, Prec. Ch. p. 161; Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 273; and the other cases, Jarman, Although, as above stated, in common mortgages stipulations against the power to redeem are not permitted, yet the reasoning on which this doctrine is founded does not apply to a case where the person entitled to the estate has in view bonâ fide to settle the estate on some relation or connection who may have advanced the money, and has therefore reserved a limited right of redemption so as to enable him to defeat such settlement only during his life or the like. As where a conveyance was made in consideration of 100*l.* advanced to the grantor by a person who had married the grantor's kinswoman, upon condition that if he did not repay the money with interest during his life, his heirs should have no power to redeem; it having been proved that it was the design of the mortgagor by this deed, in the event of his not redeeming during his life, to secure a benefit to the grantee, it was held that although the settlor might have redeemed at any time during his life, yet not having done so the right of redemption was gone (a).

Leases made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee at a rent, are looked upon with great suspicion as liable to have originated in, and to have been influenced in regard to the terms by the mortgagee having taken advantage of the necessities of the mortgagor. In the simple case of a mortgagor granting a lease to the mortgagee there would not perhaps, said Lord Redesdale, be sufficient to impeach the lease, but if there be anything more the court will look into the transaction with every possible jealousy, and if it prove to be a contract for a beneficial lease in consideration of forbearance, it is a contract for more than the law allows for forbearance and is then usurious (b).

It was indeed held in one case that where an agreement was entered into between the mortgagor and mortgagee, that in order to secure the regular payment of the principal money and interest, a lease should be executed to the mortgagee for 21 years at a certain rent,

Mortgage, by Sweet, 396-7: Hallifax v. Higgs, 2 Vern. p. 134, is over-ruled by the later cases. See the distinction as to what is penalty and what liquidated damages at law, Astley v. Weldon, 2 Bos. & Pull. 346, 350.

(a) Bonham v. Newcomb, 2 Vent. p. 364; S. C. 1 Vern. 232, Lord Keeper North, reversing the decree of Lord Nottingham; it happened that the transaction had turned out to be a good bargain: Wolstan v. Aston, Hard. 511; 2 Fonbl. 262; and the dictum of the Lord Keeper, Howard v. Harris, 1 Vern. pp. 193-4; and see Jason v. Eyres, Coote, p. 36.

(b) Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Scho. & Lef. 214,

218; the lease in that case was set aside, on the ground of advantage taken, and of misconception on the part of the mortgagor: Webb v. Rorke, ibid. 661, there the lease was made at a fair value, but it was set aside; Lord Redesdale had, in the first instance, directed issues, which he stated was wrong and done by inadvertence (ibid. pp. 666-7), saying such a transaction must be considered primâ facie as an advantage taken of the mortgagee and against policy; ibid. 668: Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. 109. In Hickes v. Cooke, 4 Dow. 26, the principle was admitted, but the mortgagor was excluded from relief by his laches: Jarm. Mort. by Sweet, 398; et v. 2 Coll. 172.

and the mortgagee acquiesced for 19 years, and settled accounts on that footing, the mortgagor was precluded by his acquiescence from proving that the rent was at an undervalue (a): it was, however, agreed by Lord Manners, as Lord Redesdale had decided, that transactions of this nature in general ought not to be supported, it being most likely that they were entered into under pressure, though nothing may have been said, and as tending to usury. In the case before Lord Manners one lease had expired, but there was a renewed lease still subsisting; in the case before Lord Redesdale the lease was subsisting—in each case the subsisting lease was set aside (b). Lord Manners's decision in the particular case as regards the rent under the first lease proceeded on the ground that it was almost impossible, after an interval of 20 years, to ascertain what was the actual value, and therefore if it had been gone into the mortgagee might have been materially prejudiced: laches, his Lordship observed, may in itself be unjust and contrary to equity and good conscience (c), as it may prevent a man from keeping himself armed with evidence to rebut a prima facie claim (d): though generally speaking whilst the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is subsisting laches on the part of the mortgagor in not endeavouring to disturb a transaction between them which is void in the view of the Court of Chancery cannot be set up against him (e). Lord Redesdale, in the case before him, though he set aside the lease, yet he directed the account to be taken on the footing of the rent down to the filing of the bill (f).

A mortgage in fee was executed in January to secure 800*l.*; in May following, the mortgagee conveyed the estate to a third person who was really a trustee for the mortgagee at a fee-farm rent of 80*l.*; the rent, which was a fair rent, appears to have been paid for nearly 50 years: on the ground of acquiescence for such a length of time, the Court of Chancery in Ireland refused to set aside the fee-farm deeds, and the House of Lords confirmed the decree (g).

A practice has been introduced, or rather perhaps revived (h),

(a) Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. pp. 109, 113.

(b) Webb v. Rorke, 2 Scho. & Lef. 668-9-70; and Watt v. Grove, 2 Scho. & Lef. 492, there cited; also 671, where there are some very important objections stated to such an arrangement; this case, though referred to, had not been reported when Morony v. O'Dea, sup., was decided.

(c) See 2 Scho. & Lef. 672.

(d) Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. p. 118; and see Molloy v. Irwin, 1 Scho. & Lef. 310.

(e) Webb v. Rorke, 2 Scho. & Lef. 672.

(f) Ibid. 674.

(g) Hickes v. Cooke, 4 Dow, pp. 16, 24. Lord Eldon observed, that such transactions were looked upon with great jealousy; but "if they should appear to be perfectly clear, the court would not set them aside merely because they were foolish;" Lord Redesdale said, he thought such transactions, on general principles, could not be allowed to stand; and Sir E. Sugden seems rather to incline to the latter doctrine: see Sugd. Law of Property, pp. 574-5.

(h) Cowell, who wrote about two hundred of conveying lands by way of mortgage to a third person, agreed upon by the mortgagor and mortgagee, in trust, upon nonpayment of the mortgage money at the time agreed upon for its repayment, and usually on giving a certain number of days' notice, to sell the mortgaged estate, with a view to satisfying the mortgage out of the proceeds, with the usual covenants where a power of sale, &c., is given to trustees, and a covenant from the mortgagor to join in such sale, &c. (a). This enables a mortgagee easily and expeditiously to obtain the money lent, without the delay, expense, and difficulties attending a bill of foreclosure (b). It is not necessary, that a trustee should be interposed, for the same power of sale may be given to the mortgagee (c). Though the mortgagor has expressly covenanted to join, yet the purchaser cannot require that he should join in the conveyance (d). It may be observed, that a power of sale given to the trustee and his heir cannot be exercised by his assign (e): and generally a trust for sale to be exercised "during the continuance of the trust" cannot be exercised when the trust is at an end (f).

The mortgagee himself cannot be prevented from using all the remedies belonging to his character of mortgagee, and exercising all the powers that are given to him, as and when he pleases; a power of sale may have been harshly exercised, and at a time when, having a regard to the interests of the mortgagor, he would not have been advised to sell; but if the sale has been made in the ordinary way in which sales are conducted—and the price obtained as compared with the estimated value may be an important feature in this respect—the sale cannot be impeached. In the late case of Jones v. Matthie (1847) (g), years ago, has, in his Institutes, the following passage:—"It sometimes happens that he who is not owner may alienate; for a creditor by contract may alienate a pawn or mortgage, although the thing be not his: as if it be agreed in the beginning that it shall be lawful for the creditor to sell the pawn if the money be not paid."—Cowell's Inst. pp. 115-16.

(a) See Clay v. Sharpe, 18 Ves. 346, n.; S. C. Sugd. V. and P. App.; Corder v. Morgan, 18 Ves. 344.

(b) "Mighty profit," says Sir Robert Atkyns, "arises to that court (the Court of Chancery) by redemption of mortgages, wherein relief being given long after the time limited by the parties, great inconveniences happen to the mortgagee, by expecting the event of a tedious suit, and what his estate or interest will at last fall out to be, whether real or only personal, or of what value, and how to dispose of it in the mean time, as it is probable he would, if he knew it would be a real estate (as the common law doth judge it), or whether only personal, and then to be left to an executor to perform his will, or make a provision for a younger child, or how to dispose of it in case it prove the one or the other, he is a long time held in suspense, till after some years, the Court of Equity come to a resolution about it."—Inquiry into the Jurisdiction of the Chancery, pp. 38, 39.

(c) Corder v. Morgan, 18 Ves. 344; see, on the subject of Powers of Sale, Coventry's note to Powell on Mortgages, ii. 1002, 1016; i. p. 96.

(d) Corder v. Morgan, 18 Ves. 344; Clay v. Sharpe, there cited, p. 346.

(e) Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264.

(f) Wood v. White, 2 Keen, 664; on the appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 479. Lord Cottenham thought the trusts as to one of the shares were subsisting, but did not object to the principle, indeed affirmed it; p. 480: the case arose on a will.

(g) Jur. xi. 504, 761; reported under the name of Matthie v. Edwards, before the Vice-in which case the power of sale was given to the mortgagee himself, the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, who reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, as well as of the Vice-Chancellor, was that an harsh exercise of the power had been made use of against the mortgagor; but the Lord Chancellor said, This court is not to interfere because a legal right might have been exercised with more attention to the interests and wishes of others. There was nothing to show that the estate was sold at an undervalue. It had been urged that the whole transaction was a manœuvre of the solicitors either for the benefit of the purchaser or to injure the mortgagor's property, but as regards that part of the case, the bill had been dismissed on the original hearing (a), and the Lord Chancellor considered that the property having been sold at or nearly to the full estimated value, displaced this part of the case. The Vice-Chancellor had considered that the estate was improperly sold, and to show this, two facts were relied upon—one, that the age of the tenant for life (the property sold was reversionary) had not been stated; and the imprudence of selling whilst possibly the wife (who was the representative of the mortgagor) might be pregnant and without any guarantee on that subject (b). As to the first, the Lord Chancellor considered that the description was sufficient to enable the value to be calculated by the purchaser; as to the other fact, viz. the uncertainty whether the wife was pregnant, that was an incident attaching to the nature of the property: his Lordship held that the mortgagee, in selling, exercised his undoubted right—whether he acted with kindness and charity or not this court had nothing to do—and finding that the full value was given, and looking at the other circumstances of the case, the Lord Chancellor said he saw nothing to support that part of the decree which set aside the sale (c).

The sale may be made without notice to the mortgagor and without his concurrence, unless that be made a condition (d); where it is

Chancellor Knight Bruce, 2 Coll. 465. The Vice-Chancellor stated in his judgment, that he considered that a mortgagee, having a power of sale, is bound to exercise some discretion, not to throw away the property, but to act in a business-like manner, with a view to obtain as large a price as may fairly and reasonably, with due diligence and attention, be, under the circumstances, attainable; the reversal, as will be seen, does not impugn this doctrine.

(a) The bill had been dismissed, but without costs, as against the solicitors.

(b) See 2 Coll. p. 480.

(c) Earl of Aldborough v. Trye, 7 Cl. & F.

436; Waters v. Groom, 11 Cl. & F. 684; and Lord Brougham's remarks, ibid. p. 699, were referred to.

(d) Clay v. Sharpe, 1802; Sugd. on Pow. Appendix, No. xiii., cited, Butler's note, Co. Litt. 205, a.; Hawkins v. Rambottom, 1 Pri. 138; Sugd. V. and P. p. 61; and see Jarm. Convey. by Sweet, pp. 101-2-3-4, where the cases establishing that the purchaser cannot insist on the mortgagor joining in the conveyance, are stated and examined; though there be an express covenant by the mortgagor to join, that makes no difference; ibid. In the same work, p. 105, the doctrine as to when the made a condition, of course it must be complied with (a). Where an equitable mortgagee took from the administratrix of the mortgagor a legal mortgage with a power of sale, and then sold under such power, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce would not compel the purchaser to complete his purchase without the administratrix and the parties claiming beneficially under the mortgagor being brought before the court (b).

Where the power of sale is given to a trustee (c), it is his duty to attend equally to the interest of both parties, and though in one case Sir John Leach refused to interfere by injunction as against the mortgagor to prevent a sale taking place, which was applied for on the ground amongst others that notice had not been given, yet when it was afterwards represented that it was a trustee who was effecting the sale, his Honour granted an injunction (d). A power of sale is only an additional remedy, and therefore does not interfere with the right of the mortgagee to foreclose when by the terms of the deed the estate is forfeited at law (e).

Where the surplus produce on the execution of a power of sale in a mortgage in fee is directed to be paid to the mortgagor, his executors, &c. this is not of itself a conversion of the equity of redemption into personal estate; if the sale take place in the lifetime of the mortgagor the surplus is personal estate, but if he die before the sale is made the equity of redemption descends to the heir, and he is entitled to the surplus (f).

It has already been stated, and the subject will be again brought under consideration in the succeeding volume, that a trustee for sale cannot become the purchaser (g); but this does not preclude a new contract with those who have entrusted him, it does not prevent him from bargaining that he will no longer be trustee: but such a power can be exercised by the survivors and by the assigns of the trustee is considered; et v. sup. p. 38, Bradford v. Belfield.

(a) See, on this subject, Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 411.

(b) Sanders v. Richards, 2 Coll. 568.

(c) Of the duties of trustees for sale generally, see Sugd. Vend. and Pur. § vi. p. 55, et seq.

(d) Anon. 6 Mad. p. 10; Sugd. V. and P. p. 57, §§ 12, 15, 58.

(e) Re Hailey, 3 Dea. & C. 502; Ex parte Hodgson, 1 Gly. & J. 12: see the distinctions on this subject, Jarm. Convey. by Sweet, 108, and Kerrick v. Saffery, 7 Sim. 317, as to the course to be adopted where the mortgage is of a term, with a trust for the sale of the fee; it is stated (Jarm. Mortgage, 108), that as doubts may arise on securities of this description, as to the doctrine of Tacking, (as to which hereafter,) they do not present the most eligible form of security.

(f) Wright v. Rose, 2 Sim. & St. p. 324; and see Polley v. Seymour, 2 Yo. & Coll. 721, 722; and Brown v. Bigg, 7 Ves. 279, there cited; Bourne v. Bourne, 2 Hare, p. 39; and Matson v. Swift, 8 Beav. 374-5-6.

(g) Downes v. Grazebrook, 3 Meriv. 200; sup. 1 Sugd. Pow. 142-3: as to the trustee buying in the property where he is not expressly authorized so to do, see Jarm. Mortgage by Sweet, p. 412; Ex parte Lewis, 1 Gl. & Jam. p. 69.

transaction is viewed with great jealousy (a) although there may be other acting trustees (b); and the onus is on the trustee distinctly and clearly to prove the circumstances which are relied upon as taking the case out of the ordinary rule (c); it is at the option of the cestuis que trust in all cases to hold the trustee to his purchase if they please (d).

In the case of a mortgage, or, as it may more properly be called, a pledge of Stock, there is no occasion for an express power of sale. After the time for redemption is passed the mortgagee may sell; "the convenience of these securities is that after the day of payment passed they are taken to be ready money," and it would be productive of much trouble and delay if there could be no sale of such annuities so pledged without a decree of foreclosure; and the same rule holds as regards any other personal chattels which may be pledged (e): the principle of the civil law is applied to such mortgages. But the mortgagor may redeem the stock if not sold; if sold the mortgagee will be bound to account for the amount received beyond what was due to him on his security (f); if no time is fixed the mortgagor has his whole life to redeem, if the stock remain in specie (g). If the mortgagee has transferred the stock by way of loan, he will be charged with the value at the time of such transfer (h).

A mortgage, whether legal or equitable, of Leasehold premises includes the goodwill of a trade carried on on the premises, which is nothing more than an advantage attached to the possession of the house; the mortgagee, therefore, in the event of a sale, is entitled to have the whole of the proceeds applied in discharge of his debt (i): it also includes the fixtures (k); but mortgages and pledges of personal chattels will be more particularly considered hereafter.

Where trustees have a power to raise money by sale or mortgage, to pay off a mortgage debt, if they have mortgaged the estate, it is at (a) Lord Eldon, Ex parte Lacey, 6 Ves. 626-7; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. p. 234; Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. 375.

(b) Whelpdale v. Cookson, 1 Ves. Sen. 9; S. C. Belt's Sup. p. 9, where Mr. Belt has collected the early cases.

(c) V. int. alia, Randall v. Errington, 10 Ves. 428-9.

(d) Ex parte Lacey, 6 Ves. 625-30; Sidney v. Ranger, 12 Sim. pp. 118, 120. Lord Eldon doubted the authority of Whelpdale v. Cookson, so far as it sanctioned the sale, if approved by a majority of the creditors only, as they could not bind the rest; 6 Ves. 628.

(e) Tucker v. Wilson, 1 P. W. 261; 1 Bro. P. C. 494; Lockwood v. Ewer, 2 Atk. p. 303; Kemp v. Westbrook, 1 Ves. 278.

(f) Harrison v. Hart, Com. 393; Ex parte Denison, 3 Ves. p. 352.

(g) Kemp v. Westbrook, 1 Ves. 278.

(h) Ex parte Denison, 3 Ves. p. 352; see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, pp. 300, 301.

(i) Chissum v. Dewes, 5 Russ. 29, 30.

(k) Ex parte Cowell, xii. Jur. p. 411; xvii. Law J. Bank. 16; Ex parte Tagart, 1 De G. p. 531.

least doubtful whether they can afterwards sell; the mortgagee cannot compel them to proceed to a sale to try the question (a).

A power to appoint land authorizes the charging of money on land; the party might direct a portion of the land to be sold and the money to be paid to the object of the power; a devise to trustees to sell is good under such a power (b). A grant of an annuity to endure till a gross sum is paid off, is, it is to be observed, a good execution of a power to raise a sum of money to that amount (c).

A mortgage will prevail over a prior voluntary settlement, a mortgagee being a purchaser pro tanto. A person being tenant in tail under his father's will, with remainder to his brothers in tail, on his marriage agreed by articles to settle the estate on himself for life, with remainder to the sons of the marriage in tail; after the marriage he suffered a recovery and executed a settlement according to the articles, adding limitations to each of his brothers successively for life, remainder to their sons in tail; he then mortgaged the premises: it was held that the limitations to the brothers were void under the statute of Elizabeth, as against the mortgagee (d). Lord Eldon held that in such cases it makes no difference whether the settlor was tenant in tail only or tenant in fee, the brothers under the settlement clearly took new estates (e); but the voluntary settlement is only avoided to the extent required to give effect to the provisions of the instrument subsequently executed for value (f).

Where the mortgagee takes from a person who has acquired the capacity to mortgage by a fraud, as where the father has appointed under a power to a child, with a view to enable him for the father's own purposes to make the mortgage; if the mortgagee have notice of the circumstances the mortgage will be void in equity (g): so where the party takes a mortgage or charge under a power, and the circumstances under which the party creating the mortgage or charge was authorized to make it are not attended to, the security so taken will be liable to be set aside (h).

(a) Palk v. Clinton, 12 Ves. 56.

(b) Kenworthy v. Bate, 6 Ves. 793; Roberts v. Dixall, 2 Eq. Ab. p. 668, pl. 19, and the other cases cited.

(c) Marnell v. Blake, 4 Dow. p. 248; 2 Ball & B. p. 35; Sir E. Sugden approves of this case, in Muskerrey v. Chinnery, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. p. 227. As to sales, &c., under charges to raise debts and portions, v. supra, p. 316, et seq., p. 406, et seq.; and as to the power of trustees for sale to mortgage, v. sup. p. 369.

(d) Cormick v. Trapaud, 6 Dow. p. 60; Sugd. Law of Prop. 147-8, 577.

(e) 6 Dow. 83, 85, Lord Eldon; and see Johnson v. Legard, supra, pp. 291-2.

(f) V. Sugd. Law of Prop. 148, and Croker v. Martin, 1 Bli. N. S. 573, there stated.

(g) Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball & B. 18, 29.

(h) The case of Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, 1 Beatty, 333, determines what will be a due execution of a power to charge "reasonable" portions; the amount, the time, and occasion on which they are to be made payable must

We may here shortly advert to the doctrines of the court in respect of Defective Securities given by the mortgagor. When fines were in operation, it was held, that where the tenant for life with remainder over mortgaged the estate and then levied a fine, thereby forfeiting his estate to the remainderman, yet that the mortgagee if he had no notice of the will and had considered the mortgagor to be dealing as heir, should hold for the life of the mortgagor (a); but in two subsequent cases it was stated that the court could not relieve in such case against the legal title, and that the mortgagee must lose his money (b).

The statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, § 21, regulates the effect of a disposition by way of mortgage by a tenant in tail (c); before that act if the tenant in tail had made a mortgage, and a bill was filed to compel him to suffer a recovery, the course was to direct a good title to be made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and the principal and interest to be paid within six months or the mortgagor to stand foreclosed (d).

Where a person affects to make a mortgage but the deed is defective for want of enrolment or the like, though by the laches of the mortgagee, as the instrument is at least evidence of an agreement to convey, the conscience is bound to make further assurance, and it will be enforced in equity (e). If a man mortgages by defective conveyance, and afterwards mortgages to a person who lends his money upon the security of the land by an assurance that is effectual, without notice, the second shall prevail because he has the legal title. But a distinction has been taken as to bond or other creditors who did not originally lend their money on the security of the land, but who, without notice, after the death of the mortgagor, have obtained judgments against the heir; Lord Nottingham held that the defect in the original mortgage ought to be supplied against such judgment creditors, they being in the nature of volunteers (so far as regards their lien on the land) be looked to, if not, the mortgagee's security may be in jeopardy: see, as to fraud in respect of appointments, sup. p. 417.

(a) Willis v. Fineux, Prec. Ch. 108; and see Putland v. Burrows, 5 Bro. P. C. 263, to same effect.

(b) Peachy v. Duke of Somerset, Pr. Ch. 572, 2 P. W. 147; Lady Whetstone v. Sainsbury, ibid. 591, 2 P. W. 146; and see Osborn v. Lea, 9 Mod. 96.

(c) As to the effect of this section, see Coote, 241; et v. ibid. 242, as to the application of the 38th section.

(d) Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. p. 101: the covenant for further assurance might be taken hold of as a plank, Lord Thurlow, Tourle v. Rand, 2 Bro. 652: as to the effect of a covenant for further assurance, as against assignees of tenant in tail and others, see Pye v. Daubuz, 3 Bro. p. 595; S. C. 2 Dick. p. 759, erroneously reported; and Ex parte Wills, 2 Cox, 233.

(e) Lord Eldon, Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 625; Lord Cowper, Taylor v. Wheeler, 2 Salk. 449; 1 Eq. Abr. 122, pl. 3.

claiming under a person who was bound to make the security good (a), and not purchasers (b). If the subsequent purchaser or mortgagee have notice of the prior defective conveyance, he will be bound just as he would if he had notice of an agreement (c). A covenant by tenant in tail to convey is binding on his assignees in bankruptcy (d).

If the debt be paid off, in equity the mortgage is extinguished, and the mortgagee is trustee by operation of law for the mortgagor, and if it be established by sufficient evidence that the debt was freely forgiven or released, even by parol only, the same result will follow (e).

(a) Bacon's Abr. 4 Eden, p. 40; Burgh v. Francis, before Lord Keeper Finch, there cited; 1 Eq. Ab. p. 320. Mr. Coote doubts whether this case can be taken as establishing the general doctrine, On Mortgages, 254, n.; the governing principle is, that the person who did not lend his money with reference to the land, has not equal equity with one who did, as to which v. infra.

(b) "A purchaser without notice of the trust may be free, but an incumbrance is not like a sale," Lord Nottingham, Burgh v. Francis, 3 Swanst. p. 537, n.; and see Oxwick v. Plumer, 5 Bac. Abr. p. 43, where Lord Cowper held the same doctrine as to judgment creditors; and see the other cases cited in Whitworth v. Gaugain, 3 Hare, 420. In Averall v. Wade, Lord-Chancellor Sugden, (Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 262,) citing Finch v. Winchelsea, (1

P. W. 277,) and Burgh v. Francis, (3 Swanst. 536, note,) held, that where there is a defective conveyance by way of mortgage, the estate being specifically bound, as a judgment creditor has no specific lien, it must be made good against him: what (if any) may be the effect in this respect of the stat. 1 Vict. c. 110, was not adverted to by the Lord Chancellor; and see on this subject, Bothomly v. Fairfax, 1 P. W. 340; Fothergill v. Kendrick, 2 Vern. 234; and Raithby's note, ibid. 751.

(c) Jennings v. Moore, 2 Vern. p. 609, (stated to have been affirmed in the House of Lords,) founded on Taylor v. Wheeler, 2 Vern. 564.

(d) Edwards v. Applebee, 2 Bro. 653, n.; Pye v. Daubuz, 3 Bro. 595.

(e) Richards v. Syms, Barnardist. 90, 92, 93.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

Statutes relating to Usury.

By the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 98, § 7, bills of exchange, having not more than three months to run, were exempted from the operation of the Statute of Usury, 12 Anne, stat. 2, c. 16.; and by the stat. 1 Vict. c. 80, no bill of exchange or promissory note made payable at or within 12 months after the date, or not having more than 12 months to run, shall be void by reason of any interest taken thereon, or secured thereby, or any agreement to pay, or receive or allow interest on discounting, negotiating, or transferring the same. By the stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 93, no bill or note given for usurious consideration shall be void in the hands of the indorsee for value without notice. Mr. Sweet has collected the cases at law upon these statutes, On Mortgages, p. 394-5. By the stat. 14 Geo. III. c. 79, interest not exceeding 6 per cent. may be charged in West India securities under certain regulations; and see 3 Geo. IV. c. 47.

SECTION II.—Of the Mortgagor and Mortgagee, general View of their Respective Rights — Nature of Equity of Redemption — Of Mortgagor in Possession and Mortgagee in Possession—Of Tender of the Mortgage Money—Of an Assignment of the Mortgage.

Nature of Equity of Redemption.

Distinctions between Trust Estate and Equity of Redemption.

Equity of Redemption of Wife's Lands mortgaged by Husband and Wife.

How far Mortgagee is a Trustee of the Mortgaged Estate.

Right of Redemption may be devised, granted, &c. in the same manner as might the Estate if not under Mortgage.

Mortgagor left in Possession holds only at the Will of the Mortgagee.

Emblements.

Mortgagor, in general, may put all his Securities in force concurrently.

Receiver appointed, what course the Mortgagee should adopt.

Mortgagee in Possession—Liability to subsequent Mortgagees.

Mortgagor in Possession—Waste.

Mortgagee of Renewable Leaseholds.

Mortgagee in Possession—Leases—Waste.

To whom the Redemption Money is to be paid.

Mortgagee only bound to accept Payment from those who are entitled to the Equity of Redemption.

Where the Mortgagee holds two Mortgages from the same Mortgagor.

As to the Notice which the Mortgagee may require prior to his being paid off.

Effect of Tender.

Mortgagor or those who represent him must pay all Expenses which the Mortgagee has properly incurred in maintaining the Title and the like.

Four per Cent. only allowed from Confirmation of Report where the Estate is sold in a Suit by Mortgagee to administer the Estate.

Who is to pay Commission on Remittances where the Debt is contracted out of this Country.

Mortgagee cannot dispute his Mortgagor's Title.

Mortgagor may extinguish his Equity of Redemption.

Mortgagee may purchase the Equity of Redemption.

Mortgagee not bound to produce the Deeds till paid off—but must produce them for the purposes of Sale, if such Sale has been made with his Consent.

Mortgage by Tenant in Common.

Effect of Assignment of Mortgage.

Devise of Mortgaged Premises.

Assignment of Mortgage—Conversion of Interest into Principal.

Purchaser of Mortgage.

Donatio Mortis Causâ of a Mortgage.

THE mortgage being constituted, the Court of Chancery holding that the time for redeeming is not of the essence of the contract, permits the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, as will be more particularly mentioned hereafter, or other persons who according to the contract might have redeemed within the time limited (a), to redeem or get back the estate on payment to the mortgagee, or those claiming under him, the principal money and interest due, together with the costs and charges properly incurred by them in relation to the mortgage; it being considered that the mortgagee or his representatives thereby obtains all that natural justice demands (b). A mortgage, said Lord Northington, is an assignment on condition; the condition being performed, the conveyance is void ab initio; equity dispenses with the time, and when the money is paid the conveyance is void in equity and conscience (c).

This equity of redemption is not a mere right, it is an Estate in the land (d).

Sir M. Hale, for the purpose of showing that where an estate escheats at law by the death of the mortgagee without heirs the mortgagor may redeem, took a distinction between a trust estate, and the estate which a mortgagor is entitled to under his equity of redemption, which does not appear to have been impugned (e); namely, that as regards a trust, as it is created by contract, (an expression which is liable to some observation,) those only are bound by it who come in in privity of estate or with notice, as a tenant in dower is bound by it, because she is in in the per; but not a tenant by the curtesy, who is in in the post; "But a power of redemption (f) is an equitable right inherent in the land, and binds all persons, in the post or otherwise;" because, said that learned judge, "it is an ancient right, which the party is entitled to in equity; and although," said the learned judge, "by escheat the tenure is extinguished, that will be nothing to the p. 599. Lord Redesdale, (On Pleading, p. 153, Smith's ed.) founds the jurisdiction to grant relief after the time for redemption is passed, on the ground of Accident; et v. supra, vol. i. pp. 599, 603.

(a) See Skeffington v. Whitehurst, 3 Yo. & Coll. 46. If an administrator mortgage a term belonging to the intestate, his executor, not the administrator de bonis non of the intestate, is the person to redeem; Butler v. Bernard, or Vincent, 2 Freem. p. 139; Lord Nottingham, MS., 3 Yo. & Coll. p. 447: Mr. Baron Alderson considered that the authority of this case was unshaken; ibid. pp. 44, 46.

(b) Radcliffe v. Warrington, 12 Ves. 332, 334; Davy v. Barker, 2 Atk. 2. The same principle, as we shall see, applies in granting relief against other forfeitures where compensation can be given in money; and see Com. Dig. Mortgage, 4 A. 11; and supra, vol. i.

(c) Lord Northington, Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 256.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 605 (1 Eden, R. 225); et v. infra, S. C. from Lord Hardwicke's MS.

(e) The Vice-Chancellor Wigram lately cited it with approbation, Lord Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 404-5; and see 1 Eden, 206; Tucker v. Thurstan, 17 Ves. 133-4.

(f) As to redemption, v. infra, Sect. iii.

purpose, because the party may be recompensed by the court for that (a);” Lord Nottingham also said, “An equity of redemption charges the land not a trust (b):” however, the words “or otherwise” must be understood with some limitation, for if a person should be so imprudent as to execute an absolute conveyance intended by way of mortgage with a defeazance by a separate deed, a purchaser for valuable consideration from the donee in possession, without notice that the vendor held as mortgagee, would take the estate discharged of the equity of redemption (c): and on the death of a mortgagor being tenant of the equity of redemption in fee simple, the equity of redemption is not so far an estate as that it will escheat (d); though where an estate escheats to the lord for want of heirs of the tenant, the lord is entitled to redeem a mortgagee holding a security on the land by way of term for years (e).

A trust estate as contrasted with an equity of redemption is in other respects materially different (f); a trust estate of inheritance is legal assets by virtue of the Statute of Frauds (g); though the trust of a term is not (h): an equity of redemption of a fee-simple estate or of a term is equitable assets, and as it is now settled even when devised to executors for payment of debts (i): but a judgment creditor, as he has a right to redeem (k), is entitled to be paid in priority (l) out of an equity of redemption.

As regards a mortgage of the wife's estate, the rule is that where the husband is seised of the legal estate jure uxoris, and husband and

(a) Pawlett v. Attorney-General, Hardr. 465; Treat. of Eq. by Fonbl. ii. 259; cited, Butler's note, Co. Litt. 205, a.; also Com. Dig. Mortgage, 4 A. 4; and 3 Hare, p. 404. Historically a trust estate is clearly the most ancient estate; indeed an equity of redemption, as Sir M. Hale himself has observed, is comparatively modern; v. sup. vol. i. 603, 466; et v. infra, p. 645, n. (c).

(b) 1 Eden, 206; 3 Hare, 405.

(c) Lord Talbot discouraged defeazances by a separate deed, as savouring of fraud, probably having in view, amongst others, a fraud of this description; Cotterell v. Purchase, Forrest. 64.

(d) Burgess v. Wheate, sup. vol. i. p. 504; and 3 Hare, 406.

(e) Lord Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 394, 400.

(f) See Tucker v. Thurstan, where it was held that an equity of redemption was within the exception of the Annuity Act, 17 Geo. III. c. 26 (now repealed by 53 Geo. III. c. 141); 17 Ves. 133; and Lord Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 404-5.

(g) 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 10.

(h) King v. Ballett, 2 Vern. p. 248; Williams on Executors, 1320-21; Coote, 60, 61; Scott v. Scholey, 8 East, p. 485; of the doctrine of execution against trust estates at law, see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 39.

(i) Plunket v. Penson, 2 Atk. 290; Coote, 60; Lyster v. Dolland, 3 Bro. 480, 1 Ves. J. 431. Mr. Ram, on Assets, ch. xxvii. p. 401, et seq., has carefully collected the cases.

(k) The right of a judgment-creditor to redeem, though he may not have issued execution, is recognized, in, inter al. Barrett v. Blake, (2 Ball & B. 357,) and Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, (3 My. & Cr. p. 407,) except in the case of leaseholds, which are not affected by the judgment until execution; Duck v. Dixon, Vice-Chancellor, 17 July, 1819, 1 Mad. P. and P. 656; and see Barnewall v. Barnewall, 3 Ridgw. P. C. p. 24; and Tunstall v. Trappes, 3 Sim. 298-9; et v. infra, Sect. iii. As to the effect of stat. 1 Vict. c. 110, see Harris v. Davison, 15 Sim. 120; et v. infra.

(l) Sharpe v. Lord Scarborough, 4 Ves. 542; 1 Beatty, 196.

wife join in a mortgage of the estate, reserving the equity of redemption to the husband and his heirs, the husband has the equity of redemption as he before had the legal estate, that is, jure uxoris (a). If the estate he before had jure uxoris was equitable, so the equity of redemption remains equitable, but still jure uxoris; and equity throws this protection round the wife that the deed shall operate no further than its particular purpose, unless there be some recital of intention that the husband shall take the benefit (b), or it is evident that the transaction was more than a mere mortgage transaction, or where the form of the equity of redemption has nothing to do with the limitation of the estate—where the limitation of the estate is perfectly distinct (c).

It is frequently stated that the mortgagee is a Trustee of the estate for the mortgagor (d). But it was observed by Sir Thomas Plumer, that it is only in a secondary point of view and under certain circumstances, and for a particular purpose, that the character of trustee constructively belongs to the mortgagee; no trust is expressed in the contract, it is only raised by implication in subordination to the main purpose of it and after that is fully satisfied; its primary character is not fiduciary. It is a contract of a peculiar nature, by which, under certain conditions, the mortgagee becomes the purchaser of a security and pledge to hold for his own use and benefit; he acquires a distinct beneficial interest in the estate: he has always a qualified and limited right (e), and may eventually acquire an absolute and permanent one, to take possession, and he is entitled to enforce his right by an adverse suit in invitum against the mortgagor; all which can never take place between trustee and cestui que trust; they have always an identity and unity of interest, and are never opposed in contest with each other. A trustee is not allowed to deprive his cestui que trust of possession; but a court of equity never interferes to prevent the mortgagee from assuming possession, for it is in conformity with his contract, which would be directly violated by any impediment being thrown in the way of the exercise of this right; this presents a character directly

(a) Lord Eldon, Chancellor, Ruscombe appellant, Hare respondent, 6 Dow. 20; Sir E. Sugden (Law of Prop. p. 172) has stated and examined this case; see also 2 Hare, 414; Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 252.

(b) Lord Eldon, 6 Dow. 20.

(c) Lord Redesdale, Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bligh, 128-9; Sir E. Sugden has stated and examined this case, Law of Prop. 174-6; et

v. supra, p. 306-7; et v. infra, Sect. iii.

(d) V. int. alia, Casburne v. Inglis, 2 Jac. & W. 196, Append. In the case of a mortgage of an advowson, a mortgagee in possession is a trustee in respect of the presentations; see 1 Eq. Ab. 328, pl. 2; et v. supra, p. 629; et v. infra, p. 656, note (f).

(e) And see Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Meriv. 339, Sir W. Grant.

opposite to that of trustee. It is in this opposite character, continued the learned judge, that he accounts for the rents when in possession, and when he is not, receives the interest of his mortgage debt. He does not at any time possess like a trustee a title to the legal estate, distinct and separate from the beneficial and equitable title; whenever he is entitled at all to either, he is fully entitled to both, and to the legal and equitable remedies incident to both: but in equity his title is confined to a particular purpose: he has no right to either, nor can make use of any remedy belonging to either, further than as may be necessary to secure the repayment of the money due to him; when that is paid his duty is to reconvey the estate to the person entitled to it, it never remains in his hands clothed with any fiduciary trust; he is not intrusted with the care of it, nor under any obligation to hold it for any one but himself, nor is he allowed to use it for any other purpose. The estate is not committed to his care nor has he the means of preventing or being acquainted with the changes which the title to the equity of redemption may undergo, either by the act of the mortgagor without his privity, or by operation of law, by descent, forfeiture or otherwise, and consequently by the operation of the analogy of the Statute of Limitations (a): however, all the cases treat the mortgagee, as soon as he is paid, as becoming a mere naked trustee, holding the legal estate for the benefit of the mortgagor (b).

This right of redemption being, as before stated, an actual Estate in the land, may be devised, granted and entailed in the same manner as might have been done with the estate before the mortgage was made; the entail of it may be barred, formerly by fine and recovery, now by disentailing deed; so there may be a possessio fratris and tenancy by the curtesy of an equity of redemption (c); and by the late act as to dower it is subject to the Dower of a widow who has married since the 1st of January, 1834.

Still this estate exists, generally speaking, in the view of the Court

(a) Sir T. Plumer, Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 182, et seq. The court, as has before been observed, is bound by the Statute of Limitations now in force.

(b) Ibid. Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. p. 278; et v. supra, p. 629, as to a mortgage of an Advowson; and infra, p. 657.

(c) Butler's note, Co. Litt. 205, a, No. 96, § 3; and see Wilmott v. Pike, 5 Hare, infra. In this light the legislature has viewed the different estates of mortgagor and mortgagee in the statute 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 16, and 7 Anne, c. 19; and see Casburne v. Inglis, before Lord Hardwicke, from his own MS., 2 Jac. & W. 195-6. Lord Hardwicke there held that an equity of redemption was an estate, and of which there might be seisin, equivalent to a seisin of the freehold at law; his Lordship, however, added, that a mere trust in land was, as it was admitted, always to be considered as a real estate; ibid. 196.

of Chancery only, the legal estate continuing in the mortgagee. Where the mortgagor is left in possession of the mortgaged premises, he only holds them by the will or permission of the mortgagee, who may by ejectment, and without notice, recover the possession against him, or against his tenant under a tenancy created subsequently to the mortgage; and he is not even entitled to reap the crop, in which respect the mortgagor is in a worse condition as regards his possession than a tenant at will; though of course the mortgagee in the final account must give credit for such emblements, as he must account for the rents he receives and for an occupation-rent for such part as he may keep in his own possession (a).

As a general rule, as has already been observed, the court will not interfere to prevent the mortgagee from putting all his securities in force, and that concurrently, for the party borrowing must abide by the fair terms of his contract with the mortgagee (b). The mortgagee may therefore bring an action on a collateral bond concurrently with filing a bill for foreclosure; but, said Lord Redesdale, the mortgagor has a right not to be obliged to pay the money on his bond if he is in danger of not getting back his title deeds; the mortgagee can have nothing but on condition of reconveying and giving up the title deeds which he has received: where therefore the mortgagee had deposited the title deeds with an attorney, who claimed a lien upon them, he (the mortgagee) was restrained from proceeding against the mortgagor on his collateral security (c). The mortgagee may also bring ejectment and obtain possession; but the old doctrine (d) that the mortgagor after forfeiture is bailiff or receiver of the mortgagee is exploded; so that the mortgagee who suffers the mortgagor to remain in possession is not entitled to call on the mortgagor to account for

(a) Keech v. Hall, Doug. p. 21; Moss v. Gallimore, Doug. p. 266; Doe dem. Fisher v. Giles, 5 Bing. p. 421; Doe v. Maisey, 3 Man. & R. p. 110; Sir W. Grant, Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Meriv. p. 339; Butler's note, Co. Litt. 204, b.; 2 Fonbl. p. 258; and see additional note to this section. Those who may desire to become acquainted with the position of a mortgagor in possession at law, will do well to refer to Jarm. on Mortgages, by Sweet, 352-5; and to a Treatise in the Jurist on this subject, Ap. 22, and Ap. 29, 1843; see add. note.

(b) See Lockart v. Hardy, 9 Beav.; sup. p. 347, add. note; Schoole v. Sall, 1 Scho. & Lef. p. 176; Booth v. Booth, 2 Atk. p. 343.

Purely vexatious conduct, or a refusal to receive the mortgage money, interest and costs due, may be visited, in respect of costs, when the matter comes into the Court of Chancery see (int. alia) Morley v. Bridges, 2 Coll. 628; Smith v. Green, 1 Coll. 563-4; Cliff v. Wadsworth, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 598; et v. supra, pp. 634-5, and infra, p. 652.

(c) Schoole v. Sall, 1 Scho. & Lef. 176; the amount due for principal, interest, and costs, was ordered to be paid into court, there to remain till the title-deeds were secured and a reconveyance could be had. Of the course to be pursued on redemption, where the deeds have been lost or destroyed, v. infra, Sect. iv.

(d) Moss v. Gallimore, Doug. 266.

the rents he has received (a), though the mortgaged property may have become an insufficient security; not even, as it seems, for rents which have been received by the mortgagor, after notice to the tenants to pay their rents to the mortgagee; unless the mortgagor has dispossessed the mortgagee, or the mortgagor has by collusion obtained the rents which the mortgagee would otherwise have received (b).

It was held by Lord Eldon, that the mortgagee of a term for raising portions which had expired, was not entitled to have the surplus rents which had accrued before the expiration of the term, and which were in the hands of a receiver, applied to the discharge of the mortgage debt, he having done nothing to assert his title to such rents; the order appointing a Receiver is for the benefit of incumbrancers only so far as it is expressed to be for their benefit, and only so far as they choose to avail themselves of it; "I apprehend," said Lord Eldon, "that when the court interfered to receive the rents beyond what was required for keeping down the interest on incumbrances, all the surplus rent after payment of interest was received for the benefit of the heir (c);" the mortgagee whose interests were not provided for by the order might have come in to be examined pro interesse suo (d), or with leave of the court have enforced his legal title. If a receiver has been appointed in a suit to which the mortgagee is not a party, the mortgagor will not acquire a title to the rents by giving notice to the receiver, his course is to move to discharge the receiver (e). If a man has a legal mortgage, he cannot have a receiver appointed, he may take possession; but if he have only a mortgage of the equity of redemption, if the prior mortgagee is not in possession he may have a receiver. It seems indeed to have been considered by Sir Wm. Grant, that where it appears in a suit to administer an estate that the pro-

(a) Turkington v. Kearnan, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 43.

(b) Higgins v. York Buildings Company, 2 Atk. p. 107; Mead v. Lord Orrery, 3 Atk. 244; Ex parte Wilson, 2 Ves. & B. p. 252; Colman v. Duke of St. Albans, 3 Ves. p. 25; Drummond v. Duke of St. Albans, 5 Ves. 438; Codrington v. Johnstone, 1 Beav. 524; Lord Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 704.

(c) Gresley v. Adderley, 1 Swanst. 573, 579.

(d) Ibid.; and Hunt v. Priest, 2 Dick. 540.

(e) Turkinton v. Kearnan, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 42; and the other cases cited in Jarm. Conv. by Sweet, 359. As to the application of the rule above stated, in particular cases, for instance, where a receiver has been appointed for the benefit of other persons, see Thomas v. Brigstocke, 4 Russ. 64; Salt v. Donegall, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. pp. 96-7; also Earl of Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 703, 704. Under a bill to put a term out of the way, that being in the nature of an equitable ejectment, past rents, from the time of the bill filed, may be obtained; ibid.; and see Codrington v. Johnstone, 1 Beav. 524. A receiver, on his appointment, is entitled to receive all the rents then in arrear; 1 Beav. 524. As to the doctrine at law, as regards the tenants, see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, pp. 358, 363; and Rogers v. Humphreys, 5 New. & Mann.; 4 Ad. & Ell. 313, the last case there cited.

perty is subject to a mortgage, a receiver ought not to be appointed in the absence of the mortgagor, though the object may be to prevent trustees who have acted improperly in the trust from getting the rents into their hands (a); but Lord Eldon stated it to be the practice on motions for receivers not to look to mortgagees further than to take care that they are not prejudiced (b).

Where a mortgagee is in possession without notice of a second mortgage he may pay the rents over to the mortgagor, and the second mortgagee if he is so imprudent as not to give that notice, as he cannot have an account of bygone rents from the mortgagor, so he cannot have it from the other mortgagee; but after notice of the second incumbrance, however obtained, the first mortgagee is answerable to the second for what he has received or might have received (c).

Whether the mortgagor be in possession or not, he is considered until foreclosure for most purposes, excepting where the interests of the mortgagee may be affected, as substantially, as according to the Roman law he was actually (d), the owner of the estate (e): however he will not be permitted to do any acts injurious to, or which may diminish the value of the estate, so as to put in jeopardy the security of the mortgagee: if he commit or attempt to commit acts of waste, he will be restrained from so doing by injunction (f). A mortgagor in possession may be restrained from cutting down timber if the land without it is a scanty security, but not, as it is now settled, if it is sufficient without the timber; and from cutting down underwood contrary to the usual course of husbandry, but not from cutting underwood in the ordinary course, though the mortgagor be insolvent (g).

(a) Sir Wm. Grant, Price v. Williams, Sir Geo. Coop. R. 31.

(b) Norway v. Rowe, 19 Ves. p. 153; see the cases in the note to Berney v. Sewell, 1 Jac. & W. 650. Mr. Coventry, in his note to Powell on Mortgages, 297, et seq., from § iii. to § viii., has collected the cases on this subject, and in the prior and subsequent pages there, relating to the doctrine as to the appointment of receivers generally: see more on this subject, infra, Sect. iv.

(c) Berney v. Sewell, 1 Jac. & W. p. 650; Archdeacon v. Bowes, 13 Price, 368; and see Parker v. Calcraft, 6 Mad. 11; Bentham v. Haincourt, Prec. Ch. 30; Coppring v. Cooke, 1 Vern. p. 270; Maddocks v. Wren, 2 Ch. R. 209; Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, 951.

(d) V. sup. vol. i. p. 599.

(e) A mortgagor in possession has the right of voting under 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 45, § 23: a mortgagee who has been in possession for seven years has then a right to vote; ibid.

(f) Dict. Robinson v. Litton, 3 Atk. 210; Usborne v. Usborne, 1 Dick. 75, and other cases cited in the note: Goodman v. Kine, 8 Beav. 379: it was at one time contended that it was the mortgagor's own fault that he did not enter into possession, and therefore he ought not to be permitted to interfere.

(g) Farrant v. Lovel, 3 Atk. p. 723; Usborne v. Usborne, 1 Dick. 75; Cox v. Goodfellow, Oct. 1820, 8 Ves. 105, n. (a); Hippesley v. Spencer, 5 Mad. p. 422; Turkington v. Kearnan, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 45; King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 242-3. Sir J. Wigram, Vice-Chancellor, there says, "sufficient" means "that the security is worth so much more than the money advanced." In Robinson v. Litton,

If the mortgagee exercises his option of taking possession, which of course he may do at pleasure if he has the legal estate, he may retain possession of the estate until he is paid off by some person entitled (a); though whether he enter or not, unless barred by lapse of time, he is entitled, until actually paid off, to retain the character of mortgagee and to exercise all the rights which are incident to it (b). The mortgagee in possession may grant leases of the premises, but such leases are subject to the mortgagor's right of redemption, and he may avoid any leases which may have been made by the mortgagee subsequently to his mortgage, and may eject the tenant without notice (c). A mortgagee in fee in possession may at law commit waste, but in equity he will be restrained from cutting timber unless his security be deficient (d).

It has been considered that where a person obtains a judgment in ejectment, he shall be treated as being in actual possession (e): and though the general rule is that the court will not compel the mortgagee to take possession (f), yet where a prior mortgagee had obtained leases of the mortgaged premises after a subsequent mortgage had been granted, and had entered into possession as he alleged as lessee; it was held at the instance of the second mortgagee who was also owner of the equity of redemption, that the first mortgagee must be held to be a mortgagee in possession (g).

The mortgagee in possession has a right to add to the principal of his mortgage debt any sums of money he may be compelled to pay for arrears of rent, or for rebuilding the premises or putting them in repair, especially when this is necessary to prevent a forfeiture (h); but it seems he ought first to apprise the mortgagee as to what he is about to do (i): but he cannot by contract or otherwise entitle himself to make any charge for management (k); even though the circum-

(3 Atk. p. 210,) Lord Hardwicke puts it upon this ground, "because the whole estate is a security;" and in Hampton v. Hodges, ubi supra, Lord Eldon said, "As regards a bankrupt mortgagor, there is a good deal in this, that you have a right to have the estate in the plight in which it was at the date of the bankruptcy, and to prove the rest of the debt:" and see Humphreys v. Harrison, 1 Jac. & W. 581; Hampton v. Hodges, 8 Ves. 105.

(a) V. int. al. Davy v. Baker, 2 Atk. p. 2; and James v. Biou, 3 Swanst. p. 237; infra, p. 651.

(b) See Grugeon v. Gerrard, 4 Y. & Coll. p. 128; as to Time, v. infra, Sect. vi.

(c) 2 Fonbl. p. 258; Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 355.

(d) Withrington v. Banks, Sel. Ca. Ch. 31.

(e) Duke of Buckingham v. Gayer, 1 Vern. 258; but there were special circumstances in the case.

(f) Penrhyn v. Hughes, 5 Ves. p. 106; of the mode of taking the account against a mortgagee in possession, v. infra.

(g) Gregg v. Arrott, 1 Llo. & G. 246.

(h) Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 466, 480, 482; Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 281-2; v. sup. p. 304; et v. infra, p. 653; and Sects. ix. and x.

(i) Lord Trimleston v. Hamill, 1 Ball & B. 385.

(k) Leith v. Irvine, and Chambers v. Goldwin, supra; and see Lord Trimleston v. Ha- stances of the estate would have warranted the appointment of a receiver, and charging his poundage to the mortgagor, that will not justify the mortgagee in taking it (a).

If the mortgagee in possession opens quarries or mines he does it at his own hazard (b). If the mortgage be of mines opened, the mortgagee is bound at the utmost to make such expenditure as a prudent owner would do, he cannot be removed from possession for refusing to do more; if he can be removed for mismanagement it must be on a special and very clear case being made out against him (c): it seems that he is liable to the mortgagor if by his gross negligence the estate becomes deteriorated whilst in his possession (d).

A mortgagee of renewable leaseholds is not bound to renew unless it be part of his contract that he should do so; but he may renew at his own expence and reimburse himself by adding what he pays to the principal of the mortgage debt; the renewed lease becomes part of the pledge (e): if a renewable lease be assigned by way of mortgage, an agreement between the landlord and the mortgagee, without the concurrence of the mortgagor, will not bind the mortgagor (f).

As to the Payment of the Redemption money: when upon a mortgage the money is made payable to the heir or executor, in such case, on the day appointed for payment, the mortgagor has the election to pay to which he pleases (g): but if in the mortgage neither heir nor executor be mentioned, then after the death of the mortgagee the law determines that the mortgage money is to be paid to the executor (h). It has long been settled in equity, by analogy to this rule of the common law in cases of payment before forfeiture (i), that the mortgage money after forfeiture is to be paid, not to the heir but to the personal representative; and this holds though the mortgage be in fee, mill, 1 Ball & B. p. 377; Langstaffe v. Fenwick, 10 Ves. p. 405; there Sir W. Grant opened an account on this ground, after a considerable lapse of time, the mortgagee being the attorney of the mortgagor; Carew v. Johnston, 2 Scho. & Lef. 301; et v. supra, pp. 299, 304.

(a) Ibid. As to the proper order to be made when a trust term has been created, and under an authority for that purpose the trustees have entered and appointed a receiver, and the mortgagor has then paid up the arrears, and seeks to discharge the receiver; see Jenkins v. Milford, 1 Jac. & W. 629; and see Allen v. Lord Blessington, 2 Molloy, 492.

(b) Hughes v. Williams, 12 Ves. 496; et v. Thorneycroft v. Crockett, infra, sect. x.

(c) Rowe v. Wood, 2 Jac. & W. 556.

(d) Wragg v. Denham, 2 Yo. & Coll. 122; but see the note on this case, 4 Yo. & Coll. 570.

(e) Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1, 4; Woolley v. Drage, 2 Anst. 551.

(f) O'Reilly v. Featherstone, 4 Bli. N. S. p. 161.

(g) Co. Litt. 200, a.; Rightson v. Overton, Freem. p. 20; Canning v. Hicks, 1 Vern. 412; S. C. 2 Ch. Ca. 187; and see 1 Ch. R. 283; 2 Ch. R. 220.

(h) Anon. 2 Freem. 12; Rightson v. Overton, ibid. p. 20; 1 Inst. 209, b.

(i) Lord Nottingham, Thornborough v. Baker, 2 Freem. p. 142; 3 Swanst. Append. 628; and Tabor v. Tabor, ibid. 636.

and though the mortgagee may have been in possession, and that possession may have been continued to his heirs (a): and the rule prevails, though the condition be for payment to the mortgagee, his heirs or his executors; and though there be no want of assets; and though there be no bond given or covenant entered into by the mortgagor for the payment of the money; and whether the mortgage be forfeited or not at the death of the mortgagee: for the Court of Chancery considers a mortgage as part of the mortgagee's personalty; the money came from that source, and is to be returned to it (b): and if the mortgagor shall have exercised his option, whilst he had it, to pay to the heir the heir is trustee of the money for the personal representatives (c): for this reason a mortgage of an inheritance to a citizen of London is held to be part of his personal estate, and to be distributed according to the custom (d).

The mortgagee, or those who represent him in interest, are not bound to accept the money, except from the party who is entitled to, or who claims under the party entitled to the equity of redemption, as to which more will be said in treating of redemption; against all other persons the estate is the property of the mortgagee (e). If the mortgagee holds two estates in mortgage from one mortgagor, though by different mortgages, he has a right to insist that all that is due to him shall be paid (f); but where the mortgagee takes proceedings to foreclose this doctrine does not apply; if such a bill be filed against the mortgagor to foreclose both mortgages, he may redeem the one, and allow himself to be foreclosed as to the other: so in bankruptcy the surplus arising from the sale of one estate will not be applied to make good the deficiency in the proceeds of the other (g); but this will be more particularly adverted to in the section on Tacking.

In the case of Browne v. Lockhart (1840), the Vice-Chancellor of England incidentally said, "I admit that it is the usual practice for (a) Noy v. Ellis, 2 Ch. Ca. 221; Tabor v. Grove, 2 Vern. 367; S. C. 2 Freem. 227; Thornborough v. Baker, supra; a leading case and well reported, decided by Lord Nottingham, see 2 Fonbl. 280.

(b) Ibid.; and see Butler's note, No. 106, to Co. Litt. 208 a, 205 a, § 3; 2 Fonb. 283-5, and the cases there cited; and see 1 Inst. p. 209 b, supra; and the case cited in next note.

(c) Kendall v. Micfeild, Barnardist. 50.

(d) Lord Nottingham's judgment, Thornborough v. Baker, ubi supra; and 1 Ch. Ca. p. 285.

(e) Lord Eldon, James v. Biou, 3 Swanst. p. 237; v. infra, p. 635, n. (a).

(f) Titley v. Davis, 2 Eq. Abr. 604, pl. 35, and the margin; and see Bugden v. Bignold, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 383. This case, and Barnes v. Racster, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. p. 401, though not directly in point on this question, are important cases as to how the rights of subsequent mortgagees, who claim under mortgages of distinct portions of the same property, are to be adjusted.

(g) Ex parte Bignold, 2 Deac. 66; and see Ex parte Hartley, 1 Deac. p. 288; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, pp. 377, 438; and see the other exceptions in the same page. This is an instance of the interests of the parties being affected by their situation on the record, or the condition in which they may stand at the time; but v. sup. p. 477, n., et infra, Sect. iii.

a mortgagor when he intends paying off the mortgage to give a proper notice of his intention so to do; but I apprehend that there is no law of this or any other court which requires that to be done: it rests entirely on custom, and the custom is founded on this, namely, that it is but fair that the party who has lent his money upon the security, should have a reasonable opportunity before the transaction is put an end to of finding some other security on which he may lay out his money" (a). But this custom, as affecting the mortgagee's claim for interest, has the force of law; for it is a well established rule that a mortgagee whose money is not paid at the day appointed by the proviso is entitled to six months' notice previously to its being paid, unless it be paid in pursuance of a demand made by the mortgagee (b), or there has been an agreement entered into that it should be paid on a particular day (c): if the money be not tendered on the day of the expiration of the notice, the mortgagee is entitled to another six months' notice (d); so that a tender before the end of the six months in either case will not stop the running on of interest during such six months. If the mortgagee refuse to receive his money after due notice, interest will cease to run from the time of the tender (e), that is, if the mortgagor keep the money continually ready and make no profit by it (f); whether the mortgagee can properly accept present payment of interest in lieu of notice is doubtful as respects the usury laws. When the mortgage money really due is actually and properly tendered by a person having a right to make the tender, the mortgagee must accept it: if there be a refusal to receive the money due on the mortgage upon the terms the debtor has a right to enforce, and he is prevented from paying the money, he having the money and tendering it, by the act of the mortgagee, interest from that day will cease; and, in the event of a suit being instituted, the mortgagor, in the absence of all blame on his part, will receive his costs, or at least the mortgagee will not be entitled to his costs (g); the circumstances will determine in each case which of the courses ought to be adopted (h). The first mortgagee is bound to accept payment of

(a) 10 Sim. 424.

(b) Sharpnell v. Blake, 2 Eq. Ab. p. 603, pl. 34; bank notes are now a legal tender.

(c) Austin v. Executors of Dodwell, 1 Eq. Ab. 318, pl. 9; Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 379, 382.

(d) Hix v. Ling, 2 Powell on Mortgages, 5th ed. 934; Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 379.

(e) Lutton v. Rodd, 2 Ch. Ca. 206; Manning v. Burges, 1 Ch. Ca. 29; et v. Middleton v. Eliot, 15 Sim. 534. See Meade v. Earl of Bandon, 2 Dow, p. 268, as to tender by an agent.

(f) Gyles v. Hall, 2 P. W. 378; Lutton v. Rodd, 2 Ch. Ca. 206.

(g) See Sects. iii. and iv. and ix. infra.

(h) Cliff v. Wadsworth, vii. Jur. 1009; 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 604-5: there one of three joint mortgagees had to pay costs; another was refused his costs; the third had his costs; and see Roberts v. Williams, 4 Hare, 129.

his principal, interest, and costs, when tendered by a second mortgagee, and thereupon to convey to him the estate, whether the tender be made with or without the privity of the mortgagor (a); and generally speaking he is justified in accepting payment and transferring the legal estate, to any person who tenders the principal interest and costs due to him, that person being interested in the equity of redemption (b).

The mortgagor and those who represent him in interest, besides principal and interest and costs (c), must also pay, or to stop the running of interest tender, the expenses which the mortgagee has properly incurred in his character of mortgagee, and, as before observed, the sums he may have properly laid out in respect of the estate; for instance, in maintaining the title to the estate (d), in renewing renewable leaseholds (e), and sums laid out in necessary repairs and lasting improvements (f), with interest from the time the sums were advanced (g): but this subject will be again considered in treating of the mode in which the account is to be taken. Where a mortgage carries five per cent. interest, if the mortgagee choses together with bond creditors to file a bill for a sale of the estate, only four per cent. interest will be allowed from the confirmation of the report (h). The mortgagee cannot be compelled to reconvey until the money is in his pocket, payment into court is not sufficient (i); nor then till he has had an opportunity of perusing the draft of the deed, at least if there are any covenants on his part in the deed (k).

If money be lent in London on mortgage, the mortgagor may give notice for payment of the same in London, though the mortgagee live at Oxford; but the mortgagor must be ready to pay at the time, and he must from that time keep his money ready, in order to prevent interest running on (l).

Where a debt is contracted in Jamaica and is therefore prima facie to be paid there, it is obviously reasonable, said Lord Eldon, if the creditor lives in London and his agent makes a demand upon the debtor where he resides and he there pays the whole, that it shall be taken that he has paid the creditor, and in such case the expense of the transmission of the debt is between the creditor and his agent; but upon a security made payable in London, in point of law, the creditor

(a) Smith v. Green, 1 Coll. 555, 563.

(b) V. infra, Section vii. on Tacking.

(c) See Dunstan v. Patterson, 2 Phill. 344.

(d) Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518.

(e) Lacon v. Mertins, ubi sup.; Manlove v. Bale, 2 Vern. 84; see 2 Eq. Ab. 602.

(f) Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 480; Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518.

(g) Godfrey v. Watson, supra, and the cases cited supra, p. 304, 649; and Coote, p. 472.

(h) Harris v. Harris, 3 Atk. 722.

(i) Postlethwaite v. Blythe, on appeal, 3 Mad. 244.

(k) Wiltshire v. Smith, 3 Atk. 90.

(l) Gyles v. Hall, 2 P. Wms. p. 378; and see Bishop v. Church, 2 Ves. 372.

is to receive in London so much money without any deduction; and there is no difference between West India and Irish remittances: "I cannot bring myself to doubt," added his Lordship, "that where a man agrees to pay £100 in London, upon the 1st of January, he ought to have that sum there at that day; if he fails in that contract, wherever the creditor sues him, the law of that country ought to give him just as much as he would have had if the contract had been performed" (a).

When the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, come to pay off the mortgage, the mortgagee cannot dispute the title of the mortgagor; the mortgagor is entitled to have back that which he gave in pledge, and the pledgee has no right to take upon himself to set up any title in another; for if such title be just, yet the mortgagee will not be trustee for the person entitled, nor will he be in any way liable to him, if he accounts to the mortgagor who is his principal (b).

A mortgagor may by a subsequent deliberate act extinguish his equity of redemption. A person surrendered a copyhold estate by way of mortgage, the reconveyance to be to such uses as he should appoint, or to himself in fee; and then by a subsequent surrender the mortgagor settled the estate on himself for life; remainder to his wife (the mortgagee's sister) for life, remainder to the mortgagee in fee, subject to the trusts of the former conveyance: the mortgagor enjoyed the premises for many years without paying any interest, and then his wife; on her death the mortgagee entered and held for several years: Lord Thurlow, even against strong evidence of admissions on the part of the mortgagee, which had induced Lord Kenyon to hold that it was a continuing mortgage, held, that the mortgagee had an absolute title to the estate under the second surrender (c).

A mortgagee may purchase the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, but the court views such transactions with considerable jealousy, and will set aside a sale of the equity of redemption, where by the influence afforded by his incumbrance the mortgagee has purchased for less than others would have given, especially if there are other circumstances evidencing misconduct in his obtaining the purchase (d).

A mortgagee is not bound to produce his mortgage deed or indeed any of the deeds in his possession to the mortgagor or any person

(a) Cash v. Kennion, 11 Ves. 315-16; the case turned upon who was to pay the commission on remittances to pay the debts: and see Cockerell v. Barber, 16 Ves. p. 465; as to the principles to be applied to this subject, see Voet ad Pandect. lib. xii. tit. i. 15.

(b) See Smith v. Valence, 1 Rep. Ch. 170; Goodtitle v. Bailey, Cowp. R. 601; Tasker v. Small, 3 My. & Cr. 70.

(c) Perry v. Marston, 2 Bro. 399.

(d) Lord Redesdale, Webb v. Rorke, 2 Scho. & Lef. 673.

claiming under him, until payment of the principal and interest due, and his costs, though the application may be made bonâ fide only with a view to ascertain the amount secured, the rate of interest, and other particulars with a view to paying off the mortgage (a); but where a mortgagee, who is a party to a suit, consents to a sale of the mortgaged property; he must produce and leave in the Master's office the title deeds which are necessary in order to complete such sale (b).

If the mortgage is made by a tenant in common, and he files a bill against the other tenants in common for a partition, the mortgagee is not a necessary party to such a bill if the mortgage embraces the entirety, as he would be if his mortgage only embraced a part of the estate (c).

An assignment of a mortgage is an assignment of the debt; the right to receive the debt is incident to the mortgaged estate, and necessarily passes by the assignment of it, and it is not necessary that notice should be given to the mortgagor (d). Where a mortgagee devises the money it may on the context carry his interest in the land (e); but it is not to be taken as an universal rule that a devise of the money will carry the land (f). A gift of a mortgage security for money, is a gift of all the testator's interest in the money and the security, and will therefore pass the fee (g). The general rule appears to be that where the testator devises all his real estates, whatsoever and wheresoever, the legal estate in the mortgaged premises will pass by the will unless a different intention is to be collected from the context (h); but it would seem that a general or even particular devise of the mortgaged lands will not of itself have the effect of carrying the beneficial interest in the mortgage (i).

It has been held that if a person takes an assignment of a mortgage carrying the legal estate, making a further advance at the time, and he

(a) Browne v. Lockhart, 10 Sim. 421, 425: the Vice-Chancellor of England there states the effect and principle of Latimer v. Neate, 4 Cl. & Fin. 570; he held that the Anon. case, Mosely, 246, is not law; et v. inf. Sect. iii.

(b) Livesey v. Harding, 1 Beav. 343.

(c) Swan v. Swan, 8 Price, p. 518; and see, on this subject, Story v. Johnson, 2 Yo. & Coll. 586. As to the proper Parties to suits for Redemption and Foreclosure, v. infra, Sect. v.

(d) Sir J. Leach, Ex parte Monro, Buck, 302; Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 411.

(e) Silberschildt v. Schiott, 3 Ves. & B. 49.

(f) See Ram on Assets, 521-2.

(g) Renvoize v. Cooper, 6 Mad. 373; Sir J. Leach, Mather v. Thomas, 6 Sim. 115, 120; and see Ex parte Barber re Tyas, 5 Sim. 454; Galliers v. Moss, 9 Barn. & Cr. 267, to the contrary, is observed upon in each of these cases; and see 1 Jarm. on Wills. 650.

(h) Lord Braybroke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417, 421; and the other cases, Ram on Assets, 525-6; et v. Ex parte Brettell, 6 Ves. 577; Ex parte Barber, 5 Sim. 451.

(i) See 1 Jarman on Wills, pp. 633-7; Mr. Jarman there examines the cases cited in Ram on Assets, 527, note (n), from which Mr. Ram concludes that a particular devise will carry the beneficial interest.

is informed of the existence of a settlement on the marriage of the mortgagor, but as part of the same information it is stated that such settlement does not include the mortgaged estate, he may hold for the further advances against the persons entitled under the settlement (a).

The general rule is that if an assignment of the mortgage is made with the concurrence of the mortgagor, the interest paid by the assignee to the mortgagee shall be considered as principal if included in the mortgage as such; but where it is assigned without the consent of the mortgagor, the assignee takes it upon the same terms, and subject to the like equities as it stood in the hands of the assignor (b); though this admits of distinctions upon particular circumstances (c). To convert interest into principal the interest must first become due, and then there must be an agreement in writing signed to make it principal, at least so as to affect the estate, and the interest cannot even then be turned into principal to the prejudice of subsequent incumbrances of which the mortgagee has notice (d). On costs of renewal and the like on which the original mortgagee would be entitled to claim interest, the assignee standing in his place will of course also be entitled to claim interest (e). If a mortgagee in possession assigns over his mortgage without the assent of the mortgagor, the mortgagee is bound to answer the profits, both before and after the assignment, though assigned only for his own debt; for he is under a trust to answer the profits of the pledge, and it is a breach of trust to assign such pledge to a person who is insolvent (f). If the mortgagee assigns the mortgage as a security for his own debt he is in the condition of a surety, and he may insist either that proceedings be taken to realize the security or that the creditor shall release him from all beyond what the mortgage may produce (g).

The purchaser of a mortgage, particularly if he be a creditor, as a general rule has a right to claim against the mortgagor, and all de-

(a) Jones v. Smith, 1 Phill. 244; see additional note, No. 2.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Ashenhurst v. James, 3 Atk. p. 271; the cases in the notes show that at one time it was considered that it was not necessary that the mortgagor should be a party: Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. J. 118, 125, 127; Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. 264; Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Mad. 481; Ex parte Monro, Buck, p. 303; 1 Eq. Abr. 328, pl. 2, but the reference is erroneous. The original mortgagee is therefore a proper party to a bill for redemption; 2 Eq. Abr. p. 594, pl. 3; et v. infra. Mr. Coote, referring to Chambers v. Goldwin, adds, "As well in respect to payments before as after the assignment," p. 371: but see Bradwell v. Catchpole, 3 Swanst. 79, 80, n.; there the mortgagee had money enough in his hands to satisfy the mortgage, but the Lord Keeper would not consider the mortgage as satisfied.

(c) Lord Cowper, Lord Ossulton v. Lord Yarmouth, 2 Salk. 449; 1 Vern. 169, n.

(d) Digby v. Craggs, Ambl. 612; 2 Eden, 200; Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. 128.

(e) See Coote, 372; and Procter v. Cooper, Prec. Ch. 116.

(f) 1 Eq. Abr. 328, pl. 2; supra.

(g) Gurney v. Seppings, 1 C. P. Coop. R. 12, on appeal.

living title under him, the full amount of what is due on the security, whatever he may have given for it; he takes the risk, and therefore is allowed the gain, if any (a); but an heir, a trustee, an agent, or an executor, can only claim the amount which he gave for it, unless he has bought in that security to protect one of his own (b).

Where the mortgagee in fee on the death of the mortgagor bought in the widow's dower, it was held that the heir of the mortgagor should have the benefit of it on his bringing a bill to redeem; on this principle, that the mortgagee is but a trustee for the mortgagor after his money is paid (c).

If the guardian of an infant compounds debts, the infant will have the benefit of it (d).

It has been established by the House of Lords, that a mortgage may be the subject of a Donatio mortis causâ; the delivery of the mortgage deeds will be sufficient; the real and personal representatives will be trustees for the donee (e).

The mortgage, as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, is a mortgage of the mortgagor's entire interest, saving only the rights of prior incumbrancers, so that if the mortgagor pay off any such prior incumbrance it enures for the benefit of the subsequent mortgagees (f): and if a mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption, he cannot set up his mortgage against any other incumbrances of which he had notice at the time of the purchase (g).

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 53; Lord Cowper, Anon. 1 Salk. 155; and see Bromley v. Holland, 5 Ves. 620; and S. C. 7 Ves. 13.

(b) Darcy v. Hall, 1 Vern. 48; 3 P. W. 251, note; Lancaster v. Evors, 10 Beav. 166, and the cases in the note; and see Coote, 567-8; Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 54.

(c) Baldwyn v. Banister, 3 P. W. 251, n.; v. supra, p. 645.

(d) Powell v. Glover, 3 P. W. 251, note.

(e) Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bli. N. S. p. 497, reversing Sir J. Leach's decree; see Sir E. Sugden's observations on this decision, Law of Prop. p. 447.

(f) See Frazer v. Jones, 5 Hare, p. 481; and Watts v. Symes, xiii. Jur. p. 245, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, where the previous authorities are cited.

(g) Allen v. Knight, Lord C., xi. Jur. 529; S. C. on original hearing, 5 Hare, 272; Greswold v. Marsham, 2 Ch. Ca. 170; Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Meriv. 210; Brown v. Stead, 5 Sim. 535; Parry v. Wright, 5 Russ. 142; 1 Sim. & St. 369; Smith v. Phillips, 1 Keen, 694; Frazer v. Jones, 5 Hare, 482. Sir E. Sugden thinks that Toulmin v. Steere went beyond the previous cases, Llo. & Go. temp. Sugd. p. 251, but it has not been disturbed. But a devisee of the equity of redemption may keep up his security; Forbes v. Moffatt, 18 Ves. 384.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

Emblements.—Supra, p. 646.

Where it is said, said Sir J. Leach, that as between mortgagor and mortgagee the mortgagee is not entitled to emblements, the meaning is, that where the mortgagor has personally occupied the premises, and the actual possession is afterwards delivered to the mortgagee by the sheriff or otherwise, the growing crops which are found on the premises become part of the security, and may be applied to his own use; but the principle does not apply to the case where the growing crops have been carried off by the mortgagor before the mortgagee obtains possession, and between the time of his demand and recovery of possession: Ex parte Temple, 1 Gl. & J. 216, and see the remainder of the judgment; this point is material in regard to the taking of the account between the mortgagor and mortgagee, which will be treated of hereafter.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Notice as affecting Priority.

In Jones v. Smith, stated supra, p. 656, Sir James Wigram's decision was confirmed by Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst; that case was brought to the attention of Lord Cottenham in the late case of Penny v. Watts, (3rd April, 1849,) on an appeal from the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. From some observations which fell from Lord Cottenham in the course of the argument, it would seem that his Lordship does not approve of the decision in that case; probably his Lordship's judgment will be given before the section on Notice, infra, Sect. viii., is printed; if so, it will be there stated. Penny v. Watts involves the important question, whether the fact of possession is to be considered as constructive notice of any title in the person in possession, beyond that in respect of which he is actually in possession; for instance, of a contract for the purchase of a reversionary interest in the estate.

The observation above alluded to was this, that if on an application to the court for payment of money belonging to the wife to the husband on her consent, it is stated in the affidavit which is required in such cases, that there is a settlement but that it does not include the fund in question, the court is never satisfied with that statement, but requires the settlement to be produced: see Britten v. Britten, 9 Beav. 143, and the cases cited in the note; Bowman v. Bell, 1 C. P. Coop. temp. Cottenham, 331.

The judgment in Penny v. Watts has now (22 April, 1849) been delivered, and no doubt will soon be reported: I collected from the judgment that his Lordship considered that the facts, if proved, would show that the party had actual notice of one instrument, which ought to have put him on inquiry, and then he would have been informed of the existence of the one which was sought to be put in force against him, citing Taylor v. Baker, 5 Price, 310. This view of the case rendered it unnecessary to consider the subject of notice from possession; no notice was taken of Jones v. Smith in the judgment. As to Notice, v. infra, Sect. viii.

SECTION III.—Doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to Proceeding for Redemption—Who may redeem.

Mode of Proceeding to effect Redemption.

What Persons are entitled to redeem.

In case of Escheat.

Trustee and Cestui que Trust.

Troughton v. Binkes, 6 Ves.

Construction of Clause reserving Right of Redemption.

Mortgage of Estate of Wife.

Redemption of Estate of Insolvent.

Mortgage in Exercise of a Power.

Redemption by Cestui que Trust.

The Mortgagee may redeem the Prior Incumbrancers.

All Arrears of Interest due must be paid.

Owner of Part of the Estate mortgaged must redeem the Whole.

Person who has no Interest must not be joined with one who has.

Title must be established before a Person will be permitted to redeem.

Bill to redeem not to be brought till Time for Payment has expired.

Terms to which the Mortgagor must submit, the same whether he sues or is sued.

Mortgagee cannot dispute his Mortgagor's Title.

Primâ facie, the Mortgagor must pay the Costs of obtaining a Re-conveyance.

Mortgagee will not be compelled to produce Deeds or disclose his Title.

Mortgagor cannot require an Assignment of the Debt.

Dismissal of Bill to redeem operates as a Foreclosure.

Bill by second Mortgagee of Estate in Jamaica.

THE only mode by which the right of redemption can be enforced or extinguished (independently of the operation of length of time), as will have been seen, is, from its very nature, through the medium of the Court of Chancery. As regards Redemption the course is by a bill in the Court of Chancery, filed by the mortgagor or those claiming an interest in the estate through him; and the right to extinguish this equity is by a bill for Foreclosure in the same court. Foreclosure will be the subject of the next Section.

It has been stated that no person will be admitted to come into equity for a redemption but he that is entitled to the legal estate of the mortgagor, unless a special case is made (a); but this rule must be understood in a very extended sense. It may be stated generally that every person claiming any interest legal or equitable in the property mortgaged under or through the mortgagor, by conveyance, by operation of law or otherwise, that is, in privity of title, has a right to redeem the property in order to make his own claims available, whether those who may have a prior claim to redeem are willing to proceed or not (a): all titles at law that are not directly against conscience, said Lord Chancellor Somers, shall be assisted here to a redemption (b). The party primarily entitled to redeem is he who would have been entitled to redeem at law: where an administrator had mortgaged leaseholds belonging to his intestate, reserving the equity of redemption to himself, his executors, &c., his personal representative, and not the representative of the intestate, was held to be the party to redeem (c): the administrator, it was said, had aliened the whole interest, and was not possessed in auter droit of any part of it, the demand against him being personal in respect of the assets come to his hands (d); but the personal representative of the administrator would clearly hold the mortgaged property when redeemed as trustee for the intestate's estate (e). The following (f) may be given as instances of the kinds of interests to which the right to redeem has been extended.

(a) Francklyn v. Fern, Barnardist. p. 30, nised; Troughton v. Binkes, 6 Ves. 575; and two previous cases are there cited and recognised; see Utterson v. Mair, 2 Ves. J. p. 95; 4 Bro.

Of course the mortgagor, his heirs, or his executors, according to the nature of the property mortgaged, and his assigns, including all subsequent incumbrancers to whom he has mortgaged the equity of redemption, may redeem.

A person claiming under a deed void as being voluntary against a subsequent mortgagee, may redeem the mortgage, as the voluntary deed was binding against the mortgagor (g). In a case where a person had bought an equity of redemption which had been abandoned for fifteen years, for an inconsiderable sum, imagining that from some knowledge of law he might be able to unravel a great number of circumstances, and by that means entitle himself to a redemption and make it valuable, being what has been called a "prowling assignee;"

p. 270; and Doran v. Simpson, 4 Ves. 651; Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, i. p. 332; and see the cases cited as exceptions to the rule, in Coventry's note to Powell on Mortgages, i. p. 332, a; and see Coote, 625.

(a) 2 Fonbl. 268; Butler's note, No. 105, Co. Litt. 208; et v. infra.

(b) Packington v. Barrow, Prec. Ch. 218.

(c) Butler v. Bernard, 2 Freem. 139; and see Skeffington v. Whitehurst, 3 Yo. & Coll. 1; Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 377.

(d) 2 Freem. ubi supra.

(e) And see Skeffington v. Budd, 9 Cl. & Fin. 219; vii. Jur. 814, Lord Campbell. Of the power of the personal representative to dispose of the personal estate of a testator or intestate, v. supra, p. 373, et seq.

(f) The earlier instances are chiefly taken from Powell on Mortgages by Coventry, ch. xi.; others will be found in Mr. Coote's very useful work; et v. infra, p. 663, note (a).

(g) Rand v. Cartwright, 1 Ch. Ca. 59; 1 Vern. 293; 2 Fonbl. pp. 268-9.

Lord Hardwicke was of opinion that as the representatives of the mortgagor would have been entitled, the assignee was equally entitled to a redemption, though he put the assignee upon terms as to the account (a). Where a man before marriage agreed to leave his intended wife £1000, if she should survive him, and a bond in which the heirs were bound was given by him to her to secure it; she was decreed in equity to have the benefit of the bond, it being in the nature of a marriage agreement, although released at law by the marriage, and was let in as a bond creditor after the death of the husband to redeem a freehold and a copyhold estate mortgaged, both being joined in the mortgage (b). In Barthrop v. West (c), a creditor by judgment was permitted to set aside a voluntary conveyance as fraudulent as against him, and to redeem a mortgage term.

Generally any person entitled to the pendency of the profits may redeem (d). A tenant for years may put himself in the place of the mortgagor, and either himself redeem or get a friend to do it for him (e). A jointress may redeem, and although the jointure be secured only on part of the estate mortgaged, yet she may, indeed must if the mortgagee require it, redeem the whole; so she may if part of it be settled upon her after marriage (f). A dowress before the late Dower Act might redeem a term for years and hold over against the heir till satisfied (g); but not against a purchaser (h): now that the wife is dowerable of an equity of redemption in fee, she may of course redeem a mortgage in fee (i). One tenant in common of the equity of redemption may redeem (k).

A judgment creditor may redeem a mortgage of a Leasehold estate, but before the bill is brought to redeem a writ of execution must be sued out, for until that be done the judgment creditor has no lien on the estate (l). Although in general a judgment creditor cannot en-

(a) Anon. 3 Atk. 314.

(b) Acton v. Peirce, 2 Vern. 480; Prec. Ch. 237: in Bateman v. Bateman, (Prec. Ch. 198, but see the note appended,) a doubt is thrown upon the right of a bond creditor to redeem a mortgage for years, till judgment obtained against the heir; according to the modern doctrine, the executor would seem to be the proper person to redeem on behalf of all the creditors; see Troughton v. Binkes, 6 Ves. p. 575, infra.

(c) 2 Rep. Ch. 62.

(d) Jones v. Meredith, Bunb. 346.

(e) Dict. Keech v. Hall, Doug. R. 22; 2 Fonbl. 269.

(f) Howard v. Harris, 1 Vern. 33, 190; Vent. 364; Palmer v. Danby, 1 Eq. Abr.

219, pl. 6; Prec. Ch. 137; Haymer v. Haymer, 2 Vent. 343.

(g) Palmes v. Danby, Prec. Ch. 137; there the right of the dowress is stated generally: the doctrines on this subject may be seen in Butler's note to Co. Litt. 208, a.

(h) Swannock v. Lyford, Ambler, p. 6; 2 Fonbl. 112.

(i) Supra, vol. i. pp. 290, 501.

(k) Lord Cottenham, Wynne v. Styant, 2 Phill. 306; "which assumes," said his Lordship, "that, as against an incumbrancer, one is entitled to the whole."

(l) Shirley v. Watts, 3 Atk. 200; King v. Marissall, there cited; Burdon v. Kennedy, 3 Atk. 739; other cases are cited, 3 M. & C. 409; and see Redesdale on Pleading, 6, 126, 4th force his security against his debtor's equitable interest in Freehold estate without previously suing out an elegit (a), it has been held that a judgment creditor may before execution file a bill to redeem a mortgage of freehold estate (b), which is founded upon this, that inasmuch as the court finds the creditor in a condition to acquire a power over the estate by suing out the writ, it does what it does in all similar cases, it gives to the party the right to come in and redeem other incumbrances on the property (c). Tenant by elegit and by statute merchant may also redeem (d). Where a creditor, on the decease of the mortgagor his debtor, redeems a mortgage term, as he may in certain cases which will be noticed hereafter, he will be in a better condition than the executor (e), as a subsequent simple-contract debt cannot be tacked by the mortgagee against a creditor as it may against the executor (f).

In the case of Escheat, the right of redemption is not carried to the extent of allowing the lord on the death of a mortgagor, who has mortgaged in fee, to redeem the estate; for as the whole estate has passed from the mortgagor, the estate cannot escheat at law, and equity will not make for him a subject for the escheat to operate upon (g). But where a tenant in fee has mortgaged the estate for a term of years, and dies without heirs, so that there is an actual escheat of the inheritance to the lord by the grant being expended, then he may redeem the term; for the equity of redemption of the term being, as every equity of redemption is, an estate in the land, and as whatever estate or benefit the tenant retains which would have passed to his heirs if he had any and which could be the subject of grant, that, the lord as a general proposition may claim by escheat, the lord is considered as entitled to the benefit of the equity of redemption; the edit.; Duck v. Dixon, 17 July, 1819; supra, p. 643; and see Christian v. Field, 2 Hare, 182.

(a) Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 My. & Cr. 407; but see Lord Chancellor Sugden's observation on this case, Rolleston v. Morton, 1 Conn. & L. 257.

(b) Sharp v. Earl of Scarborough, 4 Ves. 538; and though the judgment be with stay of execution, Stonehewer v. Thompson, 2 Atk. 440, Saunders' note; and see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 378; but not against a purchaser, where there is a prior legal estate; Barrett v. Blake, 2 Ball & B. p. 357. In the same case Lord Manners held that a judgment creditor does not, by not proving under a decree for administration, lose his legal rights against the estate.

(c) Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 My. & Cr. 416. So, after the debtor is dead, such a judgment must be paid off, or the court could not make a title to the estate, ibid.; Tunstal v. Trappes, 3 Sim. 286: as to making judgment creditors Parties, vide infra, Section v., and Gordon v. Horsfall, xi. Jur. 571.

(d) Jones v. Meredith, Bunb. 346.

(e) For if he redeems, the very equity of redemption is assets for the payment of the simple-contract debt, so he must pay both; 1 P. W. 777; Anon. 2 Vern. 177; Demandray v. Metcalf, Prec. Ch. 419; v. infra, Sect. vii.

(f) Coleman v. Winch, 1 P. W. 777; and see Vanderzee v. Willis, 3 Bro. p. 22, to the same effect; et v. infra.

(g) Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, p. 201; Viscount Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 406-8.

lord was entitled to the benefit of an attendant term whilst such terms existed, so he is entitled, by paying off the mortgage, in effect to render the term attendant, and then it will be extinguished (a). The Crown or its grantee may redeem estates mortgaged which are forfeited by the attainder of the mortgagor (b); and if a mortgagee be attainted of high treason, a bill it seems may be filed against the Attorney-General to redeem: in such case the King cannot be compelled to convey, an amoveas manus only can be obtained (c).

As a general rule the Cestui que trust must redeem through his trustee; no creditor or annuitant or legatee of the mortgagor who has not a specific security upon the property mortgaged can file a bill to redeem, though the mortgaged property would if redeemed be applied, in a course of administration, in discharge of his claims. If, said Lord Wynford in giving judgment in White v. Parnther, in the Privy Council (d), an annuitant of the mortgagor might claim through him to redeem, every legatee of the mortgagor must have the same right of insisting against a mortgagee in possession that the mortgage debt is satisfied, and of calling on the mortgagee to give him an account of the proceeds of the estate; "But," added his Lordship, "from the principle laid down in Troughton v. Binkes (e), and the cases referred to by the Master of the Rolls in his judgment in that case, I think that the mortgagor or his heirs (f) only can sue the mortgagee for an account and redemption, unless it can be shown that they and the

(a) Viscount Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 403, 404, 407, 408: that the lord was entitled to the benefit of an attendant term was established (whether strictly according to principle or not is a question, ibid. p. 404); Thrupton v. Attorney-General, 1 Vern. p. 340. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in the above-cited case of Viscount Downe v. Harris, observed, that if Evans v. Brown, 5 Beav. 114, (an important case as to the liabilities of lands, which have escheated for want of heirs, to the late tenant's debts,) were well decided, the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, (supra, vol. i. pp. 174, 295,) had in fact created the very priority between the lord of the manor and the termor, the alleged want of which was the foundation of the defence in that case. The leading cases, in regard to who has the right to redeem, are brought together in the argument of the case of Viscount Downe v. Morris.

(b) Attorney-General v. Crofts, 4 Bro. P. C. 136; Lovell's case, cited by Sir T. Clarke, Master of the Rolls, 1 Eden, 210.

(c) See Pawlett v. Attorney-General, Hard. 465; the decision of the court is not stated in the report, but from the remarks of Sir Thos.

Clarke, Lord Mansfield and Lord Keeper Henley, in Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Bl. Rep. 145, it may be inferred that the demurrer was overruled; and see Hodge v. Attorney-General, 3 Yo. & Coll. 342. The cases on the subject of Equities which may be enforced against the crown, are collected in Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 432, et seq. The provisions of the act 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, (supra, vol. i. pp. 177, 289; and supra, page 6 of this volume,) respecting the escheat or forfeiture of property holden in trust, do not of course affect such cases. In Rogers v. Maule, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 6, the mortgagor had died without heir, the mortgagee for a term of years being willing to take the estate in discharge of his mortgage, there being no other fund to pay him, it was so decreed, by consent, with liberty for him to apply to the crown for a grant of the fee-simple: the bill was for the administration of the estate of the mortgagor.

(d) 1 Knapp, 229.

(e) 6 Ves. 573.

(f) Meaning those in whom the right to the estate is vested by descent or otherwise, subject to the claims of the legatee.

mortgagee are in collusion to prevent creditors or legatees from recovering what is due to them from the mortgagor's property (a). Insolvency on the part of the executor or trustee is, it seems, also a sufficient ground for the creditors or legatees, or cestuis que trust, to sue (b); in all such cases the executor or trustee must of course be a party: but a creditor of an insolvent debtor cannot file a bill on behalf of himself and the other creditors to redeem on an allegation of collusion between the party sought to be redeemed and the assignee; the course is to have the assignee removed (c).

If the tenant for life procures an assignment of the mortgage, or if the mortgagee purchases the interest of the tenant for life, it is by no means clear that the remainderman can, without the consent of the tenant for life, redeem the mortgage vested in him (d); but whether he can or cannot time will not run against the remainderman if he do not redeem during the tenancy for life (e).

It has before been observed that it sometimes happens that by the language of the proviso for redemption, the right to redeem is limited to a person who had either no interest or a partial interest only in the land at the time of the mortgage, and that from this circumstance it becomes doubtful whether the person to whom the equity of redemption is thus limited does not acquire under the limitation the beneficial ownership of the equity of redemption; or at least a greater interest in it than he had in the land before the mortgage. Speaking generally, a strong indication of intention is necessary to transfer the beneficial ownership of the equity of redemption from the person entitled to the beneficial ownership of the estate at the time of the mortgage, or to vary his rights (f); but the reservation expressed in the deed must be taken to be what was intended by the parties, unless there be something in the character of the parties that necessarily rebuts that pre-

(a) As to collusion and refusal on the part of the trustee or executor to sue, see Barker v. Birch, 1 De Gex & Sm. 376, 388; see the additional note.

(b) Burroughs v. Elton, 11 Ves. 29; Utterston v. Mair, 2 Ves. J. p. 98; Baddeley v. Curwen, 2 Coll. 151, was cited before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Barker v. Birch, 1 De Gex & Sm. 382, as to the same effect; but his Honour said, he did not consider any such point to have been decided in that case. It was alleged, in that case, that it had been decided in an unreported case, that neglect on the part of the executor is not sufficient if he be solvent; p. 380. The executors, it is to be observed, represent the Residuary legatee, equally as the creditors and specific and general legatees; see the cases cited, Calvert, p. 23.

(c) Heath v. Chadwick, 2 Phill. 650; the authorities on the subject are collected by Lord Cottenham in that case; p. 652.

(d) See the dict. of Lord Langdale, Raffety v. King, 1 Keen, 618, referring to Ravald v. Russel, 1 Yo. 19.

(e) Raffety v. King, ubi sup.; and Corbett v. Barker, 1 Anst. 138; 3 Anst. p. 755; and Reeve v. Hicks, 2 Sim. & St. 403; and Ravald v. Russel, supra.

(f) Butler's note, No. 106, Co. Litt. 208.

sumption (a): where the husband and wife are dealing with the wife's estate, there is something which rebuts the presumption that the equity of redemption should go to the husband's heirs (b). The executors of the husband were held to be entitled to the equity of redemption of a term purchased by him, after marriage, to himself and his wife and the survivor and the executors, &c., of such survivor, and afterwards assigned by him on mortgage without the wife joining in the mortgage, as the mortgage was considered a reduction into possession (c); but where the term has originally belonged to the wife, unless there be something to indicate a plain intention to the contrary, the transaction will be treated as intended only to have the effect of a mortgage, so that the equity of redemption will survive to the wife (d). As regards Borough English and Gavelkind lands, the equity of redemption will follow the descent of the lands (e).

Generally an insolvent cannot file a bill to redeem; the assignee is the proper person; but in a late case the plaintiff, an insolvent debtor, having paid his debts, but being unable from technical difficulties on the construction of the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, to obtain a release of his estate, filed a bill to redeem, which was not demurred to but came to a hearing, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the bill might be sustained; the assignees did not object (f).

If the mortgage be made in the exercise of a Power, the persons claiming in default of appointment may redeem (g).

Every person who has a right to redeem the mortgagor, may redeem any prior incumbrancer on payment of the principal, interest, and costs due to him, the redeeming party being also liable to be redeemed by those below him, who are all liable to be redeemed by

(a) Anson v. Lee, 4 Sim. p. 379 (1 Sugd. Pow. 345-7); and see Barnett v. Wilson, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 418.

(b) V. supra, pp. 306-7, 643; Anson v. Lee, supra; Ruscombe v. Hare, 6 Dowl. 1; 2 Bli. N. S. p. 192; Sugd. Law of Prop. 172-3; Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bli. p. 104, (1 Sugd. Pow. 348-9). "It is important in practice," says Sir E. Sugden, Law of Prop. p. 176, "to keep in view what really was the ground upon which the case of Jackson v. Innes was decided," and which Sir Edward clearly points out.

(c) Watts v. Thomas, 2 P. W. 365; v. supra p. 475.

(d) Clarke v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 221, 230; see, as to the construction of an equity of redemption, reserved in a mortgage executed by a widow, under a power reserved in her marriage settlement, Barnett v. Wilson, vii. Jur. 593.

(e) Fawcett v. Lowther, 2 Ves. 304.

(f) Preston v. Wilson, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, xi. Jur. 201; 5 Hare, 185. In this case there are some important observations of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, as to the Court of Chancery not interfering with the jurisdiction committed to the Court of Bankruptcy: and see, on that subject, Saxton v. Davis, 18 Ves. 72, 82-3; and on the point as to giving relief at the hearing when the suit might have been stopped in limine by Demurrer, see Wilson v. Short, 6 Hare, 385.

(g) Coote, 628, citing Innes v. Jackson, 16 Ves. p. 367; but quære whether that was the case intended to be referred to.

the mortgagor (a). If a prior mortgagee omits to bring an ejectment or to obtain possession, and the interest runs in arrear, a subsequent mortgagee shall notwithstanding not be allowed to redeem him without paying the whole interest which has so run on, because, though the second mortgagee could not enter, he was not without remedy, for he might have brought a bill to redeem, and so have had the estate to himself; and if he did not choose to enter he might have applied for a receiver to keep down the interest: though the court will not in general grant such an application, unless when the prior mortgagee will not enter (b). Even if the mortgagee suffers the arrear to run on with a design to get the estate on which he lent his money, which may be called an ill intent, yet shall he be at liberty to claim the whole of the interest due (c).

The owner of the equity of redemption of part of the estate in mortgage cannot separately redeem his part: the mortgagee has a right to insist that the whole of the mortgaged estate shall be redeemed together; else, as Sir Thomas Plumer observed, if the estate were sold in twenty lots, there might be twenty bills (d). So if there are two separate mortgages of different estates to the same person, the purchaser of one estate cannot redeem that estate without redeeming the other, provided the legal estate be absolute in the mortgagee (e), when the mortgage-money is advanced by two, and one is dead, his personal representatives must be parties to a bill to redeem, as the interest of the deceased in the mortgage-money devolves upon them (f).

A point of some nicety upon the right of a second mortgagee of a share of the estate to redeem a prior mortgage of the whole without redeeming a subsequent mortgage to the same person of the other shares of the estate was decided in the late case of Thorneycroft v. Crockett. The bill was filed by the mortgagee claiming the first and third mortgages for a foreclosure (g); in 1821, a mortgage (first

(a) In Seton on Decrees, p. 161, the form of the decree in such cases is stated.

(b) Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. 267-8; and see Loftus v. Swift, 2 Scho. & Lef. p. 642; et v. infra, p. 689, as to Receivers.

(c) Aston v. Aston, ubi sup.; v. inf. Sect. vi., as to the effect of length of time.

(d) Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 134; Palk v. Clinton, 12 Ves. 48, 58; Henley v. Stone, 3 Beav. 355, 356.

(e) Shuttleworth v. Laycock, 1 Vern. 245, case of heir; Margrave v. Le Hooke, 2 Vern. p. 207; Pope v. Onslow, 2 Vern. 286, (but see mortgage) was made by Henry Crockett, who was trustee for his brother John of two-thirds of the estate, to Messrs. Legge and Co. of the whole estate for 1000 years to secure 6000*l.* and interest, which was divided between Henry and John. Legge and Co., in 1826, transferred this mortgage to Baldwin—in 1831, Henry Crockett conveyed his one-third to trustees to secure 12,000*l.*: he then died leaving his brother Robert his heir. In 1833, Robert as such heir, and John and his son, who claimed under him, mortgaged John's two-thirds of the estate (third mortgage) to Attwood and Co. (subject to the mortgage term of 1000 years) in fee to secure 2000*l.* and interest. In January, 1838, Attwood and Co. transferred this mortgage to the plaintiff Thorneycroft, and afterwards in the same month Baldwin transferred his mortgage term of 1000 years to Thorneycroft, so that the term, as to John's two-thirds, became merged in the inheritance; Thorneycroft therefore stood as first mortgagee of Henry's original one-third for 1000 years, and subject to this term Henry's trustees held their security for 12,000*l.* As to the other two-thirds (John's), Thorneycroft was as mortgagee seised of the two-thirds in fee to secure the first and third mortgages—the mortgage for 12,000*l.* did not affect these two-thirds. Thorneycroft, who was plaintiff in the suit, did not make any general case of tacking, but he insisted that he was entitled to tack the mortgage for 2000*l.* to the mortgage debt for 6000*l.* (first mortgage), and that the defendants, the persons entitled to the 12,000*l.* mortgage, must redeem both. The defendants contended that they were only bound to redeem the 6000*l.* mortgage, the only one prior to their own: and so it was decreed by the Vice-Chancellor of England, and an appeal to the House of Lords was dismissed, and the decree was affirmed with costs (a).

1 Atk. 300,) cases of assignees; and Ex parte Carter, Ambl. 733; Triburgh v. Lord Pomfret, and Titley v. Davis, 15 Vin. Ab. p. 447, there cited; Cator v. Charlton, cited 2 Ves. Jun. 377; Collett v. Munden, cited ibid.; Ireson v. Denn, 2 Cox, 425; cases of purchasers: and see the dict. in Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 376, and Coote, 484-9; et v. supra.

(f) Vickers v. Cowell, 1 Beav. 529, 531; v. infra, Section v.

(g) Sir E. Sugden, Law of Prop. p. 582; Printed Cases, D. P. 1848; S. C. xiii. Jurist, but on other points.

It is a general rule applicable to suits of this, as indeed of every other description, that persons who have no interest must not be joined with those who have an interest, for the plaintiffs must stand or fall together; nor can a bill be filed by two, each claiming to be solely entitled, seeking that such one of them as may appear to be entitled may be at liberty to redeem or foreclose, not even it seems where it is alleged that whichever may turn out to be entitled they have agreed to divide the subject between them (b).

(a) Sugd. Law of Prop. 583; the reasons of the respondent, which notice the decree more particularly, and which the House of Lords adopted, are there stated.

(b) Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 135; King of Spain v. Machado, 4 Russ. 225; Delondre v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 237; Richardson

v. Nixon, 2 Jo. & L. 250; and see Calvert on Parties, p. 110; and infra, Section v. In such case the two parties should first mutually convey their interests in such way that each may be entitled to a moiety of the equity of redemption in undivided shares; then there would be no objection to their joining as plaintiffs.

A person having an alleged title must establish it before he can be permitted to redeem: no person will be permitted to redeem at his peril, leaving the rightful owner to recover against him (a): but where a bill was filed for redemption by a person claiming to be heir-at-law of the intestate mortgagor, against a person who, after notice of the plaintiff's claim, had obtained an assignment of a mortgage term, and who also claimed to be heir-at-law; the court, being satisfied on the evidence of the plaintiff's heirship, at once decreed a redemption (the Court of Chancery being competent for the purposes of the suit to judge of fact equally as a jury) (b), and would not send the question to a jury: as the defendant, who was one of the personal representatives of the intestate, had obtained possession as mortgagee, he was precluded from asserting any other title in that suit; but the decree would not prevent him from asserting his title as heir, at law or in equity, in a proceeding properly framed for such purpose; in that suit he would have his principal and interest paid, and after that he would still be in a condition to contest the plaintiff's claim as heir (c): the defendant being personal representative as well as mortgagee, the decree went on to direct that the plaintiff should have satisfaction out of the personal estate in a due course of administration for what he as heir should pay to the defendant in redemption of the mortgage (d).

A purchaser of an equity of redemption cannot file a bill to redeem an existing mortgage until his purchase is completed. The rule—founded on the maxim, before referred to, that what ought to be done is considered as done—that by the contract of purchase the purchaser becomes in equity the owner of the property, applies only as between the parties to the contract, and cannot be extended so as to affect the interests of others: if it could, said Lord Cottenham, a contract for purchase of an equitable estate would be equivalent to a conveyance of it (e). An assignment of the equity of redemption made pendente lite is not open to the charge of maintenance (f).

It is now settled that the mortgagor cannot file a bill to redeem until after the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money has expired (g).

(a) Lomax v. Bird, 1 Vern. 182.

(b) See Lancashire v. Lancashire, 1 De Gex & Sm. 292; with one exception, namely, as to the validity of a will of real estate, ibid.

(c) Lloyd v. Wait, 1 Phill. 61, 68, 69.

(d) Ibid. pp. 70, 71.

(e) Lord Cottenham, Tasker v. Small, 3 My. & Cr. 69. The two contracting parties may, as I presume, of course join in seeking a redemption.

(f) Booth v. Creswick, vi. Jur. 1025.

(g) Brown v. Cole, 14 Sim. p. 428: no authorities were cited; the Vice-Chancellor of England decided on the general practice: see, on this subject, Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, pp. 93, 95, 379; but see Talbot v. Braddil, 1

It seems according to the modern doctrine—whatever difference there may have been in former times in the application of this maxim, that he who seeks for equity must do equity (a),—that there is now no distinction as to the equities to be administered between the case of a party coming as a plaintiff or being made a party as a defendant, at least as regards mortgagor and mortgagee. “It has always appeared to me,” said Sir J. Wigram, in the late case of Sober v. Kemp, 1848 (b), “that the terms on which a mortgagor or those claiming under him are entitled to redeem, must be the same whether they are to be ascertained in a suit for redemption or for foreclosure (c): it is truly said, that a plaintiff seeking equity must do equity; but in determining what is equity, the question is what are the duties or liabilities which his situation at the time of instituting the suit imposes, and not whether he is plaintiff or defendant on the record” (d): “As a general proposition,” said his Honour, “it may, I believe, be correctly stated, that a plaintiff will never in that character be compelled to give a defendant anything but what the defendant might as a plaintiff enforce, provided a cause of suit arose” (e).

Whether the defendants can by petition obtain a receiver against a mortgagor in possession on a bill filed by him to redeem, is doubtful (f).

A mortgagee can never refuse to restore to his mortgagor or those claiming under him, upon payment of what is due upon the mortgage, the estate which has been vested in him as mortgagee; to him it is immaterial whether the mortgagor's title is good or bad, and he is not at liberty to dispute it (g).

Primâ facie the mortgagor must bear the costs of obtaining a reconveyance of his property. It is incident to the right of the mortgagee to deal with the property for his own benefit, and therefore to deal with it in the ordinary way as with other property: he has a right to do the best he can to protect his estate in the case of his death, he is not bound to incur the peril of allowing his estate to descend to his heir-

Vern. p. 395, there the mortgage was dated in 1657, the time for redemption was fixed for 1688, the court inclined that the plaintiff should redeem before the time; but it appears to have been on the ground that the redemption ought not to have been so fettered; there were other special circumstances in the case: as to Time as a bar to redemption, v. infra, Section vi.

(a) V. supra, vol. i. p. 422.

(b) 6 Hare, 160.

(c) See Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 334.

(d) 6 Hare, 160; and see Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 5; et v. infra, p. 685.

(e) Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 4; and see the other cases cited by Mr. Calvert, 113, note (d); vide supra, p. 477, note (d), p. 485, note (b).

(f) Barlow v. Gains, 8 Beav. 329.

(g) Lord Cottenham, 3 My. & Cr. 70.

at-law; therefore if he devise the legal estate in the mortgage to trustees, and if any one or more of such trustees cannot be found, and it becomes necessary to apply to the court under the stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60, in order that some person may be appointed to convey in lieu of such trustee, the mortgagor or his representatives must pay the expense of such proceedings, if they seek to redeem (a). If the deeds come into the custody of the Court of Chancery by means and in the course of the due administration of the estate of the mortgagee, the costs of obtaining them out of court upon the mortgage being paid off must be defrayed by the mortgagor (b). But if the mortgagee has mixed up the mortgaged property with the title to other property, and it becomes necessary to extricate the one from the other, the additional costs so incurred must be borne by the mortgagee (c).

Where the heir of the mortgagee is an infant, the mortgagor must pay the expense of the proceeding under the stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60, to enable the infant to convey (d); but it is established by authority, though apparently contrary to principle, that the preliminary proceedings in order to obtain a conveyance from a lunatic mortgagee must be borne by the lunatic's estate (e).

It is fully settled that where a mortgagor is proceeding against his mortgagee, a court of equity will not compel the mortgagee to produce his securities, except on payment of what is due to the mortgagee (f): if the bill even pray a declaration that the mortgage is invalid that is not sufficient to induce the court to order an inspection (g); nor where the mortgagee, pending a suit for redemption, has assigned the mortgage, can the assignee be compelled to produce the deed on an allegation that it was made for fraudulent purposes and in order to embarrass the plaintiff in the prosecution of his suit (h): but if the mortgagor has consented to a sale he must produce the deeds for the purpose of making out the title (i). The mortgagee, who states that he is a mortgagee of part of the estate in question, is not bound to dis-

(a) King v. Smith, 6 Hare, 474.

(b) Burden v. Oldaker, 1 Coll. p. 105; Wetherell v. Collins, 3 Mad. 255.

(c) Capper v. Terrington, 1 Coll. 104; 6 Hare, 475; and see Midland Counties Railway Company v. Westcomb, 2 Railw. Ca. 211.

(d) Ex parte Ommaney, 10 Sim. 298.

(e) Ex parte Richards, 1 Jac. & W. 264; Ex parte Baker, Ex parte Clay, Shelford on Lunacy, p. 510; Re Townsend, 2 Phill. 348, Lord Cottenham; King v. Smith, 6 Hare, 474, 476: in Ex parte Marrow, Cr. & P. 142, Lord Cottenham expressed his dissatisfaction with

Ex parte Richards; but as it had been twice acted upon, his Lordship considered that the practice must be considered as settled; but see Re Lewes, 1 Hall & Tw. 123.

(f) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Bentinck v. Willink, 2 Hare, 8; v. supra, p. 654.

(g) Crisp v. Platel, 8 Beav. 62; and see Daniell's Pract. by Headlam, ii. 1683; but see Bassford v. Blakesley, 6 Beav. 131, as to the right to have the inspection of a deed impeached as fraudulent.

(h) Gill v. Eyton, 7 Beav. 155.

(i) Livesey v. Harding, 1 Beav. 343.

cover of what part, as that would be to state the contents of his title deeds (a): but the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce ordered the production of an indorsement on the mortgage, the purport of which was set forth in the answer (b), the only question being the amount due, which depended upon the contents of the indorsement (c); and a mortgagee is bound to produce bills of exchange and promissory notes in his possession for the purpose of showing what is the amount of his debt (d); and the mortgagee must produce a deed which contains a recital amounting to constructive notice (e).

The mortgagor has no right to require the mortgagee to assign the mortgage-debt when it is paid off (f).

In all cases where a mortgagee is made a party to a suit by the mortgagor he is entitled to be redeemed (g), and if the bill be dismissed against him, it is equivalent to a foreclosure (h); but the mortgagor is not bound till decree, so that a dismissal for want of prosecution does not prevent his filing a new bill (i). A person interested in the equity of redemption may have a decree for the execution of a trust, without offering to redeem a person who stands in the character of mortgagee, but is not made a party in that character, but only on a charge that he claims an interest which is denied by the bill (k).

If the plaintiff in a bill for redemption do not pay the money at the time appointed by the court, the bill may be dismissed without notice (l), and such dismissal operates a foreclosure (m).

Even in Ireland and Jamaica, where the usual decree is a sale instead of a foreclosure, if a mortgagee is made a party by a subsequent incumbrancer the bill cannot be sustained, unless there be an offer to redeem the prior incumbrancer in the bill; the defect cannot be supplied by an offer at the bar (n).

(a) Addison v. Walker, 4 Yo. & Coll. 447.

(b) See, as to this point of pleading as connected with the right to Discovery, Hardman v. Ellames, 2 My. & K. 745, 758; Latimer v. Neate, 4 Cl. & Fin. 570; 11 Bli. N. S. 112, 156 (explained, 2 Phillips, 490-1); Wigr. on Discovery, pl. 437; but see Glover v. Hall, 2 Phill. 484.

(c) Phillips v. Evans, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 650; there were other special circumstances in the case.

(d) Gibson v. Hewett, 9 Beav. 293.

(e) Neesom v. Clarkson, C. P. Coop. Sel. Ca. 93, 96; 2 Hare, 166 (n); and see Addis v. Campbell, 1 Beav. 262.

(f) Lord Chancellor, Dunstan v. Patterson, 2 Phill. p. 345.

(g) Drew v. O'Hara, 2 Ball & B. 562, n;

Dalton v. Hayter, 7 Beav. 319.

(h) Cholmley v. Lady Oxford, 2 Atk. 267
Palk v. Clinton, 12 Ves. 62.

(i) Hansard v. Hardy, 18 Ves. 460.

(k) Dalton v. Hayter, 7 Beav. 319, 320; the defendant cannot by demurrer avoid discovering what the interest is that he claims, ibid. 321; see Hodgson v. Espinasse, 10 Beav. p. 473.

(l) Stuart v. Worrall, 1 Bro. 581; Seton on Decrees, 147.

(m) Faulkner v. Bolton, 7 Sim. 319.

(n) Balfe v. Lord, as reported 2 Dru. & W. 486; Gordon v. Horsfall, xi. Jurist, 573 a. Judgment of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Cornwall in the Privy Council; Troughton v. Binkes, 6 Ves. 573, and Martinez v. Cooper, 2 Russ. 198, there cited.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

What Conduct on the part of the Trustee or Executor will entitle the Cestui que Trust or Legatee, &c., to take upon himself to sue, supra, p. 664.

The subject alluded to in the text—namely, under what circumstances, as regards collusion or refusal or neglect of the party properly entitled to sue, so as to let in those who may have a general interest in the recovery of the property, as creditors claiming under a trust-deed or creditors or legatees claiming against the estate of a deceased debtor, to sue—was lately very fully discussed before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in the case above referred to, of Barker v. Birch, 1 De Gex & Sm. p. 388, and almost all the leading cases on the subject were there cited. The Vice-Chancellor, in giving judgment, said, that if the case ought to be considered as one turning merely on the existence or non-existence of proof as against Mr. Birch and Mr. Lawson, (the parties sought to be charged by the plaintiffs,) of actual refusal to sue, or collusion in fact on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Hilliard, the persons who were properly the parties to sue, or either of them, his Honour was far from thinking that the bill ought not to be dismissed; but his Honour's impression was that, assuming an actual refusal to sue not to be proved,—assuming collusion in fact also not to be proved,—and whether in general an honest refusal by an executor to institute a suit against a solvent person, reasonably alleged to be equitably indebted to his testator, is sufficient (1) or insufficient of itself to enable the universal legatee of that testator to sue the debtor in equity (if he is equitably indebted), making the executor also a defendant,—there were circumstances in that case, which was very special, to justify the giving to the plaintiffs a decree.

(1) Lancaster v. Evors, 4 Beav. p. 165, amongst other cases in which creditors and legatees had been held to have such right, had been cited: the Vice-Chancellor observed, during the argument, that Lord Eldon would hardly have spoken with so much caution and particularity as to Collusion, in Alsager v. Rowley, 6 Ves. p. 748, if a mere refusal to sue would have been sufficient.

SECTION IV.—Of the Remedies of the Mortgagee by Foreclosure and Sale.

Mode of Proceeding to Foreclose,

General Rules.

By whom and under what Circumstances a Bill to Foreclose.

Cases in which the Mortgagee may obtain a Sale.

Mortgagor dead, Payment out of Assets as Specialty Creditor.

When Bill is taken pro confesso, and the Estate is deficient.

Mortgagor Bankrupt.

Mortgage of Reversion.

of Advowson.

Mortgaged Estate situate in Ireland.

One of the Executors being Mortgagor.

Effect of Decree for Sale as respects the Costs of Sale.

Foreclosure of Copyholds.

Mortgage by Tenant in Tail.

Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74.

1 Will. IV. c. 36, § 15, Rule 13.

Decree against Tenant in Tail claiming under the Mortgagor.

Foreclosure or Sale against an Infant.

Day to show Cause.

Foreclosure against a Feme Covert.

against a Company.

Proceedings by Mortgagor on Covenant or Bond, after Foreclosure.

Opening the Foreclosure.

Lockart v. Hardy, 9 Beav.

Proceedings where the Mortgagor dies without an Heir, &c.

Stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60.

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 69.

Relative Rights of Mortgagor and Mortgagee the same in a Suit to Foreclose as in a Suit to Redeem as regards the Price of Redemption.

De Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare.

Interest.

3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42.

Stat. 7 Geo. II. c. 10, giving a summary mode of Relief where Proceedings are taken by the Mortgagee at Law and on Bills for Foreclosure.

Of enlarging the Time fixed for Payment in Bill for Foreclosure.

Recovery of Title Deeds in the hands of Second Mortgagee without Notice.

When a Receiver may be obtained by the Mortgagee.

Recognition of Title by Mortgagor or Mortgagee.

Receipts.

Mode of Relief where the Deeds are lost or destroyed.

Disclaimer by Provisional Assignee, &c., Effect of—Costs.

Requisites for completing the Foreclosure.

Assignment of Mortgage pending the Suit—Supplemental Bill—Costs.

Additional Note, Sober v. Kemp, before Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

THE right on the part of the mortgagee to redeem is, as we have seen, very amply protected; but it would have been very unreasonable to have kept this right entire without, on the other hand, enabling the mortgagee to compel the mortgagor to elect either to exercise this right or to have it extinguished; this has been effected by giving after the time fixed for payment has gone by, to the mortgagee and generally those claiming an interest in the mortgage under him the right—unless, as will be more particularly adverted to hereafter, the mortgagor or his representatives have been allowed to remain in possession for twenty years without payment of interest or any effectual acknowledgment of the mortgage (a)—to file a bill praying that the mortgagor may either redeem the estate or be foreclosed of his equity of redemption (b). It is no objection to the bill, that the mortgagee has taken the mortgagor in execution (c); but if he recovers the debt in the one way he cannot of course enforce it in the other (d). The mortgagee is not compelled to enter into possession as a preliminary, for that would subject him to an account, which the court will never force upon a mortgagee (e). An intermediate mortgagee is entitled to file a bill of foreclosure against the mortgagor and the subsequent incumbrancers (f).

There cannot be a partial foreclosure of a mortgage; thus, a person entitled to a part only of the mortgage money cannot file a bill to foreclose a portion of the estate (g): in one case where a trustee had lent trust money belonging to several persons, and the trustees refused to interfere, one of the cestuis que trust having filed a bill to foreclose making the trustees but not the other cestuis que trust

(a) As to the general doctrine of the court, on this point, see Christophers v. Sparke, 2 Jac. & W. 230, 235; Trash v. White, 3 Bro. 289: payment of interest rebuts the presumption arising from length of time, Loftus v. Swift, 2 Scho. & Lef. 642; and it might have been rebutted by other circumstances, Toplis v. Baker, 2 Cox, p. 119, 122-3, in the Exchequer: as to the effect of the new Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 40, vide infra, Sect. vi.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 604; as to the effect of a Tender, v. supra, p. 652.

(c) Davis v. Battine, 2 Russ. & M. 76.

(d) See Taylor v. Waters, 1 My. & Cr. 266, 272.

(e) Lord Penrhyn v. Hughes, 5 Ves. 106.

(f) Richards v. Cooper, 5 Beav. 304.

(g) Palmer v. Carlisle, 1 Sim. & St. p. 423; and see Lowe v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 368: where separate estates are mortgaged, by principal and surety, for the same debt, one cannot be separately foreclosed; Stokes v. Clendon, 3 Swanst. 150.

defendants, a decree was made for a foreclosure of one eighth of the estate, corresponding with the proportion of the plaintiff's share of the mortgage money (a); but Lord Thurlow would not act upon the decree unless by consent (b).

If there be two joint mortgagees, and one sues for foreclosure, the other refusing to join but being a party, the plaintiff is entitled to the common decree for foreclosure of the whole (c).

A case for foreclosure may occur in default of payment of the interest, though the time for payment of the principal has not arrived (d).

A subsequent mortgagee, after a prior mortgagee has been paid off, may file a bill to have a conveyance of the legal estate without praying for a foreclosure (e).

A bill for foreclosure may be filed by the mortgagee as incident to his rights as mortgagee, notwithstanding a notice to pay off and a tender; though if it shall turn out that the full amount due has been tendered to him, and due notice to pay him off had been given, he will have to pay the costs (f); and he may file such a bill, notwithstanding a decree for redemption, for the mortgagor notwithstanding the decree may make default, and it would therefore be unjust not to let the mortgagee act in regard to his securities as if he were to continue the owner of the mortgaged property (g).

The signing a receipt in full, and a delivery of the title deeds, the estate not having been reconveyed, will not prevent the mortgagee from filing a bill for foreclosure and for a restoration of the title deeds, if the amount in respect of which the receipt was given consisted in part of securities which have turned out not to be available (h).

In the case of a mortgagee whose security is composed both of land and of stock, or personal chattels or a policy, the decree to be made is, it seems, to direct that the mortgagee first realize his collateral securities, and afterwards to give the common decree of foreclosure as regards the real estate (i).

In a complicated case where there are different suits, the court will

(a) Montgomerie v. Marquis of Bath, 3 Ves. 560.

(b) See Mr. Vesey's note, 3 Ves. p. 560; v. infra, Section v. as to Parties.

(c) Davenport v. James, xii. Jur. 827.

(d) Burrowes v. Molloy, 2 Jo. & L. 526; Roddy v. Williams, 3 Jo. & L. 1, 3, 18, 23; this point however is not specifically adverted to, excepting in the marginal note; Stanhope v. Manners, 2 Eden, 197; Gladwyn v. Hitchman, 2 Vern. 135.

(e) Grugeon v. Gerrard, infra.

(f) V. supra, p. 652; and Roberts v. Williams, 4 Hare, 129.

(g) Judgment delivered by Maule, J., in Grugeon v. Gerrard, on appeal, in Duchy Court of Lancaster, 4 Yo. & Coll. 128, et seq.

(h) Teed v. Carruthers, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 31; and see the cases cited by the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, ibid. p. 40. But a subsequent security may be so taken as to be held to be a substitute, ibid. p. 39; Shore v. Shore, 2 Phill. 378.

(i) Dyson v. Morris, 1 Hare, 423-4.

make a decree for foreclosure, or such other decree or decrees as the justice of the case may require as between the various parties (a).

If a person has agreed for a given time not to foreclose the mortgagor, he is bound by it, and in that case he cannot file a bill to redeem a prior mortgagee, because he has no right to file such a bill without praying to foreclose the mortgagor (b).

The court will presume that an instrument purporting to be a security for money is a mortgage giving the ordinary remedies of foreclosure, unless the terms of the instrument exclude that construction (c); but where the contract is that a certain sum of money and interest shall be a charge on the estate, and if the same be not paid at a particular time the party entitled to the money shall have power to Sell the estate, there is no right of foreclosure arising out of such a contract; if the incumbrancer unnecessarily file a bill for the interference of the court he may be liable to costs (d).

Where there is a simple mortgage without a power of sale still a Sale instead of a foreclosure may be obtained by the mortgagee in certain cases (e). Thus, where the mortgage is in fee, and the mortgagor is dead, a bill may be filed by the mortgagee against the personal representative and the heir or devisee, for payment of the mortgage debt out of the personal estate as far as it will extend, and that the deficiency be raised by sale of the mortgaged estate (f); or that there may be a sale of the estate, and the deficiency made good out of the personal assets (g): the mortgagee filing the bill on behalf of himself and the other creditors does not lose any of the benefits which his mortgage confers (h). Where the personal estate of the deceased mortgagor is deficient, a mortgagee may pray a sale of the mortgaged premises, in the first instance, where the heir and personal representative are the same person; but Lord Thurlow held that if they are different persons, it is necessary first to have an account of the

(a) Dodd v. Lydall, 1 Hare, 333, 337; v. infra, p. 692.

(b) Coote, 599; Ramsbottom v. Wallis, Append. p. 704, there cited; Burrowes v. Molloy, 2 Jones & L. 521.

(c) Balfe v. Lord, 2 Dr. & W. 480, 488-9.

(d) Sampson v. Pattison, 1 Hare, 535-6; Dyson v. Morris, 1 Hare, p. 413; and see Viscount Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, p. 404; and Ex parte Barnett, in re Allen, viii. Jur. 366.

(e) See, on this subject, the cases collected by Mr. Seton, On Decrees, pp. 107, 174; and Coote, On Mortgages, 600, et seq.

(f) Daniel v. Skipwith, 2 Bro. 155; Hodg- son v. Parker, mentioned in note to ib. p. 154.

(g) See Seton on Decrees, 173-4; King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 239.

(h) Skey v. Bennett, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 405; Aldridge v. Westbrooke, 5 Beav. 188, 193; and see Wild v. Lockhart, infra; but see p. 653, supra, n. (h), as to interest. In Raikes v. Hall, cited 3 Yo. & Coll. 605, Lord Abinger refused to give relief to a person suing as mortgagee and general creditor, and put him to his election; and in Burney v. Morgan, 1 Sim. & St. p. 362, the Vice-Chancellor said that a mortgagee had no common interest with the creditors, and could not sue on their behalf.

personal estate (a); however a creditor by mortgage and collateral bond cannot sue, as sole specialty creditor for the purpose of obtaining payment out of the real assets, unless he make all parties interested in disputing that fact parties (b). An equitable mortgagee may also obtain a sale where the mortgagor is dead (c); but this subject will be treated of hereafter. If the mortgagee being out of possession sues as a creditor, on behalf of himself and others (d), he will not be permitted to restrain a person who is executor and trustee of the real estate from acting according to his judgment in the proper management of the property, and turning it to account, either by felling timber or otherwise; as a general creditor he will with the others have the benefit of whatever may be thus realized (e). Where the mortgagee of a leasehold having a covenant to pay, surrendered the lease with a view to a new lease being obtained, that arrangement being expressed to be without prejudice to any other security the mortgagee might have, and the new lease had not been assigned to him as had been agreed; though he could not foreclose, the covenant in the original mortgage was held not to be extinguished (f).

It was held by Sir J. Jekyl, M. R., that where an order is made for taking a bill for foreclosure pro confesso for want of an answer, and the estate is deficient in value to pay the incumbrance, a sale may be obtained in the first instance; but in ordinary cases it seems that the fact of the deficiency of the security will not alone warrant a decree for sale, though the mortgagor will naturally in such case sue on his specialty for the deficiency, and thus open the foreclosure if obtained; but the M. R. said it was often in such cases referred to a Master to set a value on the estate, and the plaintiff to take it pro tanto (g).

Where the mortgagor becomes bankrupt the mortgagee may obtain a sale under Lord Rosslyn's Order, 8th March, 1794 (h). Where the mortgage is of a dry reversion (i), or of an advow-

(a) Daniel v. Skipwith, 2 Bro. C. C. 155.

(b) White v. Hillacre, iv. Jur. 102; 3 Yo. & Coll. p. 609.

(c) Brockelhurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. p. 442; v. infra, Sect. x., Equitable Mortgages.

(d) See Seton on Decrees, p. 174.

(e) King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 243; see however supra, p. 648.

(f) Greenwood v. Taylor, 14 Sim. 505; and see Teed v. Carruthers, supra.

(g) Dashwood v. Bithazey, Moseley, 196; Curs. Canc. p. 356: according to the dict. of Lord Hardwicke, Lord Kinnoul v. Money, 3 Swanst. 208, n., the mortgagee may pray a sale, if he thinks the estate be a scanty security; but, as Mr. Coote has observed, how is the fact to be ascertained? see pp. 601, 602, 2nd edition: v. infra, Simmons v. Wood, 2 Hare,

p. 644.

(h) See Arch. Bank. Laws, by Flather, pp. 161-2, for the cases on this subject.

(i) Daniel v. Skipwith, 2 Bro. 155; How v. Vigures, 1 Ch. Rep. 33; but there the bill was against the heir. In Tasker v. Small, 6 Sim. 625, a person, tenant in tail in remainder, after a life interest, was empowered, by his marriage settlement, to raise 15,000*l.* by mortgage, annuity, or otherwise, and subject thereto, his interest in the estate was to be settled: it was held, by the Vice-Chancellor of England, that he was entitled to sell his entire interest, as it was not worth more than 15,000*l.*: ultimately however (see 3 My. & Cr. 63,) the bill was dismissed on an objection as to parties (see pp. 68, 71, as to the principal point).

son (a), the mortgagee may obtain a sale. Where the mortgaged estate is situate in Ireland, or in a colony where the course of the courts there is to decree a sale, if a suit be instituted by the mortgagee in the Court of Chancery here, it would seem that the proper course is to pray a sale: if there be already a suit in the court where the land is situate, and then a suit is brought here, and the accounts can be more conveniently taken in the latter suit, the court will restrain proceedings in the foreign suit till the accounts are taken, the mortgagor undertaking to consent to any order to be made in the foreign suit which this court may think reasonable (b). Where one of the executors is indebted to the testator on mortgage, if his co-executors should find it necessary to sue him they should pray a sale, not a foreclosure, the mortgagor having an interest in the mortgage as executor which would not be foreclosed (c).

A decree for sale of an incumbered estate instead of foreclosure, does not, primâ facie, alter the relative rights of the parties, the purchase-money is substituted for the estate, and as a general rule the security of the mortgagee is not to be diminished by deducting from it a proportionate part of the costs of the sale (d). If the decree for sale is conceded upon terms, in order to prevent the operation of the general rule the terms must appear (e); the sale may have been for the benefit of the first mortgagee, but it is also, and probably much more, for the benefit or convenience of the subsequent mortgagees, who might not have been able to redeem the prior incumbrances: Lord Langdale therefore, in a late case where the subject was fully discussed, held that the money arising from the sale of each estate separately incumbered, ought to be treated in the same manner as the estate itself would have been, and that the mortgagees ought to be paid their principal interest and costs according to their respective priorities, and that the costs of the sale ought not to be paid, in the first place, out of the general fund (f). This distinction seems to have been taken; where the bill is filed by a subsequent incumbrancer or other person interested in the estate, to settle priorities and obtain satisfaction, if the first

(a) Mackenzie v. Robinson, 3 Atk. 559.

(b) Beckford v. Kemble, 1 Sim. & St. 15; et v. supra, pp. 11, 12; v. supra, p. 672.

(c) Dict. Lord Hardwicke, Lucas v. Seale, 2 Atk. 56.

(d) Upperton v. Harrison, 7 Sim. p. 444; the early cases are collected in Mr. Simons's note; Hepworth v. Heslop, 3 Hare, 485.

(e) Barnes v. Racster, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 403; and see Clare v. Wood, 4 Hare, 82; and see Aldridge v. Westbrook, 5 Beav. p. 188, supra.

(f) Wild v. Lockart, 10 Beav. 323. The bill was filed by the first incumbrancer over parts of the estate, against the second incumbrancer on that part, and the first incumbrancer over other parts, over which the plaintiff had a subsequent incumbrance, and numerous other incumbrancers; the sale was made by consent, without prejudice:—and see, on this subject, Daniell's Pract. by Headlam, ii. 1264.

mortgagee insists upon being redeemed or that the bill be dismissed against him with costs, as he may, but he gives up that right and for the convenience of all parties consents to a sale, he will have his costs according to the general rule; but if instead of doing so, he merely states his title and takes the benefit of the suit for the purpose of obtaining payment with the other parties of what is due to him, and a sale is made with his consent, he must submit to having the costs of the suit first deducted (a). Where the mortgagee having a power of sale prays for a sale only, he can have no other relief at the hearing; but leave has been given to amend by adding a prayer for foreclosure. Although there be a power of sale the mortgagee may foreclose (b). If a mortgagee with a power of sale files a bill to foreclose, he will not on motion be directed to sell (c).

A mortgagee of a copyhold estate who is not in possession, may bring his bill against the mortgagor, before admittance, for a foreclosure, and after he has obtained such decree his course is to proceed by ejectment for possession of the mortgaged premises (d); if no surrender has been made, and the mortgagor is foreclosed, he will be ordered (at the expense of the mortgagee) to surrender the estate (e).

Before the abolition of recoveries, where a bill was filed to foreclose a mortgage made by Tenant in tail not perfected by recovery, the court did not compel the tenant in tail, on his covenant for further assurance, specifically to suffer a recovery, but decreed him to make a good title to the mortgagee (f): Lord Thurlow held that, under a covenant of a tenant in tail mortgagor for further assurance, he might be compelled to do such acts as were in his power to perfect the title (g); but if he died before he had actually done such acts, even though there had been a decree against him, his issue were not

(a) This I understand to be the effect of Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, Mos. 50; and White v. Bishop of Peterborough, Jacob's R. 402; and see Pace v. Marsden, Seton on Decrees, 275; Cooke v. Brown, 4 Yo. & Coll. p. 227; there the mortgagee prayed a sale: Barnes v. Racster, 1 Yo. & Coll. supra; there the bill prayed a foreclosure; but see the cases in the preceding notes.

(b) Kerrick v. Saffery, 7 Sim. 317.

(c) Anon. 23 or 24 April, 1818, before Vice-Chancellor Leach, Mad. MS. 1 Pr. and P. 668.

(d) Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. 101, Justice Wright.

(e) Hill v. Price, 1 Dick. 344; see Jarm. Mortgages, by Sweet, 406, from whence several of the authorities above cited are taken; and Coote on Mortgages, 601, et seq.

(f) Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. 101, Mr. Justice Wright; Tourle v. Rand, 2 Bro. 652.

(g) Tourle v. Rand, 2 Bro. ubi sup.; Pye v. Daubuz, 3 Bro. p. 595: see, on the subject of imperfect or voidable conveyances by tenant in tail, Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 209, where the effect of the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, s. 38, is stated; where also (p. 210-11) the effect of the 21st section of the same statute, as to mortgages granted by tenant in tail, is stated; et v. supra, p. 639.

bound (a). By the 47th section of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, it is enacted, that "no disposition by a tenant in tail resting only in contract either express or implied, or otherwise, and whether supported by valuable consideration or not, shall be of any force at law or in equity under this act, notwithstanding such disposition shall be made or evidenced by deed:" no such deed therefore will have any effect under that act, and it cannot bind the issue of the tenant in tail or those in remainder; but the Court of Chancery may still enforce a contract made by tenant in tail as against himself under his covenant for further assurance (b); and by one of Sir E. Sugden's acts, 1 Will. IV. c. 36, s. 15, rule 13, the court itself may execute the decree against a tenant in tail in custody for a contempt.

A decree of foreclosure against a person claiming as tenant in tail under the mortgagor made absolute, or a release executed by him in a suit for foreclosure, the time for redemption having gone by, though the foreclosure may not have been made absolute, is binding on his issue and on those in remainder (c).

When the devisee or heir of the mortgagor is an Infant, a decree of foreclosure may be obtained against him; but the ordinary course is, where the mortgagee requires it or consents, to direct a reference to the Master to inquire whether a sale of the premises is for the infant's benefit, though where it is clear that it will be for the benefit of the infant, the court may at once direct a sale (d). If a sale be directed the infant will be ordered to convey under the 11th section of the statute 1 Will. IV. c. 47 (e). Where the decree against an

(a) Attorney-General v. Day, 1 Ves. Sen. 224; Powell v. Powell, Prec. Ch. p. 279; the defendant had stood out all process of contempt; "Since," said the Lord Keeper, "he did not make use of his power by fine or recovery, his issue could not be bound by any other act of his."

(b) This clause (§ 47) was introduced into the bill by Mr. Hayes. "The all-absorbing nature of equity," says that eminent lawyer, "ever seeking to insinuate its jurisdiction, rendered that precaution necessary:" Introduction to Convey. i. p. 163. But in expounding that clause (same page), Mr. Hayes only applies it to the issue and remaindermen, though he adds, "All equitable relief in the case of a defective or informal assurance is expressly and anxiously excluded," ibid.; and see Sugd. V. and P. 227, § 7.

(c) Reynoldson v. Perkins, Amb. 564; and see Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, vol. ii. p. 972, et seq.; Roscarrick v. Barton, 1 Ch. Ca.

217; "The release," said Lord Hardwicke, "was equal to an absolute foreclosure by order."

(d) Davis v. Dowding, 2 Keen, p. 245; Clinton v. Bernard, 1 Dru. 287; Mondey v. Mondey, 1 Ves. & B. 223; Booth v. Rich, 1 Vern. 295; but this seems to have been a bill for the general administration of the estate: — v. Mansell, 1807, Mad. MS., 1 Pr. and P. 667. This is an exception to the general rule, in order to prevent foreclosure; but the analogy is not carried out so as to sell or mortgage an infant's real estate, only because it may be for his benefit; Brookfield v. Bradley, Jac. R. 635; Hill v. Maurice, 1 De G. & Sm. p. 214.

(e) Scholefield v. Heafield, 8 Sim. p. 470. An infant tenant in tail is within this clause, Penny v. Pretor, 9 Sim. p. 135; Radcliffe v. Eccles, 1 Keen, 131. The application under this act must be by petition, not by motion, 1 Yo. & Coll. 75.

infant is to foreclose, the practice has always been to give him a day to show cause against the decree on his coming of age (a), and the statute 1 Will. IV. c. 47, ss. 10, 11, enacting that the parol shall not demur, has made no alteration in the practice in this respect (b); but the infant when of age is not allowed to unravel the account, nor is he entitled to redeem the mortgage by paying what was reported to be due with subsequent interest; he can only show error in the decree or falsify the accounts for fraud or error (c): where an infant had a day to show cause and afterwards attained twenty-one, and left the kingdom to avoid his creditors, permission was given to serve the clerk in court with the subpoena (d). Under special circumstances the court will refuse to make a decree of foreclosure against an infant (e).

If a bill be brought against Husband and Wife, to foreclose the equity of redemption in the wife, whether the mortgage be made before or after marriage, the wife will be decreed to be foreclosed though under coverture; no day is given to her or her heirs to redeem or to show cause after the coverture shall be determined (f).

When a bill of foreclosure is filed against a company, the decree to be made is a reference to the Master, to take the account and to fix a day of payment, and if not paid at the day, then liberty for the plaintiff to apply as he may be advised (g).

On the foreclosure being made absolute, according to the course of the court, the estate becomes to all intents the real estate of the mortgagee (h).

If a mortgagee in fee die in possession, and the heir on whom the mortgage descends obtains the equity of redemption, according to Lord Commissioner Trevor, if there be not a deficiency of assets, the heir will be entitled to retain the mortgaged estate (i); but it may well be doubted whether he would not now be considered as con-

(a) Goodier v. Ashton, 18 Ves. 83; Booth v. Rich, 1 Vern. p. 295; Spencer v. Boyes, 4 Ves. 370, where the form of the decree is given; Bishop of Winchester v. Beavoir, 3 Ves. 317.

(b) Price v. Carver, 3 My. & Cr. p. 157; and see Lewis v. John, 1 C. P. Coop. R. 8.

(c) Mallack v. Galton, 3 P. W. 352. In Lyne v. Willis, 2 Eq. Ab. 11; S. C. 3 P. W. 352, note, this is said to be the settled practice: Bishop of Winchester v. Beavoir, ubi sup.; Spencer v. Boyes, 4 Ves. 370; Williamson v. Gordon, 19 Ves. 114; Sheffield v. Duchess of Bucks, West, R. 682; Blatch v. Wilder, ibid. 324.

(d) Elcock v. Glegg, 2 Dick. 764.

(e) See Coote, p. 614.

(f) Mallack v. Galton, 3 P. Wms. p. 352; and the cases in the notes, Burke v. Crosbie, 1 Ball & B. 503.

(g) Chambers v. Portsea Water Works, 8 Feb. 1820, before Vice-Chancellor, Mad. MS. 1 Pr. and P. 667.

(h) Le Gros v. Cockerell, 5 Sim. 389; as to making the foreclosure absolute, v. infra, p. 692.

(i) Fisk v. Fisk, Prec. Ch. p. 11; 2 Fonbl. p. 284: the next of kin are certainly only volunteers, as is the heir.

structively a trustee for the persons interested in the personal estate (a): according to another early case, if the heir has foreclosed, he may keep the estate, paying the mortgage-money to the executor (b); but this case is open to the same observation.

It has been noticed in a former page, that if a debt be secured by the mortgage of a real estate, and also by covenant and collaterally by bond, the mortgagee may pursue all his remedies at the same time (c). If he obtain full payment on the bond or covenant, the mortgagor is, by the fact of payment, entitled to redeem the estate, and foreclosure is prevented or not allowed. But if the mortgagee obtains only part payment on the bond or covenant, he may go on with his foreclosure suit, and, giving credit in account for what he has recovered on the bond or covenant, he may foreclose for non-payment of the remainder. On the other hand, if he obtains a foreclosure first, and alleges that the value of the estate is not sufficient to satisfy the debt, he is not absolutely precluded from suing on the bond or covenant; but it is held that by doing so, he gives to the mortgagor a renewed right to redeem, or, in other words, Opens the foreclosure (d); and consequently upon the commencement of an action against the mortgagor on the bond after foreclosure, he may file a bill for redemption, and upon payment of the whole debt secured by the mortgage he is entitled to have the estate back again, and the securities given up (e). After foreclosure, therefore, the court will not restrain the mortgagee from suing on the bond, provided he retains the mortgaged estate in his own power, ready to be redeemed, in case the mortgagor should think fit to avail himself of the opening of the foreclosure. The question, whether such an action could be sustained, after the mortgagee had sold the estate, and deprived himself of the power of restoring it to the mortgagor on full payment of the whole debt, was in some doubt (f) till the late case of Lockart v. Hardy (g), before Lord Langdale. The mortgagee in that case had sold the estate for a

(a) V. supra, pp. 299, 302, 650, 651; however the next of kin as well as the heir are equally volunteers.

(b) Clerkson v. Bowyer, 2 Vern. p. 67, and Globe v. Lord Carlisle, there cited; 2 Foul. p. 285. Mr. Coote, p. 608, does not object to this doctrine; sed v. ibid. 617; and see Freak v. Hearsey, 1 Ca. Ch. p. 51.

(c) Supra, p. 646; and see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 404, where other cases are cited; and Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, ii. 1002.

(d) See Dashwood v. Blythway, 1 Eq. Ab. 317; Finch's R. 406.

(e) 9 Beavan, 356.

(f) See Tooke v. Hartley, 2 Bro. p. 125; S. C. 2 Dick. p. 785, where an injunction was refused; and the notes of Lord Henley and Mr. Belt, in their respective editions; and see Perry v. Barker, before Lord Eldon, 8 Ves. 527; Lord Erskine, 13 Ves. 198; and Coventry's note on this case, Powell on Mortgages, p. 1005.

(g) V. supra, p. 347, additional note.

sum less than the amount of the debt, and then offered to prove for the deficiency in a suit for the administration of the mortgagor's estate. In giving judgment his Lordship said, It does not seem unreasonable, when the difference between the whole debt, and the price of the estates fairly sold, is all that is sought to be recovered in the action, that the mortgagee should be permitted to proceed; but I apprehend, said his Lordship, that the rules as to opening the foreclosure are founded on this; that in this court, the mortgagor, if he does not pay the whole debt, may lose the whole estate, however valuable, but that if he does pay the whole debt, he is entitled to have the estate restored to him; and it seems to follow, that the mortgagee, having got the estate, is not to proceed against the mortgagor for full payment, if he cannot restore the estate. If this be so whilst the estate remains in his hands, how can it be altered by any separate dealing of his own with the estate, without the consent of, or any agreement with, the mortgagor? The mortgagee had, by his securities, a right to foreclose the mortgage, and if he thought the estate insufficient, a further right to proceed on his personal securities, thereby giving to the mortgagor a renewed right to redeem; but when he has so dealt with the estate that the mortgagor cannot redeem (a), it appears to me, said his Lordship, that he is not entitled to proceed; and that this court ought to restrain him from proceeding on the personal securities: and his Lordship decided, that the mortgagor in that case was not at liberty to enforce his securities (b).

The foreclosure may be opened on other grounds than those above stated, but it is not easy to extract any definite principle upon which the court acts in such cases. In one case (c) where a first mortgagee after foreclosing the second mortgage devised the premises to the mortgagor, the second mortgagee was let in to redeem: in another case the decree of foreclosure was opened after 16 years, the equity of redemption being worth much more than what was due, and the mortgagor having been in distressed circumstances (d); no doubt it was assumed that the mortgagee had unfairly taken advantage of such distress. If the decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion or improper practices, the foreclosure may be opened under the general jurisdiction; a devise of the estate as money, or referring to it for a collateral purpose as money, will not of themselves open the foreclosure (e).

(a) See Perry v. Barker, 8 Ves. 531.

(b) Lockhart v. Hardy, x. Jurist, p. 532; 9 Beav. 355-7.

(c) Cook v. Sadler, 2 Vern. 235.

(d) Burgh v. Langton, 15 Vin. Abr. 476, pl. 2; 2 Eq. Ab. 609.

(e) Mr. Coote, 604-5, has collected the early cases where foreclosures have been opened, and has also stated those in which it has been refused.

Where the mortgagee had taken possession a considerable time, and then brought an action on the bond, the balance appearing to be inconsiderable, a perpetual injunction was awarded (a).

Under the old practice, an executor of a mortgagee would have been restrained from enforcing payment, and the money would have been ordered into court, where there was no heir of the mortgagee who could re-convey (b); but the difficulty has been provided against to a great extent by some late Acts of Parliament. Doubts having arisen as to whether the statute 1 Will. IV. c. 60, s. 8 (c), extended to a mortgagee who should have died without an heir within the jurisdiction, which was assumed in the statute 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, s. 2, (which enlarges the powers given by the statute 1 Will. IV. c. 60); the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 69, was passed, by which it is provided, that where any mortgagee shall have died without having been in possession of the land or in the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, and the money due on such mortgage shall have been paid to his executor or administrator, and the devisee or heir, or other real representative or any of such devisees, &c., shall be out of the jurisdiction or not amenable to the process of the court, or it shall be uncertain, where there were several devisees or representatives who were joint tenants, which of them was the survivor, or it shall be uncertain whether any such devisee, &c., be living or dead, or if known to be dead it shall not be known who was his heir, or where such devisee or heir or representative shall have died without an heir, or in case of neglect to convey, &c., the court may appoint a person to convey, in like manner as by the act of 1 Will. IV. c. 60 the court is empowered in the place of a trustee or the heir of a trustee (d).

The relative rights of mortgagor and mortgagee are, as before observed, the same in a bill to foreclose as in a bill to redeem, at least as to the price of redeeming the mortgage. In the case of De Vigier v. Lee, before referred to, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram had to consider this principle in reference to what amount of Interest under the law as it stands may be recovered in a suit to redeem or to foreclose: the Vice-Chancellor said, In order to determine the price of redemption upon a bill to redeem a mortgage, the court ought to inquire what

(a) Perry v. Barker, 8 Ves. 527; and S. C. 13 Ves. 198.

(b) Schoole v. Sall, 1 Sch. & Lef. 177.

(c) V. supra, p. 616.

(d) Sugd. V. and P. 226, n. (i); and see the terms of redemption would be in a suit to recover the mortgage-money out of or by means of the charge upon the land, which a bill for foreclosure is: if in the result of the inquiry the court should find that in a suit for foreclosure or other suit seeking to affect the land, no more than six years' interest would be recoverable by the mortgagee, the court, as the Vice-Chancellor thought, would be bound to fix the same limit in determining the price of the redemption on a bill to redeem. Under the letter of the statute, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 42, no interest of money charged upon land could be recovered in any action or suit for more than six years, though the payment of such interest was secured by bond or covenant, or both; and if the law had rested on that statute, neither on a bill to foreclose nor on a bill to redeem could interest have been demanded by the mortgagee for more than six years (a): this could not have been intended, and accordingly, by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 3, passed at a later period of the same session, the right of the creditor to bring an action upon the bond or covenant was extended to or declared to exist for twenty years, notwithstanding the 42nd section of the first-mentioned statute; the Vice-Chancellor was therefore of opinion that in the case before him whatever might have been his opinion if the money had not been secured by a bond or covenant, the foreclosure could not be intercepted without payment of the principal and the arrears of interest due, extending to twenty years; nor could the estate be redeemed, looking to the effect of the latter statute, excepting on the same terms (b).

Hill on Trustees, p. 277, et seq.; and Ex parte Whitton, 1 Keen, 278; Re Thomson, 12 Sim. 392; In re Wilson, 8 Sim. 342; and Ex parte Bird, 9 Sim. 426.

By the statute 7 Geo. II. c. 20 (c), intituled “An Act for the more easy Redemption and Foreclosure of Mortgages,” it is enacted that, where any Action shall be brought upon a bond, for payment of money secured by mortgage or performance of the covenants therein contained, or where any action of ejectment shall be brought by any mortgagee, or any person claiming under him, for the recovery of the possession of the mortgaged lands or hereditaments, and no suit for foreclosure or redemption shall be pending; if the person or persons having the right to redeem shall pay to the mortgagee, &c., or on his refusal to accept, shall bring into court all the principal moneys and interest due on such mortgage, and all such costs as have been expended in any suits at law or in equity upon such mortgage, (the same to be ascertained by the proper officer of the court,)(d) the same shall be taken

(a) See Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 332.

(b) Du Vigier v. Lee, ubi supra, 338, 339, et v. sup. p. 669. There are some important observations in this judgment, relating to other points arising on the construction of these statutes; v. infra, Sect. vi.

(c) See Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 407.

(d) Upon staying proceedings in ejectment

in full discharge of the mortgage; and the court may compel the mortgagee, &c., at the costs of the mortgagor to assign, surrender or re-convey such mortgaged lands, &c., and deliver up the deeds, evidences, and writings in his possession: and where any Suit shall be brought in any court of equity, to compel the defendants, claiming a right to redeem, to pay to the plaintiff the principal money and interest due on such mortgage, or such principal and interest, together with any sum or sums of money due on any incumbrance or specialty charged or chargeable on the equity of redemption, and in default to Foreclose the defendant or defendants, such court of equity, upon application made by the defendant or defendants in the suit, having a right to redeem, and upon his and their admitting the right and title of the plaintiffs in the suit, may at any time before the hearing make such order or decree therein as might have been made in case such suit had been regularly brought to a hearing; and that all parties shall be bound by such order or decree, to all intents as if such order had been made at or subsequent to the hearing of the cause. But it is declared that the act is not to extend to any case where the person against whom the redemption is prayed shall, by writing under his own hand or that of his attorney or agent, to be delivered before the money shall be brought into such court of law to the attorney on the other side, insist either that the party praying a redemption has not a right to redeem, or that the premises are chargeable with other or different principal sums than what appear upon the face of the mortgage, or shall be admitted on the other side, nor to any case where the right of redemption to the mortgaged lands, &c. in question shall be controverted or questioned by or between different defendants in the same cause or suit; and it is provided that nothing in the act shall prejudice any subsequent mortgagee or incumbrancer.

This act, the real purpose of which was to give a new jurisdiction to courts of law, but which gave no new jurisdiction to the Court of Chancery (a), places the suit in the same situation as if it had been brought to a hearing, and the same consequences therefore follow (b). No reference can be had under this statute, unless all the parties interested in the equity of redemption join in the application and admit the plaintiff's title, which an infant cannot (c), and unless the bill by mortgagee on payment of debt and costs under the statute 7 Geo. II. c. 20, the costs are taxed only as between party and party, and not as between attorney and client; Doe dem. Capps v. Capps, 3 New Cas. p. 768; 5 Dowl. P. C. 683; note to 2 Coll. 626.

(a) Sir J. Leach, 1 Sim. & St. 332, Praed

v. Hull; in the construction of the statute, a covenant under seal is considered to be a bond; Streeton v. Collier, 10 Law T. 227, C. P.

(b) Wakerell v. Delight, 9 Ves. 36.

(c) Lushington v. Price, 9 Sim. p. 651; Taylor v. Coates, 3 Hare, 203.

is confined to mere foreclosure (a); nor where the right to redeem, or the amount of principal and interest alleged to be due is in dispute, for the Master is not at liberty to examine into the state of the account as against the statement in the bill (b); nor can a reference be obtained where the bill prays a sale and not a foreclosure, unless by consent without reference to the statute (c). However, where some of the defendants are infants, and one of the adults offers to pay the amount claimed, the court under its general jurisdiction may on motion make an order, analogous to an order under the statute, where the allowing the party paying to redeem, and thus to obtain the legal estate, cannot prejudice the infants, as will be the case where the subject is personal estate, and the party redeeming is executor (d). It is indispensable that the mortgagor should apply under the act before the mortgagee, if he has proceeded at law, is entitled to take out execution (e). In the case of Piggin v. Cheetham (f), the Vice-Chancellor Wigram allowed the party applying under the act to file an affidavit to show that he was the only party interested in the equity of redemption, he not having answered, and the bill having charged that the defendant had made subsequent charges; but in a later case the Vice-Chancellor of England held that such an affidavit was not necessary where the bill merely contained the common charge that there were other incumbrances (g).

In a foreclosure suit great indulgence is shown to the mortgagor in respect of the payment of the money, so as to prevent an absolute foreclosure—the time fixed has been extended four times, and that although the third was expressed to be peremptory, there being a fair prospect that the mortgagor would be able to obtain the money within the extended time (h). However the court must have some reason assigned for enlarging the time even once; but it does not require a very strong one (i). Regularly the mortgagor should apply before the time fixed for payment has expired, but a slip may be excused (k). Even the enrolment of an order absolute for foreclosure in a foreclosure suit does not, any more than an enrolment of the decree for foreclosure,

(a) Bastard v. Clarke, 7 Ves. 489.

(b) Goodtitle dem. Bishop, 1 Yo. & J. 344; Huson v. Hewson, 4 Ves. 105-6.

(c) Praed v. Hull, 1 Sim. & St. 331; and see Aberdeen v. Chitty, 3 Yo. & Coll. 379; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 410.

(d) Grane v. Mitchell, 10 Sim. 485.

(e) Amis v. Lloyd, 3 Ves. & B. 16.

(f) 2 Hare, 80.

(g) Reeves v. Glastonbury Canal Company, 14 Sim. 351.

(h) Edwards v. Cunliffe, 1 Mad. 287; and see Jones v. Creswicke, 9 Sim. 304.

(i) Nanny v. Edwards (Lord Lyndhurst), 4 Russ. 125, confirming the order of the Vice-Chancellor; the motion was refused in that case with costs: Eyre v. Hanson, 2 Beav. 478.

(k) Renvoize v. Cooper, 1 Sim. & St. 365.

prevent the court from enlarging the time for payment on the usual terms upon a proper case being made (a). If the mortgagee has received rents between the Master's report and the day fixed for payment, another day must be fixed (b).

For many years past the practice has been to enlarge the time only on the terms of first paying the interest and costs already reported, and these being paid subsequent interest is to be computed on the principal only, that alone remaining unpaid; if for any special reason the court should think fit to enlarge the time without ordering an immediate payment, it would be proper, as was the old practice, to order the subsequent interest to be computed on the aggregate amount of principal, interest and costs before computed (c). The court is enabled in proceedings under the statute 7 Geo. II., above referred to, to grant further time for payment of the mortgage money in the same way as in an ordinary suit for foreclosure (d). Where a defendant has allowed a decree nisi to be made absolute against him by not appearing to show cause against it, he is not entitled to a rehearing, excepting on special grounds (e).

If title deeds have been delivered to a subsequent mortgagee, without notice express or constructive of any prior mortgage, the Court of Chancery will not take them out of his hands, but will leave the mortgagee who has foreclosed to obtain them if he can at law (f).

(a) Ford v. Wastell, 6 Hare, 229; 2 Phill. 593. It was not disputed that, in this case, the defendant's interest in the property to be foreclosed, which was an undivided share in the residue of an estate to be administered in a suit then pending, was worth three or four times the amount of the debt; and it is stated in the Report that there were other circumstances of hardship in the case: the bill was filed by a judgment creditor, under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; v. ibid. p. 230: the Lord Chancellor, p. 231, states the common form of the application.

(b) Garlick v. Jackson, 4 Beav. 154: so where the mortgagor had been prevented by the mortgagee from receiving the rents, the time was enlarged on terms; Geldard v. Hornby, 1 Hare, 251.

(c) Lord Langdale, Brewin v. Austin, 2 Keen, 212 (which was subsequent to Bruere v. Wharton, 7 Sim. 483, following Robinson v. Pennyman, Lord Colch. MS., where the interest was computed on the principal, interest and costs); and see Dan. Pr. by Headlam, ii. 989: where the mortgagee seeks payment in an administration suit (as in such cases the mortgagor is not asking for delay) the subsequent interest is computed on the principal only, ibid., and Whatton v. Craddock, 1 Keen, p. 267; and more especially against a subsequent incumbrancer, Neal v. Attorney-General, Moseley, 246 (1 Keen, 269); and see Maghee v. Mahon, 1 Molloy, 151, but that was a special case: Lord Mannors was inclined to give interest upon the principal and interest found due and ordered by the former decree to be paid in one month. Under special circumstances of duress and oppression, Lord Mannors held that the fact that the party has used due diligence to execute the decree, and has been baffled, may be brought to the knowledge of the court by petition, and does not require a supplemental bill, which had been filed in that case, see pp. 154-55: interest, said his Lordship, forms no part of the substance of the decree, but is only incidental.

(d) Wakerell v. Delight, G. Coop. R. 28; S. C. 9 Ves. 36.

(e) Booth v. Creswicke, Cra. & Ph. 361; as to the mode of obtaining relief against a decree obtained by fraud or mistake, see Davenport v. Stafford, 8 Beav. 503.

(f) Kendall v. Hulls, xi. Jur. 864. This case is important on the point of what know-

If a man has a legal mortgage, he cannot have a Receiver appointed, though the tenants are numerous and the rents difficult to collect (a); he may take possession. If he has only an equitable mortgage, that is, if there be a prior mortgage carrying the legal estate, then if the prior mortgagee be not in possession, the other may have a receiver, without prejudice to the first mortgagee taking possession; but if the first mortgagee be in possession, the subsequent mortgagee cannot come here for a receiver, he must redeem the first mortgagee; and in taking the accounts the first mortgagee will not be allowed any sums that he may have paid over to the mortgagor after notice of the subsequent incumbrance. If the mortgagee in possession will swear that there is a sixpence due to him, the court will not take away the possession from him; whilst anything remains due the court cannot substitute another security for that which the mortgagee has contracted for (b). If it appear by the bill that there is a prior mortgagee who is not in possession, the court may, though this has been doubted, at the instance of subsequent incumbrancers, appoint a receiver, in the absence of the prior mortgagee, and even where the mortgagor is out of the jurisdiction; but of course without prejudice to the first mortgagee taking possession (c). There may be cases where, though the mortgagee may not be entitled to foreclose until a future period, as after the death of the mortgagor, he may be entitled to a receiver in the interim (d).

If a receiver be in possession, he cannot be disturbed without leave of the court (e). But when a party is prejudiced by having a receiver put in his way, the course has been either to give him leave to bring an ejectment, or to permit him to be examined pro interesse suo (f), which may perhaps be the more convenient course (g).

ledge on the part of the solicitor is constructive notice to the party who employs him; see Toulmin v. Steer, infra, Sect. viii., Notice.

(a) Sturch v. Young, 5 Beav. p. 557; and the cases in Mr. Beavan's note; and supra, p. 647-8.

(b) Lord Eldon, Berney v. Sewell, 1 Jac. & W. 648-9; and see Phipps v. Bishop of Bath and Wells, 2 Dick. 608; M'Clel. 163; Bryan v. Cormick, 1 Cox, 423; Dalmer v. Dashwood, 2 Cox, 382-3, is a special case.

(c) Ibid. Tanfield v. Irvine, 2 Russ. 151-2, and sup. pp. 647, 648; but see Holmes v. Bell, 2 Beav. 298; Browne v. Blount, 2 Russ. & M. 83; and Andeston v. Stather, 2 Coll. 212; but in those cases the rights of the absent party would have been affected: and see Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. p. 114.

(d) Burrowes v. Molloy, 2 Jo. & Lat. 521.

(e) Angel v. Smith, 9 Ves. 335.

(f) As to the practice in such cases, see Hamlyn v. Lee, 1 Dick. 94; Gomme v. West, 2 Dick. 472; Hunt v. Priest, ib. 540; Anon. 6 Ves. 287; and Daniell's Ch. P. by Headlam. The order may be obtained on motion or petition; Walker v. Bell, 2 Mad. 21, a case where the estate was in the hands of sequestrators: in that case (p. 24) Sir J. Leach refers to the early cases: Dixon v. Smith, 1 Swanst. 457; Dickenson v. Smith, 4 Mad. 177; 1 Jac. & W. 179, note; et v. supra, p. 647.

(g) Brooks v. Greathed, 1 Jac. & W. 178. There the petitioner had filed a bill himself, which he had not prosecuted with due diligence, and on that account he was left to his action.

In one case (Davis v. Barrett, 13 Law J. N. S. Rolls, 304), the defendant, a mortgagee,

As regards Recognitions of the title of the party seeking to foreclose or to redeem, it may be observed that, if a person pays money to another, it must be presumed that he is satisfied with the title of the receiver; he cannot, therefore, generally speaking, dispute that the person to whom he has paid interest as mortgagee is really such; but the receipt of the money does not imply an admission that the party paying is the person properly bound to pay it, or that such party has the right to redeem (a).

It will be proper here to consider the relief that is given when the Deeds have been Lost or destroyed by the mortgagee.

It is the general duty of the mortgagee to take care that all the instruments deposited with him are forthcoming (b). When the mortgagee has lost the title deeds, and the mortgagor files a bill for Redemption, the mortgagee must indemnify the mortgagor for the loss of the deeds; the mortgagor is justified in filing a bill in such a case, in order that he may obtain a sufficient indemnity (c); and where the mortgagor is ready to pay, and a delay is occasioned by the loss of the deeds, the mortgagor will not be compelled to pay interest during the interval, and if he should have paid it compulsorily, it will be ordered to be returned to him (d).

On a bill for foreclosure, the mortgage deeds being lost by the plaintiff, if the defendant redeem, the plaintiff, generally speaking, will be ordered to pay the costs of the suit, and to give an indemnity to the defendant in respect of the loss, such indemnity to be settled by the Master (e); in default of payment there will be a foreclosure in the common form. In one case (Smith v. Bicknell) on a bill for redemption, some of the material deeds having been stolen from the mortgagor, a redemption was decreed without costs to the mortgagor (f); but the language of the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Lord Middleton v. Eliot, where Smith v. Bicknell was cited, would was appointed the consignee, manager and receiver of the mortgaged estates.

(a) James v. Biou, 2 Sim. & St. 606.

(b) Lord Middleton v. Eliot, xi. Jur. 742-3; 15 Sim. p. 535: as to when a receiver will or will not be considered as the agent of the mortgagee, though not appointed by him, see Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 71-2.

(c) Middleton v. Eliot, ubi supra; Stokoe v. Robson, 3 Ves. & B. 51; 19 Ves. 385.

(d) Middleton v. Eliot, xi. Jur. p. 743-4; and see, on this subject, Gibson v. Nicol, 9 Beav. 403.

(e) Stokoe v. Robson, 3 Ves. & B. p. 51; S. C. 19 Ves. 385. The decree is set out, Seton on Decrees, 225-6, where, and p. 227, Mr. Seton has collected the cases in which, in equity, relief has been given on a lost instrument upon an indemnity; and see Shelmardine v. Harrop, 6 Mad. 39; Schoole v. Sall, 1 Sch. & Lef. 176; Luccraft v. Hite, A.D. 1785, stated from Reg. Lib. 2 Hare, 14: the form of the bond of indemnity in the case of lost title deeds is given 6 Mad. 44; and see Bentinck v. Willink, 2 Hare, 13, a case which arose upon a mortgage of an estate in Demerara, the mortgagee having lost the Grosse or official engrossment of the mortgage, usually obtained from the court where the mortgage is registered.

(f) Smith v. Bicknell, 3 Ves. & B. 51, n.

imply that in all cases, unless perhaps under very special circumstances, the mortgagee must pay the costs when he cannot produce the deeds: in that case the mortgagee had brought an action of ejectment, the costs of which he was also ordered to pay; the suit was one to redeem (a). In a late case on a bill for foreclosure, it appeared that the mortgagee had, his mind being in a disordered state, destroyed the title deeds; a reference to the Master was asked on the part of the mortgagee, for the purpose of enabling the mortgagor to raise the money to pay off the mortgage, and that the Master might inquire as to the loss sustained by the mortgagor by the destruction; the first part of the application was refused; but the Vice-Chancellor of England directed a reference to ascertain what ought to be paid as compensation for the damage done to the estate by the destruction, the same to be set off against the mortgage debt (b).

According to the modern authorities neither a provisional assignee nor a puisne incumbrancer who disclaims, can have his costs against the party seeking to foreclose (c). But where a defendant in a bill to foreclose properly disclaims, he having no interest in the equity of redemption, as a general rule he is entitled to his costs against the plaintiff, particularly if no application has been made to him prior to filing the bill (d). If the plaintiff should have properly made a person who disclaims a party, and such party is held to be entitled to his costs against the plaintiff, the plaintiff will be entitled to add such costs to his mortgage debt (e). The disclaiming defendants will be foreclosed, not simply dismissed, at least if that is essential to the mortgagor's title (f). The mortgagor's trustee to bar dower is a proper party to a bill for foreclosure; but he is not entitled to his costs as against the mortgagee (g).

A bill for foreclosure may be taken pro confesso in vacation (h).

(a) Middleton v. Eliot, 15 Sim. 536-7.

(b) Hornby v. Matcham, xii. Jur. p. 825; and see Coulson v. Williams, 9 Ir. Eq. R. p. 287.

(c) Appleby v. Duke, 1 Phill. 272; Cash v. Belcher, 1 Hare, 310; Gabriel v. Sturgis, 5 Hare, p. 97; Gibson v. Nicol, 24 Law J. N. S. 195; 9 Beav. 403: in that case the bill was filed by the second mortgagee to foreclose and redeem, the assignee of the insolvent mortgagor disclaimed, but was brought to the hearing, the proceeds were only sufficient to pay the first mortgagee; the bill was dismissed against the disclaiming defendant without costs; and see Ohrly v. Jenkins, xi. Jur. 1001.

(d) Silcock v. Roynon, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C.

376; Teed v. Carruthers, ibid. p. 41; Gabriel v. Sturgis, 5 Hare, p. 101, where the distinctions are noticed.

(e) Abblett v. Edwards, Rolls, 3 June, 1840, stated 10 Sim. 562, in note.

(f) Perkin v. Stafford, 10 Sim. 563; Collins v. Shirley, 1 Russ. & M. 638, cited from Reg. Lib. 10 Sim. 562.

(g) Horrocks v. Ledsam, 2 Coll. 208.

(h) Simmons v. Wood, 2 Hare, 644: 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 36, § 15, rule 2, recognised 1 Phill. 648. By the decree, the plaintiff's bill was taken pro confesso; an account of the mortgage debt, interest and costs was directed, and the usual decree for foreclosure made in default of payment, ibid. p. 647.

A foreclosure is not complete till an absolute order for foreclosing has been obtained, which the plaintiff the mortgagee is entitled to on the mortgagor or other person entitled to redeem making default in payment on the day fixed by the Master for payment, unless the time has been enlarged, as has been before adverted to: a mere decree nisi, however old, cannot of itself be pleaded (a): the foreclosure may be made absolute, though the mortgagee does not attend at the time fixed for payment (b): after twenty years' possession the court will not set aside a foreclosure merely on a point of form (c).

Where in the progress of a suit for foreclosure and before decree, the plaintiff, the mortgagee, assigns his interest, the assignee may file a supplemental bill to have the benefit of the suit, though the costs are not to be charged against the mortgaged estate (d); but where after a decree in a suit by a second mortgagee to redeem the first, and foreclose the subsequent mortgagees, one of the subsequent mortgagees assigned his interest in the premises to A. and A. then filed a bill against all the parties to the former suit praying the benefit of that suit, and to redeem those who were prior to him and foreclose the others; the bill was dismissed as against all the parties excepting A.'s assignor, and A. was declared to be entitled to stand in his place (e).

(a) Sinhouse v. Earl, 2 Ves. p. 450; see Seton on Decrees, 139, 140; Dan. Pr. ii. 988.

(b) Anon. 1 Coll. 273.

(c) Jones v. Kenrick, 5 Bro. P. C. p. 244; 2 Eq. Ab. 602. In Higgins v. Franks, x. Jur. 328; the form of the decree, under special circumstance, where there are two mortgages, to secure property advanced by two or more persons, in different proportions, is given.

(d) Coles v. Forrest, 10 Beav. 553.

(e) Booth v. Creswicke, 8 Sim. 352.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

Sober v. Kemp, before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram.—Specific Performance and Foreclosure.

In the case of Sober v. Kemp, 6 Hare, 155 (v. sup. p. 676, at note (a)), the plaintiff, in 1828, entered into a contract with Mr. Kemp, for the purchase of a house in Sussex Square: the plaintiff took possession: the plaintiff had constructive notice that the house in Sussex Square, together with two other houses, had been previously mortgaged to one Sivewright; he had actual notice in 1842: Mr. Kemp died in 1844; his widow was devisee of his estates. In 1845 the plaintiff obtained a transfer of the prior mortgage from Sivewright; the defendants, Messrs. Baring, claimed to be mortgagees, under a mortgage dated 1840, of three houses, two of which were included in Sivewright's mortgage (but not including the house in Sussex Square); the other defendants claimed under a mortgage of the same premises in 1847. The bill prayed that the defendant, the widow, might specifically perform the contract for the sale of the house in Sussex Square, free from incumbrances ; it also prayed an account of what was due on Sivewright's mortgage, the plaintiff offering, on being redeemed, to reconvey the premises comprised in that mortgage, excepting the Sussex Square house and if the defendant, the widow, should not redeem, that the other defendants might redeem, or be foreclosed. It was insisted that Sivewright could not have required the defendants to redeem, without conveying to them all the property comprised in his mortgage, and the plaintiff could have no better right ; it was also objected that a suit for specific performance could not be combined with a suit for foreclosure. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in giving judgment, said, " If the effect of a suit for foreclosure were to compel the mortgagor or the subsequent mortgagees to redeem the plaintiff, it is clear that it would be unjust to compel them to pay the whole amount of the money secured upon the premises which are subject to the mortgage, now vested in the plaintiff, and to take a conveyance of part only of the property comprised in that security ; but the subsequent mortgagees cannot be injured by having the option given to them either to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage upon the property comprised in her security, and take a conveyance of the premises which are subject to the security of the subsequent mortgages, or to be foreclosed of the latter, and retain their security over the other property comprised in their mortgages, discharged from the prior mortgage of the plaintiff." The question was whether the plaintiffs were in a condition to compel the defendants to exercise this option. The plaintiff, as the Vice-Chancellor observed, under the contract, obtained only an equitable title ; by taking a transfer of Sivewright's mortgage he acquired the legal estate. Mr. Kemp himself could not have redeemed otherwise than subject to the contract as to the house in Sussex Square ; and if he had redeemed, the plaintiff might have brought a bill for a specific performance of the contract, and would have been entitled to that relief on the same terms as those on which it was sought in that suit : the plaintiff had the same equity against those who claimed under Mr. Kemp, as he would have had against Mr. Kemp : the plaintiff having got the legal estate, sought to avail herself of that legal estate for the purpose of protecting her interest in the property to the extent of the moneys she had actually advanced and no further ; she was entitled, in a bill to foreclose, to insist on the same equities as she would in a bill to redeem ; and his Honour made a decree for the specific performance of the contract and for a redemption of the remainder of the premises by the defendants, according to their successive priorities (1).

(1) According, in this respect, to the precedent, Seton on Decrees, " Mortgages," No. IX. p. 571.

SECTION V.—Of the Parties to Bills for Redemption and for Foreclosure.

General Rules applicable to this Subject.

Mortgagor and his Representatives.

Subsequent Mortgagee of a part of the Mortgaged Estate.

Where the Mortgaged Estate is assigned to Trustees in trust for Creditors or others.

Costs of Parties to whom the Mortgagee has transferred his Interest.

Trustees for Sale.

Foreclosure by Cestuis que Trust.

Persons having a Partial Interest in the Equity of Redemption.

Representatives of a deceased Tenant for Life.

Foreclosure—Personal Representatives of Mortgagor.

Personal Representatives of Mortgagee—Heir.

Where the Mortgagee has absolutely assigned his Interest.

Interest, however small, is regarded.

Judgment Creditors.

Subsequent Incumbrancers.

Incumbrancers becoming such pendente lite.

Estate limited in strict Settlement—Owner of first Estate of Inheritance.

Persons necessary for effectuating the ultimate Decree.

Persons having Paramount Charges.

Bill by Second Mortgagee to foreclose the Third.

Bill to be paid out of Surplus of a Fund to be paid to a Bankrupt.

It has already been stated that redemption and foreclosure can only be enforced through the medium of the Court of Chancery, and as the ascertaining who are proper parties to a suit for the one purpose or the other is a necessary preliminary, it may be well here to refer to the general rules on the subject.

In the simple case of a bill by the mortgagor to redeem an only incumbrance, or of a bill by an only incumbrancer to foreclose the mortgagor, no difficulty can occur as to the parties; it is where other persons have acquired interests in the estate, or in the equity of redemption, by operation of law, or by means of the powers of disposition which both the mortgagor and the mortgagee and those claiming under them have over their respective estates, that difficulties arise as to who are the proper parties to a bill for redemption or foreclosure.

In every suit, whether to redeem or to foreclose, care is taken that the estate shall ultimately get into the proper hand ; and that no one having an interest in the estate incumbered, or having an incumbrance on the estate, shall be excluded, in the one case from his right to redeem, in the other from his right to be paid what is due to him or to foreclose the persons whom he has a right to call upon to pay. In every suit for foreclosure where there are successive incumbrances and all are sought to be foreclosed, each of them is let in to redeem according to the order in which their securities are ranked, which is usually according to their dates, though that order is subject to variations, as will be stated in a subsequent section (a): every such suit has a double aspect, embracing as regards the different characters of the parties both redemption and foreclosure, and it is impossible to say à priori whether its final end will be redemption or foreclosure, or who in case of redemption will be the party to redeem : in framing the bill, in reference to the parties, regard must be had to both alternatives.

It may be stated generally that every suit, whether for redemption or foreclosure, ought to be so framed as regards parties, that the court may be enabled effectually to ascertain and determine the rights of all parties as regards the subject-matter, and so make a final end of the litigation in respect of it (b): as far as is possible the court endeavours to make a complete decree that shall embrace the whole subject, and determine upon the rights of all parties interested in the estate ; but these rules must be occasionally departed from where convenience requires it (c).

From the very nature of the suit, whether for redemption or foreclosure, it must first be ascertained what is due upon each security, whether it is sought to be redeemed or whether a foreclosure is sought in respect of such security, and for that purpose in every decree an account is directed to be taken of what, if anything, is due ; but this cannot be effectually done without all persons who are interested in the

(a) V. infra, Sect. vii. I need scarcely observe that Mr. Calvert has published a valuable Treatise on the difficult subject of Parties to Suits, from which I have derived great advantage, and to which the practitioner will refer for the cases which are not embraced in the succeeding pages.

(b) As regards all suits in equity, "the strict rule," said Lord Eldon, "is that all persons materially interested in the subject of the suit, however numerous, ought to be parties, that there may be a complete decree between all parties having material interests ; and where the same account would have to be taken at the instance of persons having the same kind of security as the party seeking to enforce his security, the court will in general require that all persons who could require the same account should be parties, that one account may be taken, binding upon all ;" Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. 325 ; and see Palk v. Lord Clinton, 12 Ves. 58 ; Lord Redesdale, Pl. 164 ; Calvert on Parties, pp. 5-13 ; Mellish v. Brooks, infra.

(c) Sir Wm. Grant, Palk v. Clinton, 12 Ves. 58 ; and see Richardson v. Hastings, 7 Beav. 326-7.

taking the account, and also all such persons without whose presence the account cannot properly be taken, being brought before the court (a). The court is also influenced in requiring that all parties interested should be before the court, by the principle which is acted upon in most other cases, namely, the avoiding multiplicity and diversity of suits, more especially where the same account would have to be taken over again.

If there be several incumbrances succeeding the original mortgage, and a bill is filed to obtain the Legal estate by redemption, it is obvious that every person who has a right to redeem ought to be made a party, in order that the legal estate may not be got in by any one to the prejudice of another who is absent, but who may have a preferable right to the advantage which the legal estate confers; so, in reference to the option which the mortgagor or his representatives have to redeem, it is obvious that every person who has the legal estate or any redeemable interest which passed from the mortgagor on the original mortgage, ought to be a party, so that on payment of the money secured, the mortgagor, or those claiming under or through him, may have back from such persons all that was pledged. If the suit be defective in any of these particulars, though a decree may be obtained, from the omission not being discovered or relied upon, it is plain that the decree can hardly be final and effectual so as to give a complete title to the party who may foreclose or who may redeem. It is however to be observed that where the party seeking relief is bound to do an act as a preliminary to his obtaining any relief, the court will not always require that all those who may be required to join in doing the act should be parties (b).

It will be seen in the sequel that there may be persons having prima facie an interest in the mortgaged premises whom it may not be necessary or proper to include as parties; the distinction as applied to such cases would seem to be, that where the decree which is sought, or which according to the circumstances must or even may be pronounced according to the course of the court, will in any way affect the rights or interests of the absent parties, the omission will be fatal to the progress of the suit (c); if it cannot affect the rights of the absent parties, the suit may be permitted to proceed, and such a decree may be obtained

(a) See Calvert on Parties, et seq. The statutes 2 Will. IV. c. 33 and 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 82, and the General Orders, 8th May, 1845, have provided for the service of subpoenas on persons resident abroad; the orders and the decisions upon them are stated by Mr. Calvert, pp. 76, 77.

(b) Baker v. Walters, 8 Beav. 97.

(c) This may happen as regards interlocutory applications; for instance, where the plaintiff may have to apply for a receiver; see Gibbon v. Strathmore, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, 1841, Calvert, p. 16.

as the case may warrant, as between the parties, in the absence of the other persons, even though the suit might have been so constructed as to seek relief, which would have made them necessary or proper parties, and have finally settled all questions as regards the incumbrances on the property (a).

With these general remarks, which will be found, I believe, to be the key to many of the decisions, I propose now to state by way of illustration some of the leading authorities on the subject of Parties to bills for Redemption and Foreclosure.

It is obvious that in a bill for foreclosure the mortgagor or his representatives must always be made parties, they being the parties who are ultimately to pay or to be foreclosed, and in each view interested in seeing that the account is properly taken (b). If the mortgagor has become a bankrupt or an insolvent, he will be represented by his assignees (c); but where the mortgagor has parted with his interest, for instance, if on his marriage he has settled the mortgaged premises, not reserving any interest in himself, and then becomes bankrupt or insolvent, his assignees are not necessary or proper parties to a bill to foreclose (d). If a bill for foreclosure be filed against the mortgagor, and he then becomes bankrupt, and a supplemental bill is filed against his assignees; on the suit being brought to a hearing the decree will give a right of redemption to the bankrupt as well as the assignees: so that in such case the court will not make an immediate decree under the statute 7 Geo. II. c. 20, on the application of the assignees it may be observed that a person who has a prior right to redeem is in this condition, where a person ranking below him seeks to redeem so as to get the legal estate. In Walker v. Jefferys (1 Hare, 341; et v. ibid. 296), the Vice-Chancellor Wigram refused to make a decree, on the ground that a party, who was in equity the owner of property, might be seriously prejudiced if the legal estate were without notice to him assigned to another person.

(a) The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in reference to the 40th of the General Orders of August, 1841, (which authorizes the court, if it shall think fit, to make a decree, saving the rights of absent parties,) stated in the case of Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 212, that a party may stand in one of these positions:—he may be a necessary party to a suit, because other parties to the record cannot have justice done them in his absence [such is the case in foreclosure and redemption suits, as regards the person having the legal estate]; or he may be a necessary [proper] party, as having an interest of his own which the court may be able to protect by saving his rights in the decree [which however can seldom be the case in mortgage suits, as the account can hardly be properly taken in the absence of a party entitled to redeem or to foreclose]; or he may have an interest of his own, which the court may not be able to protect, see 2 Hare, 586;

(b) Vide, inter alia, Pierson v. Robinson, 3 Swanst. 139, in notâ; Farmer v. Curtis, 2 Sim. p. 466; there the heir of the mortgagor could not be found: Scholefield v. Heafield, 7 Sim. 668; and see Baker v. Wetton, ix. Jur. p. 98, Vice-Chancellor of England; S. C., on other points, 14 Sim. 426.

(c) Collins v. Shirley, 1 Russ. & M. 638; the assignees had disclaimed in that case: Kerrick v. Saffery, 7 Sim. 317.

(d) Steele v. Maunder, 1 Coll. 535.

alone (a): no person who has a right to redeem can be an improper party to a bill for foreclosure (b).

A second mortgagee who files a bill to redeem a prior mortgage must make the heir of the mortgagor a party; and that, though the second mortgage is only of part of the estate comprised in the first, and under a different title (c). "It is impossible," said Lord Thurlow, "that a second mortgagee should come into court against the first mortgagee, without making the mortgagor or his heir a party; the natural decree is that the second mortgagee shall redeem the first mortgage, and that the mortgagor shall redeem him or be foreclosed" (d).

An account may be obtained of the rents received by a devisor mortgagee, in a suit to redeem the devisee, though the personal representatives of the devisor are not parties (e), unless a balance should be claimed against his estate.

It is clearly settled that a subsequent mortgagee of a part must redeem the entire mortgage of a prior mortgagee, and all the parties necessary for this purpose must be introduced (f).

Trustees can generally sustain suits in respect of the property conveyed to them in trust (g), they may therefore foreclose; and they will thus acquire the money, or the absolute interest for the benefit of their cestuis que trust: but it is not enough to foreclose the equity of redemption of trustees, therefore where a bill is filed to foreclose, in order that the plaintiff may have an effectual foreclosure, all the cestuis que trust must be parties; indeed, in most cases, it is the cestuis que trust who have to redeem (h). Trustees have only such rights of property as are expressly given to them, or are required for the execution of their trusts; if the purposes for which they were clothed with the trust are at an end, or may be presumed to have been abandoned, the trustees to whom the equity of redemption may have been conveyed cannot file a bill to redeem the estate, when the purpose can

(a) Garth v. Thomas, 2 Sim. & St. 188.

(b) See Tylee v. Webb, 6 Beav. 557.

(c) Palk v. Lord Clinton, 12 Ves. 48, 58.

(d) Fell v. Brown, 2 Bro. 278; recognised, 12 Ves. 58, 59; Farmer v. Curtis, 2 Sim. 466; the heir, in that case, could not be found, yet the objection prevailed; it was a bill by a second mortgagee for redemption and foreclosure. In Howes v. Wadham, Ridg. Ca. Hardwicke, p. 201, (Calvert, p. 14,) Lord Hardwicke, under special circumstances, made a decree in the absence of the heir of the mortgagor, declaring that a person who had the legal interest of the first mortgagee, and had contracted to purchase the equity of redemption, should be considered a trustee of the legal estate for the plaintiff, though he could neither decree a redemption or foreclosure, or a sale, as was prayed by the bill.

(e) Trulock v. Robey, 15 Sim. 277-281.

(f) Palk v. Clinton, 12 Ves. 59-60.

(g) As to suits where the trustees are to give a receipt for the purchase money, and their receipt is to be a sufficient discharge, see the 40th Order of Aug. 1841.

(h) V. infra.

only be for the execution of the trust which is at an end ; at least without the concurrence of the parties beneficially interested (a).

Where a person mortgages property and then assigns it to trustees in trust for creditors, it being stipulated that the creditors shall sign releases and give discharges, and the property is to be divided between them rateably ; if the creditors or any of them sign the deed, it is not sufficient in a bill for redemption to make the trustees parties : generally speaking, all the creditors must also be parties : the court however will consider a numerous body of creditors as sufficiently represented by a limited number, even where they are sought to be charged ; but the reason why the whole are not made parties ought to be stated on the bill (b).

Where the mortgagee has devised or assigned the mortgage, whether the mortgage be in fee or for a term, upon certain trusts, the trustees and cestuis que trust under the trust deed or will must be parties (c). If the mortgagee has made several conveyances in trust in order to entangle the property, it is not necessary for the mortgagor to trace out all the persons interested to make them parties (d) ; but where no such intent appears, the general rule must prevail, though the parties may be numerous (e). And the mortgagor must pay the costs of all persons claiming under the mortgagee made parties to the suit (unless their claims are adverse to one another) (f). In a case before Sir J. Leach, where it was contended that it was sufficient in a bill for foreclosure to make the trustees for sale upon certain trusts parties, they having power to give receipts to the purchaser, his Honour said ;

(a) James v. Biou, 2 Sim. & St. 607-8 : the trustees were in the receipt of the rents and profits of a mortgaged estate under an old conveyance of the equity of redemption, in trust to sell and pay the mortgage debts and certain other debts long since satisfied ; the redemption of the mortgages was not necessary to the performance of the trust for sale had it subsisted ; it was the mortgagee who took the objection and prevailed.

(b) Holland v. Baker, 3 Hare, p. 70 ; the trustees were parties as creditors, but this was held not to be sufficient ; the creditors appeared to be fifty-four in number.

(c) Wetherell v. Collins, 3 Mad. 255 ; Coles v. Forrest, 10 Beav. 557 ; Anderson v. Stather, 2 Coll. 209 ; and see Redesdale on Pl. 174-5 ; Drew v. Harman, 5 Price, 319, where Chief Baron Richards said, " As a matter of indulgence the cestuis que trust, not parties, might, in certain cases, be let in by petition to have their interests ascertained and protected ; " Whistler v. Webb, Bunb. 53.

(d) Yates v. Hambly, 2 Atk. 237.

(e) Osbourn v. Fallows, 1 Russ. & M. 743.

(f) Skipp v. Wyatt, 1 Cox, 353 ; King v. Smith, 6 Hare, 475 ; Wetherell v. Collins, 3 Mad. 255 ; Bartle v. Wilkin, 8 Sim. p. 238 ; even where the second mortgagee, pending a suit for foreclosure, assigns his interest, the costs occasioned by that assignment were held by Lord Langdale to be chargeable against the mortgaged estate ; but not where the mortgagee so assigning his interest is plaintiff in the suit ; Coles v. Forrest, 10 Beav. 556. But the additional costs cannot be charged against the estate, to the prejudice of a subsequent incumbrancer, where the assignment is made by a prior incumbrancer after decree ; Barry v. Wrey, 3 Russ. p. 465 ; Coles v. Forrest, ibid. p. 556 ; and see Smith v. Chichester, 2 Dru. & W. 403 ; Capper v. Terrington, 1 Coll. 102 ; Burdon v. Oldaker, ibid. p. 107 ; Reade v. Sparkes, 1 Moll. 8 ; Ex parte Ommaney, 10 Sim. p. 298, (Mr. Beavan's note) ; v. infra, 706 ; and, as to the costs of the mortgagee generally, v. infra, Section xi.

The author of the trust has declared that in case of a sale the presence of the parties beneficially interested in the sale shall not be necessary ; but this declaration has no application to a bill of foreclosure filed against the trustees, and the general rule must prevail that all parties interested in the equity of redemption shall be parties to such a suit for foreclosure (a).

The owner of an estate made a mortgage and a further charge to the plaintiff, and afterwards conveyed the equity of redemption to trustees in trust for his daughter and her children. In a bill for foreclosure by the first mortgagee, the trustees were made parties and appeared at the hearing ; but the daughter and her children being out of the jurisdiction (though made parties) did not appear. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce held that the suit could not proceed in their absence, they being the first persons interested in the equity of redemption (b).

Where a marriage settlement contains the usual power to appoint new trustees and one retires ; though a memorandum be indorsed on the deed to that effect, if no new trustee has been appointed and the continuing trustee lend part of the trust money on mortgage the retiring trustee must be a party to a bill for foreclosure, else the mortgagor would not be relieved from the possibility of a new suit being instituted against him (c).

Generally speaking, as has already been observed, the trustee is the party to sue (d), but if the cestui que trust of the mortgage money do file a bill seeking to foreclose he must make his trustee a party (e).

If a bill is filed to have the benefit of a charge upon an estate, all persons must be made parties who claim an interest in the charge (f) : and where there are numerous mortgagees of tolls or dues arising from one subject or undertaking, all the mortgagees must sue together, at least all must be parties, in order that there may be but one account (g).

(a) Calverley v. Phelps, 6 Mad. 232.

(b) Anderson v. Stather, 2 Coll. p. 212 ; ix. Jur. p. 806. The Vice-Chancellor, in giving judgment, said, " If none of the parties before the court were to redeem, the parties not before the court might be absolutely foreclosed and lose their rights. The only mode of avoiding that seems to be payment by some person before the court of what is due. Payment could not be made without a transfer of the security. That security may turn out to be no security at all, for the persons first interested in the equity of redemption may be admitted to show that nothing is due. That is the ground upon which Lord Thurlow, in Fell v. Brown, and Sir L. Shadwell, in Farmer v. Curtis, supra, appear to have acted. I am afraid the cause must stand over." 2 Coll. 212 ; and see Browne v. Blount, 2 Russ. & M. 83, and the cases in the note.

(c) Adams v. Paynter, 1 Coll. 533.

(d) Barker v. Birch, 1 De G. & Sm. 383 ; supra, p. 698.

(e) Wood v. Williams, 4 Mad. 186.

(f) Vice-Chancellor of England, Newton v. Earl Egmont, 5 Sim. 137.

(g) Mellish v. Brooks, 3 Beav. 22, 27.

Where the mortgagee has mortgaged his mortgage interest, the derivative mortgagee cannot file a bill to foreclose the mortgagor without making the original mortgagee or his representative a party, in order that they may be present at taking the account of what is due on the original mortgage (a); but if the original mortgagee should file a bill to redeem the derivative mortgagee, or the derivative mortgagee should file a bill to foreclose his mortgagor, the original mortgagor would have no interest, and therefore would not be a proper party.

Where the mortgagor assigned his interest in the fund mortgaged to trustees in trust to sell and pay the debt due to the mortgagee, and the residue to the mortgagor, it was held that the trustees were improperly made parties to a bill by the mortgagee to foreclose; the assignment being a mere private arrangement of the mortgagor which he might cancel at pleasure (b).

A person having a partial interest in the equity of redemption cannot file a bill to foreclose, without making all the other persons interested in the equity of redemption parties (c).

The mortgagee's remedy is against the mortgaged estate, he has nothing to do with any adjustment of accounts between the parties who may become successively entitled to the mortgaged premises; therefore the representatives of a deceased tenant for life who ought to have kept down the interest are not in such case necessary parties (d).

On a bill for foreclosure of a mortgage in fee brought by the mortgagee against the heir of the mortgagor, it is not necessary or even, it seems, proper to make the executor a party (e): The executor, said Sir W. Grant, is named in every mortgage deed, (that is, that on payment by the heirs, executors or administrators the estate shall be void) and in every case (f) the personal representative is to pay if there are assets, though the heir is to have the benefit (g); but this is a matter in which the mortgagee ought not to be mixed up: and though the mortgage be created by means of a term it is the same, for with that species of term the personal representatives have nothing to do (h). But if the mortgagee by his bill calls upon the court actively to interfere, not merely to foreclose—as to decree a sale—then the rule that (a) Slade v. Rigg, 3 Hare, 35.

(b) Hobart v. Abbot, 2 P. W. 643.

(c) Henley v. Stone, 3 Beav. 355.

(d) Wynne v. Styant, 2 Phill. 305.

(e) Duncombe v. Hansley, mentioned in note (A) to Knight v. Knight, 3 P. W. 333; Bradshaw v. Outram, 13 Ves. 234; Cary v. Ash, 9 March, 1808, Mad. MS., 2 P. and P. 231; Knight v. Knight, which Mr. Maddock cites as contra, was a bill for the specific performance of a covenant, which the executor might have performed in part: and Plunket v. Penson, 2 Atk. 50, evidently was not a case of a mortgage.

(f) Not however as against specific or pecuniary legatees; v. supra; et infra, Sect. xii.

(g) Bradshaw v. Outram, ubi sup.

(h) Ibid.

complete justice should be done as between the two estates, the real and the personal (a), comes into operation, and the personal representative, if the personal estate is primarily liable, must be made a party (b).

If a bill be brought by the heir of the mortgagee to foreclose, the executor ought to be made a party, for the heir of the mortgagee is a trustee for the executor (c): so if a bill be brought against the heir of the mortgagee to redeem, the personal representative must be a party, "for if it should fall out upon the account that money should be paid by the mortgagor, that is to be paid to the executor or administrator, and not to the heir (d).” The heir need not be a party to a bill by a devisee to redeem (e).

Where several persons are entitled to the mortgage money as joint tenants, all must be made parties to a bill for the foreclosure of the mortgage (f): a person who becomes entitled to a part of the mortgage money in severalty cannot foreclose a proportionate part of the estate, the other persons interested must be parties (g).

Where a mortgage is made to several jointly, though the debt and the security survive at law, yet as in equity the mortgagees are tenants in common, the representatives of any of the deceased mortgagees must be made parties to a bill either for redemption or foreclosure (h); and where two or more have mortgaged and one is dead, and the representatives of the deceased mortgagor have any possible interest, they ought to be made parties (i).

Where the mortgagee has absolutely assigned the mortgage without the previous authority of the mortgagor, or his declaration that so much is due, the mortgagee is not a necessary party to a bill for redemption; It is enough, said Lord Eldon, to make that man a party who has contracted to stand in the place of the original mortgagee

(a) Knight v. Knight, Plunket v. Penson, ubi sup.

(b) Daniel v. Skipwith, 2 Bro. 155; Christophers v. Sparke, 2 J. & W. p. 229, dict.; M'Donough v. Shewbridge, 2 Ball & B. 563.

(c) Freake v. Horseley, 2 Eq. Ab. p. 77; Meeker v. Tanton, 2 Ca. Ch. 29; Gobe v. Carlisle, cited Clerkson v. Bowyer, 2 Vern. 67; though, as before stated, (supra, p. 682,) it was held, in that case, that the heir was only to be a trustee to the extent of the money secured by the mortgage which he had foreclosed, and that he might keep the estate on paying that amount to the executors; and see the decree, Raithby's note; but see the dict. Winn v. Littleton, 1 Vern. 4; and Ascough v. Johnson, 2 Vern. p. 66: the heir who buys up incumbrances can only be entitled as against creditors to what he gave for them, Lancaster v. Evors, 10 Beav. 166.

(d) Anon. 2 Freem. 52.

(e) Lewis v. Nangle, 2 Ves. 431.

(f) Lowe v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 368.

(g) Palmer v. Lord Carlisle, 1 Sim. & St. p. 425.

(h) Vickers v. Cowell, 1 Beav. 529.

(i) Chalié v. Gwynne, 6 Law J., N. S., 274, Rolls; mortgage by tenant for life (dead), and tenant in tail, they had subsequently sold the estate to the mortgagee, and the contract had not been completed; the representatives of the tenant for life would be entitled to some part of the purchase-money, and were therefore held to be necessary parties.

and all assignees, till the title was got in by himself (a). Where the mortgagee assigns only a part of the benefit of his security he is a necessary party (b).

However minute the interest which a person may have still he must be a party. Sir Francis Vincent having a life interest subject to a term of 1000 years to secure 3000*l.* and interest, demised the estate for a term of 200 years if he should so long live to one Lyde for securing 1900*l.* and interest with a power of sale; the sale was made and the plaintiff became the purchaser, he then filed a bill against the first mortgagee to redeem; it was held that Sir F. Vincent was a necessary party: "The interest of Sir F. Vincent," said the Vice-Chancellor, "may be very small, but it cannot I think be disregarded (c)."

As regards subsequent incumbrancers: where the bill is filed by a first mortgagee to foreclose, it has long been the practice (d) to make all Judgment Creditors intervening between the first mortgagee and the subsequent mortgage parties to the suit; though cases of judgments confessed pendente lite, cases of fraud, and cases of parties inconveniently numerous, may exist in such a manner as to form exceptions to the rule: and Judgment Creditors are such parties that they are not within the operation of the 26th Order of 23rd August, 1841, which provides that where no direct relief is sought against a party to a suit, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to require such party, not being an infant, to appear and to answer the bill; for their interests are not identical with that of the plaintiff, and in effect direct relief is prayed against them (e).

The principle as affecting judgment creditors being made parties was elaborately discussed by the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, and the Lord Chancellor Sugden, in a late case in Ireland. It was alleged that according to the existing practice there, it was not necessary to bring judgment creditors before the court; of this practice the Lord Chancellor highly disapproved: his Lordship's reasons, though directed against the existing practice in Ireland, are very mate-

(a) Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. 269; Sir J. Leach, in Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Mad. 479, puts it on the ground that the mortgagee has no longer any interest.

(b) Norrish v. Marshall, ubi supra.

(c) Hunter v. Macklew, 5 Hare, 242.

(d) In The Bishop of London v. Beavor, the court ordered a bill of foreclosure to stand over, to make one judgment creditor a party, but would not determine the general point, whether all incumbrancers should be parties; 3 Ves. p. 314. In Calverley v. Phelp and others, before the Vice-Chancellor, 26 April, 1822, 6 Mad. p. 229, it was said, (though not stated in the Report,) "that Winchester v. Beavor was not now the rule of this court, a judgment creditor having no lien on the real estate," (i. e. before execution sued out,) "but only a right to subject it to his debt;" Mad. MS., P. and P. ii. 233: but quære as the law now stands whether that reasoning can apply; v. infra, Rolleston v. Morton.

(e) Adams v. Paynter, 1 Coll. p. 532; and see, as to this Order generally, Calvert, p. 86.

rial as illustrative of the general principle as affecting incumbrancers generally of every description. The reason, said the Lord Chancellor (a), why you bring the judgment creditor before the court, is because he can execute his judgment at law, therefore the avowed object is to bind him, not to benefit him, and it would be unjust to bind him in his absence. When the judgment creditor had only a demand against the equitable estate, the court, said his Lordship, felt it had a power it could exercise more stringently than when his demand attached upon the legal estate, and because he could not attach the estate at all excepting through the medium of this court it said, "We will bind you, though absent;" that also, continued his Lordship, is manifest injustice; he has a right in equity, and how can you deprive him of that right? What right have you to distribute the fund upon which he has a lien, without giving him an opportunity of defending himself? The judgment creditor has an incumbrance, he is therefore entitled to watch the proceedings to see that they are fair, and that the demand sought to be established is a real one; no proper title can be made to a purchaser under such a decree, unless this court is prepared to grant an injunction against all such creditors, which it clearly has no power to do. The court, continued his Lordship, cannot bind parties in their absence, the purchaser is therefore bound by the judgment, and the creditor may proceed upon his judgment at any time. I conclude, therefore, said his Lordship, that even independently of the act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 22) (b), it is a right if not a duty to bring him before the court. But when you come to the act, it is impossible to argue the question: that which was by the Statute of Westminster a general lien, by this act becomes a specific charge—under the act of parliament there is no question but that the judgment, whether on a legal or equitable estate, becomes an equitable estate, and then it assumes quite a different character and becomes a specific incumbrance: and his Lordship, though unwillingly in reference to the particular case, held that subsequent judgment creditors were necessary parties (c).

(a) Rolleston v. Morton, 1 Conn. & L. 264; 1 Dru. & W. 171; and see Henry v. Smith, 1 Conn. & L. p. 512: and Gordon v. Horsfall (case from Jamaica), in the Priv. Co., xi. Jur. 573, b. The general right of the judgment creditor is there put upon this footing, that he has a right to have the legal impediment against his obtaining execution at law, which is created by the mortgage, put out of the way; but the statute 1 Vict. c. 110, gives the judgment creditor here a direct claim to redeem; see the cases cited above in this note.

(b) Which corresponds with the English act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 13, directing that judgments registered shall operate as a charge upon lands; v. supra, vol. i. p. 505, note.

(c) Rollestone v. Morton, 1 Con. & Law. pp. 266-7; 2 Dru. & W. 192-3; the judgment there is a little varied in language.

This much appears to be clear upon the authorities which have been cited, that on a bill to foreclose a mortgage, in order that the plaintiff may obtain a complete title under a foreclosure, all persons who have incumbrances on the estate at the time of the commencement of the suit posterior in point of time to the plaintiff's mortgage must be made parties. If the plaintiff should foreclose the mortgagor and such incumbrancers as he has made parties, as it has been held he may, in some cases, though it may appear that there are other incumbrancers (a); yet he will be liable to be redeemed by any incumbrancer not a party to that suit, on fair and equitable terms in regard to the expenses he has incurred and interest (b), and this whether he had any notice of that incumbrancer's title or not (c). Lord Alvanley in noticing the general course of the court, and almost universal practice to insist upon every one having a right to redeem being made a party, stated the principal reason to be the gross injustice that might else result; as the court might compel a mortgagee to reconvey to a mortgagor where it appeared by his own answer he had no right to it, and thus cut out the intervening incumbrancer, and give the mortgagor the legal estate to keep him off with (d).

It is now well established as a general rule, that incumbrancers who become such after a bill filed are not necessary parties, they being affected by the doctrine of lis pendens (e): an alienation pending a suit is void as regards the interests of the other parties (f), or, it may perhaps be stated more correctly, the purchaser takes subject to the effect of the suit; and this applies both as regards the

(a) Draper v. Clarendon, 2 Vern. p. 518. Foreclosing does no mischief in such a case, but if the mortgagor were to redeem and get the legal estate, it might; v. infra, note (58).

(b) Cockes v. Sherman, 2 Freem. 14, 15, 1st and 3rd points; Lomax v. Hyde, 2 Vern. 185; Godfrey v. Chadwell, 2 Vern. 601.

(c) Morret v. Westerne, 2 Vern. 663; and a decree obtained without making parties those whose rights are affected by it, is void as against them; Giffard v. Hort, 1 Scho. & L. p. 386; but see Wrixon v. Vize, 1 Conn. & L. 303-4, and the cases there cited as to opening the accounts which have been taken; the Lord Chancellor there intimated that he should not follow Dick v. Butler, 1 Molloy, 42. The cases on this subject are collected by Mr. Calvert, On Parties, 180-185: and see his observations on this subject, p. 186, et seq.

Mr. Daniell, (Practice, i. p. 373,) in reference to Newton v. Lord Egmont, 5 Sim. 130, says, "It is the general and almost universal practice, in suits for establishing charges on estates, to make all persons entitled to incumbrances subsequent to the plaintiff's charge, parties to the suit."

(d) Lord Alvanley, Bishop of Winchester v. Beavor, 3 Ves. p. 316. At the same time his Lordship said, he would not lay down that it was absolutely necessary that all incumbrancers should be parties, as that would arm a man with a shield to avoid foreclosure, it must depend upon the circumstances, ibid. 317: and in the late case of Rolleston v. Morton, above referred to, 1 Conn. & L. p. 263, Lord Chancellor Sugden expressed the same disinclination.

(e) Garth v. Ward, 2 Atk. 174; Bishop of Winchester v. Paine, 11 Ves. 195; Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 269, 273.

(f) Walker v. Smalwood, Ambl. 676; Gaskell v. Durdin, 1 Ball & B. p. 167; Moore v. Macnamara, ibid. 187-8.

mortgagor and mortgagee. It is a maxim, said Sir Thomas Plumer, pendente lite nihil innovetur (a); and the true interpretation of that rule is, that a conveyance does not vary the rights of the parties in that suit; with regard to them it is as if it had never existed; for suits would be interminable, if one party pending the suit could, by conveying to others, create a necessity for introducing new parties; and though, ordinarily, a decree binds only the parties to the suit, yet he who purchases during the pendency of the suit is bound by the decree that may be made against the person from whom he derives title (b): an assignment, for instance, of the equity of redemption, pending a bill for redemption, puts the assignee upon the same footing as the person from whom he obtained the assignment (c); so, the purchaser of an estate charged with debts, pending a suit by creditors, is bound (d): however in all these cases the purchase, during the pendency of the suit, is not absolutely annulled; the purchaser takes, but subject to the effect of the suit upon the property (e). However, Sir Wm. Grant observed, in The Bishop of Winchester v. Paine (f), that if the legal estate were acquired during the pendency of the suit, it might be necessary, in order to obtain it, to have recourse to a new suit (g). The same learned Judge also determined, in the last-cited case, that the suit having abated by the death of the mortgagor, did not render it necessary to make parties those who, when the bill of revivor was filed, were incumbrancers, but were not such when the original bill was filed; and he observed that, if the incumbrancers had acquired their title during an abatement of the suit, there would be a difficulty; though Lord Nottingham seems to have thought they would not be necessary parties. There may be other cases besides that above alluded to of the legal estate having passed, where by reason of an alienation pendente lite the suit cannot properly go on without the alienee being made a party by supplemental bill; for instance, where a party has obtained the title deeds, or where he has obtained possession or has received the rents; where it may be proper, and even necessary that an alienee pendente lite should be made a party. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in conformity with the doctrine above stated, lately laid down that where one of several plaintiffs after the institution of a suit executes an instrument

(a) Co. Litt. 344, b.

(b) Metcalfe v. Pulvertoft, 2 Ves. & B. 204-5-6-7; B. of Winchester v. Paine, 11 Ves. 197.(c) See case put by Lord Hardwicke, in Garth v. Ward, 2 Atk. 175; sed v. infra, p. 707, Solomon v. Solomon.(d) Walker v. Smalwood, Ambl. 676.(e) See Metcalfe v. Pulvertoft, 2 Ves. & B. p. 200.

(f) 11 Ves. 195.

(g) See Redesdale, Pl., 73, 74; et v. supra, p. 699, note (f).

which merely affects that plaintiff's equitable interest, the suit may be heard as if no such assignment had been made, and that those who claim under the assignment must take such course to enforce their rights as they may be advised (a); but the Vice-Chancellor of England has since held, in a case where some of the plaintiffs in a suit to administer an estate mortgaged their interests, which were equitable, pending the suit, that the mortgagee ought to be made a party (b).

Where the estate mortgaged is limited in strict settlement, it is sufficient to bring the first tenant in tail before the court, as he represents the inheritance, which will be bound by the decree (c). If there be no person entitled to an estate of inheritance, the tenant for life being present, the court will act on the inheritance (d); contingent limitations and executory devises to persons not in being may in like manner be bound by a decree against a person claiming a vested estate of inheritance; but a person in being claiming under a limitation by way of executory devise not subject to any preceding vested estate of inheritance by which it may be defeated, must be a party to a bill affecting his rights (e). If by the birth of any person, or any contingency happening pending the suit, the rights of the parties are varied or new rights come into existence, the persons having such new rights must be brought before the court by supplemental bill (f).

Generally speaking, every person who may have to do an act to effectuate the ultimate decree must be a party; thus the trustee in whom the legal estate is vested, and the heir of a mortgagee to whom the mortgaged premises have descended, must be a party to a bill for foreclosure filed by the executor of a mortgagee, for if the estate should be redeemed he would have to convey (g): generally speaking, the same principle applies to every person who would be a necessary party to the conveyance, in case of the premises being redeemed (h).

Annuitants or other persons whose charges are paramount to the

(a) Eades v. Harris, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 234.

(b) Solomon v. Solomon, 13 Sim. 516, as to the Costs, v. sup. p. 699.

(c) Lloyd v. Johnes, 9 Ves. 65; Reynoldson v. Perkins, Amb. 564.

(d) See Giffard v. Hart, 1 Scho. & L. 407, 408; Calvert, 59: but the rule seems to be limited to the case of where the issue of the tenant for life would be entitled to the inheritance; Calvert, p. 60.

(e) And see Goodess v. Williams, 2 Yo. &

Coll. C. C. 598.

(f) Redesdale, Pl., pp. 173-4.

(g) Wood v. Williams, 4 Mad. p. 186; bill filed by cestui que trust of a mortgage: Scott v. Nicoll, 3 Russ. 476. On a bill to redeem, the person having the legal estate must be before the court, for otherwise the mortgagor cannot have a complete re-conveyance; Wood v. Williams, before Vice-Chancellor Leach, April, 1819, Mad. MS., Pr. and P. i. 236.

(h) See Adams v. Paynter, 1 Coll. 532.

mortgage are not proper parties to a bill for sale or foreclosure of the mortgaged estate; the estate whether foreclosed or sold will still be liable to their charges (a).

A second mortgagee may file a bill against the mortgagor and a third mortgagee for foreclosure, leaving out the first; such bills are supported on the ground of convenience (b), and because the second mortgagee, if he should foreclose, only puts himself in the condition of the mortgagor; and even if the third mortgagee should pay off the second and redeem, or if the mortgagor should redeem both, the first mortgagee will be left in the same condition as before, indeed his case will be simplified (c).

A bill may be sustained for payment out of a surplus coming to a mortgagor, without making the prior incumbrancers parties, if the decree sought will leave the interests of the prior incumbrancers wholly untouched (d); but this can only apply where the claims and priorities of such incumbrancers have been definitively ascertained, and there are no accounts to be taken in which they are interested (e).

The title of a mortgagee cannot be impeached in the absence of his mortgagor (f).

A very useful order was issued by Lord Cottenham (39th Order, 1841), under which the cause may be set down to be heard simply on the question as to the want of parties; but it has been found necessary in many cases to leave the question open to be discussed at the hearing, when the aspect of the case may be entirely altered, if the parties shall think fit to do so (g).

By another order (the 40th) if the defendant shall object at the hearing that the suit is defective for want of parties, not having taken the objection by plea or answer, the court is at liberty to make a decree saving the rights of the absent parties (h).

(a) Delabere v. Norwood, Lord Colchester's MS., 3 Swanst. p. 144; it is there said that if the annuities in that case had been subsequent to the mortgage, the annuitants would not have been necessary parties; but if not they could not of course have been foreclosed, and whoever might have redeemed they would have had a right to redeem in respect of their annuities; so that it is at least convenient that they should be parties.

(b) Vice-Chancellor of England, Rose v. Page, 2 Sim. 472.

(c) See Richards v. Cooper, 5 Beav. 304.

(d) Lewis v. Lord Zouche, 2 Sim. 392.

(e) Cocker v. Lord Egmont, 6 Sim. p. 316; and see Newton v. Lord Egmont, 4 Sim. 574, and 5 Sim. 130.

(f) Wright v. Wood, Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, xii. Jur. 597.

(g) Welham v. Welham, 10 Beav. p. 248; and see Greenwood v. Rothwell, 7 Beav. 279; and see, as to this order, Lovell v. Andrew, 15 Sim. 581.

(h) See Feltham v. Clark, 1 De G. & S. 307, and Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 199. As to what charge in a bill of a claim on the part of a defendant as mortgagee, or otherwise, where the claim is negated by the bill, will sustain the bill against him as a proper party on demurrer by him, see the late cases of Dalton v. Hayter, 7 Beav. p. 313; and Hodgson v. Espinasse, 10 Beav. p. 473.

SECTION VI.—Time as a Bar—Statute of Limitations.

Long Adverse Enjoyment and the Omission for a great Length of Time to assert apparently Just Claims, have an important effect in Equity.

Doctrine of the Court of Chancery in respect of Adverse Possession before the Statute 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 27.

Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 28, § 40, and § 42.

Retrospective Operation of the Act.

Where the Mortgagee in Possession acquires a Life Interest in the Property mortgaged. Time of filing the Bill to be looked to, not the Service of the Subpœna.

Effect of making a Person a Party by Amendment.

What Section of the Act applies to a Bill for Foreclosure.

Dearman v. Wyche, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Wrixon v. Vize, before Lord Chancellor Sugden.

Construction of Acts 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 1 Vict. c. 28, as to Right to demand Interest.

Where there is a Trust subsisting.

Length of Time as a Bar must be relied on by Pleading.

Where Time may be taken Advantage of by Demurrer.

Additional Notes.

No. I.—As to Provisions in the Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, for Persons under Disabilities.

No. II.—Effect of the Stat. 1 Vict. c. 28.

No. III.—Effect of the Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, where the Representation is Dormant.

A LONG adverse enjoyment, as we have had frequent occasion to notice, and an omission for a great length of time, unexplained, to assert an apparently just claim (a), have a most important influence in barring equitable rights. Before the passing of the act to be presently mentioned, it had been established that this court ought not to relieve after an adverse possession of 20 years, and the court regarded more the antiquity of possession by the defendant than the novel accruer of title to the plaintiff (b): that doctrine had important consequences

(a) See Pattison v. Hawkesworth, 10 Beav. p. 377. The general doctrine as to the bar from length of time, and the effect of the recent statutes, as affecting trusts, has been fully considered by Mr. Lewin, ch. xxv. p. 608, et seq.; and by Mr. Hill, p. 248, et seq.

(b) Corbett v. Barker, 1 Anst. 138; Ravald v. Russell, 1 You. 9; Collard v. Hare, 2 Russ.

& M. 675, 683; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 4 Bli. N. S. 1: see the Vice-Chancellor of England's exposition of the doctrine established by these cases in Bennett v. Colley, 5 Sim. p. 191, affirmed, on appeal; and Ashton v. Milne, 6 Sim. p. 378; and see Searle v. Colt, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 51; and Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 383.

on the general doctrine of the court, as regards the equitable right to Redeem and the right to Foreclose. "The new Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27), which places equitable rights upon the same footing with legal ones, and provides expressly within what period a mortgage may be redeemed, has rendered some important decisions in the Court of Chancery and in the House of Lords, upon the effect of adverse possession, as between equitable claimants, of little value" (a): but it may be useful still to refer to some of the leading authorities.

It has been said to be a rule, "once a mortgage and always a mortgage (b)"; but, by the general doctrines of the Court of Chancery, although if a mortgagee enters in his character of mortgagee, or by virtue of his mortgage title alone, he is for the period of twenty years liable to account if called upon, and liable to become trustee for the mortgagor if payment be tendered to him; yet holding himself ready to answer these liabilities he owes no other duty: he may, if permitted, hold on for twenty years without accounting or admitting his mortgage title, and if he does so his title becomes as absolute in equity as it was previously at law: the mortgagor having for twenty years neglected to tender payment, or to procure an account or admission, is held to have lost his right of redemption; so that the mortgagee in this case has only to look at what was, at first, his mortgage title, and to the length of possession without account or admission (c).

If however there had been acknowledgments within twenty years that the estate was held in mortgage, and accounts had been kept, a possession even of thirty (d), forty (e), or fifty years (f), would not have barred a redemption; the time began to run from the last of the admissions, and if the mortgagor and those claiming under him had continued to pay interest, or what was equivalent to it, length of time was in such case no bar to redemption of however ancient date the mortgage might be (g). It was also held that if a man took notice by a

(a) Sugd. Law of Prop. 579. Sir Edward Sugden has, in that and the following pages, shortly stated the effect of the important case of Cholmondeley v. Clinton, as to this point: this case is stated, as to the point of Construction which it involves, supra, vol. i. pp. 550, 553. The decisions on the statute are so numerous, both at law and in equity, that it is impossible to do more than refer to the most material of those which may be applicable to the present subject.

(b) Newcomb v. Bonham, 1 Vernon, p. 8; Howard v. Harris, 1 Vern. p. 33; James v. Oades, 2 Vern. 402; Grounds and Rudiments, 246.

(c) Lord Langdale, Raffety v. King, 1 Keen, 616-17.

(d) 2 Atk. 333; and see Hodde v. Healey, 6 Mad. 181; Rayner v. Oastler, ibid. p. 274; Cowne v. Douglas, 1 M'Clel. & Y. Ex. R. 321.

(e) Smart v. Hunt, 4 Ves. 478, in note.

(f) See Lake v. Thomas, 3 Ves. p. 17, and what is said in Edsell v. Buchanan, 2 Ves. J. 84; S. C. 4 Bro. C. C. 256; and Proctor v. Cowper, 2 Vern. p. 377; S. C. Pr. Ch. p. 116; Hodde v. Healey, 6 Mad. 184; Sir J. Leach there drew a distinction as to acknowledgments made after the twenty years had elapsed.

(g) 1 P. Wms. 271; Anon. 2 Atk. p. 333; Yates v. Hambly, 2 Atk. 363.

will, or any other deliberate act (a), an answer for instance to a bill in Chancery (b), or a recital in a deed (c), that he was a mortgagee, acknowledgments of that nature would have taken the case out of the rule that a mortgagor should not redeem after twenty years' possession by the mortgagee; and that, although the acknowledgment were in a deed (a surrender, for instance, of a copyhold subject to the mortgage,) to which neither the mortgagor or any person claiming under him was a party (d): but the mere demand of an account was not alone sufficient to prevent the effect of such a length of time (e); though the settlement of an account of what was due for principal and interest was (f), unless it were by a person not lawfully authorized (g). Even parol evidence of acknowledgments might be adduced to show that the mortgage was subsisting, but such evidence was required to be clear and unequivocal (h). What the effect would be of mortgage accounts kept by the mortgagee, without any communication on the subject with the mortgagor, had not been decided (i). The time began to run from the time the mortgagee entered into possession, and continued to run against all persons claiming under the mortgagor (k); but the possession must have been of the whole of the estate, not of a part only (l).

The rule acted upon by the court, it may be observed, was not founded on a presumption of an absolute conveyance or release, but was a positive rule introduced for the sake of quieting titles after so long a neglect to disturb them, analogous to the bar created by the statutes of limitations at law (m).

By the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 28, it is enacted, that when a mortgagee shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or the receipt of any rent, comprised in his mortgage, the

(a) Perry v. Marston, 2 Bro. C. C. p. 399. This decree was afterwards reversed, but on another point; see Reeks v. Postlethwaite, G. Coop. 164; see also Anon. 3 Atk. 314; Whiting v. White, G. Coop. 4.

(b) Proctor v. Oates, 2 Atk. 140.

(c) 2 Bro. C. C. p. 399; and see Carew v. Johnston, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 295; Smart v. Hunt, 4 Ves. 478, n.; Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 466; S. C. on re-hearing, 5 Ves. 426.

(d) Hansard v. Hardy, 18 Ves. 455; and see Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 466; Daniell v. Golby, before Vice-Chancellor Leach, 27 Feb. 1818, MS., Mad. Pr. and P. i. p. 654; and see Price v. Copner, 1 Sim. & St. p. 347; S. C., stated 6 Sim. 378.

(e) Hodle v. Healey, 1 Ves. & Bea. 540.

(f) Anon. 2 Atk. 333.

(g) Barron v. Martin, G. Coop. 192.

(h) See Whiting v. White, 2 Cox, p. 290; S. C. G. Coop. p. 6; Reeks v. Postlethwaite, Coop. 171; Barron v. Martin, ibid. 192; and the other cases, Jarm. Mortgages, by Sweet, p. 385.

(i) Per Lord Eldon, in Barron v. Martin, 19 Ves. 333.

(k) Ashton v. Milne, 6 Sim. pp. 369, 378; Raffety v. King, 1 Keen, p. 610.

(l) Burke v. Lynch, 2 Ball & B. 432.

(m) Corbett v. Baker, 1 Anst. 138; and see 3 Anst. p. 759; Belch v. Harvey, Mad. MS., P. and P. i. 654; Grenfell v. Girdlestone, 2 Yo. & Coll. 662, 679, 680, 682; and see Jarman, Convey. by Sweet, 500; and Lewin on Trusts, 620. As to the Presumption of actual Payment, or that the debt was never due arising from length of time, see Christophers v. Sparke, 2 Jac. & W. 223, before Sir Thos. Plumer.

mortgagor or any person claiming through him shall not bring a suit to redeem the mortgage but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained such possession or receipt, unless in the mean time an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption shall have been given to the mortgagor, or some person claiming his estate, or to the agent of such mortgagor or person, in writing signed by the mortgagee or the person claiming through him; and in such case no such suit shall be brought but within twenty years next after the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments if more than one, was given; and when there shall be more than one mortgagor, or more than one person claiming through the mortgagor or mortgagors, such acknowledgment, if given to any of such mortgagors or persons, or his or their agent, shall be as effectual as if the same had been given to all such mortgagors or persons; but where there shall be more than one mortgagee, or more than one person claiming the estate or interest of the mortgagee or mortgagees, such acknowledgment, signed by one or more of such mortgagees or persons, shall be effectual only as against the party or parties signing as aforesaid, and the person or persons claiming any part of the mortgage money or land or rent by, from, or under him or them, and any person or persons entitled to any estate or estates, interest or interests, to take effect after or in defeasance of his or their estate or estates, interest or interests, and shall not operate to give to the mortgagor or mortgagors a right to redeem the mortgage as against the person or persons entitled to any other undivided or divided part of the money or land or rent; and where such of the mortgagees or persons aforesaid as shall have given such acknowledgment shall be entitled to a divided part of the land or rent comprised in the mortgage, or some estate or interest therein, and not to any ascertained part of the mortgaged money, the mortgagor or mortgagors shall be entitled to redeem the same divided part of the land or rent on payment, with interest, of the part of the mortgage money which shall bear the same proportion to the whole of the mortgage money as the value of such divided part of the land or rent shall bear to the value of the whole of the land or rent comprised in the mortgage (a).

By the 40th section of the same act it is enacted, that after the said 31st day of December, 1833, no action or suit or other proceeding shall be brought, to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise charged upon or payable out of

(a) The general rule, it will be remembered, is that a mortgage cannot be redeemed in part,
supra, p. 666.

any land or rent, at law or in equity, or any legacy, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the mean time some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon, shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent; and in such case no such action or suit or proceeding shall be brought but within twenty years after such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of such payments or acknowledgments if more than one, was given (a).

The 42nd section of the act limits the mortgagee's right to recover the arrears of interest to six years next after the time when it accrued or an acknowledgment in writing to the party entitled or his agent (b); but it is provided that where a prior mortgagee has been in possession within one year next before an action or suit by a subsequent incumbrancer, he may recover the whole amount of interest which accrued during the time of such possession.

On a bill for redemption, it appeared that in 1816 the mortgagee entered into possession: the mortgagee in 1827 assigned the mortgaged premises to one Finden, subject to the equity of redemption, an acknowledgment which would have kept alive the right to redeem before the statute. In 1833 the Statute of Limitations was passed, enacting, as will have been observed, that the acknowledgment must be to the mortgagor or his agent (c); and none such had been made within twenty years before the bill was filed, namely, 1845; the statutable term of twenty years expired in 1836; the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the right to redeem was barred (d).

Where a mortgagee in possession becomes entitled to the interest of the tenant for life, by purchase or otherwise, his possession is not (a) The 40th section applies equally where a judgment is sought to be enforced against the personal estate or against the land, Watson v. Birch, 15 Sim. 523, 524, 529. A reference in a suit to which the claimant is not a party, at the instance of an admitted incumbrancer, to inquire who were incumbrancers on the estate other than the petitioner, does not prevent the statute from running against the claimant who is not a party; ibid. As to acknowledgments by the agent of the party to be charged, see Hyde v. Johnson, 3 Scott, 289, on the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 14; but see the distinction taken by the Vice-Chancellor of England between that stat. and the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27,

Lord St. John v. Boughton, 9 Sim. 225, where his Honour held that an acknowledgment by the agent of a trustee who was liable to pay, was sufficient under that statute; the letter was signed "for" the trustee. Sir E. Sugden, V. and P. p. 637, note (y), has collected the cases on this subject.

(b) But v. infra, p. 716.

(c) V. supra, p. 712; see Lucas v. Dennison, 13 Sim. p. 584. In Trulock v. Robey, 12 Sim. 402, a letter written to the grandfather of an infant was held to be sufficient, he being treated as agent in the letter; see pp. 406-7.

(d) Batchelor v. Middleton, 6 Hare, 84.

adverse; it is to be assumed that he keeps down the interest, which every tenant for life as between himself and the remainderman is bound to do (a), so that time does not run against the remainderman during the continuance of the tenancy for life (b); and the same rule applies where the mortgagee is tenant in common with others of the mortgaged estate (c).

The time of suing dates from the filing of a bill, not the service of a subpoena, unless perhaps under special circumstances (d). As regards the effect of making a person a party by amendment to a suit already existing, it may be observed, that Lord Cottenham intimated an opinion that a defendant who was not made a party until after the prescribed term, might claim the benefit of the 3rd section of the statute, 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 100, (which provides that that act shall not prejudice any person against whom proceedings had not been commenced,) although the suit had been commenced against the other parties within the prescribed time (e).

The question whether the right of redemption is barred or not, as Mr. Jarman has observed, is very important in this respect, that if the right is extinguished, the property, if the mortgage be in fee, becomes the real estate of the mortgagee and passes to his devisee or heir; if not, it remains part of his personal estate (f).

In a late case the Vice-Chancellor of England stated his opinion to be that, although it has been said that a bill of foreclosure only seeks the exclusion of an equity, yet it is in substance a suit for the recovery of the money secured by the mortgage, and that it is therefore within the operation of the 40th section of the Statute of Limitations, 27 Will. IV. c. 27 (g). In Henry v. Smith, 1842 (h), Lord C.

(a) Lord Penrhyn v. Hughes, 5 Ves. 99; Hayes v. Hayes, 1 Ch. Ca. 223; but tenant in tail in possession, of full age, is not, Burges v. Mawbey, T. & R. 107; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 373-4.

(b) Corbett v. Barker, 3 Anst. p. 755; Brocklehurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. 438; Raffety v. King, 1 Keen, p. 617, and Ravald v. Russell, there referred to; and see Burrell v. Lord Egremont, 7 Beav. 205, 234-5-6-7; and Hyde v. Dallaway, 2 Hare, 530.

(c) Wynne v. Styant, 2 Phill. 303-6.

(d) Coppin v. Gray, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 208; Morris v. Ellis, 7 Jur. 413; and see Forster v. Thompson, 2 Conn. & L. 568, case of a bill of revivor.

(e) Plowden v. Thorpe, 7 Cl. & Fin. 137, 164; West, 62.

(f) See Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 385.

(g) Dearman v. Wyche, 9 Sim. 570; on a plea of the statute: the Vice-Chancellor added, "If the decision in Doe v. Williams, 5 Ad. & Ell. 291, as to adverse possession, be correct, and I confess it appears to me to be so, there is no commensurate restriction upon a corresponding suit for the recovery of the land:" but see Wrixon v. Vize, 2 Conn. & L. p. 150, infra. Doe v. Williams turned on the construction of the 2nd, 3rd, 14th and 15th sections of the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and the statute 1 Vict. c. 28, was passed, as before noticed, in consequence of this decision, under which it became doubtful whether a mortgagee might not be barred, though interest had been paid to him during the whole time; per Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 2 Hare, 332: the act had further to be amended in respect of other oversights; see Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 332, 333; and 3 Dru. & W. 117.

(h) Henry v. Smith, 1 Conn. & L. 514; 2

Sugden incidentally said he did not find any objection to this decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, and Sir J. Wigram also appears to have approved it (a). However, on the subject being afterwards brought before Lord C. Sugden, in Wrixon v. Vize (b), his Lordship, on reconsideration, altered his opinion. "The 40th section," said his Lordship, "is confined to actions and suits to recover money secured by any mortgage, judgment, lien, or legacy; and the terms of that section may render it necessary to distinguish the cases within the early sections, and those subject to this; even where the 15th section has no operation. Now it is settled, that a mortgagee of the legal estate may recover the land under the 2nd section, although the right to recover the money falls within the 40th section. Why should not the same distinct rights belong to a mortgagee in equity? Why may he not, for example, file a bill of foreclosure in equity, to obtain the estate, discharged of all equity of redemption, or pursue his remedies at law or in equity for the money upon his bond or covenant. In Dearman v. Wyche (c), with which, when I had occasion to refer to it incidentally (d), I was inclined to concur, the Vice-Chancellor held, that a bill of foreclosure fell within the 40th section, for it is in substance a suit in equity for recovery of the money. It is, the court said, a suit to recover money. But, with great respect I say it, I cannot, upon consideration, take this view of the statute. I think that the statute provides a remedy for the recovery of the estate, and also a remedy for the recovery of the money; clearly so, when both are pursued, or one is pursued, at law, and equally so, I think, when both the remedies are enforced, or only one of them is enforced, in equity. A foreclosure suit may lead to the payment of the money; but this is optional with the defendant: it cannot be enforced against him. The plaintiff's right is simply to foreclose; but he can only accomplish that upon a previous condition. The right of the defendant to pay the money, whilst the only right of the plaintiff is to the estate discharged of the equity, can hardly bring the case within the 40th section, which applies strictly to an action or suit to recover the money secured by any mortgage. This right at law cannot be confounded with the right to recover the estate; why should it in equity? It cannot, I think, be said, that the suit is not to recover the land, as it is already vested in him, for this expression would be strictly accurate, where

Dru. & W. p. 387: the question in that case was in regard to the recovery of interest on judgments.

(a) See Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, p. 334; but see also p. 336, ibid.

(b) 2 Conn. & L. 138; 3 D. & W. pp. 119, 120.

(c) 9 Sim. 570.

(d) Henry v. Smith, 2 Dru. & W. p. 387.

the mortgage is of the equitable estate; and where the mortgage is a legal one, yet the suit is, in effect, to recover or obtain the equity of redemption, which is, in the view of equity, an actual estate." His Lordship, in the case before him, held that the right to file a bill to foreclose, whether the mortgage be legal or equitable, falls within the 24th section of the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 28, and that the time is governed by the legal right of the party to bring an action, or if he have not the legal estate, by the right he would have had if his estate had been a legal instead of an equitable one (a).

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, on the construction of the acts 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 42, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 3, has held that a mortgagee of land whose debt is secured by a bond or covenant is entitled in a foreclosure suit to the full arrears of interest for twenty years, and is not confined to six years' interest only (b). In Berrington v. Evans (c), before Lord Lyndhurst as Lord Chief Baron, the point was whether a bill filed by one creditor in behalf of others prevented the statute for the limitation of actions, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 40, from running against a creditor who had let twenty years elapse without bringing in his claim; it was decided that the case was within the statute, but Sir E. Sugden appears to doubt the correctness of this decision (d). The receipt of the rents by an equitable mortgagee is prima facie a payment of principal or interest, so as to take the case out of the operation of the statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, which requires that every acknowledgment, in order to have the effect of a new or continuing contract to be enforced by action of debt or on the case, shall be in writing (e).

The appointment of a Receiver does not prevent the bar under the statute against a stranger, but the appointment of a receiver prevents, at least in this court, time for running in favour of a stranger to the suit: the possession of the court by its receiver is the possession of the suitor, and time cannot run against a person in possession (f).

(a) 3 Dru. & W. 119; but see Du Vigier v. Lee, additional note, No. 1. The case of Wrixon v. Vize, 2 Conn. & L. 138, and 3 Dru. & W. 104, and the case of De Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, p. 331, should be referred to by the practitioner; they contain ample commentaries on the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and the authorities.

(b) Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 326, 337-8-9; et v. supra.

(c) 1 Yo. & Coll. p. 438; and see Watson

v. Birch, supra. Sterndale v. Hankinson, 1 Sim. 393, was decided before the statute, consequently when the court had a discretion to apply the bar from length of time or not; 1 Yo. & Coll. 439.

(d) V. and P. p. 637; and see Wrixon v. Vize, 3 Dru. & W. 118.

(e) Brocklehurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. 442.

(f) Lord Chancellor Sugden, Harrison v. Duignan, 2 Dru. & W. 295, 301-2: that was a case of an infant; the Master had found that

The late case of Norman v. Stiby (a), may perhaps not improperly be here introduced. One Parsons pretending to be seised in fee, sold and conveyed an estate to one Young for 5105*l.*; Mrs. Davidge lent him 5000*l.* of the purchase money, which was secured to her by a demise of the estate: it turned out that Parsons was tenant for life only; he died in 1808, and Young was ousted in 1809; he claimed the 5105*l.* in a suit for the administration of Parsons' estate (Cox v. King), and after great delay (viz. in 1845), it was allowed to him: in 1846 the persons claiming as residuary legatees under Mrs. Davidge, who had died in 1816, filed a bill against the defendants, who were representatives of both Young and Mrs. Davidge, praying that 5000*l.* of the money recovered in the suit of Cox v. King, might be applied in payment of the 5000*l.* advanced by Mrs. Davidge, and that it might be declared that it formed a lien on the money so recovered, or that the whole might be paid out of the estate of Young. The defendants demurred, relying on the Statute of Limitations; the plaintiffs insisted that as the claim of Young was founded on the loss of Mrs. Davidge's money, they had a right to have the money recovered substituted for the estate lost, and that it had been the duty of Young's executors to recover it for that purpose. Lord Langdale, though not deciding the point, yet was so strongly inclined to think that it might be made out at the hearing, that he overruled the demurrer. Where an estate was conveyed in trust to sell, the proceeds to be applied first in payment of a debt which was agreed to have priority, then in discharge of a mortgage debt of the plaintiff who had a covenant for payment, it was held that until the completion of the sales the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 3, did not begin to run as against the covenant (b).

Length of time must be pleaded or relied upon by demurrer or by answer (c). In order that advantage may be taken of length of time by demurrer, the time from which the possession of the mortgagee began to run must appear with reasonable certainty: in a bill to redeem a mortgage, 25 years old, it was alleged that the mortgagee entered shortly after the mortgage was made; it was held by the Vice-Chancellor of England, that it could not be assumed on this statement that the mortgagee had entered within the first five years (d).

the property of the infant was subject to the mortgage, but that was not allowed to alter the rights of the minor to insist on the statute; and see Wrixon v. Vize, 3 Dru. & W. 123.

(a) 9 Beav. 560.

(b) Bennett v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 257; the leading cases at law as to admissions of the debt are cited, ibid. p. 255.

(c) Harrison v. Borwell, 10 Sim. 382.

(d) Baker v. Wetton, 14 Sim. 426, distinguishing that case from Vernon v. Vernon, 2 My. & Cr. 145; on the subject of taking advantage of length of time by demurrer, according to the general rules of the court, independently of the statute, see Redesd. Pl. 212, and the cases in the note (c).

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

Provision for Persons under Disabilities by Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, (Act for the Limitation of Actions on Specialties, &c.)

“By the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, no provision, or at least no adequate provision,” said the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 333, “is made for the interest of persons under disabilities so far as the interest of such persons may be affected by some of the clauses of that act. The interests of such persons, if adequately protected at all, are so by force of the 4th, 5th, and 7th sections of the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42.” Those sections are as follow:—

“IV. And be it further enacted, that if any person or persons that is or are or shall be entitled to any such action or suit, or to such scire facias, is or are or shall be, at the time of any such cause of action accrued, within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis, or beyond the seas, then such person or persons shall be at liberty to bring the same actions, so as they commence the same within such times after their coming to or being of full age, discover, of sound memory, or returned from beyond the seas, as other persons having no such impediment should, according to the provisions of this act, have done; and that if any person or persons against whom there shall be any such cause of action is or are or shall be, at the time such cause of action accrued, beyond the seas, then the person or persons entitled to any such cause of action shall be at liberty to bring the same against such person or persons within such times as are before limited after the return of such person or persons from beyond the seas.

“V. Provided always, that if any acknowledgment shall have been made, either by writing signed by the party liable by virtue of such indenture, specialty, or recognizance, or his agent, or by part payment or part satisfaction on account of any principal or interest being then due thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the person or persons entitled to such actions to bring his or their action for the money remaining unpaid and so acknowledged to be due within twenty years after such acknowledgment by writing or part payment or part satisfaction as aforesaid, or in case the person or persons entitled to such action shall at the time of such acknowledgment be under such disability as aforesaid, or the party making such acknowledgment be, at the time of making the same, beyond the seas, then within twenty years after such disability shall have ceased as aforesaid, or the party shall have returned from beyond seas, as the case may be; and the plaintiff or plaintiffs in any such action, on any indenture, specialty, or recognizance, may, by way of replication, state such acknowledgment, and that such action was brought within the time aforesaid, in answer to a plea of this statute.

“VII. And be it further enacted, that no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the Islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark, nor any Islands adjacent to any of them, being part of the dominions of his Majesty, shall be deemed to be beyond the seas within the meaning of this act, or of the act passed in the twenty-first year of the reign of King James the First, intituled ‘An Act for Limitation of Actions, and for avoiding of Suits in Law.’”

It was in the same case, namely, Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 335 (1843), that the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that mortgages are charges within the meaning of the 42nd section of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, v. supra, p. 716, and that he must treat a bill for foreclosure as a suit to recover money charged upon land within the meaning of the same section of the act; and that if the plaintiff had no bond or other specialty for securing the payment of his debt—if he had no security for his principal and interest other than a charge upon the land—the consideration of the case before him might possibly have ended in a declaration that the mortgage was redeemable upon the payment of the principal and six years' interest; and that equitable mortgages were within the operation of the 42nd section of the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27; and see Henry v. Smith, 1 Conn. & L. 510, et seq.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Effect of the Stat. 1 Vict. c. 28.

Doubts having been entertained whether the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 1, had not the effect of barring the mortgagee in every case, after the lapse of twenty years from the day of default (v. supra, p. 714), the statute 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 28, was passed to remove them. By that act, after reciting the former statute, and the doubts respecting its effect, it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful for any person entitled to and claiming under any mortgage of land, being land within the definition contained in the first section of the said act, to make an entry, or bring an action at law, or suit in equity, to recover such land, at any time within twenty years next after the last payment of any part of the principal money or interest secured by such mortgage, although more than twenty years may have elapsed since the time at which the right to make such entry or bring such action or suit in equity shall have first accrued, any thing in the said act notwithstanding."—See Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 386, and Brocklehurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. 438, there cited.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.

Effect of Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. in cases where the Representation is dormant.

By the recent statute, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, time runs in every instance during the dormancy of the representation, for it is enacted, sect. 6, "that for the purposes of that act, an administrator claiming the estate or interest of the deceased person, of whose chattels he shall be appointed administrator, shall be deemed to claim as if there had been no interval of time between the death of such deceased person and the grant of the letters of administration."—See Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 387.

SECTION VII.—Doctrine of Tacking one Security or Debt to another—and of the Priorities of Incumbrances, and what Circumstances will affect the natural Order of their Priorities.

When further Sums advanced by the Mortgagor to the Mortgagee.

Principle on which the Right to Tack is founded in such case.

Under old Law Prior Judgment Creditor could not tack.

Provisions of 2 Vict. c. 11, as to Judgments, &c. (note).

Principle does not apply to case where the Security does not and cannot affect the Land.

But Bond Debt may be tacked against Heir or Devisee—Principle of the Distinction.

Effect of Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, as to Copyholds.

Where Heir or Devisee takes subject to Payment of Debts.

Bond may be tacked against Executor.

Tacking not permitted as against Creditors.

Tacking where the Mortgagee holds two Mortgages from the same Person.

Priorities as between several Incumbrancers, Effect on by means of Tacking and otherwise.

The Advantages of having a Better Equity.

What is a Better Equity.

Acts of Omission as affecting this Question.

Case of Bugden v. Bignold, before Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce.

Right of Tacking by acquiring the Legal Estate.

Maxims on which such Right to Tack is founded.

Process by which Right to Tack is effected.

General Requisites to enable a Person to tack.

Illustrations.

Where first Mortgagee has made further Advances.

Requisite that the Advance should have been made on the Credit of the Land.

Subsequent Mortgagee buying in first Incumbrance.

Pendente Lite.

After Decree.

Exemplification of the Rule that the Money must have been advanced on the Credit of the Land in these cases.

Lacey v. Ingle, before Lord Cottenham.

When Purchaser of Equity of Redemption bound to pay off a Judgment.

Extinction and Merger of Incumbrances.

Mortgagor or Purchaser of Equity of Redemption paying off first Mortgage.

Principles by which the Court of Chancery is governed as to cases of Merger.

Mortgage paid off by Tenant for Life.

By Tenant in Tail.

Cancellation and Release of Mortgage.

Additional Notes.

No. I.—Moore v. Frere, 8 Price.—Effect of Covenant by Trustee to stand possessed of Legal Estate as regards Priorities.

No. II.—Ingram v. Pelham, before Lord Hardwicke.

No. III.—Judgment of Lord Hardwicke in Wortley v. Birkhead.

No. IV.—March v. Lee.—Of purchasing in Securities by a subsequent Mortgagee.

WHEN the mortgagor or those claiming under him come to redeem it frequently happens that some person who is sought to be redeemed claims to be paid, not only what is due on his original mortgage, but some other debt, that is, to Tack one security to another; this may also happen on a bill to foreclose; and sometimes on a bill for the administration of the assets of a deceased person: and where there are several persons claiming in succession incumbrances on the estate mortgaged, one of the mortgagees may claim a right to tack as against the others; or he may by reason of his having obtained the legal estate, or for some other reason, seek to have a priority, so as to disturb the natural order of the securities, which is according to their dates: so that the court frequently has to settle the priorities between the different claimants, and to determine in what order they are severally to redeem or to be foreclosed, or in what order they are to be paid off. It is proposed now to consider the general doctrines applicable to these subjects: the right to tack as against the mortgagor, and the right as between the incumbrancers themselves, depend on somewhat different principles, and must therefore be separately considered.

When additional sums are lent by the person who obtained a mortgage for the first advance, the right of tacking depends upon the principle which has often been adverted to, namely, “He who would have equity must do equity” (a). If therefore the mortgagee has lent a further sum to his mortgagor, and it is secured to him by a mortgage or charge upon the estate, or by a statute (b) judgment or recognizance, all of which though not actual liens upon the estate, by complying with certain requisites may be made such, the Court of Chancery will not allow the mortgagor to redeem the mortgaged property, against the will of the mortgagee, by payment of what is due on the first mortgage only, but will require the mortgagor to pay all that is due to the mortgagee in respect of the further sums so secured (c). The assign-

(a) Supra, vol. i. p. 422; Demandray v. Metcalf, Pr. Ch. 420, and 1 Eq. Abr. 324.

(b) Matthews v. Cartwright, 2 Atk. 347; the main question in that case relates to the next division of the subject.

(c) And that against a subsequent mortgagee also if the mortgagee had no notice of the subsequent incumbrance when he made the further advance, v. infra. The reason given is because it is to be presumed that the mortgagor lent his money upon the statute or judgment, as knowing he had a hold on the nees of the mortgagor by deed generally stand in this respect in the same situation as the mortgagor; and under the old law, though no execution had issued, the mortgagee might tack his judgment against the assignees in bankruptcy; for the judgment, it was held, was incorporated with the mortgage (a); now however judgments are of no avail against creditors, unless they be registered (b). A mere parol agreement, to secure the further advance on the land, is not sufficient (c): such a contract cannot affect the land by reason of the Statute of Frauds.

But though a prior mortgagee might tack a subsequent judgment to the mortgage, it was held, under the old law, that a prior judgment creditor obtaining from the mortgagor, or getting in a subsequent land by the mortgage, and in that confidence ventured a further sum on a security which, though it passed no present interest in the land, yet must be admitted to be a lien thereon; 4th resolution of Master of the Rolls, Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 493: it was afterwards attempted to apply this reasoning to a bond, v. infra, but without success.

(a) Baker v. Harris, 16 Ves. 397. There the bill was filed by a second mortgagee whose mortgage was dated after the judgment obtained by the first mortgagee; the mortgagor was bankrupt: the objection taken was that by the stat. 21 Jas. I. c. 19, a creditor having a security by judgment, whereof no execution is served or executed, shall not have a lien in respect of such judgment; the reasons given for the decision are equally applicable to all, the mortgagor, his assignees, and subsequent incumbrancers. The 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, has repealed the provisions of the 21 Jas. I. c. 19, and in lieu of them has a distinct provision on the subject of judgments, § 108, which provides for the case of a mortgage of or lien upon property: as to the effect of this section and of the stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 7, in regard to judgments by default, nil dicit, &c., as affecting the subject now under consideration, see Coote on Mortgages, 476-7, and Crosfield v. Stanley, 4 Bar. & Adol. 87, there cited.

(b) Judgments will be so often referred to in this section that I have thought it would be convenient to bring together the material provisions of the late acts on the subject, though they have before been adverted to. By the stat. 2 Vict. c. 11, § 1 (v. supra, vol. i. p. 290,) docketing, under 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20, is put an end to; by § 2 no judgment already docketed under the act 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20, shall affect any lands, &c. as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless registered according to the act 1 & 2 Vict.

c. 110 (v. supra, vol. i. p. 505, note); by § 4 all judgments, decrees, and orders, which since the recited act of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, shall have been registered, or may thereafter be registered, are void against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, unless registered within five years before the execution of the conveyance to the purchaser or mortgagee, or before the right of the creditors accrued, and so toties quoties; see Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 64 a, note; by § 5 it is provided that as against purchasers and mortgagees, without notice of any such judgments, decrees, orders, &c. none of such judgments, &c. shall bind or affect any lands, &c. or any interest therein, further or otherwise or more extensively in any respect, although duly registered, than a judgment would have bound such purchaser before the act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, where it had been duly docketed according to the law then in force (see, on this section, Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 64 b, note). By § 7, no lis pendens shall bind a purchaser or mortgagee without express notice thereof, unless the bill, &c. be registered. By §§ 12 and 13 purchasers are protected from the effect of secret acts of bankruptcy, and from acts of bankruptcy of which they have notice, unless a commission be issued within twelve months after such act of bankruptcy; and see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 66. By the new Statute of Limitation, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 40, a judgment is absolutely barred at the end of twenty years from the time when a present right to receive the debt shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge, unless kept alive by part payment or a written acknowledgment. Et v. supra, p. 704, as to the effect of the statute 1 Vict. c. 110; et v. supra, vol. i. pp. 290, 295, and p. 259.

(c) Ex parte Hooper, 1 Meriv. 7; and see Ex parte Coombe, 4 Mad. 251. In these cases the mortgagor had become bankrupt.

mortgage, could not tack the judgment to it, because the judgment was not a specific lien on those lands (a), and the mortgagee did not on the original debt trust to the security of the estate, as did the mortgagee in the case first stated (b); so that, in refusing to pay the judgment as the price of redemption, the mortgagor was not refusing to do equity. The same reason may possibly still apply where a person has obtained a judgment for an antecedent debt; but if a person should now lend money on the security of a judgment, as under the new law he may by registering his judgment, immediately obtain a charge upon the lands of his debtor, so that it may be considered as equivalent to an actual charge (c), in such case he would now perhaps be at liberty to tack.

The doctrine of tacking, at least as against real estate, does not extend to a loan for which the mortgagee, even subsequently to the original mortgage, has taken a security, which is not of itself and cannot of itself be made as against the mortgagor a lien on the estate; for instance, a bond is not and cannot be made a lien on the estate as against the mortgagor, for if judgment be recovered upon it, it is the judgment and not the bond that gives the lien (d). This had been doubtful before Lord Hardwicke's time (e), but it is now the settled law (f); and it makes no difference whether the bond debt is prior or subsequent to the mortgage; though, as before mentioned, a different doctrine prevails in the case of a mortgage of a term (g). The reason operates with greater force in favour of a purchaser or a second mortgagee or the assignees of a bankrupt, against whom there-

(a) The judgment creditor may in fact extend after-acquired lands, et v. inf. p. 739-40.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Anon. 2 Ves. p. 662 (case 228). The reason applies to the mortgagor himself as well as third persons; and see Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 53, where similar reasoning is applied to the case of a bond.

(c) V. supra, p. 704.

(d) Morret v. Paske, ubi sup. A debt by simple contract cannot in any case be tacked to a mortgage as against the mortgagor, see Ex parte Hooper, 1 Meriv. 7, though there be a parol agreement to that effect, ibid. Mr. Coote, p. 492, citing Halliley v. Kirtland, 2 Ch. Rep. 360, p. 162, last edition, states that a mortgagee of a leasehold or personal chattel may tack a bond debt to his mortgage against the mortgagor: as to mortgages of Personal estate, v. infra, Sect. ix.

(e) Lord Hardwicke, Shrapnell v. Blake, West's Rep. 167; 2 Eq. Abr. 603; and see Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 376; the decisions to the contrary are there stated.

(f) Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 376; and see Hamerton v. Rogers, 1 Ves. J. 513; Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 339; Monger v. Kett, 12 Mod. 559; Challis v. Casborn, 1 Eq. Abr. 325, § 9; Pr. Ch. 407; Lowthian v. Hasel, 3 Bro. 162. The contrary had been decided, in Baxter v. Manning, 1 Vern. 244; a distinction was there taken between the case where the mortgagee sought to foreclose and where the heir sought to redeem, 1 Eq. Abr. 324, § 1. Mr. Maddock thought the distinction still existed, vol. ii. 659, last edit. note (k), but the authorities referred to do not seem to me to bear out the proposition. I assume, from the before-cited observations of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 6-8, that now the question must always be, What are the equitable rights of the parties, independently of their relative positions on the record? there may be special circumstances affecting this as every other general rule; and see Farr v. Sheriffe, x. Jur. 632.

(g) Halliley v. Kirtland, supra, note (d).

fore the mortgagee cannot tack the bond (a). Where the mortgagee holds a security for part of the debt, and another security for other part of the same debt, but which the mortgagee cannot tack, for instance a bond, a bill may be filed by the mortgagee to enforce payment of his whole debt by foreclosure and otherwise in the same suit, though as regards the part secured by bond his remedy is at law; the ordinary rule being that where a person is drawn into a court of equity to enforce part of his demand, he may assert his full rights in that court; and à fortiori this may be done against volunteers claiming under the mortgagor (b).

As regards the Heir, or a Devisee (c) of the mortgagor, where there is a bond debt in which the heirs are bound, neither the heir nor the devisee is permitted to redeem without paying both the mortgage and the bond, and that whether the bond precede or follow the mortgage (d); but the right on the part of the mortgagee to insist on the payment of his bond debt is given, not because the mortgagee has any such claim on the principles of natural justice or equity, but only to avoid circuitry of action; for as the bond debt, though in another right, might be recovered against each, they are therefore required to pay both at once: this right is bounded by the reason on which it is founded, and therefore is never carried beyond the case of an heir and devisee, and generally speaking only so far as their individual rights are concerned; and in particular it is not applicable to a purchaser of the equity of redemption from the heir or the devisee or executor, or to creditors (e).

The late act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, has extended the remedy of the

(a) Lord Hardwicke, West's Rep. p. 167; Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 53.

(b) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, pp. 339, 340. The case itself was one where the defendants, who represented the mortgagor, contended that the mortgagee was limited by the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 42, to six years' interest, and that if, under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 43, § 3, he was entitled to twenty years' interest on his bond and covenant, it was a personal demand only, and that the land was discharged from more than six years' arrears, see 2 Hare, 336-7; and see Lloyd v. Wait, 1 Phill. 61. The Vice-Chancellor, in Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 338, was of opinion, as the plaintiffs contended, that the two acts must be taken together, and that the meaning is that six years' arrears only can be recovered, unless there is a bond or specialty; but the Vice-Chancellor stated that equitable mortgages would remain within the operation of the act, c. 27, § 42; but this part of the case will be noticed hereafter. The second marginal note to White v. Hillacre, 3 Yo. & Coll. 597, which may seem at variance with the Vice-Chancellor's dictum in the text, is, as stated by the reporters, 4 Yo. & Coll. 583, not warranted by the judgment. It is the constant practice of the court to allow bills to be framed by mortgagees on behalf of themselves and all other the creditors of a deceased mortgagor; Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, Skey v. Bennett, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 406; v. supra, p. 676, note (h).

(c) Challis v. Casborn, 1 Eq. Abr. 325, § 9; Pr. Ch. 407; Heams v. Bance, 3 Atk. 630.

(d) Windham v. Jennings, 2 Rep. Ch. 128.

(e) Lord Hardwicke, Shrapnell v. Blake, 1 West, 167; Shuttleworth v. Laycock, 1 Vern. 245; Coleman v. Winch, 1 P. W. 775; Bayly v. Robson, Prec. Ch. 89; Price v. Fastnedge, Amb. 685; Troughton v. Troughton, 1 Ves. 87; Lowthian v. Hasel, 3 Bro. 163; and Lord Henley's note, Vanderzee v. Willis, 3 Bro. 21. "Where, therefore, no circuitry of action could reach the property there is no tacking;" see Ex parte Petit, 2 Gl. & J. 51; 2 Fonbl. 273.

creditor to the entirety of his deceased debtor's lands, copyhold as well as freehold, so that the principle of the old doctrine that a judgment could not be tacked against the heir or devisee of copyholds is no longer applicable.

And now that by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104 (a), lands are liable to the payment of simple-contract debts, the preventing circuitry of action will equally apply where the heir or devisee seeks to redeem, and the mortgagee has also a simple-contract debt; so that in that simple case probably the mortgagee may claim to tack, where it will not interfere with the claims of other creditors: however the specialty creditor might have brought an action against the heir or devisee, and by suing out an elegit on his judgment have obtained a preference over other specialty creditors; a simple-contract creditor cannot obtain any preference, for his only remedy is in equity.

The mortgagee cannot tack his bond where the devisee takes under a trust for payment of debts, or the heir takes subject to a charge created by the will of the mortgagor (b); for the bond, so far as it affects the land after the death of the obligor, is only a general charge on the assets (c); nor can a bond be tacked against puisne incumbrancers, whether by mortgage, judgment or otherwise (d).

A bond debt for the reason above mentioned may be tacked as against the executor seeking to redeem, where the mortgage is for a term of years; for the equity of redemption is assets for the payment of debts (e); and that whether the creditor was originally the mortgagee or has obtained the mortgage by assignment, and whether the mortgage was prior or subsequent to his debt (f): but the right to tack is never allowed as against creditors of higher or even equal degree; if a creditor of the testator bring a bill to redeem a mortgage, he is only bound to pay the debt due on the mortgage. The mortgagee of a leasehold estate cannot tack against a purchaser of the equity of redemption from the executor, any more than he can from the purchaser from the heir or devisee, in the case of real estate (g); in each case the purchaser has a complete title, and the creditor cannot follow the specific assets: even where the executor seeks to redeem, and there has been a bill filed by creditors and a decree for

(a) V. supra, pp. 313, 319.

(b) Heams v. Bance, 3 Atk. 630; Price v. Fastnedge, Amb. 686; Hamerton v. Rogers, 1 Ves. J. 513; Lowthian v. Hasel, 3 Bro. 162.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Anon. (Jackson v. Langford), 2 Ves. 663.

(d) Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 54.

(e) Anon. 2 Vern. p. 177; Demandray v. Metcalf, Pr. Ch. 419; Coleman v. Winch, 1 P. W. 776; 1 Eq. Abr. 324, § 3: or even a debt by simple contract: Pr. Ch. 18, 19, &c.

(f) Halliley v. Kirtland, 2 Ch. Rep. 162.

(g) Coleman v. Winch, 1 P. W. 777; dict. Lord Thurlow, Vanderzee v. Willis, 3 Bro. 23; Lowthian v. Hasel, 3 Bro. 162.

them to come in, the fund being under the administration of the court, the mortgagee cannot tack, at least as against the creditors (a).

The doctrine of doing equity has been extended, as before noticed, to the case of a person holding two mortgages from the same person : it has been established as a general rule (b), that, if a mortgagor execute two mortgages of two distinct estates to the same person to secure separate debts, and they become absolute at law, the one cannot be redeemed by the mortgagor without his redeeming the other ; and the more modern authorities have established that the purchaser of the equity of redemption of one estate, though without notice of the mortgage on the other estate, must equally redeem both (c) : so that if the estate conveyed by the one be deficient in value to secure the mortgage-money or turn out to be of no value, and the value of the other estate is more than sufficient to pay its own mortgage, the mortgagee obtains the benefit of the surplus value of the latter to make up the deficiency in the former (d) : but this rule does not apply where the mortgagor comes to foreclose, the mortgagee may redeem the one and be foreclosed as to the other (e). In the case of a bill for redemption both estates must be redeemed whether there was an agreement or not that the additional mortgage should be a security for the first advance (f) ; but the transaction must be between the same parties or those claiming under them (g). The principle does not apply where the equity of redemption originally belonged to different persons (h) :

(a) Supra, p. 724 ; Sir Wm. Grant, Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 229 ; Troughton v. Troughton, 1 Ves. 86 ; Vanderzee v. Willis, ubi sup., and other cases there cited ; Bayly v. Robson, Prec. Ch. 89 ; S. C. 2 Eq. Abr. 594, § 1 ; Coleman v. Winch, 1 P. W. 775 ; Prec. Ch. 511. Mr. Blunt, in his note to Price v. Fastnedge, Amb. p. 686, has collected, I believe, all the cases prior to 1828, in regard to the question in what cases a bond debt can or cannot be tacked, to which I would refer the practitioner ; those which have been cited are sufficient to show the principle.

(b) See, on this subject, Jarm. Convey. by Sweet, p. 436, et seq., and supra, p. 666-7.

(c) See Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 377, and the cases there cited ; Ireson v. Denn, 2 Cox, 425 ; but see Willie v. Lugg, 2 Eden, 80, and the cases in Lord Henley's note.

(d) Lord Alvanley, Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 376-7. The decision in that case, namely, that the creditor might redeem the personal securities without discharging what was due on a mortgage, it being considered as a distinct transaction, was reversed, ibid. p. 380, note ; Pope v. Onslow, 2 Vern. 286. In Margrave v. Le Hooke, 2 Vern. 207, the estate comprised in one mortgage was entailed, the heir was compelled to pay the mortgage-money due on both ; Ex parte Carter, Amb. 733 ; Ireson v. Denn, ubi supra.

(e) V. infra.

(f) See Coote on Mortgages, 489 ; and see, on this subject, Titley v. Jenyns, in the note to Bugden v. Bignold, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 399, and Serjt. Hill's MS. note there cited.

(g) Coote, 490 ; Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 376, there cited.

(h) White v. Hillacre, 3 Yo. & Coll. 609. The facts were these :—In 1800 J. Hillacre mortgaged an estate, called Madgeon, to one Chave, for a term ; in 1808 Chave, Hillacre joining, assigned the mortgage to Clarke. J. Hillacre devised Madgeon, subject to the mortgage, to T. Hillacre : T. Hillacre was entitled to an estate called Westhay ; in 1812 he mortgaged this estate to Clitsome for years ; in 1815 T. Hillacre died, he devised the equity and where a mortgagee applies in bankruptcy (a) for a sale of distinct estates mortgaged for separate debts, he cannot have the surplus proceeds of the one estate applied to make good the deficiency of the other (b).

We now proceed to the consideration of the circumstances by means of which the usual order in which equitable securities are ranked may be disturbed, so as to give priority to a subsequent incumbrance; and particularly where this is effected by the right on the part of an incumbrancer to tack a subsequent incumbrance to one of prior date.

It is to be observed that several persons may have an interest in or lien on an estate in succession, as creditors by mortgage and by judgment; but every mortgage or incumbrance made or obtained subsequent to the first by which the legal estate is conveyed, necessarily can confer no more than an equitable lien or interest to be enforced in the Court of Chancery only.

It has already been stated that the general rule, though not without exceptions as will presently appear, is, that statutes, judgments and recognizances, at law and in equity, and equitable charges of every kind, in equity, all rank according to their dates: therefore in the absence of particular circumstances, the successive periods of their execution or attainment constitute the order in which they will be directed to be satisfied (c): in fact the mortgagor has no more to pledge, and the subsequent creditor has no more to take, than what shall remain after the prior incumbrances are satisfied.

The possession of the legal estate has always, for the reason adverted to in a subsequent page, had an important effect as to the rank or order of securities (d). When satisfied terms existed, they were made use of, as has been noticed in the first volume (e), for the protection of mortgagees and purchasers, and for less meritorious pur-of redemption of Madgeon to one set of devisees, of Westhay to another set: in 1816 Clarke assigned the mortgage on Madgeon to Clitsome, then for the first time the two mortgages were united in the same person; it will have been observed that at no time were the two mortgages vested in Clitsome when the same person was interested in the equity of redemption. Mr. Baron Alderson held that the plaintiff, the representative of Clitsome, could not tack together the two mortgages; there might, he said, have been some ground for the plaintiff's argument if the assignment had been made in the lifetime of Thomas Hillacre.

(a) V. supra, p. 677.

(b) Ex parte Bignold, 2 Deac. 66.

(c) See Symmes v. Symonds, 4 Bro. P. C. 328; S. C. under the name of Bristol v. Hungerford, 2 Vern. 525; Bugden v. Bignold, infra; Allen v. Knight, 5 Hare, 277.

In Ireland (Latouche v. Dunsany, 1 Scho. & Lef. 157; and in America (Story on Equity, § 419, note), Tacking is prevented by the effect of the Acts for Registration, and there is now (Mar. 1849) some reason to believe that it will, at no great distance of time, be abolished in this country by the same means.

(d) Et v. supra, vol. i. p. 514-516, and int. alia, 1 Eq. Abr. 322, pl. 1.

(e) Supra, vol. i. pp. 515, 516.

poses. However it not unfrequently happened that the legal estate in the term was from accident or inadvertence left outstanding; and then it often became a question between the successive incumbrancers, who was entitled to have the legal estate transferred to him, and thus to obtain the advantages and priority which its possession would confer, As satisfied terms have been extinguished (a), the question, as to who is entitled to call for the legal estate, will not so frequently arise; still it is necessary, in reference to the legal estate in fee, and other legal interests still subsisting, to take a review of the doctrine which was applied to such cases, more especially as it introduces the subject of what is considered as a Better Equity, as between two persons having equitable interests of the same character, which is very material in relation to the subject now under consideration.

Where one of the incumbrancers has a Better Equity than the other, it may be stated generally that he has a right to call for an assignment or conveyance of the legal estate, and that in equity he will be placed in the same situation as if he had actually obtained a conveyance or assignment (b). In Wilkes v. Bodington (c), the purchaser had purchased without notice of an act of bankruptcy; the plaintiffs, the assignees, filed a bill against him and the trustee of an outstanding term, to have it assigned to them; the bill was dismissed, as the court considered that the purchaser had a better equity to call for it than the assignees.

As regards the question, which of two contending parties is to be considered as having a Better Equity, it may be observed, that volunteers, amongst themselves, have equal equities; but that a volunteer, though a wife or child, has not equal equity with a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, even with notice of the claim of the volunteer (d): the equity of an heir cannot come in competition with that of a purchaser. It has been held that if a mortgage of land belonging to the wife be made by fine, (it would now be by deed acknowledged, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, s. 77), thereby giving a good title, and more money be advanced on a mortgage without the proper assurance, so that there is a defective title as to the second mortgage; yet the

(a) Ibid.

(b) See Digby v. Morgan, 1 Ch. Rep. 129; Windham v. Richardson, 2 Ch. Ca. p. 213; Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599; Collet v. De Gols, Forrest. 69; Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 678; Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571; Snelling v. Squib, 2 Ch. Ca. 47; Millard's case, 2 Freem. 43; Pomfret v. Windsor, 2 Ves. 487; Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. 618; 2

Fonbl. 148; Coote on Mortgages, 508; Medlicott v. O'Donel, 1 Ball & Be. 171; and see Frere v. Moore, infra, and additional note, No. 1.

(c) 2 Vern. 599.

(d) See Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 93; and see Buckle v. Mitchell, ibid. 110, on the construction of the statute of the 27 Eliz.

mortgagee shall hold till both sums are paid : for the mortgagee has a title at law, and the same equity for the money as the heir of the wife for the land (a) ; but this rather belongs to a subsequent page.

A person may in some cases acquire a better equity by superior circumspection and care (b). Where the legal estate in a term was outstanding in a trustee, and he had covenanted to stand possessed of it in trust for an incumbrancer, and then another person advanced money even with notice of that incumbrance, and afterwards the original mortgagee advanced a further sum without notice of the second incumbrance ; the first incumbrancer, not having got in the legal estate, was held not to be entitled to the same advantage as he would if he had actually got it in ; there were still only equal equities (c). If the first incumbrancer has a declaration of trust only by the borrower and none by the trustee, and the second incumbrancer has a formal mortgage of the equity of redemption, and the trustee is a party to that deed, and declares himself to be a trustee for the second incumbrancer, the second will, in that case, have a better right to call for the legal estate than the first (d). "A better equity," said Lord Lyndhurst, in advising the House of Lords, in Foster v. Cockrell, to affirm Sir John Leach's decision in Foster v. Blackstone (e), "is where a second incumbrancer without notice takes a protection against a subsequent incumbrancer, which the prior incumbrancer has neglected to take. Thus a declaration of trust of an outstanding term, accompanied by delivery of deeds creating and continuing the term, gives a better equity than a mere declaration of trust to a prior incumbrancer" (f).

An omission to do an act may give to another a better equity (g) ; but it is not every act of omission that will have the effect of giving

(a) Rauson v. Sacheverel, 2 Ch. Ca. 98 ; Com. Dig. Mortgage, p. 739, 5th edit. This doctrine seems rather questionable, but I have not found it disputed ; and see 2 Vent. 343, Haymer v. Haymer. As to Defective Assurances, v. supra, p. 639.

(b) This most commonly happens in cases where the subject of the security is a chose in action ; see Foster v. Blackstone, 1 My. & Keen, 297 ; Timson v. Ramsbottom, 2 Keen, 35 ; and Dearle v. Hall, and Loveridge v. Cooper, and the other cases there cited, which are referred to and observed upon hereafter ; v. infra, Chap. x.

(c) See Frere v. Moore, 8 Price, p. 475 ; as this is an important case, I have set forth an abstract of it in the additional note, No. 1.

(d) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Wilmot v.

Pike, 5 Hare, 22, "A declaration of trust by a trustee in whom the legal estate is, has always been considered of great weight in the determination of equitable rights," ibid.

(e) 1 My. & K. 306-7 ; v. infra, Chap. x.

(f) 9 Bli. N. S. 332 ; 3 Cl. & Fin. 456 ; in the same report, 9 Bli. 378, the opinion of Mr. Justice Burnett, in Ryall v. Rowles (1 Ves. 360), is reported from his note book ; and see Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 84 ; though the puisne incumbrancer may have advanced his money without making any previous inquiry of the trustee, ibid. 84-5 ; Stanhope v. Earl Verney, 2 Eden, 81-85. What are better equities as between incumbrancers of choses in action will be considered in Chap. x. infra.

(g) V. infra, Section viii.

to another a better equity where the subject is real estate, though the omission may in its consequences have been prejudicial to another: if a third incumbrancer give notice of his incumbrance to the first mortgagee, he does not thereby gain any priority over the second who has omitted to give such notice, notwithstanding that giving such notice might have prevented the subsequent mortgagee from lending his money (a); a very different rule prevails where the subject is a chose in action, which will be more particularly adverted to hereafter.

A person made a mortgage of an equitable interest in a real estate, in which it was falsely recited that the deed under which the mortgagor derived his title had been deposited with a third person, to secure a debt due to him from the mortgagor; the deed was really in the hands of the mortgagor, and he afterwards deposited it with such third person, to secure an advance he obtained from him, he having at the time no notice of the prior mortgage; the mortgagee does not appear to have made any inquiry whether the recital was true or false.

(a) See Jones v. Jones, 8 Sim. p. 643, and Peacock v. Burt, ubi sup. there cited; Sugd. V. and P. p. 1026; Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. p. 119. "There is a marked distinction between a real estate and a personal chattel; the latter is held by possession, a real estate by title," Lord Eldon, ibid.; Wilmot v. Pike, 5 Hare, 14, 19; Gregory v. West, 2 Beav. 541; and see 14 Sim. 77. Mr. Lewin makes this distinction; he says the doctrine of notice can only apply to real estate where the purchaser is bound to advert to the fact that the legal estate is in a trustee; he observes that it has in no case been decided that the principle of Dearle v. Hall and Loveridge v. Cooper, v. infra, must be confined exclusively to choses in action, and he contends with great force, p. 514, that for the safety of mortgagees of equitable interests it ought not to be so confined. In the case of Wilmot v. Pike, above referred to, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram admitted that the reasoning in the cases of Dearle v. Hall and Loveridge v. Cooper, was applicable in part to equitable interests in lands as much as to equitable interests in pure personal estate; but he said the expressions of Sir T. Plumer only applied to personalty; and it is evident that his Honour considered that the doctrine established by those cases, as to acquiring priority by notice, must be confined exclusively to personal estate, and that the distinction adverted to by Mr. Lewin, however reasonable, does not prevail. The case was shortly this—In 1834 Pike, the owner, mortgaged estate A. to Smith, to secure 700*l.* and interest; in 1826 Pike conveyed estate A. and estate B. to one Flewker in fee, in trust for securing 600*l.* lent to Pike by Sir R. Wilmot;

the trust was that after default Flewker should sell and pay off the 700*l.* secured to Smith, then the 600*l.* to Sir R. Wilmot. In 1835 Pike, in consideration of a further advance of 400*l.* by Sir R. Wilmot's executors (who were the plaintiffs) in effect charged the premises and the proceeds with the 400*l.*; Flewker, the trustee, was not a party to this deed. In 1840 Pike conveyed the premises by way of mortgage to Flewker (the trustee) subject to the trusts of the deed of 1824 and the deed of 1826 (but making no mention of the deed of 1835) to secure 300*l.* advanced to Pike by Flewker: the plaintiffs, the executors of Sir Robert Wilmot, though of course they knew that the legal estate, as to part, was in Flewker, did not give notice to him of their charge of 1835. Flewker alleged that he had inquired of the first mortgagee whether he had notice of any subsequent charge and he had given notice to the first mortgagee of his charge for 300*l.*; the plaintiffs, for any thing that appears, had not done so as to their charge. Flewker claimed priority on account of the negligence of the plaintiffs in omitting to give notice, by reason of which he had lent his money on what he was induced to suppose was a sufficient security, whereas by reason of the further charge it was not: he also claimed priority by reason of his superior diligence in giving notice, relying on Dearle v. Hall, and the other cases above cited. The Vice-Chancellor held that he was not in respect of his notice entitled to any priority; but having the legal estate, though only in trust, in estate B., he was allowed, after some hesitation on the part of the Vice-Chancellor (see 5 Hare, 21, 22, 23), priority in respect of that estate.

It was held that as an actual prior charge, if afterwards paid off by the mortgagor, or otherwise avoided, would, according to the general doctrine (a), have given to the second mortgagee the rights of a first mortgagee, the recital of a charge which did not exist could not have the effect of postponing the mortgagee: the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the incumbrancers must rank according to the dates of their advances (b).

The following case may here be introduced, in which the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce had to adjust the equities between several incumbrancers, under rather peculiar circumstances. One Milbank being seised in fee of a freehold and of a copyhold estate, he, in 1830 and 1832, borrowed various sums of money, amounting in the whole to 4000*l.*, from Bignold, on behalf of the Norwich Union Company, on a mortgage of the freehold estate alone. The company paid off a prior mortgage, and had the legal estate conveyed to a trustee for them. Milbank, in 1832, borrowed 500*l.* more from Bignold on behalf of the company, on the security of the freehold and copyhold estates, the securities being made by distinct instruments, neither of them referring to the other; the copyholds were subject to a mortgage to one Gilson. In 1833 Milbank borrowed of Round and Co. 400*l.*, on mortgage of the freeholds alone, subject to the incumbrances of the Norwich Company thereon, which were recited to amount to 4500*l.* and interest, but which security did not carry with it notice of any charge on the copyholds, nor did it appear that they were aware that there were any copyholds whatever. In 1837 the Norwich Company first had notice of Round's security; in March, 1838, they paid off Gilson's security on the copyholds (1500*l.*), and in 1840 the copyholds were surrendered to certain persons, as trustees for the company. In July, 1838, the Norwich Company sold the freeholds for 5000*l.* In September, 1838, Milbank borrowed 600*l.* from the plaintiff Bugden, and covenanted to surrender the copyhold premises to him as a security, subject to a "certain conditional surrender, made on the day of 183," whereby, as it was stated, the premises were surrendered to Mr. Bignold, on behalf of the company, for securing 1500*l.*, advanced for paying off Gilson's mortgage, and the premises were surrendered accordingly: the plaintiff had no notice of the security of the company of the 23rd April, 1832. In December, Round and Co. required the Norwich Union Company to resort to the copyholds, so as to enable them to make their security available against the freehold estate. In July, 1839, by arrangement between the two last-named parties, the copyhold estate was sold for 2000*l.* In 1840 the plaintiff caused notice to be given to Mr. Bignold, the agent of the company, of his security; Milbank then took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. The plaintiff insisted that he was entitled to be paid out of any balance of the proceeds of the copyholds; the defendants, Round and Co. insisted that they were entitled to be paid, in preference to the plaintiff, out of the proceeds, so much as the proceeds of the real estate would not extend to pay, insisting, inter alia, that the plaintiff must be taken to have had constructive notice of their security. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to what he claimed to this extent only, that the 500*l.* being, by the security of 1832, charged on the freeholds and copyholds rateably, it must be thrown proportionally on the freehold and the copyhold. "Whilst on the one hand," said the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, "I cannot view the mortgage of the freehold made to Round and Co. as tantamount to a mortgage of both freehold and copyhold to them; so, on the other hand, I am not convinced that the form of their security is equivalent to a renunciation by them of any benefit derivable from any collateral or other security that the Norwich Company might hold; and strong as the moral justice of the plaintiff's claims may appear to be, it must not be forgotten that, as a general rule—a rule not without exceptions, but certainly a general rule of our jurisprudence—equities take effect according to their priorities in point of time" (a).

(a) Vide supra, p. 657; et infra, in this Section.

(b) Frazer v. Jones, 5 Hare, 481, 482.

No person who takes a security, with Notice of the existence of a prior security, can be said to have an equal equity with such prior incumbrancer; he knew that all the debtor had to give was what remained after satisfying such prior incumbrance (b): and a person by his conduct, amounting to actual or constructive fraud, may give to another a better equity; for instance, if he, being cognizant of a treaty going on for a subsequent advance or purchase on the assumption that the property is unencumbered, stands by and omits to give notice of his incumbrance, he will be postponed (c).

The above may be sufficient to show what is the general rule where the equities are equal, and to give a general idea of what are the circum-

(a) Bugden v. Bignold, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 377, 398. The parties, acquiescing in the principle stated by the Vice-Chancellor, settled the suit.

(b) V. supra, pp. 195, 727, and infra, 733, n. (b). The doctrine as to Notice, as affecting the questions now under consideration, is treated of infra, Sect. viii.

(c) Berrysford v. Milward, Barnard. 101; S. C. 2 Atk. 49; 2 Pow. on Mortg. by Cov. 438; and see Sugd. V. and P. 1022.

stances which will or will not confer upon a person, standing in other respects in a similar situation with another, a Better Equity. We proceed to consider what is the effect of obtaining the legal estate, or a right to the legal estate, as affecting priorities, as connected with the doctrines above adverted to.

It is a maxim which has long, perhaps always governed the Court of Chancery in deciding upon equitable claims connected with a legal title, that where the equity of two antagonist parties is equal, he who has the legal title shall prevail (a); or, as it may perhaps be stated more correctly, the equity of a person who has only a title in equity shall not prevail against one that has an equal title in equity and also a title at law (b). Again it is, as has been frequently observed in the preceding pages, a general rule that a purchaser bonâ fide for valuable consideration without notice of any preceding claim at law or in equity, will not be prevented by the Court of Chancery from availing himself of any advantage which he has acquired (c): a purchase without notice, said Lord Northington, is a bar to the jurisdiction of this court, and it is of no consequence when the legal advantage was acquired, if the purchase was made and the money paid without notice (d). The general rule, as before observed, as regards satisfied

(a) Francis's Maxims, max. i.

(b) Treatise of Equity, by Fonbl. ii. 302. It has been objected that putting the doctrine upon Francis's maxim would not support the title of a third mortgagee, buying in the first mortgage and so getting the legal estate, to claim in preference to the intermediate mortgagee (as to which v. infra, in this section); for as regards all equitable claims the rule of equity, conformably to the rule of law, is, that he who is first in time is to be preferred; not that time considered of itself can make any such difference, but because the power over the thing being transferred to another this bars all others from obtaining a title to it afterwards, excepting in so far as the grant to such first transferee may not have exhausted the whole subject of the grant; and accordingly, as before noticed, where the legal estate is standing out, equitable incumbrances are paid according to their priority in time, v. supra, 727, and Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 495, and the cases in the note; 1 Fonbl. 320, 321, and the cases p. 320: all persons who advance money without notice of any prior claim, in the view of the Court of Chancery, have equal equities, infra, p. 737; so that there must be some special reason to alter the order of dates. V. supra, p. 729, note (a).

(c) Lord Nottingham, Bassett v. Nosworthy, Rep. temp. Finch, 103, who states that this doctrine was conformable to the common law; the maxims as to descents, discontinuances, &c. having been introduced to protect possession and strengthen the rights of purchasers; and see Sugd. Vend. and P. 1015-6, et seq.; Goleborn v. Alcock, 2 Sim. p. 559, and other cases there cited; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 763; Belt's Supp. to Ves. Sen. 465; Amb. 283-4; supra, vol. i. p. 515; and Wallwyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 31-34.

This rule appears to have been broken in upon in one or two instances, 2 Fonbl. 147; thus, in Burgh v. Burgh, Rep. temp. Finch, 28, where the court interposed to the prejudice of a judgment creditor who had no notice of the plaintiff's equity, treating him as having only the same rights which the debtor had—but there were peculiar circumstances in that case—the judgment can hardly be said to have been bonâ fide. In Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. C. C. 264, Lord Thurlow overruled a plea of a purchase without notice of the marriage, to a bill by a dowress (see Sugd. V. and P. 1071-2), saying the plea did not apply; such a plea being only a bar to an equitable not a legal right; and see Lord Henley's note, 2 Ed. 86.

(d) Stanhope v. Earl Verney, 2 Eden, 85;

terms, was that in order to give a purchaser this advantage the legal estate must be got in (a), and the same rule will now apply to terms which are not satisfied, and to an outstanding legal estate in fee: a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice cannot even be compelled to discover any matter that might affect his title, or to show that he has missed his object to the extent to which he intended to acquire it (b). These principles have a material effect in regard to the question of priority, and in regard to the right to tack as between different incumbrancers.

The Process under the name of tacking to which these principles are applied, is this: if a person who has the legal estate in the land, has also a lien or incumbrance on the land available only in equity, taking advantage of his having the legal estate, by means of which he may keep out at law every other claimant, he requires that all the incumbrancers who hold securities on the estate which can only be available in equity, should either pay off the debts due to him on both, or be foreclosed of all right of redemption; and if he stands in a situation answering all the requisites for establishing his claim that relief is given to him: originally, as will be more particularly adverted to hereafter, he was allowed this advantage only by way of defence; now he may actively enforce it (c). The person who so claims to tack must, as against the person against whom the tack is to operate, not only have the legal estate (d), but, except as to time, he must have an and see Jones v. Powles, 3 My. & K. 598. Mr. Fonblanque states it as a rule, that although a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of a fraud committed by him under whom he claims, shall not be prejudiced in equity, he shall not be assisted against the party upon whom the fraud was committed, 1 Fonbl. 148.

(a) V. sup. p. 728, et inf. p. 745; and see Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 246. As regards a widow, a distinction to her disadvantage in respect of her claim to dower was settled by the case of Radnor v. Vendebendy, Show. Par. Ca. 69, which Lord Hardwicke stated thus,—that if a purchaser, having notice of the wife's title to dower, takes in a term precedent to the right of dower, whether it were a satisfied term or whether money was paid for it, it was a bar to the wife's dower: if the term had subsisted at the husband's death the wife might have redeemed it and been entitled to her dower; but if a purchaser come in after the mortgage is paid off and the death of the husband and takes an assignment of the term, that would prevent dower, Hill v. Adams, 2 Atk. 209; Butler's note, Co. Litt. 203 a, n.

105. This, as affecting the question of notice, has always been considered as an anomaly and not to be carried further than the strict rule established in Radnor v. Vendebendy; see Maundrell v. Maundrell, supra, and 7 Ves. 567; and see Wynn v. Williams, 5 Ves. 134; this point, by reason of the late Dower Act, will seldom if ever occur in future.

(b) Wallwyn v. Lee, supra; Collett v. De Golls, Forrest. 69; Lowther v. Carleton, ibid. 187. A summary of the learning as to a plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, may be seen, Redesdale on Pleading, by Smith, p. 247. But a plea is not the mode in which the doctrine can be insisted upon by a mortgagee, in a case involving a question as to priorities, as whatever may be his rights they are subject to redemption in equity; the mortgagee does not desire to prevent the applicant from obtaining any relief. If the bill were for a discovery of title only, then the plea would be proper and good, 2 Ventr. 337; Comyn, Dig. Mortgage, p. 739, last edition.

(c) V. infra, p. 736, &c.

(d) See Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 376.

equal equity, and also, which follows from the last, he must have advanced his money without notice of the other's claim (a); and he must have advanced the money on the credit of the land (b). We now proceed to a review of the principal authorities illustrative of these general propositions.

The application of these principles to the case of a subsequent mortgagee coming to redeem the first where the first has made subsequent advances is simple and obvious. If a mortgagee after forfeiture of the condition lend a further sum to his mortgagor, and the same be secured to him by another bonâ fide mortgage, he having no notice of any intermediate incumbrance, the mesne or intervening incumbrancer cannot redeem the first without paying what is due on the second; the legal estate being in the mortgagee, and the subsequent advances being bonâ fide due to him he has on his side law and equal equity in the sense above explained (c). If the latter advance should have been secured to him by a judgment, which formerly was not a charge upon the land, a statute or recognizance, and the mortgage were absolute at law, the mesne mortgagee must equally in this case pay off both, for the second loan will be taken to have been made on the faith of his having already the title to the land (d). But a judgment obtained by the first mortgagee for a previous debt not contracted upon the credit of the land in mortgage will not come within the principle; the security must be taken for an actual advance by the party, either expressly or upon a fair presumption in his character of mortgagee (e): a bond cannot be tacked against those claiming under the mortgagor or against his creditors when dead, any more than it can against the mortgagor himself (f).

But it is not merely between the parties as they originally stood that this doctrine prevails: any incumbrancer in whom all the above-stated requisites are united may equally claim the right to tack; thus

(a) Lord Cottenham, Lacey v. Ingle, 2 Phillips, 419; Allen v. Knight, 5 Hare, 272; Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271.

(b) V. infra, Lacey v. Evans.

(c) Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 53; Tenison v. Sweeny, 1 Jo. & Lat. 710. It may, perhaps, cause some surprise that the mortgagee was not required, as a test of perfect bona fides, at least to have inquired of the mortgagor whether there were any intermediate incumbrancers; but the inquiry, if made, does a mortgagee who takes that precaution no service as against one who does not; see Wilmot v. Pike, ubi supra.

(d) Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P.

Wms. 494; Blackston v. Moreland, 2 Ch. Ca. 20; Shepherd v. Titley, 2 Atk. 352; Anon. 2 Ves. 662; Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. 617; Baker v. Harris, 16 Ves. 397; and see 1 Eq. Abr. p. 322, pl. 1: but see Brierton v. Jones, infra.

(e) See Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Price, 42, 153, Graham, Baron; Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. 617. How far the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which has made a judgment a charge upon the land (see Sugd. V. and P. p. 436, § 41) will alter the doctrine on these points, has, I believe, to be decided.

(f) Hamerton v. Rogers, 1 Ves. J. 513; and see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 439.

if the third mortgagee, who had no notice when he paid his money and took his original security, can buy in the first mortgage and thus acquire the legal estate, he has all the advantages of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, and those advantages he may enforce against all merely equitable incumbrancers (a).

The rule we are now considering, according to the terms in which it is usually laid down, would sufficiently establish the doctrine of tacking in cases where the mortgagor or a subsequent incumbrancer seeks to redeem, that is where the mortgagee is put upon the defensive, and it is most commonly in such cases that the rule comes into operation: the title of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, it is said by high authority, is a shield to defend the possession of the purchaser, but not a sword to attack the possession of others (b). The rule however requires to be extended beyond the mere purpose of defence; for the use and purpose of a mortgage is that the mortgagee may be enabled to compel payment by means of a bill for a foreclosure; and if he could not insist on all his rights when standing in the character of a plaintiff, he would be deprived of them on the most important occasion on which they might be made available, and accordingly and without infringing on the proper limits of the rule it has been so extended (c). Where a third mortgagee has obtained an assignment of a prior mortgage by which the legal estate is conveyed to him, and he files a bill for foreclosure, each party is let in to redeem according to the rank which his security holds (d), and it is part of the decree that the plaintiff on being redeemed do convey the estate to the person who redeems him (e); so that every party who seeks to redeem becomes an applicant against the plaintiff as regards his first mortgage, and then the rule will apply that he shall not be deprived of any advantage that he has acquired; and the advantage that he has acquired is, that he has the entire legal estate in the premises, and what is considered as an equal equity as regards each of his incumbrances with those who come to redeem; and

(a) V. infra, Chap. viii. of Notice.

(b) Sugd. V. and P. 1071.

(c) If Sir James Wigram's doctrine (in Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 332; Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 6, 7, 8; and other cases) be the law, as I presume it is, with some qualifications, (v. int. al. Neesom v. Clarkson, 4 Hare, 101; et v. supra, p. 477 and p. 485,) the position of the party on the record would not now influence the court in determining what are the rights of a mortgagee as regards tacking; and see Coote on Mortgages, p. 480; but see Mr. Cox's note, there referred to.

(d) In Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, the Master of the Rolls said (Moseley, 52), in reference to priority of satisfaction under a decree for payment of incumbrances according to their priority, that he thought it juster to explain it, of priority in point of satisfaction, though not of time; so that if a creditor could unite a subsequent with a prior security he would have the benefit of it under the decree: and from that time the point has been settled in cases where the creditor comes in under a decree; v. infra.

(e) See int. al. Seton on Decrees, 158, 161.

accordingly the doctrine has been extended in such case to a plaintiff coming to foreclose (a). If indeed the plaintiff in a foreclosure suit were the only person seeking for the interference of the court, it might seem that he might be met by the rule that he who seeks for equity must do equity, in the sense of admitting and giving effect to the priority of the second mortgagee; but as between two subsequent incumbrancers in such case it has not been allowed, for, as we have seen, the circumstance of priority of time alone does not give a better equity (b); the third mortgagee having innocently lent his money without notice of the existence of the second, has in conscience, as it has been considered, as good a right to receive the whole money he has lent as the second mortgagee has to be paid what he may have advanced; and when, by the assignment of the first mortgage, and the possession of the title deeds, he gets both law and equity on his side, a court of conscience will not interpose to strip him of his protection (c).

It was established at an early period, and more especially by the case of March v. Lee, before Lord Keeper North, Lord C. J. Hale, and Mr. Justice Rainsford (d), and that case has ever since been followed, that a third mortgagee may buy in the first mortgage so as to be enabled to tack, he having had no notice of the second when he lent his money, though the first mortgagee has at the time notice of the second (e), and that even after a bill filed by the second mortgagee against the mortgagor and the first and third mortgagees, but before decree (f); the third mortgagee having obtained the law on his side and equal equity he shall thereby squeeze out the second mortgagee; and this the Lord Chief Justice Hale called a plank

(a) Lord Chief Justice, Holt v. Mill, 2 Vernon, 278. In that case it was objected that the plaintiff ought to prove the actual payment of his money, that producing an acquittance was not enough, sed non allocatur; and see Du Vigier v. Lee, ubi supra.

(b) See Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 491, 1st resolution, et v. supra, p. 733, 735.

(c) Lord Northington, Belchier v. Butler, 1 Eden, 530, affirmed in Dom. Proc.

(d) 1 Ch. Ca. 162; 2 Ventr. 337.

(e) If the first mortgagee had come under any engagement with the second, so as to become his trustee, the principle of Saunders v. Dehew, infra, p. 739, would apply.

(f) Robinson v. Davison, 1 Bro. 62; Belchier v. Renforth, 5 Bro. P. C. 292; S. C. 1 Ed. 523; Barnett v. Weston, 12 Ves. 133; Peacock v. Burt, Coote, Append. 693; 13 Law J.

35; the judgment of Lord Cottenham, which contains a lucid exposition of the authorities, is stated in Jarman, Mortgage, pp. 447-9; and Coote, p. 696-8. So that the first mortgagee does not stand in the place of the mortgagor, as regards subsequent incumbrances, for he could not, at least so I presume, pay off the first, and give the legal estate to the third, so as to enable him to tack, he having notice of the second: the first mortgagee is a vendor, and "knowledge of the vendor has never been held to bind a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice;" Lord Cottenham, then Master of the Rolls, ubi sup. See also Hawkins v. Taylor, 2 Vern. 29; Turner v. Richmond, ibid. 81; Matthews v. Cartwright, 2 Atk. 347; Robinson v. Davison, 1 Bro. 63, Cox's note; but see the exception in Wortley v. Birkhead, 2 Ves. 571.

gained by the third mortgagee or tabula in naufragio, which construction is in favour of purchasers, every mortgagee being such pro tanto (a). This may now be considered as fully settled (b), notwithstanding the doubt supposed to have been thrown out by Lord Eldon, in the case of Mackreth v. Symmons (b), as to the effect which the fact of the first mortgagee having had notice of the second when he conveyed to the third, might have as affecting the right to tack (c).

As to purchases made pendente lite, Lord Northington observed that the rule of equity requires no more than that the third mortgagee should not have had notice of the second at the time of lending his money (d), for it is by lending the money without notice that he becomes an honest creditor, and acquires the right to protect his debt; but he is not compelled to look for this protection till his debt is in danger of being prejudiced; and therefore when that danger is first discovered to him, whether it be by a suit in equity or by any extrajudicial means, as the honesty of his debt is not affected by the discovery, so the right of protecting that debt and the efficacy of such protection, are not prejudiced: on this is founded the rule which permits the subsequent incumbrancer to purchase the legal estate pendente lite (e).

Lord Hardwicke had to consider the doctrine of purchases made pendente lite in a case where a decree had been made for a sale, and that the Master should inquire into priorities. A mortgagee, by mortgage subsequent in point of date to that of the defendant, after the decree, bought in an incumbrance prior in date to that of the defendant, and thus acquired the legal estate, and he sought under the general rule to tack his original subsequent mortgage to the mortgage he had so got in, so as to obtain priority for his entire debt against the intervening incumbrancers: Lord Hardwicke refused to allow the rule to operate in such a case, as it would lay a foundation for collusion between the parties to exclude each other, which would produce very mischievous consequences (f).

A purchaser or mortgagee cannot avail himself, as against the cestuis que trust, of a conveyance or assignment of a legal estate which was

(a) Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491, 1st resolution.

(b) 15 Ves. 335.

(c) See Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, i. p. 541; Sugd. V. and P. 1016-17.

(d) As to this, however, v. infra, Section viii. Notice.

(e) Lord Northington, Belchier v. Butler, 1 Eden, 530.

(f) Wortley v. Birkhead, 2 Ves. p. 575;

S. C. 3 Atk. 811; and see Earl of Bristol v. Hungerford, 2 Vern. 525; Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. 619; Redesd. Pl. 168, 3rd edition: a commission has not the same effect as a decree in this respect, 11 Ves. pp. 619-20. His Lordship's judgment in Wortley v. Birkhead, is so often referred to, that I have set it forth in an extract in the third of the additional notes to this Section.

obtained from a trustee in whom it was vested on express trusts (a). If a prior mortgagee takes an assignment of a third mortgage as a trustee only for another person, he shall not be allowed to tack the two mortgages together to the prejudice of intervening incumbrancers; if this were permitted, said Lord Hardwicke, a mere stranger purchasing the third mortgage by declaring he bought it for the first mortgagee might tack both together and defeat all the other incumbrancers (b). It has been established that an agent, trustee, heir-at-law or executor buying in a puisne incumbrance, as against another incumbrancer, is entitled to no more than what he gave for the incumbrance (c).

But though the rule of equity, that is of the Court of Chancery, giving to the puisne incumbrance priority under the circumstances above stated, has been so settled, and has been followed, principally, it would seem, on account of the sanction it obtained from the imposing name of Sir Matthew Hale (d), it has often been reflected on as not without great appearance of hardship; it seems reasonable, it has been frequently said, that each mortgagee should be paid according to his priority, and that leaving the second mortgagee to be defeated by a contrivance between the first mortgagee and the third is acting with great severity (e): the doctrine therefore has not been extended to cases which cannot be brought within the reasons on which the judgment in March v. Lee was founded.

If the money was not advanced upon the credit of the land, no case of tacking can arise. This, as Lord Cottenham has observed, is strongly exemplified in the case put in Brace v. D. of Marlborough (f), and adopted by Lord Eldon in Ex parte Knott (g). "A mere judgment creditor, though he deals originally for a lien, does not get an estate originally in the land; he has neither jus in re nor jus ad rem: but if there be once a creditor by mortgage, and he afterwards advances money upon a judgment, the court will intend that he makes that advance meaning to take a security upon the land for both (h), and he

(a) Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. p. 271; 2 Freem. 123; Allen v. Knight, 5 Hare, 278; Sugd. V. and P. 1019.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 52, 53; but it is not quite obvious that the anticipated consequence would follow.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 54; v. supra, pp. 656-7. It is stated, in Comyn's Digest, Mortgage, p. 740, referring to Ch. Rep. p. 409, "That a purchaser of a prior incumbrance shall not have advantage of it for securing a prior debt, if he had not the mortgage or purchase of the land, without notice, before his purchase of the incumbrance."

(d) See 2 P. W. 492.

(e) Ibid. pp. 492-3.

(f) 2 P. W. p. 491; and see Averall v. Wade, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 262.

(g) 11 Ves. 617.

(h) And see Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. p. 346-7, et seq.

may tack; but if he remains a mere judgment creditor, the court says he does not deal upon the faith of the land in this sense, that he does not contract for an interest in the land, and therefore is entitled only as a judgment creditor to an elegit and he cannot tack" (a). The cognizee of the judgment, as has been said, is not deceived though the cognizor had before made twenty mortgages of all his real estate; whereas a mortgagee is defrauded or deceived if the mortgagor before that time had mortgaged his estate to another; and it is such a fraud as the legislature (b) has taken notice of and punishes by foreclosing such mortgagor who mortgages his land a second time without giving notice of the first mortgage (c).

There seems to be a difference, therefore, between the case of a third mortgagee buying in a statute or judgment which is the first incumbrance, and where a statute or judgment creditor being the first incumbrancer buys in the third mortgage; in the latter case the statute or judgment creditor, as he did not lend his money on the credit of the land and therefore is not a purchaser, is not permitted to unite the first mortgage to his statute or judgment (d); but in the former case, as the land was in view and contemplation of the lender, and he was therefore a purchaser, he will be allowed to unite the statute or judgment to his third mortgage, and thus obtain priority over the second (e), and that, as it has been held, although there be nothing due upon the judgment or statute (f); and the purchaser will, it

(a) Lord Cottenham, Lacey v. Ingle, 2 Phill. 422. But if a first incumbrancer by judgment has likewise a mortgage on the estate, though there is another judgment, prior in time to the mortgage, yet if the mortgagee had no notice of such judgment, the creditor by judgment (who, it is to be observed, did not lend his money on the credit of the land) must pay off both if he seek relief in equity; "for it would be hard," said Lord Hardwicke, "if such a party were to be in a worse situation with a prior incumbrance in his favour, than a mortgagee without notice of a prior judgment would be in this court;" Sir Hugh Smithson v. Thompson, 1 Atk. 520.

(b) By stat. 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 16, § 2, if any person who hath suffered any judgment, statute or recognizance, which may bring a charge on his land, to be entered against him, mortgages his estate, without giving notice of the prior incumbrance, such mortgagor will not be entitled to the benefit of an equity of redemption; and the same punishment applies in case of a second mortgage (unless there is fraud or unfairness in the second mortgagee,) where the fact of a former mortgage is suppressed; though the right to dower is by the act (s. 5) saved to the wife, if she does not join in such conveyances; see Stafford v. Selby, 2 Vern. 589-90, where the general doctrine as to the effect of this act may be found. I do not remember a single instance of this statute having been enforced.

(c) Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 491-2; 2nd resolution.

(d) Whether, as before noticed, the late statute, 1 Vict. c. 110, which makes a registered judgment a charge on the land, will affect this doctrine has, as I believe, yet to be decided.

(e) In Edmunds v. Povey, 1 Vern. p. 187, Lord Keeper North would not allow the point to be disputed: and see Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 493; Moseley, p. 53; Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. p. 53; Anon. 2 Ves. 662. As to the requisites that must be complied with, in order to make a judgment effectual according to the modern statute law, see vol. i. p. 290; and supra, p. 722, note.

(f) See additional note, No. 4; Edmunds v. Povey, 1 Vern. 187, that was the case of a satisfied judgment, and the Lord Keeper would not allow the point to be disputed; March v.

seems, be entitled to the benefit he has so acquired, though obtained by undue means, as without any consideration or even by fraud (a), for the practice, says the author of the Treatise of Equity, is not material to secure a just debt (b).

The reason why a mortgage may be tacked to a judgment, where the judgment is bought in by a mortgagee, is stated to be this—because the judgment creditor by virtue of an elegit may bring an ejectment and hold upon the extended value (c): now there is an additional reason, for without suing out execution he may obtain, by registering the judgment, an actual charge (d). If the purchase be of a precedent statute or judgment (e) by a subsequent mortgagee, and he extends the lands, he shall not be brought to account upon this in equity by a prior mortgagee, any otherwise than as he may at common law, by scire facias ad computandum, viz., not according to the true value, but upon the extended value (f); and this although the extended value was but a third part of the true value (g): so that by protecting, says the author of the Treatise of Equity, is meant, making all the ad-

Lee, 1 Ch. Ca. 166, add. note, No. 4; Stanton v. Sadler, 2 Vern. 30; there the purchaser appears to have extended the statute after his purchase, though it was satisfied; see 2 Fonbl. 306; and Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, i. p. 510, note (p). Satisfied judgments have not been extinguished as satisfied terms have, but there is a course which the debtor may take to have satisfaction entered, which may be seen by reference to Harrison's Digest: et v. infra, p. 742.

(a) Hitchcock v. Sedgwick, 2 Vern. 158; Sir John Fagg's case, cited 2 Vern. p. 58; Harcourt v. Knowel, cited 2 Vern. p. 159; Siddon v. Charnells, Bunb. 299; though this doctrine has been considered to be doubtful: Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, 512; Sugd. V. and P. p. 1019. In Sanders v. Deligne, 2 Freem. p. 123, the Lords Commissioners said, "That they would not give any relief to a person in such circumstances, but would not prevent him from gaining any advantage he could at law;" see however Turner v. Buck, 22 Vin. Abr. 21, Hovenden.

(b) 2 Fonbl. 306.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 52. Mr. Coote, on Mortgages, pp. 69, 70, has described the nature of an elegit according to the old law; et v. supra, p. 724, as to the effect of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

(d) V. supra, p. 704.

(e) Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 517.

(f) Higgon v. Calamy, 1 Ch. Ca. 149; 1 Fonbl. 306; 2 Vent. 338; and see Churchill v. Grove, 1 Ch. Ca. 37. Mr. Fonblanque adds a query whether the mortgagee—that is, if he has extended the land under an elegit—shall not account for what he has received, if he has received enough to satisfy his whole demand; referring to Godfrey v. Watson, ubi sup., et inf. p. 742; and Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 269, (which was a case of a mortgagee in possession holding over, ibid. 277-8,) and no doubt he would: see also the dict. by Lord Chief Justice Hale, 2 Vent. 339; and see the next note.

(g) Earl of Huntington v. Greenville, 1 Vern. 49. "However," said Lord Hardwicke, "if the debtor comes into equity for relief, this court will give it him by obliging the creditor to account for the whole that he has received (and see 2 Vent. pp. 338-9); and as a person who comes for equity must do equity, will direct the debtor to pay interest to the creditor, even though it should exceed the principal; Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 517: though this is apparently at variance with the doctrine that interest will not be allowed beyond the penalty of a bond, at law or in equity, (see Bromley v. Goodere, cited 3 Atk. 517; Tew v. Winterton, 3 Bro. 489; Knight v. Maclean, ibid. 496; Hughes v. Wynne, 1 My. & K. 24, 25, except in special cases; Grant v. Grant, 3 Simons, 365,) unless this is to be taken as an exception to the rule, that the position of a party on the record shall not vary his rights (v. supra, p. 736 n.), which, from the concluding passage of Lord Hardwicke's judgment, 3 Atk. 518 (stated infra, next page), it would seem it is not.

vantages of it that the law admits of (a); and Lord Hardwicke even went beyond this, saying that where a mortgagee has tacked a judgment to his mortgage he shall not be confined to the penalty of the judgment, but shall be entitled to interest upon the debt secured by judgment though it exceeds the penalty down to the time the principal is paid off (b).

It is easy to understand that the court should refuse in a doubtful case to entertain an application to get rid in effect of a statute or judgment in equity, when the means of having it vacated are open at law (c), and that the court should refuse to prevent the party from obtaining any advantage which the judgment whilst standing gives him at law (d); but the grounds on which a mortgagee getting in a judgment or statute which is admitted to be satisfied, and of which, therefore, no advantage—at least, substantial advantage—could be obtained at law, should be allowed to have a priority over a mesne incumbrancer are not quite so obvious (e). The reason seems to be that, although satisfied, yet, until proceedings have been taken by means of a scire facias ad computandum, or ad redhibendam terram (f), to vacate the judgment or statute, an elegit may be sued out; and an ejectment may be founded upon it: still it must be admitted that, allowing a satisfied judgment, on which nothing remains due, and on which an elegit has not been issued (g), so that the party has not even elected to take the land in preference to the person as his security, to give to a mortgagee who purchases such a judgment priority over an incumbrancer having priority in point of time to the purchaser of such judgment, as seems to have been the effect of the decree in Edmunds v. Povey, is carrying the doctrine much beyond mere protection, in any sense of that term. That a satisfied term should have afforded such an advantage (h), is perfectly intelligible, because at

(a) 1 Fonbl. 306.

(b) Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518.

(c) See Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 494, 5th resolution.

(d) Which has long been established as a rule; Hitchcock v. Sedgwick, 2 Vern. 158, and cases there cited.

(e) It was stated by Mr. Vernon, and agreed by the court, in Wright v. Pilling, Prec. Ch. 495, that if a man has confessed twenty judgments or statutes, the conuzee cannot, by buying in the first, hold out all the intervening judgments, because when the debt on the first judgment is paid, that security expires and determines of itself: "the tenancy by elegit," says Sir Wm. Blackstone, ii. 161, "is only a conditional estate, defeasible when the debt is paid."

(f) V. supra, and Marsh v. Lee, 2 Vent. 338; additional note, No. 4, infra; Coote, 498, 499, 500.

(g) It is said, in Bacon's Abridgment, (tit. Sci. Facias, C. 2, vol. vi. p. 109; and see 2 Saunders, 72, 5, 6,) that if the conuzor in a statute after his land is extended, tenders the money to the conuzee, who refuses it, he is put to his scire facias, and cannot enter; but in case of an elegit on a recognizance at common law, when the conuzee is answered his debt by perception of the certain and usual profits of the land, the debtor may enter, and is not put to his sci. fa.

(h) As in Turner v. Richmond, 2 Vern. 81, and the cases in the note.

law there were no means whatever of procuring the extinction of an absolute term, though all the purposes for which it was created were at an end, and it might be made use of as against every one, not only to defend but to recover the possession (a).

It has been laid down that where a person who has a first mortgage, which requires no support, without the consent of the mortgagor, purchases in a subsequent judgment (which, as before mentioned, does not of itself affect the land), a mesne mortgagee or assignee will not be compelled to pay the money due on both securities, in order to redeem, “because such transaction of the mortgagee was only to load the estate without the consent of the owner, when he had no prospect of bettering his own security” (b).

All the points as to the requisites of tacking, are exemplified in the late case of Lacey v. Ingle (1847) (c). One Rogers had contracted to purchase four estates; he had paid the purchase-money for one, consisting of 366 acres, and obtained a conveyance, and on the 8th January, 1842, he executed a legal mortgage of this estate to one Brown, for securing 1500*l.* and interest; on the 28th January 1842, he executed a mortgage to one Wilkinson of the same property, to secure 2000*l.*, depositing a forged copy of his purchase deed. On the 21st April, 1842, Rogers contracted with the plaintiff, Mrs. Lacey, to sell to her the estates he had contracted to purchase, free from all incumbrances (d), for 5200*l.*, 1040*l.* to be paid down, the remainder on the completion of the purchase: the 1040*l.* was paid, and on the 28th October, 1842, Mrs. Lacey, at Rogers’s request, advanced to him 350*l.* more. Mrs. Lacey had no notice of the mortgage to Brown until November, 1842, or of the mortgage to Wilkinson until December, 1842. On the 2nd July, 1842, the transaction took place on which the question arose: on that day Rogers borrowed 800*l.* of the defendant Inglis, and as a security for it he executed a deed, by which, after reciting Mrs. Lacey’s agreement for purchase, Rogers assigned, as stated in the deed, the sum of 5000*l.*, agreed to be paid to Rogers as the balance of the price for the premises contracted to be sold, with power to sue for and recover it; and in the event of the recited contract going off, Rogers cove-

(a) Brereton v. Jones, 1 Eq. Ab. 326, § 11; et v. int. al. Ambl. 284.

(b) This doctrine seems to have something of reason for its foundation, but it is not consistent with the decisions above referred to, and it has been disputed by a modern author, eminently conversant with this subject; Coote, p. 515. By the same case it was decided that a judgment obtained after the equity of redemption has been assigned, cannot be tacked by the judgment creditor against the assignee of the equity of redemption to a mortgage afterwards got in by him, when the judgment creditor had notice of the assignment of the equity of redemption before he purchased the mortgage.

(c) 2 Phillips, 413.

(d) 2 Phillips, 420.

nanted to execute a mortgage of the premises to the defendant. The solicitors of Brown were the solicitors of the defendant, and it was agreed that the deeds in their possession, as solicitors of Brown the mortgagee, should, as between Rogers and the defendant, be held by them for his security; the defendant gave no notice of this security to the plaintiff, Mrs. Lacey, previously to her advance in October, 1842, or afterwards. On the 11th December, 1843, Mrs. Lacey purchased Wilkinson's equitable incumbrance for 1500*l.*, but keeping it alive, as a subsisting charge, for her benefit. The 1500*l.* paid by Mrs. Lacey to Wilkinson, with the sums previously paid, and agreed to be paid, on account of the purchase-money, and the 1500*l.* due on Brown's mortgage, exceeded the gross sum payable by Mrs. Lacey, so that nothing was left for payment of the 800*l.* advanced by the defendant Ingle on the security of the 2nd July, 1842 (a). Ingle, in order to better his security, paid off Brown, and took from him an assignment of the legal estate; he then claimed to tack the 800*l.* to his mortgage as against Mrs. Lacey, who sought to redeem Brown's mortgage; the question was, whether he was entitled to do so. On the original hearing, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, treating the question as one between Mrs. Lacey, as assignee of Wilkinson's equitable mortgage, and the defendant, as holder of the legal estate, with a subsequent claim under the security of the 2nd July, 1842 (b): held that the defendant was entitled to tack the 800*l.* Lord Cottenham took a different view of the case, and reversed the Vice-Chancellor's decree. His Lordship held, first, that in the events that had happened, Ingle could not be considered as having advanced his money on the security of the estate, but only of the purchase-money, therefore no case of tacking could arise (c); and secondly, that he had not equal equity, for he lent his money with notice of the plaintiff's contract (d), and therefore with full knowledge that the plaintiff had a right to apply her purchase-money in the discharge of all incumbrances affecting the estate: this was clear as between her and Rogers, and the defendant taking under Rogers could have no larger right than Rogers, his assignor (e): he had dealt for a security on a supposed balance; he was contending for a security on the nominal purchase-money. The defendant had indeed been defrauded by Rogers having suppressed some of the incumbrances, but the plaintiff was no party to the fraud; the decree

(a) This security is, by mistake, in two instances, stated in the report, to be of the 21st April.

(b) 2 Phillips, 422.

(c) 2 Phillips, 421.

(d) V. supra, p. 732.

(e) 2 Phill. pp. 422-3.

deprived the plaintiff of what she had contracted for, namely, the estate free from incumbrances, for the purchase-money agreed upon; and gave the defendant, what he had not contracted for, a lien for the money he advanced upon the land in the hands of the purchaser. If the plaintiff had been guilty of neglect, in advancing so much of the purchase-money before the title was made clear, the defendant had been guilty of greater neglect, in not giving notice of his security; the agreement as to the deeds, gave him no better security, for it was inconsistent with his written agreement that he should have any security on the estate, unless (which had not happened) the purchase should go off. The Lord Chancellor considered that the fact of Mrs. Lacey having taken an assignment of Wilkinson's security, neither improved her position any more than if she had simply paid off the debt, nor could it prejudice her; and his Lordship ordered that, as the whole of the litigation had arisen from the defendant's claim, he must pay the Costs of the suit up to and including the hearing.

It appears that an act of bankruptcy by the mortgagor prior to the lending will not prevent tacking (a).

It is to be borne in mind that, as a general rule depending on the very essence of the doctrine now under consideration, unless the party who seeks to tack has acquired the legal title, or the dominion over it, a right to tack can never attach (b); if a fourth mortgagee buys in the second without notice of the third, he cannot tack, and he gains no priority (c): where the legal estate is outstanding, and no party has a preferable right to get it in (d), the several incumbrancers must be paid according to their priority of time, Qui prior est in tempore potior est in jure (e), and if a person holds a mortgage in one character and has the legal estate in another, for instance, the mortgage in his individual character and the legal estate as executor, or vice versâ, he will not be permitted to tack (f).

A mortgagee who purchases the equity of redemption is bound to pay a judgment obtained subsequently to his mortgage of which he

(a) Coote, p. 513.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Clarke v. Abbot, Barnardist. 462-3; "especially without bringing the trustee of that mortgage before the court;" et v. supra, p. 728, 734.

(c) Clarke v. Abbot, 2 Eq. Ab. p. 606, S. C. Barnardist. 457; 2 P. W. p. 496, 7th resolution.

(d) Earl Pomfret v. Lord Windsor, 2 Ves. p. 486.

(e) Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2

P. W. 493, 7th resolution; Frere v. Moore, 8 Price, p. 475; Parry v. Wright, 1 Sim. & St. 369; et v. supra, p. 727; and see Frere v. Moore, 8 Price, 475, as stated Sugd. V. and P. 1018, and the additional note, No. 1.

(f) Barnett v. Weston, 12 Ves. 134. This was a mortgage of a leasehold; the two interests in different rights were united in the executor: and see Saunders v. Dehew, ubi supra: as to perfecting defective securities in favour of mortgagees, v. supra, p. 639.

has notice before the purchase ; but it seems he is not bound to pay a judgment of which he had no notice, though it had been docketed or registered (a) ; the doctrine of purchaser for valuable consideration protects him, at least in equity.

The Extinction and Merger of incumbrances is so material in reference to the question as to priorities, that it will be proper here to advert to the general doctrines on that subject.

If a mortgagor pays off a prior charge the extinguishment of the charge will enure to the benefit of a subsequent mortgagee ; so also if a person have a charge, and that charge has been avoided as being illegal or on any other ground, either by the act of the mortgagor or by the act of a subsequent mortgagee—the principle of the decisions on this subject is that the mortgage as between mortgagor and mortgagee, is a mortgage of the mortgagor's entire interest, saving only the rights of prior incumbrancers (b). Generally speaking, a purchaser of an equity of redemption, with notice of subsequent incumbrances, stands in the same situation as regards such subsequent incumbrances as if he had himself been the mortgagor ; he can neither set up against such subsequent incumbrances a prior mortgage of his own, nor consequently a mortgage which he or the mortgagor may have got in (c) ; he is not permitted to say there was a time when there was a charge upon the estate prior to the second incumbrance, and therefore that as between him, the purchaser, and the second incumbrancer, that charge shall be considered as still subsisting ; and it is all the same whether he have constructive or actual notice at the time of his purchase (d) : if he have no notice he may then take advantage of the general rule in favour of purchasers without notice ; and where a first mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption with notice, he may keep his charge on foot as against subsequent incumbrancers equally as may a devisee (e). On the principle above stated, where a second equitable mortgagee, who becomes such without notice of the first equitable mortgage, afterwards with notice of the first incumbrance, obtains the legal estate from the mortgagor, he holds the legal estate subject to the first incumbrance (f) ; he can only hold the legal

(a) Greswold v. Marsham, 2 Ch. Ca. 170, cited by Sir Wm. Grant, in Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Meriv. 224 ; Churchill v. Grove, 1 Ch. Ca. p. 35 ; and see Sugd. V. and P. p. 1048 and p. 965 ; and infra, Sect. viii. Notice.

(b) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 5 Hare, 481 ; and see Fraser v. Jones, 5 Hare, p. 482 ; et v. supra, p. 657, n. (f).

(c) Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Meriv. p. 224 ;

Greswold v. Marsham, 2 Ch. Ca. p. 170 ; and Mocatta v. Murgatroyd, 1 P. W. 393, there cited.

(d) Toulmin v. Stere, 3 Meriv. 224.

(e) Forbes v. Moffatt, 18 Ves. 384 ; Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 455 ; v. infra, p. 748 ; and see a Treatise on this subject in the Jurist, vol. xi. No. 558, pt. ii. p. 377.

(f) Allen v. Knight, 5 Hare, 272 ; Parry estate precisely as the mortgagor held it (a). This doctrine is of great importance as regards priorities as between subsequent incumbrancers.

An estate was purchased by one Madocks, subject to a first mortgage to Sir Thos. Mostyn, and a second mortgage to the plaintiff. Madocks was to retain 5000*l.* to pay off the incumbrances; in 1810 Sir T. Mostyn, by the direction of Madocks, conveyed the premises to one Girdlestone in fee, and it was declared that the trustee of an outstanding term should hold it to attend the inheritance; the 3200*l.* paid to Mostyn was the money of one Wright and was paid to him by Wright's agent; by a deed of the same date Madocks granted a rent-charge to Wright to be issuing out of the lands, and Girdlestone demised the lands to Berkeley as trustee for 500*l.* to secure the rent-charge. Wright had constructive notice of the plaintiff's charge; the question was whether Wright, to the extent of the money paid to Mostyn was entitled to priority, or whether Wright under the circumstances was to be considered as the first incumbrancer. It was held that he was: Wright, by accepting the term from Girdlestone, admitted that he held the fee in trust for Madocks. Sir T. Mostyn's security had not been kept up, and the parties having failed to do so the court could not give effect to their instruments contrary to their own clear intention (b). In a late case one Holman made an equitable mortgage to the defendant, and afterwards entered into an agreement to grant a lease of the same premises to the defendant; the property was sold subject to the plaintiff's claim under the agreement, under an order of the Court of Review, and the defendant became the purchaser; it was held on the principles above stated that the plaintiff had a clear right to have the lease he contracted for as against the defendant, on the ground that the defendant by becoming the purchaser had united his interest as equitable mortgagee with that of owner of the equity of redemption (c).

The principle of law is that a term merges by union with the inheritance, whether the interest in the reversion be absolute, or only for a limited period (d): but upon this subject the Court of Chancery is not guided by the rules of law: it will sometimes hold a charge

v. Wright, on appeal, 5 Russ. p. 142; S. C. 1 Sim. & St. 369, 379; stated infra, Brown v. Stead, 5 Sim. 535; Smith v. Phillips, 1 Keen, 694.

(a) Allen v. Knight, ubi sup.; on the principle of Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271; Beckett v. Cordley, 1 Bro. 353.

(b) Parry v. Wright, 1 Sim. & St. p. 379; affirmed, 5 Russ. 142; and see, on this subject, Medley v. Horton, 14 Sim. p. 229, where

(p. 228) the leading cases are cited; Garnett v. Armstrong, 2 Conn. & L. p. 458; Smith v. Phillips, 1 Keen, 694, 699, infra; and see Earl of Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 702; and Hood v. Phillips, 3 Beav. p. 517.

(c) Smith v. Phillips, 1 Keen, 694: Brown v. Stead, 5 Sim. p. 535, appears to have been determined on the terms of the deed.

(d) Stephens v. Bridges, 6 Mad. 66.

to be extinguished where it would subsist at law ; and sometimes preserve it, where at law it would be merged. The question where volunteers only are concerned is upon the intention, actual or presumed, of the person in whom the interests are united (a). In most instances it is, with reference to the party himself, of no sort of use to have a charge upon his own estate, and where that is the case, it will be held to sink, unless something shall have been done by him to keep it on foot (b). The entry of a devisee, having a mortgage, will be presumed to be as devisee, if no trace appears of any of the steps usually taken by a mortgagee to get into possession (c). A purchaser must cause the mortgage to be assigned to a trustee for himself, and declare the purpose, or he will not be able to take advantage of it as against other incumbrancers (d).

It will be remembered that if tenant for life, who is only bound to keep down the interest of the incumbrances, pays off an incumbrance, primâ facie, it will be kept alive and not merged for the benefit of the inheritance (e) ; where it is paid off by tenant in tail, the presumption is that it is done in favour of the inheritance, which he may at any time acquire ; but the reason ceases and with it the presumption where the money of an infant tenant in tail is applied in discharge of an incumbrance (f). Satisfaction of the debt due upon a mortgage will extinguish all the interest of the mortgagee in the mortgage, and an assignee of the mortgagee will not be in any better condition after such extinguishment of the debt than the mortgagee. This is very important as regards sureties ; the surety can only stand in the place of the creditor (g). If the debt is paid the mortgage is, from the very nature of it, satisfied by that act ; if the incumbrancer wishes to keep alive such securities for his benefit, the payment must assume the shape of a transfer ; it must be done artificially (h).

(a) See Hood v. Phillips, 3 Beav. p. 517 ; and see Earl of Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 698, cases cited in the argument, p. 698, and in the judgment, p. 702, et seq.

(b) Forbes v. Moffat, 18 Ves. 391-3 ; and see Stephens v. Bridges, 6 Mad. 66.

(c) Forbes v. Moffat, 18 Ves. 391.

(d) See Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 454, 455 ; Jarm. on Convey. vol. ix. pp. 209, 213, note (a), 3rd edit., where all the leading cases on the subject are collected, and some valuable practical directions are given, but the reference to Sugd. V. and P. is incorrect. "The difference between the rule which obtains where a mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption as a vendee, and where he acquires it by devise, does not appear to rest on very solid grounds, but must, it is conceived, be considered as settled by authority." Jarman, Mortgage, p. 455.

(e) Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 217 ; Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 218 ; Countess of Shrewsbury v. Earl of Shrewsbury, 3 Bro. 120 ; 1 Ves. J. 227 ; St. Paul v. Viscount Dudley and Ward, 15 Ves. 173 ; Astley v. Milles, 1 Sim. 298 ; Lord Selsey v. Lord Lake, 1 Beav. 146 ; Tyler v. Lake, 4 Sim. 358 ; Hood v. Phillips, 3 Beav. 517 ; and see Lord Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 688.

(f) V. supra, pp. 308, 345.

(g) See Copis v. Middleton, 1 T. & R. 224 ; Jones v. Davids, 4 Russ. 277 ; Hodgson v. Shaw, 3 My. & K. 183.

(h) See the judgment of Baron Parke, Wilkinson v. Simson, 2 Moore, Priv. Co. R. 275, 287.

If a mortgagee cancels a mortgage, and it is found so in his possession on his death, it is as much a release as cancelling a bond; but it does not convey or revest the estate in the mortgagor, for that must be done by some deed (a): the legal estate would descend upon the heir; but in such case, there being no debt at law or in equity, at least upon the mortgage, the Court would hold the heir to be a trustee for the mortgagor: but as to the fact of cancellation—that is, whether or not it was cancelled by the mortgagee—that is a proper case for an issue, if any doubt be raised (b).

If the mortgagee to whom a mortgage and bond are given makes a parol gift of the mortgage to the mortgagor, that will discharge the mortgage, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, and be an answer to a bill for a foreclosure, there being a difference both in law and equity between absolute estates in fee or for a term of years, and conditional estates for securing the payment of a sum of money. In the case of absolute estates, it cannot be admitted that parol evidence of the gift of deeds shall convey the land itself; but where a mortgage is made of an estate that is only considered as a security for money due, the land is the accident attending upon the other; and when the debt is discharged, the interest in the land follows of course. If, said the Lord Chancellor, an obligee delivers up a bond with an intention to discharge the debt, the debt will certainly be thereby discharged, and if the bond is discharged the mortgage will be discharged with it (c).

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Harrison v. Owen, West. Rep. 528.

(b) Ibid. p. 528, note.

(c) Lord Talbot, Richards v. Syms, Barn. 90, 93. Whether the mortgagee could file a bill to have the legal estate conveyed to him on the ground of such a gift, is another question, ibid. 91; but it seems the decision would have been the same, 92.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, No. I.—V. supra, p. 728, 729.

Frere v. Moore, 8 Price, 475.—Effect of Covenant by Trustee to stand possessed of Legal Estate, as regards Priorities.

In October, 1786, a moiety of the prebend and premises in question, held on lease, was assigned to Bird, to secure to Cooke 1000*l.* and interest; he afterwards took renewals of the leases: it was admitted that Cooke was the first incumbrancer.

The defendant Moore having become entitled to a moiety of the prebend and premises, in right of his wife, and being also entitled to the other moiety, charged with 1000*l.*, due to Cooke on his mortgage, dated in 1786; on the 12th October, 1806, (in the report, 1816,) Bird, who was trustee of a term of years in the property in trust for Moore and wife, and Moore and wife assigned the moiety of the prebend and premises, subject to Cooke's mortgage, to A. Frere, for securing 1460*l.* and interest, whereby Frere obtained the legal estate in a moiety. On the 14th May, 1813, (the legal estate having got back again to Bird on some renewal,) by deed, to which Moore and wife, Frere and Bird, were parties, Bird covenanted with Anthony Frere and Moore and wife, to stand possessed of the premises; first, for securing 1400*l.* before due, and 1500*l.* then advanced by A. Frere; and then, as Moore and wife should appoint: Moore covenanted to pay the 2900*l.* on the 14th November then next. On the 14th February, 1817, a deed was executed, under which Bird was to stand possessed of the premises, to secure 4877*l.* due to the plaintiff Frere (representative of A. Frere), including the original mortgage and moneys due to himself on bond and otherwise, not affecting the estate, with power to sell if the sum due were not paid by 14th August then next. On the 30th December, 1816, Moore and his wife (Bird, though a party, not having executed,) had appointed that Bird should stand possessed of the premises, subject as to a moiety to Cooke's mortgage for 1000*l.*, and subject as to the entirety to the sum of (amount left in blank), due to the representatives of Frere, in trust, for securing 1200*l.* to Hudson and Fallows. The plaintiff sought not only to have his security of the 14th May, 1813, but that of 14th February, 1817, paid, in preference to Hudson and Fallows. There was no proof that Frere, in 1817, had notice of the security to Hudson and Fallows. The plaintiff insisted that Bird was to be considered as holding the lease for the protection of all the estates, according to their priority (p. 479); and the legal estate being in him, it was the same as if it were in the plaintiff, the first incumbrancer; citing Lord Eldon's judgment, Ex parte Knott, 11 Ves. p. 618, which, however, seems rather to support the Lord Chief Baron's decision. But the Lord Chief Baron Richards held that the plaintiff and the defendants had each of them equal equity; the defendants were not bound, in December, 1816, to give notice to Frere of their having made the advance; and as neither had actually the legal estate, their securities must rank according to their dates. Then, as to the effect of the covenant by Bird to stand seised of the legal estate, in trust for Frere, as Frere had not got it in, notice of that covenant to the subsequent incumbrancers was not equivalent to its having been got in; they had only notice that it was held by Bird, in trust to secure 2900*l.*: but his Lordship added, that if Frere had been purchaser, it would have been conclusive; and his Lordship held that each party was entitled to the benefit of the legal estate according to their priorities: Frere v. Moore, 8 Price, pp. 482-491. It is evident, from the reasoning, that the case would have been decided in the same way, had the last sum been advanced by A. Frere, or T. Frere, expressly on the security of the land. It is to be observed that the defendants took their security without requiring Bird to execute, so that on inquiry from Bird, Frere would not have acquired any notice of the defendant's security: there seems to have been some negligence in this omission. It is not easy to collect the precise facts of this case, but the above statement is, I believe, in substance, correct, so far as regards the present purpose.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Ingram v. Pelham, Amb., before Lord Hardwicke.

“Scriiveners and bankers,” said Lord Hardwicke in Ingram v. Pelham, Amb. 153, “who lend large sums of money on securities, and then give derivative securities on declarations of trust, may as well be trusted to their personal credit, because it is in their power to defeat all their equitable creditors by conveying the legal estate to another.” In the case before Lord Hardwicke, a person seised of an estate subject to several equitable incumbrances, sold it to another and conveyed the legal estate to him subject to certain of the incumbrances which were specified, but without notice of the others: it was held that the purchaser was a trustee for these specified incumbrances, though subsequent in date to the others, so that the former got the priority: et v. Greswold v. Marsham, 2 Ch. Ca. 170, which Lord Hardwicke followed.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.

Extract from the Judgment of Lord Hardwicke, in Wortley v. Birkhead, v. sup. p. 738.

“As to the equity of this court, that a third incumbrancer having taken his security or mortgage without notice of the second incumbrance, and then, being puisny, taking in the first incumbrance, shall squeeze out and have satisfaction before the second, that equity is certainly established in general; and was so in Marsh v. Lee (1), by a very solemn determination by Lord Hale, who gave it the term of the creditor’s tabula in naufragio. That is the leading case: perhaps it might be going a good way at first; but it has been followed ever since, and I believe, was rightly settled; but rightly settled only on this foundation, by the particular constitution of the law of this country. It could not happen in any other country but this (2), because the jurisdiction of law and equity is administered here in different courts, and creates different kinds of rights in estates, and therefore as courts of equity break in upon the common law, where necessity and conscience require it, still they allow superior force and strength to a legal title to estates; and therefore where there is a legal title and equity of one side, this court never thought fit, that by reason of a prior equity against a man, who had a legal title, that man should be hurt; and this by reason of that force this court necessarily and rightly allows to the common law and to legal titles. But if this had happened in any other country, it could never have made a question; for if the law and equity are administered by the same jurisdiction, the rule, Qui prior est tempore potior est jure, must hold. This has gone so far, (and the original case was) that if a puisny incumbrancer took in the first incumbrance pendente lite, still he should have the same benefit; for in March v. Lee there was a lis pendens, yet was not the party affected with it; and so, I take it, in general it would be notwithstanding a lis

(1) See additional note, No. 4, infra.

(2) The effect of the Registration Act in Ireland precludes it in that country, 6 Anne, c. 2;

Latouche v. Dunsany, 1 Scho. & Lef. p. 157;

Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Scho. & Lef. 430; but see Tenison v. Sweeny, 1 Jones & Lat. 710.

pendens; because the principle, upon which all these cases depend, is this, that a man's having notice of a second incumbrance at the time of taking in the first does not hurt; it is the very occasion that shows the necessity of it. It is only notice at the time of taking in the third that will affect him; for then no act, he can do, will help him. Then a lis pendens is nothing but notice, and actual notice is certainly as good as that by a lis pendens; one notice is in consideration of this court as strong as another: nay, actual notice is stronger than that implied by a lis pendens; it will not therefore affect him. That was March v. Lee, and the other cases, which I agree to; but no case is cited wherein a puisny incumbrancer, a party in a cause, and a decree made in that cause for satisfaction of incumbrancers, according to their respective priorities, has taken in a prior to tack to his puisny incumbrance; that he shall be allowed to make use of that in any other shape than that original incumbrance would be. I am of the same opinion, as Lord Cowper was in the Earl of Bristol v. Hungerford in general, and do think it would be most mischievous and pernicious, if the court should allow that doctrine of tacking to be carried to that extent."—Wortley v. Birkhead, 2 Ves. 573, et seq.; and see the remainder of the judgment.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. IV.

March v. Lee, 2 Ventr.—Of Purchasing in Securities.—Supra, p. 737, 741.

If a man mortgages lands to A. and afterwards makes a subsequent mortgage to B. without notice at the time of making the mortgage, and B. purchases in a precedent mortgage which stands out at law, though nothing on it be due in equity, or a statute, whereon money is due which he extends, he shall hold the land till he is satisfied what is due on both securities, though he had notice of A.'s mortgage, before his second purchase of the prior security; because having at first innocently lent his money, he may do what he can to secure that money from being lost; and when he hath purchased on the prior incumbrance, he hath a title at law, and being equally on a valuable consideration with the mean incumbrancer, it is but just that equity should leave it in the same manner that it stood at law; for there is no room for equity to interpose, to take away the security the law had given, where the person that has the security comes into the title without any corruption at all; and it were partiality and not equity to interpose, where the security gives the fair lender a good and legal title; and it is all as one, whether such third lender or purchaser, takes in a mortgage, that is an interest vested, or a statute that is only a charge, for both are real liens, and sufficient to overthrow the title of the mesne incumbrancer, or whether money be due on the first incumbrance or not, since that does not alter the legal title. March v. Lee, 2 Vent. 337, 338; 1 Ch. Ca. 162, 163; 1 Eq. Ab. 322, pl. 1.

SECT. VIII.—Of Notice, Express and Constructive—and of Fraud and Negligence, as affecting Priorities.

Express Notice.

Constructive Notice.

Effect, as regards the Principal, of the Notice which a Solicitor or Agent may have.

Fuller v. Benett, 2 Hare.

Notice by Operation of the Registry Acts.

Distinction as to giving Notice in the case of taking an Equitable Incumbrance on Real Estate, and obtaining an Assignment of a Chose in Action as affecting Priorities.

Suppression of Facts, and Omission to do Acts, as affecting Priorities.

Mortgagee not taking or keeping the Title Deeds.

THE equity of a subsequent mortgagee buying in a prior security to tack such subsequent mortgage, is founded, as has been observed in the last section, not merely on his being a purchaser for valuable consideration, but on his being such without notice of the mesne incumbrances at the time of his purchase: if such mortgagee can be affected either with actual or with constructive notice, before payment of the purchase money, though the conveyance may have been executed, or before the execution of the conveyance though the purchase money may have been paid (a), his claim will not prevail (b): for this, and other reasons connected with this subject, it becomes necessary here to introduce the general doctrines of the Court in regard to Notice.

Actual notice hardly requires explanation (c); but it is proper to observe that to constitute a binding notice, where, at least, it depends on oral communication only, it must be given by a person interested in the property, and in the course of the treaty; vague rumours from persons not interested in the treaty will not affect the purchaser, nor will he be bound by notice in a previous transaction which he may have forgotten (d): the same principle applies to any notice which his solicitor or agent may have had (e).

(a) Jones v. Stanley, 2 Eq. Abr. 685, § 9; Story v. Lord Windsor, 2 Atk. 630; Hardingham v. Nicholls, 3 Atk. 304; Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 384; Tourville v. Naish, 3 P. W. 307; Sugd. V. and P. 1036, § 17.

(b) 2 Fonbl. 303, and 149, where Mr. Fonblanque refers to a case in the Exchequer (12 May, 1801) apparently opposed to Wigg v.

Wigg; et v. Saunders v. Dehew, supra.

(c) See Sugd. Vend. and Pur. p. 1040, as to some points connected with actual notice; indeed the whole subject is very fully treated of in that very valuable work.

(d) See Sugd. V. and P. 1040.

(e) See the rule and the cases, ibid. 1043.

Constructive notice (a) assumes that no proof is given that the party had actual notice of the fact itself; but that he is affected with notice of the fact by construction of law: the court does not proceed upon the principle, that the facts proved must be taken as showing that the party actually had notice; there may be conclusive evidence that he had not; yet if his want of knowledge arises from negligence he will be equally affected as if he had actually had notice (b). It is scarcely possible to declare à priori what shall be deemed constructive notice; from its very nature it depends upon a consideration of the facts and circumstances of each particular case; and that which would not affect a man standing in one situation may abundantly affect a man standing in another (c): but some general rules have been established which it will be my endeavour to present to the reader, referring him for more ample information to Sir Edward Sugden's work, in which he will find a full statement of the cases, and such comments as will enable him to put a just value on the authorities usually referred to on this subject, which to some extent are conflicting, and some of which are of doubtful authority (d).

The first branch of the subject which is now to be considered comprises those cases in which the party is fixed with having himself had notice of a particular fact, from the facts of which he is proved to have had knowledge, or the circumstances in which he was placed: another branch is where a person is considered as bound by the knowledge which his attorney or agent may have acquired; this will be separately considered in a future page.

As regards that branch of the subject which is now under consi-

(a) See Sugd. V. and P. p. 1041, et seq.

(b) The judgment in Jones v. Smith, 1 Phill. 253, supra, 656; infra, 758, may appear to bear against this proposition. Lord Lyndhurst was satisfied with the fact being established that the mortgagee acting bond fide had not actual notice of the contents of the deed of which she had notice, being induced, by the interested representations of the person with whom she was dealing, to believe that the settlement made on the marriage of the intended mortgagor (which would not necessarily embrace the property intended to be mortgaged,) did not include the mortgaged premises. This doctrine might exclude the consideration of negligence in the mortgagee in not inquiring into the contents of a deed of which he has notice. Lord Lyndhurst however, in that case, considered that the omitting to require an inspection of the deed, looking to the excuses made, was only omitting to do what a prudent, wary and cautious person would have done: and see Hodgson v. Dean, 2 Sim. & St. p. 225; and infra, Sect. x. I had hoped that the judgment of Lord Cottenham, in Penny v. Watts, heard 3rd April, 1849, on appeal from the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's decision, 10th August, 1848, supra, p. 658, would have settled this point. Sir E. Sugden, it may be observed, appears to approve of Jones v. Smith, V. and P. p. 1054, note.

(c) See Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 55.

(d) The Vice-Chancellor Wigram has lately examined into this subject with his usual ability, research and care; his decisions are all referred to in the last edition of Sir E. Sugden's Treatise; and some of them are referred to in the following pages. Mr. Lewis promises a Treatise on the same subject, which, judging from his work on Perpetuities, will be a valuable acquisition.

deration, it has been stated that constructive notice is in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not allow of its being controverted (a).

There may be such a degree of Negligence, in not obtaining the knowledge of facts which would convey actual notice, as will have all the consequences of notice actually obtained. A difficulty may sometimes arise in drawing the line between the degree of Negligence which shall be sufficient to charge a purchaser, and the mere want of Caution which in the absence of fraud will excuse him (b); but, as the Vice-Chancellor Wigram lately observed (c), the distinction is founded on principle, and the difficulty is one which (upon the very question of gross negligence) courts of justice are daily in the habit of grappling with; and the difficulty in principle is not distinguishable from that which occurs in every other case in which antagonist principles come into immediate conflict with each other.

Negligence, in the legal sense of the term, supposes a disregard of some fact known to a purchaser, which at least indicated the existence of that fact notice of which the court imputes to the purchaser (d): extreme caution may lead a person to inquire after a mere possibility, the existence of which he had no ground to surmise; but the omission to exercise such caution is not negligence in the legal sense of the term or indeed in any sense (e).

There may be a degree of negligence so gross that a court of equity will treat it as evidence of fraud—impute a fraudulent motive to it—and visit it with the consequences of fraud, although morally speaking the party charged may be perfectly innocent (f); but gross negligence is not in all cases to be treated as fraud, they are not to be treated as the same thing (g).

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in one of the cases before referred to, said in reference to the subject now under consideration, "I believe I may with sufficient accuracy for my present purpose, and without danger, assert, that the cases in which constructive notice has been established resolve themselves into two classes: First, cases in which

(a) Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anst. p. 432, Eyre, C. B.; Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 719; Jones v. Smith, 1 Phill. 251.

(b) Sugd. V. and P. 1054, § 56; Jones v. Smith, 1 Phill. 256-7.

(c) West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 259.

(d) Ibid.

(e) West v. Reid, ubi sup.; and see Jones v. Smith, before Lord Lyndhurst, sup. p. 754, note (b).

(f) Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 71; Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870; Uther v. Rich, 10 Ad. & El. 791; West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 258; Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 715; Moore v. Bennett, 2 Ch. Ca. 246; Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 149; Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vern. 384.

(g) V. supra, vol. i. p. 425; West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 258.

the party charged has had actual notice that the property in dispute was in fact charged incumbered or in some way affected, and the court has therefore bound him with constructive notice of facts and instruments, to a knowledge of which he would have been led by an inquiry into the charge incumbrance or other circumstance affecting the property of which he had actual notice; and Secondly, cases in which the court has been satisfied, from the evidence before it, that the party charged had designedly abstained from inquiry for the very purpose of avoiding notice" (a). The proposition of law, added his Honour, upon which the former class of cases proceeds, is not that the party charged had notice of a fact or instrument, which, in truth, related to the subject in dispute without his knowing that such was the case, but that he had actual notice that it did so relate. The proposition of law, upon which the second class of cases proceeds, is not that the party charged had incautiously neglected to make inquiries, but that he had designedly abstained from such inquiries, for the purpose of avoiding knowledge,—a purpose which, if proved, would clearly show that he had a suspicion of the truth, and a fraudulent determination

(a) Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 55. The Vice-Chancellor proceeds to examine the cases of Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vern. 384; Jackson v. Rowe, 2 Sim. & S. 472; Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 699; Taylor v. Baker, 5 Price, 306; Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. 291; Davies v. Thomas, 2 Yo. & Coll. 234; Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 290; Malpas v. Ackland, 3 Russ. p. 273; Bisco v. Earl of Banbury, 1 Ch. Ca. 291; Allen v. Anthony, 1 Meriv. 282; Daniels v. Davison, 17 Ves. p. 433, (a case that has always been considered to have gone a great way, and which ought not to be carried farther, Sugd. V. and P. 1053, § 51); Taylor v. Stibbert, 2 Ves. J. 437; Anon. 2 Freem. 137; Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. p. 114: in which the purchaser was held bound by constructive notice. The Vice-Chancellor then proceeds to examine the authorities and dicta establishing under what circumstances the obligation to inquire into the fact, with the knowledge of which it is sought to fix the purchaser, does not arise, viz.: Miles v. Langley, 1 Russ. & M. 39; Hanbury v. Litchfield, 2 My. & K. 633; Hine v. Dodd, 2 Atk. p. 275; dict. of Lord Hardwicke, Attorney-General v. Backhouse, 17 Ves. 293; the dict. of Sir E. Sugd. V. and P. vol. iii. p. 473, § 55, 10th edit., p. 1055, § 61, 11th edit.: that notice of tenancy is not constructive notice of the lessor's title, Oxwith v. Plummer, 2 Vern. p. 636; Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anst. 432; Evans v. Bicknell, 6 Ves. 173 (hereafter particularly adverted to); Cothay v. Sydenham, 2 Bro. 391 (and see 1 Phill. 256); Kenny v. Browne, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 512; Sir E. Sugd. V. and P. iii. p. 476, 10th edit., p. 1058, § 71, 11th edit. (many of which are cited hereafter); showing that those cases established the principle laid down by him, as stated in the text. Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Yo. & Coll. 303—an important case, where a purchaser of a copyhold public-house was held to have constructive notice of a deposit of the court rolls with the brewer—is separately examined, pp. 64-5. Sir E. Sugden, it is to be observed, considered that case as involving an extension of the rule, which we should be cautious how we act upon in practice; V. and P. p. 1054, § 56. The Vice-Chancellor decided, in the case itself, that where a party, before advancing his money on a mortgage, inquired of the mortgagor and his wife whether any settlement had been made upon their marriage, and was informed that a settlement had been made of the wife's fortune only, and that it did not include the husband's estate, which had been proposed as the security; the mortgagee was not affected with constructive notice of the contents of the settlement, or of the fact that the settlement comprised the husband's estate: that decision was confirmed by Lord Lyndhurst, 1 Phill. 244; and see West v. Reid, 2 Hare, p. 257, where the Vice-Chancellor Wigram adverts to the misapprehensions which had been entertained as to the expressions he had used in his judgment in Jones v. Smith.

not to learn it. If, in short, there is not actual notice that the property is in some way affected, and no fraudulent turning away from a knowledge of facts which the res gestæ would suggest to a prudent mind; if mere want of caution, as distinguished from fraudulent and wilful blindness, is all that can be imputed to the purchaser,—there the doctrine of constructive notice will not apply; there the purchaser will, in equity, be considered, as in fact he is, a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice: “This is clearly,” said the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, “Sir Edward Sugden’s opinion (a); and with that sanction, I have no hesitation in saying it is mine also.”

It is a well established principle that whatever is notice enough to excite attention, and put the party on his guard, and call for inquiry, is also notice of every thing to which it is afterwards found that such inquiry might have led, although all was unknown for want of the investigation (b); that is, where a person has sufficient information to lead him to a fact he shall be deemed cognizant of it (c).

A purchaser—and, as before observed, a mortgagee is a purchaser pro tanto—who has actual notice of one instrument affecting the estate, has constructive notice of all other instruments to which an examination of the first could have led him, and if he do not examine into them his conduct amounts to that degree of negligence which will charge him with all the consequences of notice (d). In all cases where a person cannot make out a title, but by a deed which leads to another fact, whether by description of the parties, recital or otherwise, he will be deemed cognizant of it; for it was crassa negligentia that he sought not after it, and for the same reason if a purchaser has notice of a deed, he is presumed to have notice of the whole contents of it (e). Where a party is told of a deed, which from its nature must affect the property, or is told at the time that it does affect the property, he is considered to have notice of the contents of that deed,

(a) Citing Vend. and Pur. vol. iii. pp. 471, 472, 10th edit.

(b) Lord Brougham, Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 719, 721, 722; the case itself was one of wilful blindness, as that expression is used in the cases, 1 Hare, 57; Smith v. Low, 1 Atk. 490; Mertins v. Jolliffe, Ambl. 313; Howorth v. Deem, 1 Eden, 351.

(c) Sugd. V. and P. 1052; and see Taylor v. Baker, 5 Price, 310; but see Jones v. Smith, supra, p. 754; and p. 658, and inf. p. 759, n.

(d) Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. p. 291; Davies v. Thomas, 2 Yo. & Coll. p. 234; Malpas v. Ackland, 3 Russ. p. 273; Bisco v. Ban- bury, 1 Ch. Ca. 287; Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. p. 144; Dunch v. Kent, 1 Vern. p. 319; Drapers’ Company v. Yardley, 2 Vern. 662; Mertins v. Jolliffe, Ambl. 313; Howorth v. Deem, 1 Eden, p. 351; Taylor v. Stibbert, 2 Ves. J. 437; Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114; Hall v. Smith, 14 Ves. 426.

(e) Sugd. V. and P. 1056, § 63, where the principal cases are cited; West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 261; Jackson v. Rowe, 2 Sim. & S. pp. 472-5, affirmed, 4 Russ. p. 514; but see Jones v. Smith, supra et inf.; Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare, 173; Davies v. Thomas, 2 Yo. & Coll. 234; and see Sugd. V. and P. 879, §§ 15, 16.

and of all other deeds to which it refers (a): but where a party has notice of a deed which does not necessarily—which may or may not affect the property, and the party acts fairly in the transaction, and believes the representation to be true, there is no decision that goes the length of saying that if he is misled he is fixed with notice of the contents of the instruments (b). It has been held that it is not sufficient that a prudent, cautious person would have inquired further: the want of that prudence, caution and wariness is not sufficient according to the decisions (c), and the principles which have hitherto been acted upon to affect the party with notice (d). Notice of a lease is notice of the covenants contained in the lease; and a person who takes an under-lease is bound to inform himself of the covenants contained in the original lease (e). Where the notice is not of a deed, but only of an intention to execute a deed, that is not sufficient to fix the party with notice of the contents of the deed as executed: “There is no case or reasoning,” said Lord Thurlow, “which goes so far as to say that a purchaser shall be affected by notice of a deed in contemplation” (f).

There is a difference between notice of a will, which imports the disposition of the whole of a man's property, and of a settlement; for there is no legal or equitable presumption that a man makes a settlement of the whole of his landed estate at his marriage: if the testator has been long dead, and the heir had been long in possession, and the other circumstances of the case are such as to leave the purchaser in credit for perfect good faith, a court of equity would not interfere against the legal title, only because the purchaser had notice even of a will, respecting which he was misled (g).

The circumstances attending a transaction may be so unusual as that they ought to have raised a suspicion leading to inquiry; and if, in such case, no inquiry is made, the party will be charged, on the ground of gross negligence, with notice of the facts to which inquiry would have led (h).

So, if a purchaser has actual notice of a fact, by which the property

(a) Lord Lyndhurst, Jones v. Smith, 1 Phill. 253, 254; v. supra, p. 754.

(b) Lord Lyndhurst, Jones v. Smith, 1 Phill. 254; West v. Reid, 2 Hare, p. 261.

(c) V. int. alia, referring to Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anst. 440; supra and infra.

(d) Jones v. Smith, on appeal, 1 Phill. 257.

(e) Hall v. Smith, 14 Ves. 426; Walter

v. Maunde, 1 Jac. & W. 181; Cosser v. Collinge, 3 My. & K. 283; Pope v. Garland, 4 Yo. & Coll. 394; and see 1 Hare, 62, Jones v. Smith.

(f) Cothay v. Sydenham, 2 Bro. 391, 393.

(g) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 60.

(h) Lord Brougham, Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 719; Sugd. V. and P. 1052.

may be affected, as that another person than the person with whom he is treating is in possession, which, it has been said, for this purpose, is primâ facie evidence of a seisin in fee, he is bound to ascertain the truth (a). If a tenant is in possession under a lease, with an agreement in his pocket to become the purchaser, these circumstances, said Lord Eldon, altogether give him an equity, repelling the claim of a subsequent purchaser, who made no inquiry as to the nature of his possession (b); but whether possession of a tenant under a lease is notice of an agreement which he has entered into to purchase a reversionary interest, to which his possession cannot be referred, is a matter of doubt (c). If at the time of the purchase the tenant in possession is not the original lessee, but merely holds under a derivative lease, and has no knowledge of the covenants contained in the original lease, it has never been considered that it was want of due diligence in the purchaser, which is to fix him with constructive notice, if he do not pursue his inquiries through every derivative lease, which could alone convey to him information of the covenants (d). A purchaser bonâ fide without notice will not be affected by the mere circumstance of the vendor having been out of possession for many years (e).

Notice of a tenancy will not, it seems, affect a purchaser with constructive notice of the lessor's title (f).

Lord Hardwicke took a distinction between notice and suspicion of notice (g), which distinction is borne out by subsequent cases (h).

A purchaser is not bound to take notice of an equity arising out of

(a) Allen v. Anthony, 1 Meriv. 282; Daniels v. Davison, 17 Ves. 433, which, however, has been considered as an extreme case, 2 Russ. & M. 629; 1 Hare, p. 62; et v. supra, p. 756, note (a); Taylor v. Stibbert, 2 Ves. J. 437: as to notice that the legal estate is in a third person, see Anon. 2 Freem. 137, pl. 171; and that the title-deeds are in the possession of another, see Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114, inf.; 1 Hare, 60, 61. But a purchaser of an estate described as late the residence of another person, does not put the purchaser to inquire as to the circumstances of his possession, Miles v. Langley, 1 Russ. & M. p. 39; affirmed, 2 Russ. & M. 626, (1 Hare, p. 62). This is a strong case; for the plaintiff, at the time of Langley's purchase, was in possession of part of the premises comprised in the College lease, and if the purchaser had looked at the College lease, under which he purchased, he would have seen, by the parcels, that that part was comprised in the College lease: Sir J. Leach was induced to hold that Langley was ignorant of the fact that the plaintiff occupied any part of the land comprised in the College lease, by reason that the exchanged land made up the quantity described in the College lease. As to notice from possession, see Allen v. Anthony, 1 Meriv. p. 282; Sugd. V. and P. 1052, § 50; et v. supra, 758, additional note, Penny v. Watts; and see the next Section.

(b) Lord Eldon, Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 254, v. supra, n. (a); Taylor v. Stibbert, 2 Ves. J. p. 437, Lord Rosslyn.

(c) Penny v. Watts, supra, p. 658, this case is not reported on the hearing before the Vice-Chancellor.

(d) Sir J. Leach, Hanbury v. Litchfield, 2 My. & K. 632; Sugd. V. and P. 1053, § 52: Sir J. Wigram, 1 Hare, 62, draws some larger conclusions from Hanbury v. Litchfield.

(e) Oxwith v. Plummer, Bacon's Abr. tit. Mortgage, E. § 3, vol. v. p. 43; Sugd. V. and P. 1055, § 61 (1 Hare, 63).

(f) Attorney-General v. Backhouse, 17 Ves. 293 (1 Hare, 63); Sugd. V. and P. p. 1055, § 59, § 61.

(g) Hine v. Dodd, 2 Atk. 275.

(h) See 1 Hare, 63-4.

the mere construction of words that are uncertain (a); but if circumstances which would defeat a lease, as a breach of trust, appear clearly upon the lease itself, a purchaser of such a lease cannot hold it (b).

The omission of a puisne incumbrancer to make inquiry where such inquiry may be deemed necessary, cannot be material where inquiry into the circumstances of the case could not have led to a knowledge of the prior incumbrance (c).

A person may be fixed with notice by reason of his Attorney or Agent having notice.

The following rules on this subject are well settled as general propositions (d):—That notice to the solicitor is notice to the client;—that where the purchaser employs the same solicitor as the vendor, he is affected with notice of whatever that solicitor had notice in his capacity of solicitor for either vendor or purchaser, in the transaction in which he is so employed;—and that the kind of notice to the solicitor which alone will bind the client, must be, generally speaking, notice in that transaction in which the client employs him (e).

The policy and safety of the public forbids a person to deny knowledge, while he is so dealing as to keep himself ignorant, or so as that he may keep himself ignorant, and all the while let his agent know, and himself perhaps profit by that knowledge (f). In such a case, as it has been observed, it would be most iniquitous and most dangerous, and give shelter and encouragement to all kinds of fraud, were the law not to consider the knowledge of one as the knowledge of both, whether it be so in fact or not (g); but the rule is not confined to cases where there is a suspicion or a possibility of fraud—the rule is general.

It is not a question of memory merely irrespective of the circumstances. Cases may easily be suggested, in which it would be impossible that a solicitor should have forgotten (h) a fact recently under (a) Cordwell v. Mackrill, 2 Eden, 347.

(b) Attorney-General v. Pargeter, 6 Beav. p. 156.

(c) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 86; see Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 561, 562; and Lord Lyndhurst's opinion, Foster v. Cockerell, 9 Bli. 375.

(d) Lord Brougham, Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 720; Mountford v. Scott, 3 Mad. 34; Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114; Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Meriv. p. 222; in that case the doctrine was applied to a purchase made under the direction of the court. "The Court of Chancery employs its officer to investigate the titles of estates, but does not warrant them;" Sir Wm. Grant, ibid. 223; Sheldon v. Cox, 2 Ed. 224; and on the subject of the effect of notice to an agent, &c., see Sugd. V. and P. p. 1041, et seq.; and see Kendall v. Halls, xi. Jur. 864.

(e) See Fuller v. Benett, 2 Hare, 402.

(f) Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 719.

(g) Lord Brougham, Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. 719.

(h) As to this, see Tylee v. Webb, 6 Beav. 556; Fuller v. Benett, 2 Hare, p. 403; and Winter v. Lord Anson, 3 Russ. 488; Montford v. Scott, T. & R. p. 274; Hargreaves v.

view, with notice of which however it would be impossible to affect his client, unless the circumstance of his being solicitor for two parties be introduced into the case; where the solicitor is concerned for both parties, the rule is not, as an universal proposition, to be confined in all cases to the knowledge which the solicitor acquired after the retainer; where he is concerned for one party only it seems that it is; but the point is not definitively settled: where the transaction is of recent date, the rule that notice to the client is notice to the solicitor is, it seems, not to be restricted to the same transaction (a).

Where the mortgagor has at different times employed the same solicitor in effecting different incumbrances upon the same estate, and the incumbrancers have employed the mortgagor's solicitor in the several transactions in which they have been respectively concerned, each of the puisne incumbrancers is affected with notice of the prior incumbrances (b); and it cannot in such case be contended that the solicitor might have forgotten the prior transaction, else the solicitor himself might take a subsequent mortgage and insist he had not notice, which he is not allowed to do (c).

In February, 1831, the defendant, Benett, entered into a treaty with Sir J. Dillon, for the purchase, from him, of a moiety of an estate, called "The Hatch," subject to a mortgage to one Mottan: Sir J. Dillon signed an agreement for the sale. November, 1831, Sir J. Dillon agreed, in writing, to give a mortgage of the estate to Mr. Chitty; in 1832, Chitty assigned this security to Messrs. Fuller, the plaintiffs; the plaintiffs served notice of the assignment on Messrs. Farrer and Co., the solicitors of Benett. The performance of the contract was delayed by a suit, instituted against Sir J. Dillon and Benett (Parker v. Dillon); on its dismissal, Sir J. Dillon sought to have the contract with Benett performed: he died in February, 1837. After the death of Sir J. Dillon, an agreement was entered into between his devisee (Henrietta Dillon) and Benett, under which the latter agreed to purchase the estate, at a reduced sum; in October, 1837, it was conveyed to Benett: the purchase-money was applied in part in payment of the mortgage to Mottan, but no notice was taken of the claim of the plaintiffs, under the agreement of November, 1831. In June, 1839, Benett mortgaged the estate to Mr. Majoribanks. In 1840 the Rothwell, 1 Keen, 154; Brotherton v. Hatt, 2 Vern. 574, there cited.

(a) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Fuller v. Benett, 2 Hare, 404; and see Sugd. V. and P. 1043, § 17, & 1044; and the cases in the preceding note; et v. supra, p. 760.

(b) Brotherton v. Hatt, 2 Vern. p. 574; Winter v. Lord Anson, 3 Russ. 488; Mountford v. Scott, T. & R. p. 274; Hargreaves v. Rothwell, 1 Keen, 154 (2 Hare, 405).

(c) Perkins v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 219.

plaintiffs filed a bill against Benett and Henrietta Dillon, the assignees of Chitty, and Mr. Majoribanks, to enforce that security. Farrer and Co. were the solicitors of Benett in the treaty with Sir J. Dillon, in February, 1831, and in the cause of Parker v. Dillon, in which Benett insisted on the contract. They continued to act for him till Sir J. Dillon's death, and afterwards in the treaty with Henrietta Dillon, and down to June, 1839; and Messrs. Majoribanks also employed Messrs. Farrer in the transaction of the mortgage to them. The defendants insisted that the purchase from Henrietta Dillon was a new transaction, and that notice to the solicitor in one transaction was not notice in another; but as Messrs. Farrer had notice in March, 1832, as the solicitors of Benett, and the notices in fact came out of their possession, Mr. Benett, under the circumstances, was held bound by the notice, and Mr. Majoribanks, his mortgagee, was also bound, not because abstractedly he was to be bound by facts which came to the knowledge of his solicitor in other transactions, but because the solicitor he employed in the business of the mortgage had notice of the plaintiff's interest, as the solicitor of the mortgagor, in the very transaction in which the mortgagee employed him (a).

If a person has been himself concerned in or the party guilty of a fraud, and then becomes the attorney of a purchaser, that is not such notice as ought to affect the purchaser (b).

It is the present disposition of the Court of Chancery not to extend the doctrine of constructive notice (c).

Where a purchaser of an equitable right inquires of the trustee of the legal estate whether he knows of any incumbrance, and he answers in the negative, if it turn out that he had in fact notice of any charge he will be answerable to the purchaser, although he plead forgetfulness as an excuse (d).

There is an important difference between actual notice, and the operation of the Register Acts: actual notice may bind the conscience of the party, the operation of the acts may bind his title but not his conscience (e). The mere registration of a conveyance is not considered as constructive notice to subsequent purchasers: the Irish Statute which is binding, has this effect by the plain words of the act, without having recourse to the forced construction of the registry being notice (f).

(a) Fuller v. Benett, 2 Hare, 394, 407.

(b) Kennedy v. Green, on appeal, 3 My. & K. 720 (1 Phill. 256); Sugd. V. and P. 1044, § 20.

(c) See Jones v. Smith, on appeal, 1 Phill.

p. 254.

(d) Sugd. V. and P. 1023, § 33.

(e) Lord Redesdale, Underwood v. Lord Courtown, 2 Scho. & L. 66.

(f) Underwood v. Lord Courtown, 2 Scho.

Nor will a deed registered with notice, have priority over an unregistered deed (a). It has been held that the Register Acts in England avoid only prior charges not registered, but do not give subsequent conveyances any further force against prior ones registered than they had before: and where a person had advanced 800*l.* on mortgage of premises in Yorkshire, then another person lent a sum of money on a judgment which was registered, and then the original mortgagee, without actual notice of the judgment, advanced a further sum on the security of the estate, it was held that he might tack as against the judgment creditor; that to affect the first mortgagee the judgment creditor ought to have given express notice to the first mortgagee when he advanced his money, which he might have done as the first mortgage was on the register (b). If a man search the register, he will be deemed to have notice, but a limited search in the registry will exclude the presumption of a general search (c).

It has been much doubted whether courts ought ever to have suffered the question of notice to be agitated as against a party who has duly registered his conveyance (d); but they have said, "We cannot permit fraud to prevail; and it shall only be in cases where the notice is so clearly proved as to make it fraudulent in the purchaser to take and register a conveyance in prejudice to the known title of another, that we will suffer the registered deed to be affected" (e): it is only by actual notice clearly proved that a registered conveyance can be postponed, even a lis pendens was not considered notice for that purpose (f).

The doctrine of constructive notice by the Pendency of a Suit was formerly the subject of much discussion, it has however been put upon a satisfactory footing by the statute 2 Vict. c. 11, by which it is enacted, that no purchaser shall be bound by the doctrine of lis pendens without express notice of the pendency of the suit, unless the fact of the pendency of the suit shall be registered according to the provisions of that act (g).

Though an immediate or first purchaser with notice of an equitable & L. 64; where the terms of the Irish statute are set forth; and see 1 Scho. & L. 157, where Lord Redesdale gives some strong reasons against registration being considered as constructive notice.

(a) Hodgson v. Dean, 2 Sim & St. 224.

(b) Wrightson v. Hudson, 2 Eq. Ab. 609, § 7; same point decided, Caton v. Cooley, 7 June, 1785, 1 Cox, 182, as to lands in Middlesex; Wiseman v. Westland, 1 Y. & J. 117;

Wyatt v. Barwell, 19 Ves. 439; Jolland v. Stainbridge, 3 Ves. 485-6; et v. infra, 785.

(c) Sugd. V. and P. 1048, § 36.

(d) See particularly, Hine v. Dodd, 2 Atk. 275.

(e) Sir Wm. Grant, Wyatt v. Barwell, 19 Ves. p. 439; Jolland v. Stainbridge, 3 Ves. 486.

(f) Ibid.

(g) See Sugd. V. and P. 673.

claim in another, shall certainly not be allowed to protect himself from such equitable claim, yet if a person having notice of an equitable claim in another, purchase from one who had not notice of such claim, he may protect himself by want of notice in his vendor; for if not, the bonâ fide purchaser would be fettered in the sale of the property, and would not have all the benefit which the rule for the protection of bonâ fide purchasers without notice professes to give to him (a); and a bonâ fide purchaser without notice of any incumbrance, from one who had notice, is entitled to be protected (b).

It has been made a question whether an incumbrancer has acquired a better equity, or, which is the same thing, priority, by giving notice of his security to the person having the legal estate or interest in the thing mortgaged or pledged. It follows from the interest of the cestui que trust in land being considered as an Estate (c), that the doctrines as to notice which are applicable in determining the priority of charges on choses in action, does not prevail as to equitable estates in land; so that a mortgagee of an equitable interest in real estate has no occasion to give notice to the trustee, either to complete his title as against his mortgagor, or to secure to himself his priority against subsequent incumbrancers (d); but it is advisable that he should give notice to the first mortgagee (if he have, as is almost always the case, the legal estate) or judgment creditor, as it will prevent such mortgagee or judgment creditor from tacking in respect of any subsequent advance (e).

In order to obtain a good title to a reversionary interest in a sum of stock, either by way of mortgage or sale, it does not appear to be an essential part of the title of the purchaser or mortgagee to show that notice has been given to the trustees of the fund; such notice is important, in order to prevent a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer from obtaining priority; but if no other purchaser or incumbrancer has given notice, then, it does not appear to be material that

(a) Harrison v. Forth, Prec. Ch. 51; 1 Eq. Abr. 331, pl. 5; Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571; West, 510; Sweet v. Southcote, 2 Bro. 66; 2 Fonbl. 148; Sugd. V. and P. 1037.

(b) Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vern. 384; Ambl. 313.

(c) V. infra, Chap. ix. et vol. i. p. 499.

(d) Wilmot v. Pike, 5 Hare, 14, 19, 20. The doctrine as to a priority as affecting charges on choses in action was borrowed entirely from the decisions in bankruptcy, ibid; see the authorities collected, and reviewed, Jarman, Convey. by Sweet, v. p. 471, et seq., et vide supra, p. 41. The subject of notice as regards the transfer of Choses in Action will be considered in a subsequent chapter.

(e) Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 442-3, et seq. where the question whether in case the first mortgage covers subsequent advances such notice would prevent the first mortgagee from insisting upon priority in respect of such subsequent advances is considered. Interest cannot be turned into principal after notice, unless the mortgage extends to further advances, for it is in fact a further loan, Digby v. Craggs, 2 Eden, 200; v. ibid. p. 201: v. sup. Sect. vii.

the purchaser or mortgagee has given no such notice of his deed. The object of notice is to exclude a subsequent purchaser and incumbrancer on the fund; and if it can be shown that no subsequent party has come in, then the fact that notice has not been given would not, as it seems, be an essential blot on the title (a).

A person may, as has been mentioned in the preceding Section, lose the advantage of a priority, or be prevented from acquiring a priority by other acts, of commission or of omission, which have a fraudulent character in the view of the Court of Chancery, besides those above adverted to.

If a man by suppression of the truth which he was bound to communicate (b), or by the wilful suggestion of a falsehood, be the cause of prejudice to another, who had a right to a full and correct representation of the fact, it is certainly agreeable to the dictates of good conscience that his claim should be postponed to that of the person whose confidence was induced by his representation, and upon that principle many cases have been decided (c); nor will infancy, if the person be old or cunning enough to contrive a fraud, or coverture, be an excuse in such case (d).

(a) Hobson v. Bell, 2 Beav. 23.

(b) 1 Fonbl. 164; Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. 420. In Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Ch. Ca. 108, Lord Chancellor Nottingham held that the defendant's ignorance of his title materially differed the case: but in Teasdale v. Teasdale, Sel. Ca. Ch. 59, and in some of the cases cited in the next note, that circumstance was considered to be immaterial, when with ordinary diligence he might have known it; and see Pearson v. Morgan, 2 Bro. 389, Buller, J.

(c) Hobbs v. Norton, 1 Vern. 136. There Sir Geo. Norton had encouraged a purchase, he having at the time a title which enabled him to render it null; but there was no proof of his actual knowledge of his title; Hunsden v. Cheyney, 2 Vern. 150, is a similar case; and see Clare v. Earl of Bedford, there cited, p. 150, where the only act was witnessing a deed; Mocatta v. Murgatroyd, 1 P. W. 393, is to the same effect, but Lord Thurlow did not approve of that case so far as it affected a mere witness with concealment, for a witness in practice is not privy to the contents of a deed; Raw v. Pote, 2 Vern. 239, there the party knew his title; Draper v. Borlace, 2 Vern. 369, a similar case; and see Berrisford v. Milward, 2 Atk. 49; Watts v. Creswell, 2 Eq. Abr. 515; S. C. 9 Vin. Abr. 415, pl. 24; Savage v. Foster, 9 Mod. 36; Ibbotson v. Rhodes, 2 Vern. 554, there a mortgagee who had not disclosed his incumbrance was postponed; Arnot v. Biscoe, 1 Ves. 95, there an agent for both parties not making the disclosure was held liable to his principal; Berrisford v. Milward, 2 Atk. 49; S. C. Barnardist. p. 101; 2 Fonbl. 164: the other cases there cited, East India Company v. Vincent, 2 Atk. 83; Jackson v. Cator, 5 Ves. 688; Stiles v. Cowper, 3 Atk. p. 693; Anon. Bunb. 53; Huning v. Ferrers, Gilb. Eq. R. 85, relate to the implied assent which a person gives by standing by and seeing acts done by his tenant, or the like, without objecting. A person who knowingly makes a false representation will be liable for the consequences, though he gain nothing by it, Seddon v. Connell, 10 Sim. 86. Where the remedy for the misrepresentation is to be compensated by damages, the party injured must proceed at law, not here, Sainsbury v. Jones, 2 Beav. 465; S. C. on appeal, 5 My. & Cr. p. 1. In Govett v. Richmond, 7 Sim. 2, the Vice-Chancellor of England laid down that where a person having a claim on property which is the subject of a reference (to which he is no party) knows that the arbitration is going on, but does not bring forward his claim, he is bound by the award. See, on this subject, Sugd. Vend. and Pur. 1026, et v. sup. p. 762.

(d) Watts v. Creswell, 2 Eq. Abr. 515; Clare v. Duke of Bedford, cited ubi supra, and in Savage v. Foster, 9 Mod. 36, and in

But where the party to whom the fraud is imputed was not conuzant of the treaty in which the fraud is alleged to have been practised, nor in any manner or for any fraudulent purpose confederating with the party practising the fraud, the above principle does not apply; so that simply stating what is false in answer to a question as to a person's title, if the person answering is not informed that the question is put with a view to some transaction relating to the property, will not prevent the person who so answers falsely from asserting a title at variance with his declaration (a).

As regards what shall be construed a Concealment; it is to be observed that in the case of Mocatta v. Murgatroyd (b), Lord Chancellor Cowper held, that where a first mortgagee is a witness to the second mortgage, though there be no actual proof of his knowing the contents thereof, yet, since the presumption is that he might have known them, it shall postpone him: but none of the cases seem to come up to this point (c); and in Beckett v. Cordley (d), Lord Chancellor Thurlow, referring to this case, observes, that "he did not leave it as a case, which he should determine in the same manner, for a witness in practice is not privy to the contents of the deed" (e).

It has also been laid down as "an established rule in equity, that a second mortgagee, who has the title deeds, without notice of any prior incumbrance, shall be preferred; because, if a mortgagee lend money, without taking the title-deeds, he enables the mortgagor to commit a fraud" (f). "The fraud imputed to the first mortgagee by this supposed rule of equity is, the enabling of the mortgagor to practise a fraud upon a third person, by leaving him in possession of what furnishes the best evidence of his title: and there are cases to which this rule might wisely and equitably be applied; but to lay it down as applicable to every case, in which the mortgagor appears in

Beckett v. Cordley, 1 Bro. 357; Evroy v. Nicholas, 2 Eq. Abr. 489; Cory v. Gertcken, 2 Mad. 46; Overton v. Banister, 3 Hare, 506; Sugd. V. and P. 1022. The subject, how far an infant may be affected on the ground of a fraud practised by him, was carefully investigated by the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in the case of Stikeman v. Dawson, xi. Jurist, 214; 1 De G. & Sm. 90, to which I beg to refer the reader; and see Howard v. Prince, 10 Beav. 296.

(a) Ibbotson v. Rhodes, 2 Vern. 554; Mere-wether v. Shaw, 2 Cox, 124; see Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51, where the effect of this distinction is fully investigated, 1 Fonbl. 165, note. In Evans v. Bicknell, 6 Ves. 184, Lord Eldon distinguishes between the nature of proceedings at law and in this court in such cases.

(b) 1 P. W. 393.

(c) See Mr. Cox's note to this case, ibid. Mr. Cox's conclusion is that fraud or actual notice of the second mortgage must be proved in order to postpone a mortgagee.

(d) 1 Bro. 353.

(e) And see Sugd. V. and P. 1060, § 77; see also Dig. lib. 13, t. 7, 39; Domat's Civil Law, b. iii. t. 1, s. 15, p. 365, where the point is fully considered; et v. supra, p. 765, note.

(f) Per Buller, J., Goodtitle v. Morgan, 1 Term Rep. 762; v. inf. Sect. x.

possession of the deeds at the time of the second mortgage, were not only to break in upon the authority of many decisions, but also, under some circumstances, to endanger the equity which it professes to promote. It would postpone the first mortgagee of an estate held in joint-tenancy, or in common, the joint-tenants being equally entitled to possession of the deeds (a): the whole of the premises contained in the deeds must be in mortgage, though the intent of the parties might extend to only a particular part of them; or the mortgagee of the part must retain the possession of the deeds which respect the whole. These considerations have induced courts of equity to look to the circumstances under which the mortgagor obtained, or was allowed to retain, the title-deeds; and therefore, in the case of Peter v. Russel (b), it appearing that the mortgagor obtained possession of the title-deeds from the first mortgagee upon a reasonable pretence, Lord Cowper dismissed the bill brought by the second mortgagee to postpone the first. So in Penner v. Jemmett, MS. 28th June, 1785, when it appeared that the first mortgagee had required and was assured by the mortgagor that he had delivered to him all the title-deeds, Lord Chancellor Thurlow held, that there must be a voluntary leaving of the deeds, to entitle the second mortgagee to gain the priority. So in Tourle v. Rand (c), which was the mortgage of a reversion, Lord Thurlow, C., decreed for the first mortgagee. And in Plumb v. Fluit (d) the Court of Exchequer, in a very solemn and most able judgment, held, upon the general question, that the mere leaving of the title-deeds in the possession of the mortgagor was not of itself a sufficient ground to postpone the first mortgagee" (e). "The rule laid down by Lord Thurlow, C., may, therefore, "said Mr. Fonblanque," be now considered as the rule of equity; viz. that nothing but a voluntary, distinct, and unjustifiable concurrence on the part of the first mortgagee to the mortgagor's retaining the title-deeds, shall be a reason for postponing his priority" (f).

But though the Court of Chancery may not, on the mere ground of the title-deeds being left with the mortgagor, postpone the first mortgagee, yet, if the deeds have been delivered to the second mortgagee without

(a) On this subject, see Section x. infra.

(b) 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 321, pl. 7; 2 Vern. 726; Gilb. Rep. 122.

(c) 2 Bro. Ch. R. 650.

(d) 2 Anstr. 432, 3rd Feb. 1791; 1 Fonbl. 165, 167. See, as to this case, Sect. x. infra.

(e) See also Tourle v. Rand, 2 Bro. 652; Evans v. Bicknell, 6 Ves. 174; Barnett v. Weston, 12 Ves. 133; and see Martinez v.

Cooper, 2 Russ. 198, and Stevens v. Stevens, ix. Jur. 984; 2 Coll. 24, 28, 29.

(f) The text is taken almost verbatim from Mr. Fonblanque's note, 1 Treat. of Eq. 165-7; Lord Eldon highly commended that note, 6 Ves. 191; and see Farrow v. Rees, 4 Beav. 19; Allen v. Knight, x. Jurist, 943; 5 Hare, 279, L. C. 9 June, 1847: but see further on this subject, infra, Sect. x.

notice, the court will not take them from him, unless the first mortgagee pay him his money (a). The relief founded on the omission to disclose facts is extended only to jointures, mortgages, and such as come in upon a consideration, and not to a voluntary devisee (b).

(a) Head v. Egerton, 3 P. Wms. 279-80; Wallwyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 34. This subject will again be considered in Section x.; see Worth- ington v. Morgan, there stated; v. inf. p. 789.

(b) Raw and Uxor v. Pote, 2 Vern. 239; Prec. Ch. 35, affirmed in Dom. Proc.

SECTION. IX—Of the Relief in Equity in case of Mortgages of Stock and other Personal Chattels—Pledges of Personal Chattels.

Mortgages of Stock in the Public Funds, East India Stock, &c.

Pledges of Personal Chattels.

Nicholson v. Hooper, 4 My. & Cr.

Tacking as applied to Pledges.

Pledges by Factors.

4 Geo. IV. c. 83; 6 Geo. IV. c. 94.

Pledges, &c., not avoidable by the Crown.

Mortgages of Ships.

of Freight.

of Cargo.

Mortgagee of Property to be afterwards acquired.

WHERE a sum of stock in the funds is mortgaged (a), and so in the case of a mortgage of Exchequer annuities, East India stock, and of other personal chattels (b), if accompanied by a transfer, the mortgagee may sell; and it seems the same kind of relief would be given by the court in the case of a simple assignment of a policy of assurance by way of security (c). The mortgagee must account for what he receives upon the sale, beyond the amount of his debt; unless he has been allowed to remain in possession, and to treat the stock as his own for so long a period as to constitute a bar to redemption (d): where the stock has not been transferred, the mortgagee may bring a bill here for an account of what is due, and to have the stock transferred to him (e).

It has been laid down that if the mortgage be of a reversionary interest in stock, where of course there cannot be an immediate transfer, the mortgagee, by his bill, must pray that the money may be paid, or (a) V. supra, p. 637; Dyson v. Morris, 1 Hare, 422; 2 Fonbl. 261, note; and on this subject, see Coote on Mortgages, 362, 607; Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, ii. 1066. The general subject of the Assignment of Choses in Action, by sale, mortgage, and gift, will be treated of in Chapters ix. and x.

(b) Kemp v. Westbrook, Belt's Supplement to Vesey, Sen., p. 149; 1 Ves. p. 278; Tucker v. Wilson, on appeal, 1 P. W. 261; 5 Bro. P. C. 193.

(c) Dyson v. Morris, ubi sup., sed. v. inf. 770.

(d) Harrison v. Hart, Com. 393; Jarman,

Mortgage, by Sweet, 300: In Lockwood v. Ewer, 2 Atk. 303, it was the representative of the mortgagor who sought to redeem the stock, and he was held to be barred by length of time; the depositor himself might have redeemed the stock remaining in specie (Kemp v. Westbrook, supra, p. 637), at least if a mortgage of stock stands on the same footing as a pledge of other personal chattels, and unless the fixing the 2nd July following as the time when the mortgagee was to retransfer if paid, would make a difference.

(e) Kemp v. Westbrook, ubi supra.

that a sale shall be made, and then the court will make the usual decree, as in other mortgages, for payment of the mortgage money; and if the money is not paid as directed, a sale takes place (a). But it has been held that there may be a foreclosure of a mortgage of stock (b), whether the interest be immediate or reversionary (c).

On a sale of stock standing in the names of trustees, by the mortgagee, if no other person has given notice of an assignment of the stock, it is not an essential blot on the title that the mortgagee had not given notice of his mortgage to the trustees; such notice is only necessary to exclude a subsequent purchaser (d).

Where a policy of insurance on the life of a debtor is assigned by way of collateral security (e), the assignee will be entitled to bring an action for the recovery of the insurance money, in the name of the assured (f); so that, generally speaking, there is no necessity for resorting to the Court of Chancery in such case for a sale (g).

In the case of a mortgagee whose security is composed of land and of stock or personal chattels, or a policy simply assigned as a security, the proper relief is, as it seems, first to direct that the collateral securities be realized, and then to foreclose the real estate if the deficiency be not paid (h).

Where there is an assignment of a policy to a trustee, in trust to receive the moneys on the death of the assured, and out of them to pay the debt, and concurrently a common mortgage is executed to the debtor; the mortgagee may have a foreclosure, and retain the benefit of the trust of the moneys to be recovered on the policy, but at the risk of having the foreclosure opened if he should resort to it (i).

(a) Ponten v. Page, before Vice-Chancellor Plumer, 7 Nov. 1816, 1 Mad. Pr. and P. 664.

(b) Tancred v. Potts, Rolls, June 20, 1749, 2 Fonbl. 261 (Lord Hardwicke, in Lockwood v. Ewer, ubi supra, said it was not necessary); this case was not called to the attention of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Slade v. Rigg, infra.

(c) Slade v. Rigg, 3 Hare, 38. It was insisted, on the authority of Ponten v. Page, 1 Mad. Pr. and P. 664, 3rd edit. supra, that the mortgagee was only entitled to a decree for a sale.

(d) Hobson v. Bell, 2 Beav. p. 24; in this case a question was raised whether the conditions of sale were of such a depreciating character as to amount to a breach of trust, or to constitute an objection to the title. A lender of stock, on condition that it be replaced, is entitled to a bonus declared in the interim; Vaughan v. Wood, 1 My. & K. 403. As to the right of a person whose stock has been improperly sold out, to take an equal sum of stock afterwards purchased by the same person, see Vulliamy v. Noble, 3 Meriv. 615.

(e) A summary of the law in regard to Policies of Insurance, may be found in Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 302, et seq.; and some useful practical observations as to securities taken through the medium of policies of insurance, either effected by the creditor or taken by way of assignment, are there given. Fire policies are not assignable, ibid.

(f) Ashley v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 19, the reference to Brown v. Carter, 5 Ves. 865, seems to be a mistake.

(g) Sed v. sup. p. 769; see further, on this subject, infra, Chaps. ix. and x.

(h) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Dyson v. Morris, 1 Hare, 423.

(i) Dyson v. Morris, 1 Hare, 424-7; but quære, if he should have sold the estate, would

In regard to Pledges of personal chattels: a material distinction has been drawn at law between a mortgage, and a pawn or pledge: a mortgagee, it is said, has an absolute interest in the land, whereas the pawnee has but a special property in the goods to detain them for his security; the delivery, it is added, is nothing but the bare custody, and is not like to a mortgage, for there he that hath the interest ought to have the money; but in case of a pledge, it is only a special property in him that takes it, and the general property (a) continues in the first owner; upon tender of the money secured by the pawn by the pawnor, the property, notwithstanding the refusal, is reduced constantly [instantly] to the pawnor without claim (b). "A mortgage," said Lord Alvanley, "is a pledge, and more, for it is an absolute pledge to become an absolute interest if not redeemed at a certain time; a pledge is a deposit of personal effects not to be taken back but on payment of a certain sum, by express stipulation or the course of trade, to be a lien upon them" (c): still however the pledgor, though not having the property in the thing pledged, is enabled to sell. Lord Chief Justice Gibbs (d), after laying down, as a general proposition, that a right of lien gives no right to sell the goods, said, "but when goods are deposited by way of security, to indemnify a party against a loan of money, it is more than a pledge; the lender's rights are more extensive than such as accrue upon an ordinary lien in the way of trade." "These goods," said his Lordship, speaking of the case before him, "were deposited to secure a loan; it may be inferred therefore that the contract was this:—If I, the borrower, repay the money, you must re-deliver the goods; but if I fail to repay you, you must use the security I have left to repay yourself; I think therefore the defendant had a right to sell: but where there is no time fixed for redemption, the pledgee must give notice to the pledgor to redeem before he is at liberty to sell" (e).

In a late case, one Nicholson, the plaintiff, borrowed of one Hooper 48,000*l.*, on a pledge of some tea warrants; Hooper pledged the war-he then be restrained from resorting to the policy moneys? see Lockhart v. Hardy, supra, p. 682.

(a) As in case of the Roman pignus and hypotheca, supra, vol. i. p. 599; Lord Hardwicke, 1 Atk. 166, distinguishes an English pawn from the Roman pignus, citing Cod. Just. iv. 54, l. 2 and l. 7.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Ryall v. Rolle, 1 Atk. 167; Yelverton, 178; 2 Bulst. 30; Noy, 137; Cro. Ja. 245. The law on the subject of Pawns is fully entered into in Cortilyon v. Lansing, 2 Caine's Cases in Error, U. S. p.

201, and Garlick v. James, 12 Johnson's Rep. U. S. p. 146; and see Story on Equity, §§ 1030-1033.

(c) Lord Alvanley, Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 372.

(d) Pothonier v. Dawson, Holt, N. P. Rep. 383.

(e) In Garlick v. James, ubi sup., it is stated that there is no case to be found where the deposit was for an indefinite time, that the sale of the pledge by the pawnee, without first calling on the pawnor to redeem, has been held good.

rants with Messrs. Hitchens, who were defendants, and who had in fact advanced the 48,000*l.*: the plaintiff was aware of this fact in June, 1835: the defendants, with the plaintiff's knowledge, abstained from selling, at the solicitation of Hooper, but he then raised no objection to their title: the Lord Chancellor without deciding whether the court would have given to Messrs. Hitchens any aid to give effect to their title so acquired, was clearly of opinion that, as the plaintiff had been privy to the fact of the defendants dealing with the property pledged as their own, the court ought not to interfere to prevent the defendants from selling, and dissolved the injunction which had been granted (a).

If no time be fixed for the redemption, the pawnor as before stated has his whole life to redeem the pledge, therefore time will not begin to run against him or those claiming under him during his life (b).

The pawn does not in any way extinguish the debt, for if the thing pawned be lost without the default of the pawnee, he may still bring an action against the pawnor (c).

The pledgor of goods may file a bill to redeem (d); and there may be other cases where it may be proper for the pledgor, or those who represent, him to come into the Court of Chancery: thus, where a question of Tacking arises.

The doctrine of Tacking is applied to pledges of goods as against the party making the pledge, more extensively than it is as against a mortgagor of real estate; the presumption as against the pledgor will be that if the pawnee advance any further sums of money to the pawnor, the property pledged is not to be redeemed without payment of the whole of the advances. In the case of Demandray v. Metcalf (e), a person made a pledge of jewels, to secure a sum borrowed; the pledgor afterwards borrowed from the same person other sums upon a general account, and he insisted upon his right of redeeming the jewels upon payment of the first sum only; the Lord Chancellor said (in the absence of precedents) that it was reasonable and just to suppose that the pawnee would not have lent the further sums

(a) Nicholson v. Hooper, 4 My. & Cr. 186. As the bill did not offer to redeem the defendants, Messrs. Hitchens, but disputed their title, the Lord Chancellor would not even continue the injunction on payment of what was claimed by the defendants into court.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Kemp v. Westbrook, citing 1 Bulst. 36, supra, p. 769.

(c) 2 Salk. 523; 2 Fonbl. 279.

(d) Amongst the forms collected by the late Sir H. Seton (pp. 181, 182), is one of a decree in a suit for the redemption of goods, which contains the ordinary direction that in default of payment by the plaintiff to the defendant of the amount found due, the plaintiff's bill is to stand dismissed with costs, which operates as a foreclosure (3 Hare, 37).

(e) Prec. Ch. 419; 2 Vern. 691; so where bonds, bills, or other securities are pledged; Vanderzee v. Willis, 3 Bro. C. C. 21; see Sir W. Grant's observations on this case, 6 Ves. 230.

but on the credit of the pledge he had in his hands, and therefore held that the pledgor must pay the whole. But the right to tack cannot be set up against an assignee of the equity of redemption, or against creditors bringing a bill; and in case of a bankruptcy the pledge can be retained only for the first sum, and the pledgee must come in under the commission for the remainder (a): but it has been held that where a pledge is made to secure a loan, and afterwards the pledgor borrows a further sum, for which a third person becomes security, such third person, having paid the second debt, will be entitled to have the surplus proceeds of the entire property pledged applied in reduction of the second debt, even against the assignees of the pledgor (b). If a pawnee of chattels takes a security by specialty, as a bond, for his subsequent debt, it will be presumed, it has been said, that he did not intend to rely on the pledge (c).

A bill may also be filed where a discovery is necessary, as where the pawnor has become bankrupt. Lord Hardwicke held that the assignees might file a bill to redeem, for it was necessary for them to know the exact sum due, before they could make such a tender as would enable them to bring an action of trover (d). So it is a case for the interference of the Court of Chancery, where the legal right to possession is transferred, as by indorsement and delivery of a bill of lading, and there are equitable claims upon the proceeds (e). The same principle will apply in all cases where the remedy in the Court of Chancery is more certain and efficacious than that which can be obtained at law: and where a specific time limited for the redemption has passed, so as to exclude a remedy at law, probably the Court of Chancery, on its general principles, would entertain a bill for redemption, the pledge remaining in specie, if applied to within a reasonable time (f).

As to the right of Factors to pledge (g):—As a general proposition

(a) Demandray v. Metcalf, Vanderzee v. Willis, ubi supra; Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 229; 1 Jac. & W. 244.

(b) Praed v. Gardiner, 2 Cox, 86.

(c) Dict. Demandray v. Metcalf, Pr. Ch. 421, v. infra, p. 804.

(d) Kemp v. Westbrook, 1 Ves. 278.

(e) Spalding v. Ruding, 6 Beav. 376, 380.

(f) See Jarm. Mortg. by Sweet, 300.

(g) As to the law as to pledges by Factors, as settled by the stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 83, 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, see Jarm. Convey. by Sweet, 291. A Lien is different from a pawn and a pledge; a lien at common law is a right in one man to retain that which is in his possession belonging to another, till certain demands of him, the person in possession, are satisfied, per Grose, J., 2 East, 235; and that possession may have been acquired without reference to security for money; the lien of a carrier on goods committed to him, and of a solicitor on his client's papers, are instances; as to which see Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. 354; Perkins v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 231. There are also liens without possession, as the vendor's lien in equity for his purchase-money, which will be treated of under the head of Specific performance of contracts. A short abstract of the law on this subject, in Miller on Equitable Mortgages, pp. 4 to 13, may be referred to with a right of lien in a factor gives no right to sell the goods (a), nor at common law had he any right to pledge; but this right has been conferred upon factors, under certain circumstances, by the 4 Geo. IV. c. 83, amended by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 94. A factor who has made advances to his principal has no authority to sell without reference to the interests of his employer, and contrary to his directions, though notice has been given by the factor (b). Where goods come into the possession of a person under a special contract, he cannot in respect of his character of factor or otherwise claim to retain them for his general balance (c). Lord Hardwicke extended the doctrine of tacking to the lien of a factor, even against the assignees of his principal (d).

If a testator gives a cup or personal estate of any description, which is in pawn or in mortgage or charged in any way, it is a full gift, and the executor is bound to redeem it out of the general assets of the testator; if that be not done the legatee is entitled to stand in the same situation as if the duty of the executor had been performed (e).

If a person absolutely transfer his shares in a company to another by way of mortgage, and the mortgagee as registered owner becomes liable for calls or other payments, he cannot compel his mortgagor to indemnify him unless he come to redeem (f).

The crown cannot avoid an equitable mortgage, or the lien of a factor or of a wharfinger or a bonâ fide assignment in trust for creditors, or any similar assignment or charge; because they are created when the debtor has legal power to create them, and they all act upon the property before the interest of the crown accrues, and the crown can only take the property subject to such liabilities as the debtor has legally created (g).

Mortgages of ships, as they are subject to the provisions of the navigation laws, seem to require particular notice. The stringency of those laws has been observed upon in a preceding chapter; merely equitable titles, generally speaking, are, as has been there observed, excluded by those laws (h). The mortgagor, it is to be noticed, does not now advantage. The whole law of lien is elaborately discussed in the 1st chapter of Jarm. Convey. by Sweet, vol. v.; and see xi. Jurist, No. 558, and infra, sect. x. of this chapter.

(a) C. J. Gibbs, Holt's N. P. Ca. 383.

(b) Smart v. Sandars, C. P. x. Jurist, 841, 844.

(c) Spalding v. Ruding, vii. Jurist, 733; 6 Beavan, 380-1.

(d) Ex parte Deeze, 1 Atk. 228; there is an useful note on this subject by Mr. Raithby, p. 230; and see Ex parte Ockenden, ibid. 236.

(e) Lord Thurlow, Ashburner v. M'Guire,

2 Bro. 113; Sir J. Leach, Knight v. Davis, 3 My. & K. 358, 361; and see Marshall v. Holloway, 5 Sim. 196, 203; Stewart v. Denton, 4 Dougl. 219. This rule was adopted from the civil law; see Swinburne, pt. 7, sect. 20, p. 548.

(f) Phene v. Gillan, 5 Hare, 10.

(g) Giles v. Grover, opinion of Mr. Justice Patteson, 6 Bli. 292; 1 Phill. 733; v. inf. 786.

(h) V. supra, p. 221: see, on this subject, Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, where the provisions of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55, are set out; et v. pp. 320, 321, where the autho-cease to be owner; so that if the mortgagee merely insures his own interest in the ship, he can only recover to the amount of the debt due to him (a).

In Langton v. Horton (b), Lord Langdale said it might well be doubted whether under the provisions of the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55, ss. 35, 42, 43, there can be any valid mortgage in any case in which the parties do not secure to themselves the protection which the statute gives by the mode of proceeding which is therein directed. Where by the omission of the creditors to perfect a mortgage security upon a ship according to the exigences of the statute, the benefit of the creditor's security is lost, the surety is discharged to the extent of the value of such security (c).

The mortgagee of a ship is entitled to the accruing freight from the time he takes possession (d); but where he does not take possession he is not entitled to the freight (e).

Although Freight which has to be earned cannot be assigned according to the rules of law (f), such an assignment, by way of mortgage or otherwise, is good in equity (g): and a security valid in equity may be given upon a cargo to be acquired in the course of a voyage (h). If a person has done all in his power to obtain possession or quasi possession of the cargo assigned to him, by giving notice to all those who as far as his knowledge extends ought to have notice, he will not be defeated of his priority by the circumstance of a subsequent incumbrancer having afterwards been enabled to give a prior notice to rities are collected; and Cooté, p. 327, et seq.: and see Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 18, 19; and Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 106. Those who may require more particular information will resort to the new edition of Abbott's Law of Shipping. Of Liens on Ships, and their Cargoes, v. infra, Section x. I do not enter into the subject of bottomry bonds; but in Glascott v. Lang, 2 Phillips, p. 310, there will be found a discussion as to the circumstances which will or will not invalidate a bottomry bond. Whilst I am writing, the Navigation Laws appear to have received a death-blow.

(a) Irving v. Richardson, 2 Barn. & Adol. p. 196. This case was decided on the stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 110, § 45.

(b) Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 19.

(c) Capel v. Butler, 2 Sim. & St. 457.

(d) Kerswill v. Bishop, 2 Crompt. & J. 529. The mortgage was by assignment of the ship and tackle, &c., with a power of sale; and see Dean v. M'Ghie, 12 J. B. Moore, 185; S. C. 4 Bing. 45 (2 Cr. & J. 540, Bayley, B.).

(e) Chinnery v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 117, in nota; S. C. 3 Doug. 394 (2 Cr. & J. 539). Lord Langdale's expressions in Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 19, as reported, are, "It is admitted that, independently of special contract, the sale or mortgage of a ship will carry freight accruing due at the time of the sale or after possession is taken by a mortgagee," et v. ib. p. 20; but the counsel did not put his title higher than in the event of his taking possession before the conclusion of the voyage, ibid. p. 15.

(f) Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 Maule & S. 228, 236.

(g) Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 535, affirmed 1 My. & K. 488, the leading cases are there cited, et v. infra, Chapter x., Assignment of Choses in Action. Freight earned under a charter-party executed after the date of the testator's will, and which did not become due till after the testator's death, will not it seems pass to a specific legatee of the ship, Stephen-son v. Dawson, 3 Beav. 342.

(h) Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 555-6-7.

a person to whom the cargo has been consigned by the mortgagors unknown to the first mortgagee: the mortgagee of a cargo on board a ship at sea is not bound to send letters to meet the master wherever the ship may possibly come (a). Upon a sale, and therefore upon a mortgage of a ship with its appurtenances independently of special contract, "appurtenances" include every thing belonging to the owners which is on board the ship for the accomplishment of the object of the adventure; but the cargo is not an appurtenance: a cargo of whale oil cannot be considered as freight incident to the employment of the ship, so that it does not pass by an assignment of the ship (b).

Where the property is of a fluctuating nature, as the stock of a publican, it seems that wines and the like, to be after acquired, may be mortgaged at law, but the terms of the mortgage must be special (c). An assignment, by way of mortgage, of a legacy in anticipation will be good in equity (d): an assignment of a legacy charged on lands in a register county does not require registration (e).

(a) Feltham v. Clark, 1 De G. & Sm. 307, 313; Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 557-561, and the cases there cited; and of the notice requisite for the completion of the title to a chose in action, which depends upon analogous principles, v. infra, Chaps. ix. and x. Some of the most important cases on the subject are collected by Mr. Daniell in his report of Taylor v. Blake, Dan. R. 70.

(b) Lord Langdale, Langton v. Horton,

(1842,) 5 Beav. 20, 21, 22.

(c) Tapfield v. Hillman, C. P. vii. Jur. 771, 772-3, et v. supra.

(d) Bennett v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 252; the assignment was accompanied by a power of attorney, ib. 254; though it seems such an interest cannot be given. See Meek v. Kettlewell, infra, Chaps. ix. and x.

(e) Malcolm v. Charlesworth, 1 Keen, 73.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

Effect of Sects. 19 & 21, of Stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, on an Assignment and Delivery of Personal Chattels, on the Insolvency of the Assignor.

In a late case, (Parrott v. Congreve, xiii. Jur. 398,) the Vice-Chancellor of England held, on the construction of the act referred to, that where a bill of sale of personal chattels as a security, with a power to sell, had been made one year before the insolvent petitioned for protection, but possession of the goods had not been taken till one month before the presenting of the petition, the holder of the bill of sale could not sell, and that he could only come in under the insolvency; and see Squire v. Huetson, 1 Q. B. Rep. 308.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Pawnbrokers Act—Usury Laws.

In the late case of Fitch v. Rochfort, xiii. Jur. 314, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, the effect of the Pawnbrokers Act, 39 Geo. III. c. 99, as to the right to the surplus proceeds, and of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37, § 1, in regard to taking interest for loans of money above 10*l.* in amount in reference to the Pawnbrokers Acts, is discussed.

SECTION X.—Of Equitable Mortgages and Liens, and of Liens generally.

§ 1.—Of Securities under written Instruments.

§ 2.—Of Securities by the Deposit of Deeds, with or without Writing.

§ 3.—Of Liens.

§ 1.—Of Securities under written Instruments.

Security by written Agreement or Directions, on Land or other Property.Charge by Agreement on Property to be subsequently acquired.Direction by a Party that his Creditor be paid out of a particular Fund.

A SECURITY, equivalent, in equity, to an actual mortgage by deed, or to a pledge, may be acquired under a written agreement, or through the medium of written directions (a). Any instrument in writing, which shows that it was the intention of the creditor, in executing it, to make his land or other property a security for the debt, as the assignment of the rent secured by a lease, will amount in equity to an actual security (b). Lord Kenyon was inclined to think that a parol direction to assign personal property to a creditor, without any deposit, was sufficient to give an equitable security on the property (c).

A promise in writing to give a security by mortgage of lands when called upon, does not, on the death of the debtor, affect any lands of which the debtor may have been seised during his life (d); but if the agreement be to settle on a certain day lands of a certain value, it will create a lien on the lands of which the party is seised on that day (e).

(a) I need scarcely inform the reader that the subject of this chapter has been treated of by Mr. Samuel Miller, in a distinct Treatise, to which learned work I would refer the student and the practitioner.

(b) Ex parte Wills, 1 Ves. J. 162; 2 Cox, 233; Card v. Jaffray, 2 Scho. & L. 379; see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 109; and Miller on Equit. Mortgages, p. 2, et seq.; and see Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 162, on the efficacy of an equitable assignment of personal property as against assignees.

(c) Hankey v. Vernon, 2 Cox, 14, case of a ship.

(d) Williams v. Lucas, 2 Cox, 160; following Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P. W. 429.

(e) V. supra, p. 254; Roundell v. Breary, 2 Vern. 482. See Lord Cottenham's observations on Freemoult v. Dedire, ubi sup., and Roundell v. Breary, 2 Vern. 482, and Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. 327, in the case of Wellesley v. Wellesley, 4 My. & Cr. p. 581, as to the effect of a covenant where it is to charge lands generally, and where it refers to a particular time or value. The case of Ravenshaw v. Hollier, 7 Sim. 3, affirmed by Lord Lyndhurst, affords an instance where a covenant to settle a fee-simple estate, of a certain value, was held not to create a lien on the estates in the covenantor's possession, partly as tenant in tail and partly in fee. And on the difference between an agreement that amounts to a personal undertaking, and one that creates a lien on real estate, see Berrington v. Evans, 3 Yo. & Coll. 384, 392.

It is now fully established that contracts to charge property subsequently acquired may be enforced in equity (a); but a verbal promise to deposit a future lease when obtained cannot be enforced as giving a lien (b).

A direction in writing by a debtor to a third person, who holds an estate at the debtor's disposal—for instance, to a vendor who has not conveyed to the debtor who has purchased the estate—to convey the estate to a creditor as a security for his debt is irrevocable, and will constitute, in equity, a mortgage: and if the conveyance has been made, under such directions, to a person standing in the character of creditor at the time, that is in itself sufficient to rebut the presumption that the conveyance was intended to be made to him as a mere trustee (c). In one case, a general agreement to assign all the debtor's lands in a particular place, was held not to be confined to his freehold lands only, but to extend to copyholds also, upon the recital in the instrument (d). The case of Buckle v. Mitchell (e) is a direct authority for the proposition that an equitable interest in land entitles the purchaser by contract to clothe it with the legal estate (f).

Where a trader gave to one of his creditors a direction in writing addressed to the executor of his debtor, to pay the debt due to him to the creditor, when there should be funds of the testator (the debtor) applicable to the payment of debts of that class, and the executor retained the order, and the trader afterwards became bankrupt; it was held that the creditor of the trader was entitled to receive the amount of the debt (g). So where express directions were given

(a) Lord Cottenham, Wellesley v. Wellesley, 4 My. & Cr. 579; Lyde v. Mynn, 4 Sim. p. 595; 1 My. & K. 683; Metcalfe v. Archbishop of York, 6 Sim. 224; affirmed by Lord Cottenham, on appeal, 1 My. & Cr. p. 547: that was the case of an agreement by a vicar, before the passing of the 57 Geo. III. c. 99, to charge any benefice to which he might be promoted (as to the statutes affecting charges on Ecclesiastical benefices, see 1 My. & Cr. 553); Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 M. & S. 228; Curtis v. Auber, 1 Jac. & W. p. 526; Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 524; (1 My. & K. 488;) Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 2 Russ. & M. 35 (1 My. & Cr. 556): one point raised in the first-cited case was that the covenant was to execute a legal charge which had become illegal before any attempt was made to enforce it; but Lord Cottenham held that there was an equitable charge, independently of the covenant to execute a legal charge (ibid. 557): and see Lewis v. Madocks, 17 Vesey, p. 48, a case which arose on a contract to settle future personal estate; et v. supra, p. 776.

(b) Ex parte Coombe, 4 Mad. p. 249, 251; and see Ex parte Hooper, 1 Meriv. 7.

(c) Lord Redesdale, Card v. Jaffray, 2 Scho. & L. 384.

(d) Ex parte Glyn, iv. Jur. 395.

(e) 18 Ves. 100.

(f) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Lister v. Turner, x. Jur. 752; 5 Hare, 291; and such an interest will therefore defeat a voluntary conveyance; ibid.: and limitations to collaterals being strangers to a contract, Stacpoole v. Stacpoole, 2 Conn. & L. 508.

(g) Ex parte South, 3 Swanst. 392; Lord Eldon there observes upon the doctrine at law, that the party receiving the order should come under a contract, in order to make the transfer or lien available; (as to which, v. int. alia, Williams v. Everett, 14 East, p. 582; Burn v. Carvalho, 4 My. & Cr. p. 690; and see the Vice-Chancellor of England's observations on that case, 2 Sim. 342; and Scott v. Porcher, 3 Meriv. 652;) that that was not the doctrine by a receiver of an estate in Jamaica to the consignees in England, to keep down the plaintiff's annuity, which had been directed to be paid out of the first proceeds of the estate in a suit instituted in Jamaica, and the consignees for a time acted upon it, but afterwards endeavoured to apply the consignments to another purpose; the plaintiff was held to be entitled to the proceeds in the hands of the consignees (a).

In a case before Lord Keeper Wright, a person entered into a contract for the purchase of an estate; the lands purchased were subject to mortgages and judgments: the purchaser, according to agreement between him and the vendor, placed the purchase-money in the hands of a third person, to be paid in discharge of the incumbrances when the amount should be ascertained; but before this was done, the purchaser died, not leaving assets to pay his debts on bond. The question was, whether the money deposited was to be considered as assets of the purchaser, and to be applied in payment of his debts: or whether it was bound to the specific purpose of the deposit, and to be applied in payment of the incumbrances according to the agreement: in the one case the general creditors would be left without any funds for payment of their debts; in the other, the mortgagees might have been paid by proceeding to enforce their securities: it was held that the money was bound by the agreement, and must be applied in payment of the incumbrances (b).

In order to constitute an equitable assignment of, or lien upon, a chose in action, there must be an engagement to pay out of the particular fund (c): if the order be given for a valuable consideration on the part of the holder—for instance, as an inducement to the party to supply goods, and he does so on the faith of it—it does not appear to be necessary that the holder of the chose in action should accept the order (d): but this rather belongs to Chapter IX., on the Assignment of Choses in Action, in this volume.

We now proceed to consider the cases in which a lien or charge may be created without writing—namely, by Deposit.

of this court, see Wright v. Ward, 4 Russ. 220, by Lord Eldon, overruling the decision of the Vice-Chancellor; and see 1 H. Bl. 243: and Bailey v. Culverwell, 8 Barn. & C. 448; Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 2 Russ. & M. 46, assignment of prize-money, and Cotesworth v. Stephens, 4 Hare, 185.

(a) Fitzgerald v. Stewart, 2 Sim. p. 333; affirmed, 2 Russ. & M. 457.

(b) Farr v. Middleton, Prec. Ch. 174.

(c) Sir J. Leach, Watson v. Duke of Wellington, 1 R. & M. 605.

(d) Lett v. Morris, 4 Sim. p. 607, is an instance of such an assignment being held to be good; there was no acceptance of the order in that case.

§ 2.—Of Securities by the Deposit of Deeds, with or without Writing.Lien by Deposit of Deeds.General Doctrines on this Subject.Subsequent Advances.Debt to new Firm.Deposit of a Portion of the Deeds only.Deeds delivered to Solicitor for the purpose of preparing a Mortgage.Lien as against Third Persons.Object of Deposit may be explained by Evidence.Deposit in the hands of a Third Person.Register not Notice.Deposit of Agreement—Of Court Rolls.Deposit by Accountant to the Crown.Deposit, and subsequent Conveyance in contemplation of Bankruptcy.Depositary of Lease not liable to the Landlord on the Covenants it contains.Deposit of Lease, with Covenant not to assign.Lord Rosslyn's General Order in Bankruptcy.Costs of procuring a Sale in Bankruptcy.From what Time the Depositary is entitled to the Rents.Deposit of Deeds by Mortgagor, Prior Mortgagee having omitted to obtain them.Plum v. Fluitt, 2 Anst.Worthington v. Morgan, xiii. Jur. before Vice-Chancellor of England.Observations in that Case.Depositary takes such Interest only as the Depositor had.Remedies of the Depositary in the Court of Chancery.Dicta of Lord Cottenham on this subject.Equitable Charge has Preference to a Judgment.Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Phillips.

It has been determined by a series of authorities that a lien on land may be obtained by a mere deposit of the deeds relating to the land, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. This subject has been a fertile source of litigation. Whether the lien obtained by a simple deposit is, as it is generally called, an equitable mortgage, or whether it amounts only to a charge, is left in some obscurity; the balance of authority appears to incline in favour of the latter view.

The question, as is more particularly adverted to hereafter, depends upon this: Is the deposit of the deeds all that is intended to be done, or is it to be gathered from the act of deposit that something further—namely, a formal security, such as is usually given on an advance of money on the security of land—is to be given? If the former only, then the deposit amounts to a simple charge, and the remedy to enforce the charge will be the same as is given in other cases where money is charged upon land—namely, by sale. If the latter, then the remedy would appear to be, first, to compel the completion of the contract, and then to give the ordinary remedies which a mortgagee is entitled to; or, if the money is required to be paid, to assume that what ought to have been done is done, and, instead of mere foreclosure on default, to order a conveyance of the legal estate.

We shall first proceed to a consideration of the authorities in reference to the general doctrine.

It has been decided (a) that a mere deposit of title deeds relating to real estate upon an advance of money, without a word passing, gives an equitable lien (b), and it will prevail against a subsequent purchaser with notice (c). This doctrine has been considered to be difficult to be maintained, either upon principle or on grounds of public policy (d); but it is firmly established, though latterly a disposition has been evinced not to extend its operation (e). A deposit of deeds till the debt is paid, said the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in a late case, accompanied by an agreement to that effect, gives an equitable lien on the property, not on the deeds only, but primâ facie on all the property contained in them (f). The deposit will cover subsequent advances, if it clearly appear by evidence that they were made upon the faith of that security (g), or that the original deposit was continued with an agreement for a further advance (h). Lord Eldon, adverting to Ex parte Langston, above cited, said, "In the cases alluded to, I went the length of stating that when the deposit originally was for a particular purpose, that purpose may be enlarged by a subsequent parol agreement; and this distinction appeared to me

(a) Lord Abinger took some pains in the case of Keys v. Williams, 3 Y. & C. p. 61, to vindicate the Court of Chancery from having violated the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4, (v. supra, vol. i. pp. 497-8, 555, 646,) in establishing this doctrine.

(b) Ex parte Mountfort, 14 Ves. p. 606; Ex parte Langston, 17 Ves. 227, 230; Russel v. Russel, 1 Bro. C. C. 269, which was the first case that established these equitable liens or mortgages, has been frequently lamented: Edge v. Worthington, 1 Cox, p. 212; Ex parte Hooper, 19 Ves. 478-9; and see Belt's note to 1 Bro. 269; and Lord Henley's note, p. 270, n. (a).

(c) Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. p. 114: whether or not it will prevail against a purchaser without notice, is discussed in a future page:

see Worthington v. Morgan, xiii. Jur. p. 316, and the other cases, infra, p. 789.

(d) See 11 Ves. 403; 12 Ves. 196; 14 Ves. 606; Ex parte Hooper, 1 Mer. 9; S. C. 19 Ves. 477; Ex parte Warner, 19 Ves. 203; and Keys v. Williams, supra.

(e) Ex parte Kensington, 2 Ves. & B. 33; Ex parte Coombe, 17 Ves. p. 369; Ex parte Hooper, 1 Meriv. 9; Ex parte Whitbread, 19 Ves. 209; Norris v. Wilkinson, 12 Ves. 192.

(f) Ashton v. Dalton, x. Jur. 451; 2 Coll. 565, 567; et v. Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. 145; sed v. infra, p. 785, n. (k).

(g) Ex parte Langston, 17 Ves. p. 227; 1 Rose, 26; Ex parte Whitbread, 19 Ves. 210.

(h) Ex parte Hooper, 19 Ves. 479; S. C. 1 Mer. p. 7; and see Ex parte Whitbread, 19 Ves. 209; S. C. 1 Rose, 299.

to be too thin, that you should not have the benefit of such an agreement, unless you added to the terms of that agreement the fact that the deeds were put back into the hands of the owner, and a re-delivery of them required, on which fact there is no doubt that the deposit would amount to an equitable lien within the principle of these cases" (a). In the case before him, Lord Eldon, on the principle of the last-mentioned case, decided, on the affidavits and examinations taken together, aided by the extreme probability of the intention, that he could collect that what was originally deposited to secure the balance due to the banking company then subsisting should be extended, though by parol, to secure the demand of the house consisting of additional partners (b). If it appear upon the evidence that the deeds were deposited with the creditor, not for the purpose of being applied as a security for money already advanced, but for the purpose of obtaining future credit, it will be confined to that purpose (c).

Where there is a legal mortgage, parol evidence cannot be admitted to make the estate liable for a subsequent debt (d).

It was decided in one case by Sir J. Leach, that where there was only a deposit of one deed, when there was a promise to deposit all, it did not give an equitable security; but that decision was reversed (e). Where there is a deposit of a portion only of the deeds, whether an equitable mortgage is created would seem to depend upon the circumstances of each case: Lord Eldon appears to have thought that in the absence of writing or a contemporaneous loan, the question will depend upon whether, looking to the deeds actually deposited, an agreement or intention to charge the estate is to be inferred (f): if money passed at the time, probably that would be sufficient; a written engagement or other writing, stating the purpose to be to give a security on the estate (g), or even on the deeds, though it be accompanied only by a deposit of an useless deed, certainly will (h). Where part of the title-deeds were deposited with A. and part with

(a) Ex parte Kensington, 2 Ves. & B. 84; and see Ex parte Lloyd, 1 Gl. & Jam. 389.

(b) Ex parte Kensington, ubi supra.

(c) Mountford v. Scott, Turn. & R. p. 280, Lord Eldon, who there said the doctrine was not to be carried further than it had been carried.

(d) Ex parte Hooper, 1 Mer. 7.

(e) In re Nicholson, coram Leach, V. C., 23 March, 1820, Mad. MS. Pr. and P. i. 674; but Mr. Maddock afterwards (p. 675) says, he had been informed that Lord Eldon reversed this dictum, and that Sir S. Romilly admitted that it could not be supported; Mr. Maddock does not state who were the opposing parties: and see Ex parte Pearce, 1 Buck, 525; but that was a peculiar case.

(f) Ex parte Wetherell, 11 Ves. 401.

(g) Ex parte Wright, 19 Ves. 257.

(h) Ex parte Arkwright, on rehearing, 3 Mont. D. & D. 129, 132; the original decision, as regards the policies of insurance, was reversed, for want of notice having been given; as to which, v. infra, Chap. ix. and x.

B., it was held by Lord Eldon, on the petition of A. in bankruptcy, that neither of them had an equitable lien (a); but in a subsequent case where the conveyance of the estate had been deposited with A., and other title-deeds with B., Sir J. Leach held that A.'s lien was good, and could not be defeated by the subsequent fraudulent deposit of the other title-deeds with B. (b).

Lord Thurlow and Sir Wm. Grant were of opinion that where deeds were delivered by the debtor to the creditor or to a solicitor, not specifically by way of pledge, but in order that a mortgage might be prepared (no money passing at the time), and before the mortgage was executed the debtor died or became bankrupt, the transaction must be considered as incomplete and that it did not create a lien on the estate (c): but Lord Eldon appears to have thought that such a deposit would clearly constitute an equitable mortgage (not a lien only) even for an antecedent debt (d); and Lord Eldon's doctrine has been followed in subsequent cases (e).

Although the deposit may constitute a lien as against the depositor, yet in a question with a subsequent purchaser who is a stranger, the lien will not prevail where the possession can be accounted for in some other manner, unless the stranger has notice, express or constructive, of the particular purpose for which the deposit was made; hence, if an attorney who, in the ordinary course of business usually has the custody of his client's deeds, holds them under an agreement in a character different from that of attorney, he must, it seems, in order to render the deposit available against strangers, at least give notice to all persons in the visible ownership of the property (f).

(a) Ex parte Jones in re Price, before Lord Chancellor Eldon, 21st March, 1821, Mad. MS., Pr. and P. i. p. 679.

(b) Ex parte Kelland re Melhuish, 17th March, 1821, Mad. MS., Pr. and P. i. 679; nothing is stated as to these cases but what is set forth in the text.

(c) Lord Thurlow, Ex parte Bulteel, 2 Cox, 243; Sir Wm. Grant, Norris v. Wilkinson, 12 Ves. p. 192, following Brizick v. Manners, 9 Mod. 284; cited 12 Ves. 199; Powell on Mortgages, ii. p. 1056; see Hiern v. Mill, 12 Ves. 122; and Ex parte Harvey, 1 Mont. & Ch. 241.

(d) Ex parte Bruce, 1 Rose, p. 374; Lord Eldon there said, "If they are deposited for the express purpose of preparing the security of a legal mortgage, is not that stronger than an implied intention?" No authorities were cited (these cases are observed upon by Miller on Eq. Mortgages, p. 49; and see Ex parte Wright, 19 Ves. p. 257). In Edge v. Worthington, 1 Cox, 212, which had not been reported when Norris v. Wilkinson was decided, Lord Kenyon had expressed himself to the same effect (and see 3 Yo. & Coll. 59); his Lordship held it to be clear that the deeds could not be got back without payment of the money; and see Pye v. Daubuz, 2 Dick. 759.

(e) Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. p. 141; Keys v. Williams, 3 Yo. & Coll. p. 62. "The agreement and the delivery of the deeds," said Lord Gifford, in the first-cited case, constitute a mortgage in equity; but it is to be observed, that where the deposit is held to be a lien only, the provisions of the Statute of Frauds are only so far affected that the lien on the deeds is transferred to the land; to decide on parol evidence that the depositor shall convey the estate, seems to be contrary to principle; the decree only declared that the plaintiffs had an equitable lien: v. infra, in this section, as to the Remedies of the depositor.

(f) Bozon v. Williams, 3 Yo. & J. 150; but see Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114; 3 My. & Cr. 673.

The meaning and object of the deposit has been allowed to be explained by parol evidence, a circumstance that has often been lamented (a); where the deposit is made to secure a floating balance to a firm, it may be extended, by the effect of the course of dealing, to a new firm without any express acknowledgment on the part of the debtor (b). "There is nothing," said Lord Eldon, "that requires to be watched with more jealousy than this doctrine of lien by the deposit of deeds, especially when the inference contradicts a written instrument" (c), as may be the case, as before stated, where the security is given to an existing firm and is extended to a subsequent firm consisting of other members, or to secure further advances where the memorandum extends only to a specific sum (d). If there are false and contradictory accounts as to what was the nature of the deposit, it cannot be held to give a lien (e). In the late case of Ede v. Knowles, before the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, there was an agreement distinctly proved by a letter signed, that there should be an advance of 4000*l.* to Mr. Knowles, who had become bankrupt, or to the house of which he was a partner, upon the security of certain reversionary property belonging to Knowles; afterwards the deeds were deposited, part of the money being then paid: further sums were advanced at different times, between that day (16th April) and the 26th of the same month, to the extent of 4000*l.*, of which sum 159*l.* only was repaid, leaving more than 4000*l.* due. It was contended that the written evidence which came into existence from time to time, in the course of executing the original agreement, precluded the parol evidence, which was addressed to the subsequent advances, from being received; but his Honour was clearly of opinion that it might be received (f).

In all cases where there is anything equivocal in the circumstances, the intention and object of the deposit may clearly be examined into (g). Where the deeds are delivered to a third person, by a person not being the party whose estate is sought to be charged, and no money passes at the time, before such a delivery can be considered as constituting an equitable mortgage there must be evidence of the circum-

(a) Ex parte Hay, 15 Ves. 4; Norris v. Wilkinson, ubi infra.

(b) Ex parte Oakes, v. Jur. 757, Court of Review.

(c) Ex parte Coombe, 17 Ves. p. 370. In this case the reporter has not stated the material fact, that the deposit was after the act of bankruptcy; see Montague on Lien, p. 72, n. (m); and see 1 Rose, p. 269, and Ex parte Hooper, 1 Meriv. 9; 19 Ves. 477.

(d) See Ex parte Kensington, ubi supra; Ex parte Nettleship, v. Jur. p. 733; 2 Mont. D. & D. 124.

(e) Anon. MS., 1 Mad. Pr. and P. p. 675; but contradictory statements may be the subject of inquiry; Ex parte Mountfort, 14 Ves. p. 607.

(f) Ede v. Knowles, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. pp. 179-80.

(g) Casberd v. Attorney-General, 6 Price, stances under which, and for what purpose, the deposit was made, and that it was made on behalf of the parties interested (a); for the fact of the delivery creating an equitable charge depends wholly on these circumstances (b): but, as we have seen, a deposit by the party himself, without a word passing, will constitute an equitable lien if money be advanced at the time (c). Although a deposit in the hands of a third person may be considered as a deposit for the creditor, provided such be clearly proved to have been the intention, such third person being a stranger, and not having himself made any advance (d), it is different where the deposit remains in the hands of the mortgagor himself; and Lord Eldon doubted whether a mere memorandum, kept by the debtor in his own possession, and not parted with to the man in whose favour it was expressed, would confer any title; and he held that where deeds were put into the hands of the wife of the debtor, that would not be sufficient (e).

A subsequent incumbrancer by deposit of the deeds relating to the freehold without notice, is entitled to retain the deeds against a mortgagee of a term, though registered, for the registry of the original mortgage does not of itself amount to notice (f). The deposit of a mere agreement gives an equitable lien (g), and so does the deposit of copies of court rolls (h). Where a mortgage and bond are deposited as a security by a person who afterwards becomes bankrupt, though without notice to the mortgagor, his assignees will be compelled to execute an assignment (i). A written memorandum purporting to give a security on the estate, accompanied by a deposit of a deed conveying the estate and the furniture in the mansion upon it, does not give a security on the furniture (k).

An equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds by an accountant

411, 459; Ex parte Mountfort, 14 Ves. 607; and see Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bro. p. 166; 1 Ves. J. p. 235; Norris v. Wilkinson, 12 Ves. 192; et v. supra.

(a) The Lords Commissioners, when Russel v. Russel, supra, was before them, said it was open to explanation on what terms the lease was delivered and an issue was directed, 1 Bro. 269: and see Ex parte Wetherell, 11 Ves. 401, where Lord Eldon says, generally the possession of deeds, where no other purpose is shown, is evidence of an agreement to bind the estate.

(b) Williams v. Medlicot, 6 Pri. 495-501; and see Ex parte Wetherell, ubi supra.

(c) Ex parte Langston, supra; 17 Ves. 230.

(d) See Ex parte Coming, 9 Ves. p. 117; Ex parte Whitbread, 19 Ves. 212.

(e) Ex parte Coming, ubi supra; there, it is to be observed, the deposit with the wife seems to have been made without any communication with the creditor.

(f) Wiseman v. Westland, 1 Yo. & J. 117, 121, et v. supra, p. 763. It was in this case that the Lord Chief Baron (Alexander) said, "It was not usual, in such cases, without any agreement for the purpose, that the court should order the delivery of the deeds in a decree for foreclosure."

(g) Argument in Ex parte Warner, 19 Ves. 203.

(h) Ibid. 202; Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Yo. & Coll. 303; a doubtful case, as regards notice, see 4 Y. & Coll. 563, and sup. Sect. viii.; Winter v. Lord Anson, 3 Russ. 493.

(i) Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 411.

(k) Ex parte Hunt, iv. Jur. 342; v. sup. 781.

of the crown, in the hands of one who has an opportunity of knowing that the depositor is, or may become, a debtor of the crown, is not available against an extent; and it has been doubted whether a deposit by the king's debtor is good, in any case, against the crown, but it seems it is (a).

If the debtor makes a deposit, and afterwards, in contemplation of bankruptcy, conveys the legal estate, the legal title cannot be impeached (b); if the legal mortgage is made after the bankruptcy the mortgage is invalid, but the equitable lien revives (c). In a case, where an assignee bought the bankrupt's estate, and out of the consideration-money paid off an equitable mortgagee in part, who on such payment delivered up the deeds; the estate having afterwards been resold at an advanced price which the assignee carried to the account of the estate, it was held that the equitable mortgagee had a lien for the residue of his debt on the additional price so obtained (d).

It was formerly held that where a lease was deposited to secure a debt, the depositary was liable at the instance of the lessor to take an assignment, and to perform the covenants; and it was held he could not abandon the deposit, for being, as it was said, entitled to a legal conveyance, he was considered as having it (e): thus the principle that "what is agreed to be done is considered as done" was extended to third persons; not, however, to all intents and purposes; for where there was a covenant not to assign a lease without the license of the landlord, and the lease was deposited as a security for the debt, Lord Eldon held the deposit was not a forfeiture, but that he could not order the estate to be sold without the consent of the landlord (f). However in the late case of Moores v. Choat, the Vice-Chancellor of England considered that these cases proceeded upon an erroneous application of the principle above referred to; for that it was contrary

(a) Broughton v. Davis, 1 Pri. 216, 222-3. "According to my MS. note of Rex v. Benson, in the Exchequer, 1804," says Mr. Maddock, Pr. and P. i. 677, "it was held that a deposit of deeds as a security prior to the fiat of an extent, is good against the crown; and that if one under marriage articles agrees to settle a particular estate, the crown cannot take the estate;" see Casberd v. Attorney-General, 6 Pri. 411, and cases cited; and Giles v. Grover, 6 Bli. N. S. 292; 1 Phill. 733; et v. supra, Sect. ix. p. 774.

(b) Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 122.

(c) Ex parte Harvey, 1 Mont. & Ch. 261.

(d) Ex parte Morgan, 12 Ves. p. 6, Lord

Erskine; and see 2 Conn. & L. 117.

(e) Lucas v. Commerford, 1 Ves. J. 235; S. C. 3 Bro. C. C. p. 166; but as to this case, see Flight v. Bentley, 7 Sim. p. 149. It has been held that an action of covenant lies against an assignee of a lease to whom an assignment is actually made by way of mortgage security, although he has never entered or taken actual possession; Williams v. Bosanquet, 3 Moore, 500; Eaton v. Jaques, Dougl. 455, contra, was overruled; as to the maxim that what ought to be done is considered as done, v. supra, Chap. vi. Sect. iv.

(f) Ex parte Abdy, 13 April, 1813, mentioned 2 Christ. B. L. 335; Mad. Pr. and P.

to the established principles of the court to hold that, if a lessee contracted to sell his lease and another contracted to buy it, thereupon any right or equity arose to the landlord to compel the purchaser to take an assignment of the lease or to compel the vendor to assign it; that the depositary of a lease for securing a debt has a right to file a bill for foreclosure and to have the lease assigned to him, or if he has an agreement for a sale he may file a bill for specific performance; but that he is not bound to do either: and that until he has exercised his option, or taken possession of the tenements comprised in the lease, he stands to all intents and purposes in the character of an entire stranger to the tenancy; and the law is settled in conformity (a); excepting that it has since been held by Lord Cottenham that it makes no difference whether the equitable mortgagee is in possession or not (b).

A deposit of a lease by a bankrupt gives an equitable lien against his assignees, although there be a covenant not to assign without license, because such covenant does not bind the assignees (c); and it does not create an objection to the usual order being made (d).

If the depositor, having at the time of the deposit a title to the equity of redemption only, afterwards pays off the mortgage, and then becomes bankrupt, the discharge of the mortgage will enure to the benefit of the depositor (e).

It has been lately laid down by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, on the authority of the cases cited below, that a person who purchases without obtaining the title-deeds is not affected with notice of an equitable mortgage (f); however none of the cases to which his Honour refers, excepting Plumb v. Fluitt, relate to the case of the mortgagee having omitted to obtain the title-deeds. The case of Plumb v. Fluitt (g), was to this effect: a person having an equitable mortgage by deposit over one estate, obtained, for the better securing his debt a legal mortgage of that estate, and of another estate, the title-deeds of which, unknown to the mortgagee, had been deposited as a security to another;

(a) Moore v. Choat, 8 Sim. p. 508 (as to which case, see 2 Phill. p. 724); Robinson v. Rosher, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 7.

(b) Moore v. Greg, 2 Phill. pp. 717, 722, 725.

(c) Ex parte Sherman in re Champness, 23rd March, 1820, Mad. MS., Pr. and P. 679: and see Doe dem. Cheere v. Smith, 1 Marsh. 359; 5 Taunt. 795; 1 Rose, 280; but these assigns were not mentioned: see also Ex parte Cocks, 2 Deac. 14; but see Ex parte Abdy, cited supra, 786.

(d) Doe v. Hogg, 4 Dowl. & Ry. p. 226; Ex parte Drake, 1 Mont. D. & D. 539.

(e) Ex parte Bisdee, 1 Mont. D. & D. 333, 388; et v. Frazer v. Jones, 5 Hare, 475, supra.

(f) West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 259, referring to Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anst. 432, Evans v. Bicknell, 6 Ves. 174, and Cathay v. Sydenham 2 Bro. 393; v. supra, Sect. viii. p. 766-7.

(g) 2 Anst. 432.

he inquired for the deeds, and the mortgagor promised to deliver them to him, which promise was evaded on various pretences (a); and as the mortgage was to secure an antecedent debt, not for a present advance, it was natural that he should not propose that any delay should take place on that account. The question was whether the absence of the deeds was constructive notice of the previous deposit, or whether the mortgagee, the defendant, could be affected by constructive fraud or negligence amounting to fraud, in not persisting in obtaining the deeds; both questions were decided in the negative (b). But the question, whether a person purchasing advancing money on mortgage, and omitting to obtain or to make any inquiry as to the title-deeds, can set up the legal estate which he has obtained against a prior equitable mortgagee remains in some degree of doubt. Sir E. Sugden states it as his clear opinion that under such circumstances the equitable mortgagee cannot prevail against the legal estate; that both parties have acted without prudence, the one in not obtaining a conveyance, and the other in not requiring the production of the deeds, and therefore the legal estate must prevail (c). This doctrine is a serious blow to the efficacy of equitable deposits. However, the Vice-Chancellor of England does not appear to be inclined to hold to this doctrine.

By agreement, 1839, Duncan contracted to sell an estate to Corbett for 1400*l.*, Corbett was let into possession; but the purchase money was not then paid: in 1839, Duncan died leaving his real and personal estate to the plaintiffs as trustees: in 1840, Corbett paid 400*l.* part of the purchase money to the plaintiffs, and thereupon they conveyed the estate to Corbett: a receipt for the whole 1400*l.* was indorsed on the deed; but it was agreed that Corbett should give the plaintiffs a mortgage for 1000*l.* the remainder of the purchase money, and that in the mean time the conveyance should be retained by the plaintiffs. In April, 1842, Corbett not having the purchase deed, or, as it would appear, any of the deeds in his possession, conveyed the estate to Morgan to secure 400*l.* and interest, thereby giving him the legal estate. In June, 1842, the plaintiffs filed a bill against Corbett for a specific performance of the agreement to execute a mortgage, which

(a) See 2 Anst. 434, 435, 437.

(b) On the authority of Beckett v. Cordley, 1 Bro. 352; but there the question arose between two equitable incumbrancers, and had nothing to do with the possession of the deeds: Penner v. Jematt, 2 Bro. 652, n.; but that was the case of an assignment of personal estate and a reversion in fee, so that no question as to the delivery of deeds could arise; and Tourle v. Rand, 2 Bro. p. 651; but that also was the case of a mortgage of a reversion.

(c) Sudg. V. and P. vol. iii. p. 472, 10th edit., p. 1054, § 56, 11th edit.; and see Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anstr. p. 439, which however Sir E. Sugden does not refer to; and see Har- rington v. Price, ubi infra.

was decreed. In 1848, the plaintiffs having heard of the mortgage to Morgan filed their bill against Morgan, charging that he had notice that the purchase money remained unpaid; this was denied by Morgan, and he relied on having the legal estate and equal equity: the plaintiffs insisted on their lien and the agreement, and that Morgan had constructive notice of it from the fact of the purchase deed not having been produced by Morgan's mortgagor: the Vice-Chancellor of England held, that as the mortgagee had omitted to call for the title deeds, the lien of the plaintiffs ought to have priority; Lands in this country, said his Honour, being held by title (a), it was the duty of the person who was purchaser to ask for all the deeds (b). It is to be observed that the Vice-Chancellor did not put the case expressly on the ground of constructive notice, or the omission to make such inquiry as must have led to actual notice; though the ground on which he did found his judgment may possibly amount to the same in substance in reference to this point. I am unwilling to offer any opinion of my own as to a point on which there seems to be a conflict of opinion between such distinguished persons; but I may perhaps be permitted to observe that the case before the Vice-Chancellor of

(a) See Lord Erskine's dictum below.

(b) Worthington v. Morgan, xiii. Jur. 316: a MS. case, Hutton v. Hayley, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, Feb. 27, 1849, to the same effect, and Allen v. Knight, xi. Jur. p. 527, were cited; but neither Plumb v. Fluit, 2 Anst. p. 432, or the dicta in West v. Reid, or Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 63-4, or in Sir E. Sugden's work, v. supra, were cited or adverted to. According to this case, if a person deposits the title-deeds by way of equitable mortgage, and then grants a legal mortgage, not producing the deeds, the equitable mortgagee will have priority; a doctrine much in favour of such securities. The cases, such as Tourle v. Rand, sup. p. 788; Harper v. Fauldor, 4 Mad. 129; and Ex parte Hardy, 2 D. & Ch. 394; where the mortgagee could not, in the particular instance, call for the deeds, and those where a reason for the non-production has been given, as in Penner v. Jematt, (sup. 767,) seem to support the Vice-Chancellor's doctrine: and see Farrow v. Rees, 4 Beav. 21. In Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. p. 122, the purchaser had notice that the deeds were in the hands of another; but if the taking a mortgage without the deeds being produced is alone sufficient, the inquiry as to whether the purchaser had notice would seem to have been superfluous: but it is to be observed that Lord Erskine, in that case, says, that possession of an estate is not even prima facie evidence of title, as it is in the case of goods, (but see 1 Hare, 60, and the cases there cited, and sup. 759). The case of Allen v. Knight, 5 Hare, 272, xi. Jur. 528, on appeal, is a case where the mortgagees had actually obtained the deeds on the granting of the mortgage, but in some manner, which was unexplained, one of the mortgagors had got them back and then made the further charge, no charge of fraud or collusion being made against the mortgagees; Lord Cottenham affirmed the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's decision, on the ground that the mere fact of the possession of the title-deeds by the mortgagor is not conclusive against the mortgagee. Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Y. & Coll. 303 (1 Hare, 65-6), was decided on the special circumstances, which were considered to give constructive notice, though Sir E. Sugden does not seem to approve of that case, ibid. There is no doubt that the purchaser may recover the deeds, by means of an action at law; Harrington v. Price, 3 Barn. & Adol. 170; mere negligence, not amounting to fraud, is not a sufficient answer to him, ibid. p. 174; but the Court of Chancery will not aid a mortgagee to recover the deeds from a third person, with whom they have been deposited by the mortgagee, when he has left the deeds in the hands of the mortgagor, Head v. Egerton, 3 P. W. 281; supra, p. 768; and see Ex parte Meux, 1 Gl. & J. 116, ib. 241.

England differs from Plumb v. Fluitt, the only decision which as I believe has a direct bearing on the point, in two particulars: in Plumb v. Fluitt the debt was already due, the purchaser had to take what he could get; in the case before the Vice-Chancellor the mortgagee had the option whether he would advance his money on the security offered or not: in the former case the purchaser was not liable to the imputation of having omitted to require any evidence of title on the part of vendor, he had required it and been deceived; in the case before the Vice-Chancellor the mortgagee, so far as appears, made no inquiry at all: whether these circumstances, together with the aid of Lord Erskine's dictum in Hiern v. Mill in the preceding note, and the analogy which seems to flow from the decision in the late case of Whitworth v. Gaugain (a), are sufficient to sustain the Vice-Chancellor's judgment, which has not, as I understand, met with universal approval in the profession, I leave to the judgment of the reader.

Generally speaking, a person having an equitable lien by deposit can only take such interest as the depositor has to give; therefore, whether he has notice or not of the prior incumbrances, he will rank after them (b). One Webb borrowed 150*l.* of the plaintiff, and signed an agreement to deposit the deeds of a copyhold estate he was about to purchase as a security; he afterwards deposited the copy of court roll with the plaintiff. Robert died, and Thomas Webb, his heir, was admitted, and a new copy was granted to him. In April, 1837, Thomas Webb had notice of the plaintiff's charge. In July, 1837, Mr. Hinton, who had been the solicitor of Thomas in an ineffectual attempt at a sale (his clerk, Battiscombe, having been the active person), lent 50*l.* to Thomas on a deposit of his own copy. Battiscombe, Hinton's clerk, knew of the plaintiff's security in 1835. Battiscombe acted, not only as the clerk and agent of Hinton, but also as agent for Thomas Webb. Lord Langdale was of opinion that the knowledge of Battiscombe in 1835 could not be imputed to Hinton in 1837, or that his knowledge in July, 1837, that the proceeds of the sale were to be applied in discharge of the plaintiff's demand, clearly showed that even he at that time recollected, what he knew in 1835, that that claim was secured on the estate; but his Lordship considered that this was immaterial, for that all that Hinton could take under a mere deposit (he had not the legal estate) was what Webb, the son, could give (c); but, as before observed, even a legal mortgage may

(a) Et v. sup. p. 767, and the last note; Whitworth v. Gaugain is stated infra. See the additional note, No. 2.

(b) V. sup. p. 727, Order of Incumbrances.
(c) Tylee v. Webb, 6 Beav. 556. It is stated in the note that an appeal was pending, be postponed to a prior equitable mortgage on the ground of constructive notice (a).

The Remedy which the deposit of deeds or muniments of title has to enforce his security in the Court of Chancery, is left in considerable doubt upon the authorities. Where the title arises upon a mere deposit, without any agreement showing what is to be the nature of the security, the question must depend upon whether the deposit is to be considered as constituting a lien or charge only, or as an agreement for a mortgage: if it is to be considered as constituting a lien or charge only, then a sale would be the proper form of decree, such being the form in which an equitable charge is rendered effectual; and accordingly, in several decrees, there has been a direction for an immediate sale, just as in the case of an ordinary equitable charge (b).

It certainly has been held by some of the most distinguished judges who have presided in the Court of Chancery, that a mere deposit of deeds or muniments of title with a creditor is equivalent to an agreement to grant a mortgage on the estate, and several decrees have been made upon that footing (c). But besides the decrees before cited but no notice of the hearing is to be found in the subsequently published Indexes; the obtaining the legal estate by an equitable mortgagee, with notice, will not give a priority, though the equitable charge was obtained without notice; Allen v. Knight, 5 Hare, 277.

(a) Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Yo. & Coll. 330 (1 Phill. 255), though, as regards this case, v. supra, p. 785.

(b) Russel v. Russel, ubi supra; Meux v. Ferne, 5 Feb. 1818; Spring v. Allen, 12 Feb. 1830, cited by Lord Cottenham, 2 My. & K. 422. In Pain v. Smith, 2 My. & K. 418, Sir J. Leach held that the deposit created an equitable charge and decreed a sale; but in Brocklehurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. 442, the Vice-Chancellor of England,—though the precise point was not before him, the depositor being dead, which his Honour considered to make a difference and to entitle the depositary to a sale,—said, that the decrees which had been furnished to him by the Registrar (they are mentioned in Mr. Simons' note, p. 440,) showed that Pain v. Smith was manifestly wrong: this case was decided one year before Parker v. Housefield, (see No. 1, additional note,) and was cited in that case. In Smith v. Nelson, Seton on Decrees, 180, there was also a decree for a sale; but, as Mr. Miller has observed, this was the case of a deposit of a lease, and the depositor might have been unwilling to have a decree for an assignment and foreclosure, and thus to make himself liable for the covenants in the lease. Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Abdy, supra, appears to have considered that in the case of a deposit of a lease the proper decree was for a sale.

(c) See Parker v. Housefield, add. note No. 1, at the end of this section; and int. al. Card v. Jaffray, 2 Scho. & Lef. 378, though from p. 382 it would appear that Lord Redesdale only assimilated the case to Russell v. Russell in respect of letting in parol evidence; Moore v. Choat, 8 Sim. 513, arguendo, and p. 523 of the judgment. In that case, and in the late case of Robinson v. Rosher, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 10, 11, which equally as Moore v. Choat arose upon a mere deposit, it seems to have been assumed that the deposit gave, as between the parties, a right to an assignment, but that the landlord could not enforce it: in the view that the deposit only gives a charge, a ready and decisive answer might have been given to the claim of the landlord. See also Malone v. Geraghty, 2 Conn. & L. 240. In Featherstone v. Fenwick, infra, p. 792, the decree was for an absolute assignment. In Tylee v. Webb, 6 Beav. 557 (1843), Lord Langdale gave "the ordinary decree for foreclosure of the equitable mortgage," to which he said the plaintiff was entitled; the question was not debated. In Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 498, which contained directions for a sale, without reference to the analogy of foreclosure, there are dicta of Lord Cottenham, in two cases which came before him not long after the case of Parker v. Housefield, that would lead to the conclusion that, in his Lordship's view, a direction for a sale, giving the depositor or his representatives six months' time to redeem (a), is the proper kind of decree to be pronounced in such cases; and such, perhaps, on the balance of authority, may now be considered to be the proper form of decree: where the depositor is dead, it seems to be admitted that the depositary is entitled to a decree for a sale (b), which is a convenient arrangement, for the affirmed by Lord Cottenham (Miller, p. 62); 4 My. & Cr. 264, which was a case of deposit with a written memorandum, not adverting to a mortgage, a decree was made for a foreclosure, and absolute conveyance in default of payment; but the question argued was as to the power of the trustee to sell or mortgage in any way, no question was raised as to the form of decree. When the case of Russel v. Russel was before the Lords Commissioners, Lord Loughborough and Ashhurst, J., the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to a sale on the footing of his having a lien; in the note, p. 270, it is said that Lord Thurlow afterwards decreed a sale. In two other cases Lord Thurlow, according to the Reporter, said that the deposit of the deeds entitled the depositary to have a mortgage executed, though there were no special agreement to assign, going in this respect beyond the Lords Commissioners. But I find from the entries in the Registrars' books, and their minute books, that the cases of Featherstone v. Fenwick and Harford v. Carpenter were not such as entirely to bear out Mr. Brown's statement of them, or Lord Eldon's recollection of those cases stated in Ex parte Mountfort, 14 Ves. 607. Both were cases of deposits of leases; in the first an order, reciting an agreement to mortgage, was made by consent that the plaintiff should be paid out of the proceeds of the lease which had been sold, and should be at liberty to prove for the difference, if any: the order is in the minute book only. In Harford v. Carpenter the circumstances were special, and evidence was gone into; the lease had been sold by the assignees to one Greenhill in an improper manner; the decree directed a reference to the Master to take an account of the rents received by Greenhill since he had been in possession, and he was ordered to pay them to the plaintiff, and also to assign the lease to the plaintiff absolutely, and no right to redeem was given. I could not find Hales v. Bircham or Brander v. Boles mentioned in Mr. Brown's other note to Russel v. Russel, in the Registrar's books, though every assistance was afforded to me by the officers. In Lucas v. Comerford, 1 Ves. J. 235, 3 Bro. 166, according to the report in Brown, the question did not depend on a mere deposit, there was a covenant that the premises comprised in the lease should be subject to the payment of the sums borrowed; see, as to this case, 8 Sim. 512, 523; et v. supra, n. (e), p. 783.

(a) Lewis v. John, 1 C. P. Coop. 8: Parker v. Housefield, 2 My. & K. 419, was decided in December, 1834; the dates of the subsequent cases are stated in the next note. In Meller v. Woods, 1 Keen, 22, Lord Langdale, after consulting the Lord Chancellor, said, the rule was established to allow the six months in all cases of mortgage, whether legal or equitable; in that case the plaintiffs were materially prejudiced by its application, as their mortgage, according to the terms of the agreement, did not carry interest; and see Thorpe v. Gartside, 2 Y. & Coll. 730; and Metcalfe v. Archbishop of York, in the next note.

(b) Brocklehurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. p. 442. "It was there said," observed Lord Cottenham, in Metcalfe v. Archbishop of York, (1 My. & Cr. 547, Nov. 1836,) "for the defendants, that all equitable charges rest upon specific performance and the right to have a legal charge. This is by no means so. The equitable incumbrancer has totally different remedies; what right has an equitable mortgagee by a deposit of deeds to ask for a legal mortgage?" (cited by the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Moore v. Choat, 8 Sim. 516, without observation); and see the dictum of the same distinguished judge in Price v. Carver, 3 My. & Cr. 161 (Aug. 1837); in that case the right to redeem had descended to an infant, though his Lordship's observation does not specifically point to that fact, nor is it qualified by any reference to the consent of the depositary, or to a sale being for the benefit of the infant, (but see Scholefield v. Heafield, 8 Sim. p. 470,) though a sale has been sometimes directed in the case of surplus, if any, goes to the estate of the depositor: if insufficient, the depositary may prove against the estate for the deficiency. If, together with the deposit, the creditor enters into an agreement in writing, or, according to some of the authorities, verbally only to give a mortgage (a), then the creditor is entitled to have a legal mortgage executed, or a foreclosure, or a sale, if the agreement should include a power of sale, in case he be not redeemed (b). Upon a bill by an equitable mortgagee by deposit, if the decree be for a conveyance of the legal estate and a foreclosure, the decree will contain a direction for delivery up of the possession of the property (c); but where the mortgagee comes for foreclosure of a legal mortgage, he is left to recover possession by ejectment (d). When the deposit is treated as a charge, it is so far assimilated to a mortgage that the depositor and those claiming under him will have six months to redeem (e). Where the equitable mortgagee files a bill praying a sale, the heir of the mortgagor being an infant, the court may clearly order an immediate sale if such appears to be for the infant's benefit (f).

Equitable mortgages are not within Lord Rosslyn's General Order of March, 1794, authorizing a mortgagee to apply for a sale in bankruptcy; but the deposit may apply to the court for a sale (g).

Where the equitable mortgagee applies to the Court of Bankruptcy, relying on the deposit merely, as the necessity for the application is created by the defect in the petitioner's security, the expences of all ordinary mortgages, where the equity of redemption is vested in an infant without reference to either of those circumstances; see Daniell's Pr. by Headlam, 177. In Tipping v. Power, 1 Hare, 410, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram says, "An equitable mortgagee by deposit has no right but to a sale, his contract is that he shall be at liberty to sell the estate and prove for the difference," referred to afterwards by the V. C. 1842, without observation. The decrees made by the same learned judge, whose authority is very high as regards the practice of the court, in King v. Leach, 2 Hare, 57, and Jordan v. Jones (see 2 Phill. 170), were for a sale; and see Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Phillips, 729. The original deposit, it may be observed, at least in ordinary cases, is to secure the repayment of the money borrowed, the obtaining the estate by foreclosure can hardly be said to be the object of a person who takes a security by mere deposit; and if it is, such a speculation is hardly to be encouraged; and yet this is the only possible advantage that he loses by the effect of the deposit being treated as a lien only; in either view the deposit must come to the court to render his security effectual: if he particularly desires to have the estate, he has an opportunity, with leave of the court, to bid for it, and thus to get it at a fair price, et v. supra, p. 783, n. (e).

(a) Hockley v. Bantock, and other authorities, supra, p. 783, n. (e).

(b) Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Phillips, 729; S. C. Cr. & Phill. 325; 3 Hare, 416; Lister v. Turner, x. Jur. 752; 5 Hare, p. 281.

(c) Hiern v. Mill, Seton on Decrees, 179; Price v. Carver, 3 My. & Cr. 157, 161. It was in this case that Lord Cottenham suggested that a decree for a sale was the proper course. If the decree be for a foreclosure and the infant be entitled to the equity of redemption, he must have a day to show cause, ibid. 162; if for a sale no day is given, ibid. 163; 1 C. P. Coop. R. 11; Scholefield v. Heafield, 8 Sim. 470.

(d) Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. 101.

(e) Parker v. Housefield, 2 My. & K. 419.

(f) Redshaw v. Newbold, xii. Jur. 833.

(g) Ex parte Jennings, 2 Swanst. 360; 1 Mad. 331; see 16 Ves. p. 435, and the references.

fair inquiries into the validity of the security ought to be satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale (a); it is fit, said Sir J. Leach, that where the equitable mortgage is not evidenced by writing, the mortgagee should bear the expences of asserting his title in a court of justice: but the rule is otherwise, where the applicant has had the precaution to take a written memorandum; in that case he has his costs (b), and a letter written after the deposit and referring to it only in general terms is sufficient (c).

Where there is no writing, even though it were owing to the bankrupt that no regular mortgage was made, the rule applicable to the absence of writing will apply (d); but if there be a written document, though parol evidence may be required to identify the deposit, the equitable mortgagee will have his costs (e).

Where an equitable mortgagee is satisfied upon a bankruptcy, no release from him is necessary, nor will the expense of it, if taken, be allowed in the solicitor's bill (f). Where an inquiry is directed in bankruptcy as to the title of the petitioner, and he obtains a report in his favour, he will be entitled to the rents from the date of the order of reference (g). An equitable mortgage by deposit is so far recognized by the courts of law, that where the equitable mortgagee has received the rents, he will not be compelled to refund them to an assignee in bankruptcy (h).

A judgment has relation to the time when it is entered up, and it will not affect any bonâ fide conveyance or charge in equity made before the entry of the judgment; it can only attach upon what remains in the debtor: therefore, notwithstanding the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which gives to a judgment the effect of a charge upon the land, an equitable mortgagee retains his right to enforce his security in preference to a subsequent judgment creditor, though he may have acquired the legal seisin by suing out an elegit, and though he may have had no notice of the equitable mortgage (i). Whether a judg-

(a) Ex parte Garbutt, 2 Rose, p. 79; it is not sufficient that there is a memorandum, unless it specifies the purpose; Ex parte Smith, 1 Mont. D. & D. 171.

(b) Ex parte Trew, 3 Mad. 372; Ex parte Brightens, 1 Swanst. 3.

(c) Ex parte Bisdee, 1 Mont. D. & DeG. 333.

(d) Ex parte —, 2 Mad. 281. The rule in bankruptcy will not, it seems, be extended to suits in equity: Reg v. Chambers, 4 Yo. & Coll. 54; Connell v. Hardie, 3 Yo. & Coll. 582.

(e) Ex parte Vauxhall Bridge Company, 1 Gl. & J. 106.

(f) Ex parte Robinson, 21st May, 1820, Mad. MS. Pr. and P. i. 678.

(g) Ex parte Smith, 3 Mont. D. & D. 680.

(h) Garry v. Sharratt, 10 Barn. & C. 716; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 126.

(i) Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Phill. 728, 732, affirming the decision, 3 Hare, 416; and see Averall v. Wade, Ll. & G. 262, inf. 835; and Worthington v. Morgan, supra, 789; et v. sup. p. 325.

ment creditor, who has obtained a charge under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is entitled to an immediate sale, or whether the parties claiming the equity of redemption may require a delay till six months after the Master's report, is left in uncertainty (a).

It may be here observed, that, according to the opinion of Sir E. Sugden, leasehold estates are now, by the effect of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, bound by judgments equally as freeholds (b).

(a) Carlton v. Farlar, 8 Beav. 526 ; see, as to equitable mortgages, Pain v. Smith, 2 My. & K. 417 ; (but which decree the Vice-Chancellor of England, 7 Sim. 442, as before observed, said was clearly wrong in directing a sale;) and Parker v. Housefield, in add. note, No. 1, : six months was given by the decree in Lister v. Turner (1846), 5 Hare, 293.

(b) Sugd. V. and P. ii. 401, 10th edit.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

Parker v. Housefield, 2 My. & K. 420 ; v. supra, p. 791.

This was a case of a deposit of deeds, apparently without any agreement. The Registrar had drawn up the decree according to the usual form in ordinary mortgages. It was insisted, on the part of the plaintiff, the depositary, that this was wrong, and that the decree ought to be for an immediate sale. The defendant does not appear to have objected to the minutes being altered by directing a sale, but he insisted that he ought to have six months to redeem : that was the only question. Lord Cottenham, then Master of the Rolls, in reference to this point, collected and reviewed the precedents of decrees in similar cases ; and his Lordship incidentally examined the authorities as to the nature of the contract which is to be considered as arising from a deposit of deeds. The result was, that it appeared that Lord Thurlow, Lord Chief Baron Eyre, and Lord Eldon (in one case, Newton v. Aldous, 18th July, 1804, the decree, in which there was a direct declaration on the point, had been framed by Lord Eldon himself) had treated the holder of the deeds as entitled to have a mortgage, and several of the decrees had proceeded on that principle. The decree in Newton v. Aldous was, that in default of payment on the day fixed (six months), the plaintiff will be entitled to the said premises, free and clear of all right and interest and equity of redemption, and to have an absolute conveyance accordingly. Three other decrees, in 1806, 1818, and February, 1828, are stated by his Lordship, which were to the same effect. In two (Meux v. Fearne, 25th Feb., 1828, and Spring v. Allen, 5th Feb., 1818) the decrees were for a sale, but six months to redeem were given in each. All that his Lordship decided was, that six months must be given, whether the decree was for a sale or a foreclosure (ibid. 422).

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

The cases relating to the possession of the title-deeds are observed upon in Jarm. Mortg. by Sweet, p. 475 to 486. Mr. Jarman draws this conclusion from Plumb v. Fluitt—" If the case simply be, that the mortgagor deposits the deeds with A., and afterwards makes a mortgage to B. without notice, A. has no equity against B. to have the benefit of the legal estate which the latter has acquired ;" ibid. p. 482.

§ 3.—Of Liens.

Common-law Right of Lien.

Lien on Ship.

Claims on Earnings by Part-owner and by Mortgagees, &c. in respect of Repairs and Disbursements.

Certificate of Registry—Master—Ship-brokers.

Lien of Creditor by Judgment—his Remedies.

Lien of Solicitor.

On Deeds.

On Fund recovered.

Rights in Equity equivalent to Liens.

The common-law right of Lien attaches on personal property exclusively, and is subject to the same rules at law and in equity (a). A lien at law has been defined to be a right in one man to retain that which is in his possession, belonging to another, till certain demands of him, the person in possession, are satisfied (b); and it may arise by contract or by usage: and the foundation of lien at common law being possession, it is, generally speaking, lost by abandonment of possession (c). But a creditor may obtain a right over property not actually in his possession or vested in him, which has been, though improperly, called a lien; for instance, a factor having sold goods, has a lien on the price of the goods in the hands of the buyer, though he has not the actual possession either of the goods or the money; the reason being that the factor is the legal hand to receive the price. So where goods have been deposited by way of security, as for the payment of a bill of exchange, a party who has not the possession, as an indorsee of the bill, may incidentally become entitled to the benefit of the deposit (d).

And as regards liens, or claims in the nature of liens, upon Ships:—A shipwright, in whose possession a ship is placed to repair it, may not be bound to part with the possession until he is paid for the repairs, any more than a tailor or other artificer in regard to the object of his particular trade, unless there be an agreement, or such an usage

(a) Oxenham v. Esdaile, 2 You. & J. 493; Gladstone v. Birley, 2 Meriv. 404; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 3.

(b) Per Grose, J., 2 East, 235; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, ubi supra. In the 1st chapter of that learned work the doctrine as to liens at common law will be found.

(c) Jarman, Mortgage, p. 12.

(d) Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, pp. 13, 14; and see Hammonds v. Barclay, 2 East, 227; Ex parte Perfect, 1 Mont. 25; Ex parte Waring, 2 Rose, 182; Ex parte Copeland, 3 Deac. & Ch. 199.

in the trade as may amount to an agreement; but a shipwright who has parted with possession, or a tradesman who has provided ropes and material without taking possession, is not, by the law of England, preferred to other creditors, nor have they any lien on the ship (a). As regards the Owners of a ship, they are tenants in common, and not joint-tenants; upon a bankruptcy, therefore, the bankrupt's share passes to his creditors under the bankruptcy, free from any lien of the other tenants in common, in respect of any sums they have paid, or have become liable to pay, for repairs. The freight is liable for the joint demands, but the ship is not, and this stands upon the nice distinction of a tenancy in common (b).

The Court of Chancery follows the law when claims depending on the right of lien incidentally come before it for decision. The subject of claims upon the earnings of ships by a part owner, he being managing owner, and by mortgagees and others in respect of repairs and disbursements, was lately the subject of an elaborate judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram. The claimants upon the freight unapplied were first the plaintiff, who was registered owner of one-eighth and managing owner and ship's husband, in which character he had expended or become liable to pay a large sum, exceeding the amount of the unappropriated freight, for the repair and outfit of the ship preparatory to the voyage; he had received his own share of the earnings: the other claimants were mortgagees of seven-eighths of the ship and of the freight, the mortgage having been made during the voyage: the ship's earnings arose from a cargo of whale oil, not in the shape of freight. The Vice-Chancellor held (c) that the earnings must follow the general law in partnership cases, and were therefore liable to the joint demands, and that there was no distinction in this respect between earnings and freight; the expenses of earning the freight are first to be paid in ascertaining what freight is coming to the parties: the ship was owned in common, but the adventure was joint (d): and the Vice-Chancellor held that the same rule applied even to the expenses of the repairs of the hull of the ship (e), those repairs being done with a view to the particular adventure in which the earnings were made, and without which that adventure could not have been (a) Abbott on Shipping, by Shee, 8th edit. p. 143. The master has no lien for repairs in port in England; see Hussey v. Christie, 13 Ves. 594; 3 Swanst. p. 139; Ex parte Halkett, 3 Ves. & B. 135; nor à fortiori have other persons employed by him, Buxton v. Snee, 1 Ves. 154.

(b) Ex parte Harrison, 2 Rose, 77-8; Ex parte Young, 2 Ves. & B. 242, overruling, in effect, Doddington v. Hallet, 1 Ves. 497.

(c) On the authority of Holderness v. Shackells, 8 B. & C. 612; and Ex parte Hill, 1 Mad. 66; and Ex parte Young, supra.

(d) Green v. Briggs, 6 Hare, pp. 403, 404 405, 408.

(e) The ship had been broken up.

undertaken; and the Vice-Chancellor seemed to be of opinion that the expenses in repairs not having been exhausted with the adventure did not alter the case (a). It was not necessary to resort to the fact that the plaintiff was managing owner, though that would give a new ground for his claim (b); and the Vice-Chancellor added, that he should not have decided against the plaintiff without giving him the benefit of the evidence in support of the usage in his favour, but which, as he decided the case on general grounds, it was not necessary to resort to: and, for the same reason, it was unnecessary to enter into the question of notice as respects the mortgagees (c).

The master of a ship has no lien on the certificate of registry, either for his wages, or for moneys disbursed by him for the use of the ship; nor have the ship-brokers any lien on the certificate of registry for advances made by them to the owner for the use of the ship; nor has the master of a ship any lien or claim on the accruing freight for his wages or for moneys disbursed by him, without a special contract (d): a person who advances moneys for repairs of a ship on a bottomry bond, with notice of a prior mortgage, cannot claim as against the mortgagee any lien for his expenses beyond the amount of the bond (e).

As regards what has been called, but improperly, the lien of a creditor by Judgment (f); where the Court of Chancery is selling the estate on the decease of the debtor, the Court will pay off the judgment debt (g); but Mr. Jarman observes that it is stated too largely in some books (h) that the Court will in all cases accelerate the creditors' remedy by a sale. The remedy which a judgment creditor might have had, prior to the late stat. 1 Vict. c. 110, against the beneficial interest in equity, when he had none at law, has before been

(a) 6 Hare, 407.

(b) Ibid. 408.

(c) Ibid. 409.

(d) Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112.

(e) Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Phill. 323, note.

(f) See Lord Cottenham's judgment, Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 My. & Cr. p. 407, 417. Of the remedy which the judgment creditor had by the more ancient statutes, see Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 27-39, 50, 51; and of his remedies by the statute 1 Vict. c. 110, see p. 48, et v. supra, p. 722; and as to the priorities of judgments in the administration of assets, see ibid. p. 54: but as docketing under 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20, is, as before mentioned, abolished by stat. 2

Vict. c. 11, which has some special provisions as regards purchasers, priority can no longer be lost by that omission; v. ibid. p. 64: of the effect of bankruptcy upon judgments, see Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 55, et seq., et inf. p. 799; and of contribution, see p. 60, et seq.; of the satisfaction and release of a judgment, ibid. p. 62, et seq. In the same work, p. 64, et seq., the law in regard to crown debts is stated. The general doctrines may also be found in Mr. Coote's valuable work: I have referred specifically to Mr. Sweet's edition of Jarman, as being later in date.

(g) Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 610.

(h) On Mortgages, by Sweet, 39, referring to Coote on Mortgages, p. 78.

adverted to (a): in giving this relief, equity followed the law, and only gave a remedy for a moiety of the lands (b). However, a judgment creditor might have applied for the aid of the Court to prevent an outstanding legal estate being used in bar of his execution at law, or for a receiver; and he will have his due priority allowed to him where the estate of the debtor is administered in the Court of Chancery (c); but in any case, to procure relief in equity, the creditor, when plaintiff, must show by his bill that he has proceeded at law to the extent necessary to give him a complete title: thus, in the case above alluded to, he must show that he has sued out the writ of elegit or fieri facias, the execution of which is avoided; but it is not necessary for the plaintiff to obtain a return to the writ (d). In the case of an equity of redemption, as it was necessary that a judgment creditor should redeem the whole mortgage, he thereby became, on redemption, mortgagee of the whole, so that he might tack his judgment debt against the whole; and, by the same rule, the judgment creditor was paid out of the whole produce of the estate remaining after satisfying prior charges, where an estate was directed to be sold for payment of debts (e): but this has now become immaterial, as the statute before referred to has (sect. 13) given the creditor a charge upon the whole of the real estate of the debtor, under certain regulations including partial and reversionary interests, which cannot be extended (f). It seems to be considered that a judgment obtained after a sale, and of which the purchaser has notice, is a lien on unpaid purchase money, though it does not affect the estate (g).

It may here be observed, that it has been decided, on the effect of the Irish Bankrupt Act, 6 Will. IV. c. 14, § 126, but without reference to the Act 1 Vict. c. 110, or the corresponding Act operating in Ireland, that if a trader confesses a judgment to one, and afterwards mortgages his estate to another, and then becomes bankrupt; the mortgagee will not, as in the case of an absolute purchase, take, subject to the judg-

(a) Forth v. Duke of Norfolk, 4 Mad. 504; supra, p. 40; et v. Tunstall v. Trappes, 3 Sim. 286.

(b) O'Gorman v. Comyn, 2 Scho. & L. 137, 150; Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 477, 608; Ambl. 13. Now the whole and not a moiety only may be taken in execution, stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104; v. supra, vol. i. p. 295.

(c) Davidson v. Foley, 2 Bro. p. 203; Plaskett v. Dillon, 1 Hog. 324; 2 Bli. N. S. 239; and the other cases cited Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 40, 41; White v. Bishop of Peterborough, and Silver v. Bishop of Norwich, are in 3 Swanst. R.; these are cases of receivers appointed on sequestrations: and see Redesdale, Pl. 148-9, Smith's edit.

(d) Redesdale on Pl. ubi supra; Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 My. & Cr. 419: but there are exceptions, v. supra, p. 662; and Barnewall v. Barnewall, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 24.

(e) Sharpe v. Earl of Scarborough, 4 Ves. 538, 542; Tunstall v. Trappes, 3 Sim. 300.

(f) On the effect of this act, see Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 48, et seq.; particularly as to terms for years and as to the defeating of powers of appointment, et v. supra, 795.

(g) Ibid. pp. 47, 48.

ment; by reason, that the Bankrupt Act cuts down the operation of judgment debts against the general assets of the bankrupt which are to be administered in the bankruptcy (a).

As regards the lien of an Attorney or Solicitor (b):—The lien of a solicitor on the deeds and papers of his client is merely a right to withhold the papers from his client, and not a right to enforce any claim against him (c); so long as the client allows the papers to remain in the solicitor's hands, the lien is unavailing (d). It is quite settled that the right of lien is, as against the client and his heirs and executors and other representatives, general; that though the papers may have come into the solicitor's hands in different transactions, he has a lien against the client and his representatives for the general balance due to him (e). It is also clear that a prior incumbrancer can never be affected by this lien, though the solicitor may not have had any notice of such incumbrance: the solicitor's right to the deeds is only commensurate with that which the client had at the time of the deposit (f).

Where deeds were delivered to a solicitor to raise money, and the solicitor failed in his purpose, but the deeds were left in his possession, he was allowed to withhold the deeds, as subject to his general lien (g).

The solicitor's lien for his costs is not confined to deeds and papers, but extends to books and other articles delivered to him for the purpose of being exhibited to witnesses at the trial of an action (h); but he has no lien on his client's will (i), nor on deeds and papers which came into his possession, not in the character of solicitor, but as steward (k).

The lien depends, not on contract, but on the law, and the law cannot give a lien for the debt of the client upon the deeds not

(a) White v. Baylor, 4 Dru. & War. 297, 301.

(b) Of mortgages to solicitors, vide supra, p. 630.

(c) Blunden v. Desart, 2 Conn. & L. 119; Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. 358.

(d) Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. p. 358: on the general doctrine, see Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, p. 8, et seq. It may be observed, that the right to Tax the solicitor's bill is personal to the party who employs him; if a trustee pays a bill containing improper items, he may be liable to his cestuis que trust, but they cannot apply to tax the bill so as to make the solicitor refund; Langford v. Mahony, 2 Conn. & L. 320.

(e) Lord Chancellor Sugden, Blunden v. Desart, 2 Conn. & L. p. 120. In this case a very ample collection of the authorities on the subject of the lien of a solicitor will be found. As to the different acts by which it may be lost, see Ex parte Nesbitt, 2 Scho. & L. 279, and infra, p. 801.

(f) Ibid.; and Smith v. Chichester, 1 Conn. & L. 486; Morgan v. Scott, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 128; and see Petty v. Wathen, infra, and Young v. English, 7 Beav. 17, and Blunden v. Desart, ubi sup.

(g) Ex parte Pemberton, 18 Ves. 282.

(h) Friswell v. King, 15 Sim. 191.

(i) Balch v. Symes, T. & R. 92.

(k) Champernown v. Scott, 6 Mad. p. 93.

belonging to the client, but to others: as against a purchaser or a mortgagee who is pro tanto a purchaser, the lien cannot prevail for subsequent advances (a).

Where a client employs A. and B., and they then take C. into partnership with them; it has been held that A. and B. have no lien for their debt on the papers that come into the hands of A., B., and C. (b): as they do not lose their lien for their former debt by taking another partner, so they do not gain an additional one (c).

The lien of a solicitor upon the title deeds of his client is good as against a judgment creditor (it is different as to bond creditors) only to the extent of the costs incurred at the time of the obtaining the judgment, and although execution may not have been sued out (d). When a mortgage is paid off, the solicitor of the mortgagee cannot retain the deeds which have been deposited with him by the mortgagee on the ground that he has a lien upon them for the expenses of the transaction due to him from the mortgagee (e). Where a defendant is ordered by the decree to deliver up all deeds, &c., in his possession, the solicitor with whom the defendant has deposited the deeds for the purpose of the suit will be ordered to deliver them up (f). A solicitor cannot refuse to produce a deed executed in his favour by his client with a power of revocation; he ought to have given to him a counterpart (g).

The lien of a solicitor as against the client extends further than a mortgage to him, for it extends to subsequent costs (h); but if the solicitor take a security he abandons his lien (i). A solicitor has no lien on the estate for any sum he may have advanced to buy off an adverse claimant (k).

The lien of a solicitor being merely a right to withhold the papers from his client, and not a right to enforce his claim against him, it is unlike a lien arising in the case of a contract: it has not the character of a pledge or mortgage, so that after he has parted with the deeds or papers, whether voluntarily or under an order made at the instance of a person having a paramount right and therefore entitled to a pro-

(a) Blunden v. Desart, 2 Conn. & L. 130, 131.

(b) Re Forshaw, 16 Sim. 121.

(c) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Petty v. Wathen, 15th March, 1849; this case is now under appeal; it will be reported in Mr. Hare's next volume.

(d) Blunden v. Desart, 2 Conn. & L. 111; see pp. 122-3, 127, 129, 130.

(e) Wakefield v. Newbon, 6 Rep. Q. B. p. 276; and see Lee v. Barlow, 5 Railway Ca.

(Exch.), pp. 2, 3; and, Rider v. Jones, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 329, 332, 334.

(f) Bell v. Taylor, 8 Sim. p. 216; and see Rider v. Jones, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 334.

(g) Balch v. Symes, T. & R. 92.

(h) Lord Chancellor Sugden, Blunden v. Desart, 2 Conn. & L. 114, 125.

(i) Balch v. Symes, ubi sup., Lord Eldon; Chace v. Westmore, 5 M. & Selw. 180; of securities given to a solicitor, v. sup. 630, 631.

(k) Christian v. Field, 2 Hare, 184.

duction, the lien, at least as regards third persons, is gone; to treat it otherwise would be to treat the right of lien as an incumbrance, which it is not (a). If the solicitor voluntarily, without any agreement, produces a document which is necessary to enable the client to establish his title to a fund, he cannot afterwards fasten upon the fund recovered for remuneration (b).

It would seem, from the language of Lord Eldon in Lord v. Wormleighton (c), that a solicitor's lien may be transferred to the succeeding solicitor, if he shall have paid him off.

The lien upon the Fund realized in the suit, which is a lien which the solicitor may actively enforce (d), is confined to the costs in the suit, or costs immediately connected with it (e).

A solicitor was discharged by his client: he had a deed in his possession; this deed he produced as evidence in the cause; it was held that he had no lien for his general costs; but he was allowed to have a lien for his costs in the cause, not in respect of his lien on the deed, but under the general lien of the solicitor on the fund (f). A fund in court was decreed to the assignees of a defendant who had become bankrupt, and certain costs were ordered to be paid to the defendant by the plaintiff; the defendant's solicitor applied, alleging that the plaintiff was insolvent, for immediate payment of his costs out of the fund in court, which the Lord Chancellor ordered on appeal (g). An executrix as such was indebted to the estate in respect of her receipts; an annuity was given to her by the will: her annuity as it became due was ordered to be applied in payment of the debt due to the estate, and her solicitor was declared to have a lien for his taxed costs upon any payment which might become due to the executrix in respect of her annuity after satisfaction of the debt (h).

As the law allows the assignment of debts, a debt due to an attorney for costs may be assigned; and if it be assigned the assignee may be entitled in some measure to the dormant lien for that debt, as an additional security (i). A solicitor to whom his client has given

(a) Blunden v. Desart, 2 Conn. & L. 120, 121; and see Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. 358. Lord C. Sugden, on the case stated by Mr. Maddock, Pr. and P. i. p. 755, being cited to him (2 Conn. & L. p. 117), where the deeds having been delivered by the solicitor to an executor, to enable him to maintain certain suits, the executor was held liable for the costs, said there must have been a contract.

(b) Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. 359; as to his liability to produce, see 10 Beav. 234, 270.

(c) Jacob, R. 582.

(d) Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. 357-8.

(e) Lann v. Church, 4 Mad. 391 (4 My. & Cr. 357); Lucas v. Peacock, 9 Beav. 180.

(f) Bozon v. Bolland, 4 My. & Cr. p. 354. The marginal abstract would imply that the lien was given in respect of the original lien on the deed. Lord Cottenham, in this case, disapproved of the dictum of Sir T. Plumer, in Worrall v. Johnson, 2 Jac. & W. 214.

(g) Pounset v. Humphreys, 1 C. P. Coop. R. 142.

(h) Skinner v. Sweet, 3 Mad. 244.

(i) Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Bull v. Falkner, xiii. Jur. 93, et v. sup. note (c).

bonds or bills cannot rely upon them as another person might to prove the existence of his debt; but must, irrespective of such securities, prove the debt for which such securities were given (a).

Rights in equity equivalent to liens may arise under various circumstances. There are liens, said Sir W. Grant, which exist only in equity, and of which equity alone can take cognizance (b). If an estate is mortgaged and the mortgagor has sold successively various portions of the estate to different purchasers, if the mortgaged debt is paid by one, he has a right to compel the other purchasers to contribute (c). The lien of a joint-purchaser for repairs has been already mentioned (d); but it seems that where two or more purchase an estate, and one pays the money and the estate is conveyed to them both; the one who pays the money gains neither a lien nor a mortgage, because there is no contract for either; nor can it be construed as a resulting trust, as such a trust cannot arise at an after period: and perhaps, says Sir E. Sugden, the only remedy he has is to file a bill for a contribution (e). If one of two joint-tenants of a lease renew for the benefit of both, he will have a lien on the moiety of the other joint-tenant for a moiety of the fines and expenses (f).

If a person being entitled to an estate stands by without interference, whilst another innocently builds or makes improvement on the land, thinking that he has a title to it, the person making such improvements will be entitled to compensation (g).

It has been held that where a man agrees to sell his estate and to lend money to the purchaser for improving the estate; he, still having the legal estate, will have a lien for the advances so made, as well as for the purchase-money (h).

As regards liens in equity the following may be given as additional illustrations. A trustee is entitled to a lien upon the trust estate for his expences, so long as it remains trust estate, and in whatever shape it

(a) Lawless v. Mansfield, 1 Dr. & W. 557.

(b) Gladstone v. Birley, 2 Meriv. 403; et v. int. al. Cotesworth v. Stephens, 4 Hare, 193.

(c) Averall v. Wade, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. p. 252; et v. Barnes v. Racster, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 401; Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atk. 448; Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. p. 391: but see Hartley v. O'Flaherty, Llo. & G. temp. Plunkett, 216.

(d) Supra, 206, 304; Lake v. Craddock, 1 Eq. Ab. 291; S. C. 3 P. W. 158; Sugd. V. and P. 902, § 2: and see, on the subject of a lien for repairs and improvements, Neesom v.

Clarkson, 4 Hare, 103, a case where the husband conceiving he was entitled in fee, paid off the vendor's lien, and made improvements.

(e) Sugd. V. and P. 902, referring to the observations of Lord Langdale, in Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. p. 137.

(f) Ibid., p. 905; Hamilton v. Denny, 1 Ball & B. 199.

(g) Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. p. 444; Lord Cawdor v. Lavis, 1 Yo. & Coll. 432.

(h) Ex parte Linden, 1 Mont. D. & D. 435, Sir J. Cross.

may be, whether it be expressed in the instrument or not (a); but the agents and persons employed by the trustees have no claim upon the trust fund (b).

Annuitants scheduled to a trust deed do not acquire any lien upon the trust estate therein comprised by force of the trust deed, unless they are made parties to the deed (c).

Where a transaction is set aside as usurious at the instance of the assignees of the party who granted the security, the creditor is not entitled to a lien for his advances; he is entitled to interest at five per cent. to the date of the fiat; but not to call upon the assignees to pay what may be due; he can only prove for the balance under the fiat (d).

One of several residuary legatees, with the concurrence of the others, induced the executors to sell out stock forming part of the residuary estate, and to lend him the proceeds, on his executing to them a warrant of attorney, and depositing certain title deeds as a security for the replacement of the stock and payment of the dividends, but without any express lien upon or reference to his share of the residue; it was held that the executor had on the bankruptcy of the residuary legatee a lien on his share (e).

Where a person having a general lien takes an express security on an estate, as a general rule, it will be presumed that he means to rely on his express security only: one Kent purchased of Bond the lands in question; he mortgaged them for securing part of the purchase money, and gave a promissory note for the other part: it was held that Bond had no lien on the land for the promissory note (f).

(a) Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. p. 8; see
Ex parte Swinburne, Mont. & Ch. 119.

(b) Worrall v. Harford, ubi sup.

(c) Foster v. Blackstone, 1 My. & K. 310.

(d) Belcher v. Varden, 2 Coll. 175-6.

(e) Ex parte Makins, 2 Mont. D. & De G.
p. 508.

(f) Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281; Sugd. V.
and P. 862; v. supra, p. 773.

SECTION XI.—Of the Mode in which the Account is to be taken between the Mortgagor and Mortgagee, and particularly where the Mortgagor is in Possession—Costs.

Account against Mortgagee in Possession.

Not allowed to make any Charge for Trouble.

But may charge what he has properly paid to a Receiver.

Expences of Repairs, &c.

Liability for Waste.

Expences of Improvements.

Annual Rests.

Interest to be paid on Rents received after the Debt has been discharged.

Wilson v. Metcalfe.

Semble, Account between Mortgagor and First Mortgagee, prima facie, binds the Second Mortgagee.

Appropriation of Payments.

Costs of Mortgagee, and Costs in Suits for Redemption and Foreclosure generally.

THE principles upon which the account between the mortgagor and mortgagee is to be taken, may be collected from the foregoing pages (a); and several of the points which ordinarily occur in taking the account, as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, have already been generally adverted to (b). The case of the mortgagee entering into possession is that which demands more particular attention.

(a) V. int. al. supra, 616, 629, 642.

(b) For instance, the following points (int. al.), besides those referred to in the following pages, have been generally noticed.—The right of the mortgagee to have six months' notice before he is paid off, p. 652; and where the money is to be paid clear of deductions for commission, &c. p. 653. That the mortgagor cannot, unless under special circumstances, be called upon to account for the rents he has received, supra, p. 646-7. That the mortgagee in possession cannot be called upon to account for rents paid over to the mortgagor without notice of the second mortgage, p. 648, and see Archdeacon v. Bowes, M'Clel. 165. How the statutes for the limitation of actions affect the mortgagee's claim for interest, p. 685, 716, 724, note (b). That the mortgagee cannot claim interest upon interest under any stipulation to that effect in the mortgage deed, p. 628, 656 (with an exception in favour of bankers, p. 629); or that the interest shall be advanced to a higher rate in default of payment, unless in the way of penalty, p. 631; and that he cannot, with notice, turn interest, even when due, into principal, as against a subsequent mortgagee; and see Montague v. Ratcliffe, 2 Fonbl. 438. That the mortgagee cannot charge for management, p. 649; and in what cases the mortgagee of a West India estate is entitled to a commission on consignments, p. 628-9. How Emblements are to be accounted for where the mortgagor is evicted by the mortgagee, p. 646. That a mortgagee is not entitled to surplus rents in the hands of a receiver appointed for the benefit of strangers, p. 647. That the mortgagee in possession is liable to the second mortgagee for any rents, &c., he may pay over to the mortgagor after notice, p. 648. The right of the mortgagee to add any expences properly incurred by him, and the situation of the mortgagee in regard to the expence of working mines, and the like, p. 650. The

A mortgagee in possession must account for the rents and profits, so that they may be applied, after deducting all reasonable expences and allowances, towards the discharge of the debt. The common decree against a mortgagee in possession now is, for an account "of what he has received, or what he might have received without his own wilful default" (a): the mortgagee is not, however, bound to enter into speculations, nor indeed will he be allowed the expences if entered into (b). Any sums received subsequently to the decree must be brought into the account (c). The obtaining judgment in ejectment is, as before observed, for this purpose, in most cases, the same as entering into possession (d); but where the mortgagee is in possession as agent of the mortgagor, he will not be treated as mortgagee in possession (e): where the mortgagee enters, and then permits the mortgagor to receive the rents, he will be accountable to a subsequent incumbrancer, of whose incumbrance he had notice, as mortgagee in possession (f). Where the decree against the mortgagee in possession had directed that an account should be taken of what he had received, or might have received, with an allowance for expences and improvements in the usual form; he was charged with the gross amount of what he had received from working mines, and was not allowed his expences in working; the Vice-Chancellor observed that the mortgagee had in fact sold away a part of the inheritance (g). If the mortgagee has turned out, or refused to accept, a responsible tenant, he is liable for the loss that may be sustained by reason of such act (h). If it be proved that the premises were let at a certain rent at condition of an assignee of a mortgage as regards interest on the interest which he may have paid, p. 656; and of a purchaser who has given less than the amount secured, p. 656-7: and the question as to the costs of a person to whom an assignment is made pendente lite is noticed p. 692. The obligation of the party redeeming to pay all arrears of interest due to the party sought to be redeemed, p. 666. The doctrine as to mortgages to solicitors for costs is stated, p. 630-1; and it may be observed that the delivery of the bill is not an essential preliminary, Ex parte Bovill (note to Christian v. Field, 2 Hare, p. 179; though the case, as reported 2 Mont. & Ayr. 382, n. (a), would lead to a contrary conclusion); and see Christian v. Field, 2 Hare, 183; and Bristow v. Warner, 10 Ir. Eq. Rep. 246, to same effect; and Harrison v. Wiltshire, 9 Sim. 255. The terms in regard to payment of interest on the opening of a foreclosure are noticed p. 688; and the rule as to costs where the deeds have been lost is stated p. 620.

(a) Berney v. Sewell, 1 Jac. & Walk. 650;

contra, 1 Ch. Ca. 258; and see Seton on Decrees, 145, and the cases there cited; and Beare v. Prior, 6 Beav. 184.

(b) Hughes v. Williams, 12 Ves. 493, et v. infra, n. (g), and supra, p. 650.

(c) Bulstrode v. Bradley, 3 Atk. 582; the same rule applies to a trustee, ibid.; v. infra, note (g).

(d) Duke of Buckingham v. Gayer, 1 Vern. 258; supra, p. 649.

(e) Lord Trimleston v. Hamill, 1 Ball & B. 383. See Page v. Linwood, Sugd. Law of Prop. p. 581, 4 Cl. & Fin. 399; there, under special circumstances, the mortgagee was held not to be a mortgagee in possession.

(f) Coppring v. Cooke, 1 Vern. 270. In Bentham v. Haincourt, Prec. Ch. p. 30, it was held that the mortgagee could not claim any interest against the subsequent incumbrancers during that time; nothing is there said as to notice: et v. sup. p. 648.

(g) Thornycroft v. Crockett, xii. Jur. 1081, Vice Chancellor of England.

(h) Anon. 1 Vern. 45.

any time during the mortgagee's possession, it will, it seems, be for the mortgagee to show that such was not the rent during the whole time (a). The doctrine as to agreements that the mortgagee should hold at a certain rent, has been stated above (b).

On the principle that a mortgagee is not permitted to obtain any advantage out of the mortgage fund beyond the principal and interest, and it may be added on grounds of policy (c), he is not allowed to make a charge as receiver, if he himself has personally received the rents (d); and this, although it may have been agreed that he should be paid for his trouble in receiving them (e), and though a receiver might have been employed at the expence of the mortgagor (f); but if he has actually paid a bailiff, whom he has properly employed, for receiving the rents, he will be allowed such payment (g): however, it is only where the nature of the property requires it, and where the owner himself in the ordinary course of management would have had to employ one, that the mortgagee is entitled to employ a bailiff or receiver (h), unless with the sanction of, or by contract with, the mortgagor (i): the same principle applies to a West India mortgage (k): where a Receiver is appointed by deed with a per centage, and his expences are to be paid in the first place, and the property is of such a description as that it cannot be supposed that he was personally to attend and receive the rents, he may employ an attorney, and charge the cost as part of his expences (l).

A question often arises as to what expences are to be allowed to the mortgagee, particularly in respect of Repairs and Improvements, which he alleges to have made, which has been briefly adverted to in a former page (m). If a mortgagee has expended money in supporting the right of the mortgagor to the estate, he may add this to the principal of his

(a) Blacklock v. Barnes, Select C. C. 53; but see Metcalfe v. Champion, 1 Molloy, 238, where Sir A. Hart states the general rule.

(b) V. supra, p. 633.

(c) Drew v. Power, 1 Sch. & Lef. 182; Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Sch. & Lef. 214, 218; 1 My. & K. 281; v. supra, p. 628-630.

(d) Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518; Bonithon v. Hockmore, 1 Vern. 316; Carew v. Johnston, 2 Sch. & Lef. 301; Davis v. Dendy, 3 Mad. p. 170; Leith v. Irvine, 1 My. & K. 287, and the cases there cited.

(e) French v. Baron, 2 Atk. 120; Scott v. Brest, 2 T. R. 238; 1 My. & K. 281, 286.

(f) Langstaffe v. Fenwick, 10 Ves. 405; and see Gould v. Tancred, 2 Atk. 534.

(g) Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518; Bonithon v. Hockmore, 1 Vern. 316; 2 Sch. & Lef. 301; Davis v. Dendy, 3 Mad. 170; and see Leith v. Irvine, 1 My. & K. 295-6.

(h) Langstaffe v. Fenwick, Davis v. Dendy, ubi sup.; Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518; and see Gilbert v. Dyneley, 3 Scott, N. R. 379; v. supra Sect. ii. p. 648.

(i) Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. 271, 272.

(k) Chambers v. Goldwin, ubi supra; Leith v. Irvine, 2 My. & K. 281; Forrest v. Elwes, 2 Meriv. 68.

(l) Gilbert v. Dyneley, 3 Scott, N. S. 364.

(m) V. supra, p. 649, 650, 653; and see, on this point, the decree in Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 273.

debt; and it will carry interest (a) at the same rate as the mortgage debt (b). If a mortgagee of a leasehold interest pays renewal fines he is entitled to be reimbursed with interest (c); as, on the other hand, any profit or benefit he may make by renewal of leases or otherwise, in the event of redemption, accrues for the benefit of the mortgagor (d): indeed, the general principle as regards renewals of leases is, that if a person having a particular interest in a lease renew it, it shall be for the benefit of every one who is interested in the old lease (e). An inquiry will not generally be directed as to extra expences, in the absence of any proof that such have been disbursed (f).

It is to be observed that a mortgagee in possession is not obliged to lay out money any further than to keep the estate in necessary repair (g); nor is he bound to leave the houses and buildings on the estate, especially after a long-continued possession, in as good condition as he found them (h): but he is not permitted to pull down houses or the like, or to injure them; if he do so, in taking the account he will be charged with the amount of the damage sustained (i): however he will be allowed his expences in pulling down houses on a copyhold estate which are ruinous, and building better ones, where else the estate might have been forfeited (k); and such repairs as are necessary for the support or protection of the property he will of course be allowed for with interest (l): but the mortgagee has not a right to make it more expensive for a mortgagor to redeem, than may be absolutely necessary for the purpose of keeping the property in a proper state of repair, at least without the concurrence or assent of the mortgagor (m). If indeed the mortgagee has obtained the consent of the mortgagor, or has given him notice in which the mortgagor has acquiesced, then the mortgagee may be allowed for sums of money which he has laid out in increasing the value of the property; but he has no right of his own accord to lay out money for that purpose, for this might be done in

(a) 3 Atk. 518.

(b) Woolley v. Drag, 2 Anst. 551.

(c) Hamilton v. Denny, 1 Ball & B. 202; Manlove v. Bale, 2 Vern. p. 84; Lucam v. Mertins, 1 Serj. Wils. R. 34.

(d) Rakestraw v. Brewer, 2 P. W. 511, affirmed on appeal; and the cases in Cox's note.

(e) Taster v. Marriott, Ambler, 668, and Blunt's note, where the leading authorities are collected. In Owen v. Williams, Ambl. 735, the principle was applied by fixing on the money the tenant for life had received for giving up her pretensions; and see Waters v. Bailey, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 224-5.

(f) Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 249.

(g) Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518.

(h) Russell v. Smithies, 1 Anst. p. 96: the premises were malt-houses; the mortgagee had been in possession forty years.

(i) Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 248; Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 480; Hanson v. Derby, 2 Vern. 392; et v. supra, p. 650.

(k) Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 480.

(l) Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 248 (N. B. Plaintiff is there put for defendant, p. 250); Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 518; Lord Trimleston v. Hamill, 1 Ball & B. 385.

(m) Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 248; Lord Trimleston v. Hamill, 1 Ball & B. 385.

such a way as to make it utterly impossible for the mortgagor with his means ever to redeem.—This has been called improving a mortgagor out of his estate (a).

Another very important question constantly arises, as to when and how the surplus rents are to be applied in the reduction of the principal of the debt (b). The general rule has been stated to be, that wherever the gross sum received by the mortgagee exceeds the interest, it shall be applied to sink the principal (c); and that, at least when the interest was not in arrear when the mortgagee entered into possession, the court, in taking the account between the mortgagor and mortgagee who has entered into possession of a real estate mortgaged, will direct that annual rests be made, so that the excess of the rent or value beyond the interest may be applied in sinking the principal (d). It is obvious that unless this were done the mortgagee would have an unfair advantage, for the interest on the debt would run on until its final extinguishment, and the mortgagee would have, besides this, the benefit of the excess of the rents received by him from time to time: but this rule, as after noticed, is not universal, and particularly it is not the rule that every small excess of interest is to be applied in sinking the principal (e). Although the interest may at an earlier time have greatly exceeded the rents, and the interest has therefore been in arrear, yet that will not prevent the account being directed with annual rests, if a proper case is then made out for annual rests: and where, at the time of the filing of the bill, the arrears have been satisfied, and the rents have for some time exceeded the interest, the mortgagee has no claim for interest on such back arrears, for interest is never allowed on interest, unless by virtue of a contract (f); nor will rests be made in any case so as to give the mortgagee a benefit (g).

(a) Sandon v. Hooper, ubi sup.

(b) See on this subject, Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 400, et seq.

(c) Dict. Lord Hardwicke, Gould v. Tancred, 2 Atk. 534, and see Robinson v. Cumming, ibid. 410; in Quarrel v. Beckford, the original decree, which was affirmed on appeal, see 1 Mad. 274, directed annual rests though the defendant denied by his answer that the debt had been satisfied, but in fact it had, ibid. 277; so in Montgomery v. Calland, 14 Sim. 80; but in Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Russ. 531, the common decree only was made, and the order for taking the account with annual rests was made on further directions, v. infra; the mortgage had been paid off before the filing of the bill.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Robinson v. Cumming, 2 Atk. 410 (not where the subject is personal estate, ibid.); Shephard v. Elliot, 4 Mad. 254; et v. inf. 310. Lord Cottenham, in Heighington v. Grant, 5 My. & Cr. 265, et seq. has explained how a direction to make annual rests is to be carried out; and see Binnington v. Harwood, Turn. & R. 477, 481, where Sir T. Plumer said that the sums which the mortgagee receives in respect of the mortgaged premises, at times intermediate between the dates of the annual rests, must be applied when they exceed the interest to the reduction of the principal, and see Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. 103, 110, 111, infra; but that was the case of an executor bound to accumulate.

(e) Gould v. Tancred, ubi supra; Horlock v. Smith, ubi inf.

(f) Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 282.

(g) See Jarm. Mort. by Sweet, 400.

In all cases where the court is called upon to direct an account in terms departing from those ordinarily employed in decrees to redeem, there must be sufficient grounds laid in the pleadings, even were it only asked that further directions should be reserved (a). The Master, to whom it is referred to take the account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, cannot, unless specially directed by the decree, apply surplus rents after satisfaction of the interest to the liquidation of the capital, that is, make yearly rests (b). It is by no means of course in a decree for an account against a mortgagee in possession, to introduce any particular directions of that kind (c): the mere fact of an arrear of interest being or not being due to the mortgagee, when he takes possession, is not of itself decisive upon the question of rests, but every circumstance must be regarded (d). Lord Langdale, speaking on this subject in a late case, said, that he considered it to be the general rule, with some qualifications, not to direct annual rests to be made in the accounts of a mortgagee in possession, when the interest is in arrear at the time when he takes possession; and in the absence of any special reason, said his Lordship, I conceive that if a mortgagee is not liable to account with annual rests, when he enters into possession, he does not become so liable when the arrear of interest is paid off, or till after the mortgage debt has been paid off by receipt of the rents; although from the time when the debt is ascertained to be paid off annual rests will be decreed, though none were ordered previously (e): but this dictum, looking to the authorities, seems to require some explanation, for there is no instance of a decree with rests from a particular period of the account, as from the time when the arrear of interest was discharged; there are only two forms of decrees, either with or without rests (f): so that it would appear that, if at the filing of the bill the case was not a proper case for directing rests, it will not become so by what may afterwards occur (g). Lord Langdale, in the same case, held that, although the mortgagee may have taken possession under circumstances which did not render him liable to account with annual rests; yet if there were afterwards a settled account, by which it appeared either that no in-

(a) Lord Cottenham, Scholefield v. Ingham, C. P. Coop. R. 477-8. In the same case the form of a decree in a suit for redemption and foreclosure, by a second mortgagee against the first mortgagee in possession and the mortgagor is given, p. 479, ibid.

(b) Webber v. Hunt, 1 Mad. 13; Donovan v. Fricker, ubi infra.

(c) Davis v. May, 19 Ves. 385; S. C. Coop. 238; Donovan v. Fricker, Jacob, 165, 168.

(d) Scholefield v. Ingham, 1 C. P. Coop. R. 478; Horlock v. Smith, 1 Coll. 297; there rests were refused.

(e) Wilson v. Cluer, 3 Beav. 136; and see Finch v. Brown, ibid. 70.

(f) Sir W. Grant, Davis v. May, 19 Ves. 385; Latter v. Dashwood, 6 Sim. 462.

(g) Davis v. May, 19 Ves. 383; G. Coop. 238 (6 Sim. 464).

terest was due, or that any interest which was due was satisfied as interest by being converted into principal, and the mortgagee continued in receipt of the rents of amount more than sufficient to satisfy the interest of such principal, such settlement of account ought to be considered as a rest made by the parties themselves; and that the mortgagee continuing in possession after the statement of such account, and with no interest due to him, must from that time be dealt with as a mortgagee who takes possession without any interest in arrear (a).

Annual rests will equally be directed in respect of the occupation-rent fixed on a mortgagee in possession, as in respect of rents received (b); but in order to charge a mortgagee with an occupation-rent, it must be alleged and proved that he has been in the actual occupation of at least a portion of the property (c).

Annual rests may be directed when it shall appear that the mortgage debt has been discharged under such circumstances as to give a title to the account in that form, though nothing on the subject is to be found in any previous decree or order (d).

According to the doctrine of Sir Thos. Plumer it does not follow that the mortgagee is to be charged with interest upon interest after the time when the annual rents have liquidated the whole of the principal (e); however, in Wilson v. Metcalfe, Lord Gifford held the contrary; he said, if a mortgagee, receiving the rents of a mortgaged estate after his debt has been satisfied, does not immediately pay them over to the mortgagor, but retains them for his own use, he is availing himself of another man's money, and ought to be charged with interest: and his Lordship thought that the principle of the decision in Quarrell v. Beckford fully justified him in directing annual rests in that case (f). To this extent it seems to be clear, that the mortgagee must from the time that the debt has been discharged, or at least from the time of the

(a) Lord Langdale, Wilson v. Cluer, 3 Beav. 140.

(b) Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Russ. 535.

(c) Trulock v. Robey, 15 Sim. 273.

(d) Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Russ. p. 536; Wilson v. Cluer, 3 Beav. 140.

(e) Sir Thos. Plumer, Donovan v. Fricker (1821), Jac. R. 169: this was the case of a purchase set aside for fraud, a less favourable case than that of a mortgage, ibid.; and see Archdeacon v. Bowes (1824), 13 Price, 369.

(f) Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Russ. 535, referring, no doubt, to the observations 1 Mad. 277, 280-83; but they were directed to the question as to charging the mortgage with simple interest, ib. 283, which was all that was sought: four per cent. only was directed to be paid, though the mortgage was of a West India estate, carrying six per cent., and six per cent. had been allowed on the mortgagee's expenditure, ib. 284-5. The propriety of Lord Gifford's deduction may be doubted: neither Donovan v. Fricker, or Archdeacon v. Bowes, supra, were cited. In Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. 92 (see p. 104, 106, et seq.), interest at five per cent., with half-yearly rests, was given against an executor, but he had a legacy for his trouble, and was directed to accumulate; and Lord Eldon said he hoped never again to see a decree in such terms as Lord Rosslyn had pronounced in that case, ib. 111.

filing of the bill, pay interest at four per cent. on the balance found to have been in his hands, and be charged with interest on each sum afterwards received by him for rent from the respective times when they were received (a).

Even if it shall appear, on the result of the account, that the debt was paid off at the time of the filing of the bill, unless the mortgagee has set up an adverse title against the mortgagor (b), or improperly insisted that there was still a debt due to him on the mortgage (c), the mortgagor must, it seems, bear the costs of the suit (d); but this, perhaps, may depend in each case on the particular circumstances: whether or not the mortgagee has kept regular accounts as he is bound to do, and has or has not produced them when called for, will always be material as regards the costs (e). The general subject of costs will presently be considered.

It has been held that an account settled before a Master, between a mortgagor and the first mortgagee, binds the second mortgagee, though not a party, unless fraud or collusion be shown (f). But a specific devisee of a mortgage is not bound by an account settled between the representatives of the mortgagor and the executors of the mortgagee (g), for the mortgagor must have notice of the specific devise: if the mortgage were devised to the executor, to pay debts and legacies in general, such an account with the executor would bind every one (h).

As a general rule a person who receives money without any specific,

(a) Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 269, 284; Binnington v. Harwood, Turn. & Russ. 477; Lloyd v. Jones, 12 Sim. 491; the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce evidently considers that there is no doubt upon this point, Horlock v. Smith, 1 Coll. 297; Archdeacon v. Bowes, 13 Price, 353; S. C. M'Clellan, p. 166; Montgomery v. Calland, 14 Sim. 81, 82.

(b) See Binnington v. Harwood, Turn. & R. 485-6; and Harvey v. Tebbutt, 1 Jac. & W. 202. But see Dan. Pr. 2nd ed. 1266.

(c) See Montgomery v. Calland, ubi infra.

(d) See Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 279; Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Russ. 536; but in those cases the costs of the suit were given in compliance with the terms of the original decree; in Quarrel v. Beckford, the decree had directed taxation only, not payment, and see Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Russ. 536. In Montgomery v. Calland, 14 Sim. 81, the defendant, the mortgagee, denied by his answer that the principal and interest had been paid off; it turned out on the account which was directed with annual rests that in fact it had; he was ordered on further directions, as he had retained the balance in his hands on a false suggestion, to pay the costs from the time of putting in the answer; and the Master was directed to compute interest at four per cent. on the balances in his hands, from the time the debt had been extinguished, not confining it to the time of filing the bill: for other instances where the mortgagee has had to pay or been refused his costs or part of them in such cases, see 14 Sim. 81, and Jarm. Mortgage, 390; et v. infra, p. 814.

(e) Quarrel v. Beckford, 1 Mad. 278, Sir J. Plumer.

(f) Needler v. Deeble, 1 Ch. Ca. 299; S. C. 1 Eq. Ab. 12, pl. 7; and see Wrixen v. Vyze, 1 Conn. & L. 303-5, and the other cases there cited.

(g) Langley v. Earl of Oxford, Amb. 17.

(h) Ibid.; et v. supra, 373, 381.

direction as to its application, may apply it to such one of the debts due to him from the person making the payment as may be most beneficial to himself (a); but where there is a debt by mortgage, and a debt unsecured, if it appear from the nature of the transaction that the money was paid on account of the mortgage debt, it must be so applied (b).

Unless some special case be made against him, a mortgagee is as much entitled to his costs properly incurred as to his principal and interest (c); and in an ordinary decree for foreclosure or redemption there is always a direction to tax the mortgagee his costs (d): if, however, the mortgagee seeks to have any costs beyond those of the suit, a special case must be made by the bill, and they must be specially mentioned in the decree (e.) The court, on a case being made, will give to the mortgagee all that his contract, or the legal or equitable consequences of it, entitle him to receive, and all the costs properly incurred by him in asserting or defending such rights, whether at law or in equity (f), and he is entitled to the costs of an ejectment brought by him for recovering possession (g); but not of proceedings founded on a mistake on his part as to his rights, legal or equitable (h). The mortgagee is also entitled to be allowed in account against the mortgagor, all expences properly incurred by him for the recovery of the mortgage money; he will therefore be allowed the costs of an action brought against a person who had joined the mortgagor as surety in a bond for the mortgage money, where the fruit of the action and the costs of it have been lost by the insolvency of the surety (i).

So long as the mortgagee acts reasonably as mortgagee to that extent he is to be indemnified (k); which means reasonably with respect to such rights as his mortgage title gives him, not such as (a) Devaynes v. Noble, (Clayton's case), 1 Mer. 605, 606.

(b) Young v. English, 7 Beav. 16; and see Johnson v. Bourne, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 268, 276-7.

(c) Lord Cottenham, Dunstan v. Patterson, 2 Phill. 344; — v. Trecothick, 2 Ves. & B. 181; Drew v. Harman, 5 Price, 323; Archdeacon v. Bowes, M'Clel. R. 167.

(d) Seton on Decrees, 139, 140, and Beames on Costs, 39, 45, there referred to.

(e) Seton on Decrees, 140; Ward v. Barton, 11 Sim. 534; and usually the general costs have been given, even where the mortgagee appears to have been overpaid, see Lord Trimleston v. Hamill, 1 Ball & B. 386, and supra, p. 812; but in most if not all of these cases this has been in consequence of the Court being bound by the terms of the original decree. V. supra, Sect. v. p. 692, as to costs occasioned by assignment pendente lite.

(f) Lord Cottenham, Dryden v. Frost, 3 My. & Cr. 675; Ramsden v. Langley, 2 Vern. 536; 1 Eq. Ab. 328, p. 5; Hunt v. Fownes, 9 Ves. 70.

(g) Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 250.

(h) Dryden v. Frost, 3 My. & Cr. 676.

(i) Ellison v. Wright, 3 Russ. p. 458; and see Horlock v. Smith, 1 Coll. 296.

(k) Lord Eldon, Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. 584, 585; in that case the mortgagee was made to pay costs, his conduct having been unreasonable and oppressive.

have arisen from his having mistaken his rights (a). The mortgagee is not entitled as against the mortgaged estate to the costs of an action brought by him to recover his debt against the executor of the mortgagor (b). When there has been great litigation at law, and then a bill is filed for redemption, the court has it in its power, in a proper case, to allow the extra costs to the mortgagee; and where the mortgagee having, from fear that his mortgage might be defeated at law, got administration as principal creditor in the Ecclesiastical Court, he was allowed those costs also (c). A mortgagee clearly cannot claim his own expences from other persons with whom he is litigating, with regard to those acts which upon his part are not only unreasonable but oppressive (d).

As a general rule, if a mortgagee is brought before the court to have his security impeached, and no decree can be, or is, obtained against him; he is dismissed with costs (e).

If there be positive misconduct on the part of the mortgagee (f); if his conduct has been either usurious (g), oppressive (h), unfair (i), unjust (k), or fraudulent (l), or he has made an unjust defence (m), as by setting up an absolute title (n), the court exercises a discretion to refuse to the mortgagee his costs, and in some cases more especially where the mortgagee has improperly instituted a suit for foreclosure (o), has ordered him to pay them (p); so where he has refused to accept a tender of all that is due to him, each of such cases will depend upon its own circumstances (q).

(a) Dryden v. Frost, 3 My. & Cr. 675-6; England v. Codrington, 1 Eden, p. 169; Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. 121; — v. Trecothick, 2 Ves. & B. 181, there cited.

(b) Lewis v. John, 9 Sim. p. 366; 1 C. P. Coop. R. 8.

(c) Ramsden v. Langley, 2 Vern. p. 536; Lomax v. Hide, 2 Vern. 185.

(d) Lord Eldon, Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. 585; and see Loftus v. Smith, 2 Scho. & Lef. 642; Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. p. 109; and see Dryden v. Frost, 3 My. & Cr. 675, Lord Cottenham, case of equitable mortgagee; and supra, 646, note (b); Beames on Costs, pp. 39 to 46.

(e) See the dictum of Lord Hardwicke, Taner v. Ivie, 2 Ves. 468. In Brodie v. St. Paul, 1 Ves. J. 326, the mortgagees were dismissed without costs, under the particular circumstances.

(f) Loftus v. Swift, 2 Sch. & Lef. 657.

(g) Bromley v. Holland, 7 Ves. 27; S. C. Coop. 25.

(h) Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. p. 583; and Shuttleworth v. Lowther, cited ibid. 587.

(i) Taylor v. Baker, 5 Price, 311.

(k) Mocatta v. Murgatroyd, 1 P. Wms. p. 393.

(l) Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. p. 121, and cases in note; see also Franklyn v. Fern, Barn. 33.

(m) 1 P. Wms. 395.

(n) England v. Codrington, 1 Eden, p. 169; Spurgeon v. Collier, ibid. 55; et v. supra, p. 812, notes (b) and (d).

(o) Binnington v. Harwood, Turn. & R. 485.

(p) Lord Cottenham, Dryden v. Frost, 3 My. & Cr. 675; England v. Codrington, 1 Ed. 174; and see — v. Trecothick, 2 Ves. & B. 181; Dan. Pr. 1265-7; et v. sup. 812, n. (e).

(q) Vide supra, p. 652, as to tender. The following cases, in addition, may be referred to on this subject: Taylor v. Baker, Daniell's Rep. p. 81; Shuttleworth v. Lowther, cited 7 Ves. 587, case of tender; Harvey v. Tebbutt, 1 Jac. & W. p. 197; Rider v. Jones, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 329, case of oppression; Cliff v. Wadsworth, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 598, 604; Smith v. Green, 1 Coll. 555, 563; Morley v. Bridges, 2 Coll. 628, cases of tender.

The mortgagor must pay the costs of all parties who are brought before the court, by reason of the mortgagee having devised or settled his mortgage interest; and the same rule prevails whether the suit be for foreclosure or redemption (a): but he is not bound to pay the expence of a declaration of trust in favour of a third person, executed by the mortgagee (b).

A mortgagee is allowed the costs of procuring administration to an incumbrancer under the will of the mortgagor, as a necessary party to the foreclosure (c). A mortgagee cannot of course have any costs as against a person claiming in priority to his mortgagor (d).

The mortgagor must bear the costs of obtaining a reconveyance of the mortgaged property (e). The doctrine as to how the costs are to be paid in the event of a sale being decreed instead of a foreclosure, has already been stated (f); and the rules, as to the costs of disclaiming defendants, are noticed above (g).

(a) V. sup. 670; Bartle v. Wilkin, 8 Sim. 238; and see the other points as to costs there stated; see also p. 699.

(b) Ex parte Grubb, 2 Moore & P. 240; 5 Bing. 160; Jarm. Mortg. by Sweet, 388.

(c) Hunt v. Fownes, 9 Ves. 70.

(d) Shackleton v. Shackleton, 2 Sim. & St. p. 242.

(e) V. supra, pp. 669, 670.

(f) Supra, pp. 678-679; Kenebel v. Scrafton, 13 Ves. p. 370, before Lord Eldon, appears to be at variance with the more modern practice.

(g) Supra, p. 691; and see the other points as to Costs there stated.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

Hicks v. Morland, 21st July, 1835—Rolls.

Costs of Solicitor claiming to be Incumbrancer.

In Hicks v. Morland, 21st July, 1835, a solicitor claimed to be incumbrancer for about 5000*l.*; a bill was filed against him to take the account on the ground that the accounts delivered were made out in such a manner as this court does not allow between parties standing in that relation; the amount, on retaking the account, was reduced to about 4600*l.*, it was not alleged that there was any specific fraud: Sir C. Pepys, Master of the Rolls, ordered the defendant to pay the costs down to the taking of the account.

SECTION XII.—Out of what Funds Mortgage Debts and Charges generally are to be paid—Of the Exoneration of the Primary Fund—Of the Marshalling of Assets and Securities, including the General Doctrine as to Marshalling of Assets in favour of Creditors and of Legatees—and of Contribution.

General Doctrine as to what Fund is primarily liable for Payment of Debts.

Order of the Application of Funds for Payment of Debts.

Exoneration of Personal Estate.

Administration of the Estate of a deceased Mortgagor—Exoneration of Mortgaged Estate.

Estate not to be exonerated, to the disappointment of Creditors or Legatees.

Where the other Real Estates must exonerate the Mortgaged Estate.

Order of the Application of the Assets may be varied by Express Declaration, or from the Implied Intention.

In order that there may be a case for Exoneration, the Debt must have been the proper Debt of the Mortgagor.

Earl of Ilchester v. Earl of Carnarvon, 1 Beav.

Of the Marshalling of Assets—As regards Creditors and Legatees.

Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll.

Marshalling in favour of Legatees—Where the Creditor has a specific Lien on the Land.

Doctrine of Marshalling as regards the Lien of a Vendor.

Marshalling of Securities.

Averall v. Ward, before Lord C. Sugden.

Barnes v. Rackster, before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

Gregg v. Arrott, before Lord C. Sugden.

Contribution, its Nature.

As between Persons to whom different Estates comprised in one Mortgage devolve.

Contribution between Devisees and Legatees.

Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare.

Contribution between Tenant for Life and Remainderman.

Contribution amongst Sureties.

When the Court will decree Possession and Account of Rents and Profits, and when not.

Additional Notes.

No. I.—Judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Tombs v. Roch.

No. II.—Judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Johnson v. Child.

It may be proper, in reference to several of the points that will come under consideration in the course of the present section, to revert to some of the general doctrines in regard to the payment of debts and legacies.

The personal estate, as has already been mentioned, in the absence of any charge, is primâ facie and generally the sole fund when sufficient, and when insufficient the first fund, for the payment of the debts of a deceased debtor; though this rule, as will presently be noticed, is subject to exceptions founded on justice and reason (a).

By the common law, even before the Statute of Westminster the Second, on the decease of a debtor by specialty, in which the heirs were bound, one moiety of the lands of the deceased was liable to be extended at the suit of the creditor (b); and so the law stood until our day; but now, by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, as has been noticed in a preceding chapter, the whole of the lands freehold and copyhold, of a deceased debtor, have become liable to his debts by simple contract as well as by specialty, in aid of his personal estate (c); the statute making the real estate liable for debts does not directly affect legatees, but in reference to the doctrine of marshalling it may have important consequences, as after mentioned (d). The statute above referred to, which gives the same remedy to simple-contract creditors as that which the specialty creditors had before, preserves the priority of specialty creditors where the assets are legal (e).

The order of the application of the several funds liable to the payment of debts is as follows:—1st. The general personal estate not expressly, or by implication, exempted.—2ndly. Lands expressly devised to pay debts, whether the inheritance, or a term carved out of it, be so limited.—3rdly. Estates which descend to the heir, whether acquired before or after the making of the will.—4thly. Devisees or bequeathed property, real or personal, which is charged with debts, and then specifically disposed of subject to such charge.—5thly. General pecuniary legacies pro rata. It had been held that the next fund was, 6thly, Specific legacies pro rata; and then, 7thly, Real estate devised, and, if the rule were subject to the old law, whether in terms general or specific (f); but it is now fully settled, as will be more particularly noticed hereafter, that the devisees of real estate have no right to throw the specialty debts upon specific legatees of the personalty, each must contribute pari passu (g); though it had been said by Lord Thurlow that estates particularly devised without any charge are never applied in payment of debts till all the other funds are exhausted (h).

(a) V. supra, 334, et seq.; and see Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. p. 497: which case is more particularly noticed in page 839 of this Section: the order in which debts inter se are to be paid has been stated, vol. i. pp. 192-3-4.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 173.

(c) V. supra, pp. 313, 319: the lands themselves are charged, not the tenant's interest only, Dict. Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 399.

(d) V. supra, 326-7, et 330; et infra, in this Section, of Marshalling in favour of Legatees.

(e) V. supra, p. 319.

(f) I have taken this from Jarman on Wills, ii. 546-7.

(g) See Tombs v. Roch, inf. p. 839.

(h) Lord Thurlow, Davies v. Topp, 1 Bro. 526, Append. (cited 2 Bro. 264); Galton v. Han-

The personal estate, and indeed any other of the funds applicable to the payment of debts, may, as will be more particularly noticed hereafter, be exonerated (a) as between the real and personal representatives of the testator, though not so as to prejudice the creditors; but the Court of Chancery, notwithstanding an express devise of a real estate for the payment of debts, not attended by an exoneration of the personal express or implied (b), will direct the personalty to be first applied in payment of them (c).

A legacy given generally is payable out of the personal estate only (d); but, as we have seen in a former chapter (e), legacies may be charged on the real estate. As a general rule, where the estate is actually charged with the payment of legacies, it will only be held to be liable in case of necessity in its usual rank and order (f); but legatees may circuitously, by the doctrine of marshalling, have their legacies, or a portion of them, satisfied out of the real estate, on a deficiency of the personal estate, though not charged on the land, as will presently be more particularly adverted to. Where a legacy or an annuity is given out of the real and personal estate, the personal estate is first liable: if the estate is directed to be sold, and to form, together with the personal estate, one fund, and the annuity or legacy is made payable out of the mass, then both are to be considered as liable pari passu (g).

In the administration of the assets of a mortgagor, the rule of exoneration, which has been adverted to in treating of the exoneration of the personal estate from debts and legacies (h), comes into operation. The general rule is, that where a person dies intestate, and where he makes a will and no intention to the contrary either expressed or implied is to be collected from the will (i), and any part of his cock, ubi sup. (2 Bro. 263). See Mr. Raithby's note, pp. 438-9, where there is a laborious collection of the authorities applicable to each of the above propositions; and 2 Jarman on Wills, 554-5.

(a) Et v. supra, p. 334, et seq.; and Jarm. Mortgage, by Sweet, 368.

(b) As to which, see Wainwright v. Bendloes, Prec. Ch. p. 451; Bamfield v. Wyndham, Prec. Ch. 101; and supra, p. 333, et seq.

(c) Gower v. Mead, Prec. Ch. p. 2; Dolman v. Smith, ibid. 458; 2 Vern. 740; Hall v. Brooker, Gilb. Eq. R. 72; Wainwright v. Bendloe, Gilb. Eq. R. 125; Stapleton v. Colville, Forrest. 202; Butler's note (No. 106), Co. Litt. 208, a; Ancaster v. Mayer, 1 Bro. 460. Mr. Cox has collected the cases which form exceptions on the ground that the estate not the person was or has become the debtor, in his note to Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. W. 664, before referred to; v. supra, Chap. vii. Sect. iii. p. 333, 336; et v. infra, Lord Brooke v. Earl of Warwick, 1 Hall & Tw. 142, 148.

(d) V. supra, p. 327, 334.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Supra, p. 336.

(g) Boughton v. Boughton, in the House of Lords, Sugd. Law of Prop. 436-7, reversing the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's decision, 1 Coll. 26; as to the first point, Sir E. Sugden (ibid. 437-8) prefers the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's decision.

(h) V. supra, Chap. viii. Sect. iii. p. 334, et seq.

(i) Howell v. Price, Prec. Ch. 477; 1 P. W. 293, and Mr. Cox's note; v. supra, p. 334;

real estate is mortgaged, either with or without a covenant for the payment of the money (a), and such debt is the debt of such person originally or by adoption, and not a charge primarily affecting the estate (b), the personal assets are the fund to be first applied for the payment of the mortgage debt in exoneration of the land (c). The rule applies whether the personal estate was increased by the money being borrowed by the mortgagor (d), or the debt originated in any other way, provided the debt were purely the testator's own debt, and not primarily payable out of the estate as above (e). The rule also applies generally, whether the estate has descended to the heir or has been devised to a stranger, and to the devisee of a particular estate equally as to the devisee of the inheritance; provided the devise be not such as to impose upon the devisee the obligation of paying off the mortgage; or, in other words, such as that the mortgage is clearly to be a deduction from the property devised, and that the devisee is to take cum onere (f). Although the estate be devised "subject to the mortgages," still the devisee, unless under peculiar circumstances, will be entitled to have the estate exonerated, it having been considered that those words, unless coupled with others clearly exonerating the funds which, according to the usual order, would be applicable for that purpose, are to be taken only as descriptive of the property (g);—one other of the remains of the influence which favour to the hæres factus and hæres natus has had in fixing the rules of law (h).

But the application of the personal estate, in ease or exoneration of the mortgaged estate, either in favour of the heir or devisee, was never allowed to take place to the defeating of creditors by simple contract when their claims were confined to the personal estate: if, therefore,

Lockart v. Hardy, 9 Beav. 379; stated supra, p. 346, add. note.

(a) Supra, p. 334.

(b) V. supra, 335; (but "not" should be inserted before "be," in the 11th line;) and see Earl of Oxford v. Lady Rodney, 14 Ves. 423; Bickham v. Cruttwell, 3 My. & Cr. 768; and Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 369, 373, where the doctrine as to a devise cum onere is considered, et v. inf. p. 824.

(c) The early cases are collected in Mr. Cox's note to 1 P. W. 294; and see Musket v. Cliffe, xii. Jur. 739; and supra, p. 335.

(d) Supra, p. 334; and see Cope v. Cope, 1 Salk. 450; Howel v. Price, Prec. Ch. 423; Pockley v. Pockley, 1 Vern. 36-7; Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. 487; and Mr. Butler's note, Co. Litt. 208 a.

(e) Lord Hardwicke, Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 252; and see Tweddell v. Tweddell, 2

Bro. 106.

(f) Lord Thurlow, Donne v. Lewis, 2 Bro. 264. The earlier cases on the subject are:—Meynell v. Howard, Prec. Ch. 61; Lutkins v. Leigh, Forrest. 54; Balsh v. Higham, 2 P. W. p. 455; King v. King, 3 P. W. 358; Cope v. Cope, 1 Salk. p. 450; Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. p. 252: though Lord Hardwicke, in that case, introduces the words "with a covenant;" and see Butler's note, Co. Litt. 208 a, note (106). Formerly the rule was not held to extend to the hæres factus; Forrest. p. 54: the modern rule was settled by Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. p. 436.

(g) Serle v. St. Eloy, 2 P. W. 386; Wythe v. Henniker, 2 My. & K. 635 (v. supra, 342, note); et v. supra, p. 346, and the references; and Ram on Assets, 441.

(h) V. int. al. 2 Atk. 435.

the mortgagee, as a creditor, had exhausted the personal estate, or caused it to be deficient for the payment of the general debts, the other creditors were held to be entitled to resort to the mortgaged premises to the extent to which the mortgage had been satisfied out of the personal estate (a); and a creditor who has acquired this right of marshalling is not barred by a lapse of less than twenty years (b). Judgment creditors, it is to be observed, are to be paid in the first instance (c).

Nor is the rule permitted to prevail so as to disappoint legatees, whether general or specific, for the effect would be in that case to defeat the testator's intention in favour of one object of bounty to the prejudice of another, for in this respect a devisee and a legatee stand upon the same footing (d): the legatees are therefore entitled to stand in the place of the mortgagee, if he has resorted to the personal estate, to the extent to which the mortgagee may have been satisfied out of the personal assets (e). But a mere residuary legatee, as such (for if the residue be exonerated, it is, as we have seen, different (f)), is not protected from having the personal estate so applied; for the gift of a residue of a personal estate implies what remains after satisfying the charges upon it, and therefore does not of itself imply an intention that the legatee shall in all events receive something (g): an express bequest of the personal estate to the executor does not in general make him a legatee, being no more than the law would give him (h). If the legacies are given out of a residue, of course the legatees will be in the same condition as a residuary legatee: where a person by his will stated that he computed that the surplus of his personal estate, after debts and funeral expences paid, would amount to 5800*l.*, which he distributed in legacies, the legatees to abate, or take the surplus

(a) Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 252, v. infra, p. 827.

(b) Vickers v. Oliver, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 211.

(c) Sharpe v. Scarborough, 4 Ves. 538.

(d) Hawes v. Warner, 2 Vern. p. 477; Oneal v. Mead, 1 P. W. p. 693; Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. p. 730; Davis v. Gardiner, 2 P. W. 190; Rider v. Wager, 2 P. W. p. 335; and see Mr. Cox's note to Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. W. 680; Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 437; and Ram on Assets, p. 440; and supra, 343. The Vice-Chancellor's judgment, in the late case of Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 494, after referred to, has established the principle, that in all cases, legatees and devisees being equally objects of bounty, are entitled to equal consideration; and that the old notion of favour to the inheritance will not now be applied in determining the respective liabilities of the legatee and the heir or devisee, in respect of the benefits intended to be conferred on them.

(e) Lutkins v. Leigh, Forrest. p. 53; Forrester v. Lord Leigh, Ambl. 171 (recognized, Wythe v. Henniker, 2 M. & K. 635, 644); and see 2 Jarman on Wills, 602.

(f) Supra, Chap. iii. Sect. iii.

(g) Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. p. 252; and see Davis v. Gardiner, 2 P. W. p. 189: even though the articles intended to pass are enumerated, it will be no less a residuary bequest in this sense (Dict. Bowman v. Reeve, Prec. Ch. 578, and see Taylor v. Taylor, 6 Sim. 249): though there may be a specific devise of a residue; Adams v. Meyrick, 1 Eq. Ab. p. 271, pl. 13; and see Lord Brooke v. Earl of Warwick, ubi infra; and 2 Fonbl. 296-7.

(h) Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. W. 322; the proportionably, the court held that it must be implied that he included his mortgages in the debts, although by this means the personal estate fell short of 5800*l.* (a). The widow's paraphernalia cannot be taken for the purpose of exoneration (b); but the personal estate, which would go as orphanage-part by the custom of London, or as the widow's customary portion in the province of York, is applicable to the purpose of exoneration (c).

It may be well here to introduce the following case of recent date, on account of its special circumstances:—By marriage settlement, an estate was settled on Captain Roberts, the testator, for life, remainder to his intended wife for life, remainder to the children, with a power to the trustees to sell and reconvert: part of the estate was sold, and the money lent to Captain Roberts on mortgage of his estates in Monmouthshire; the wife was to have 150*l.* a year in lieu of the rents of this portion of the estate. The testator by his will gave the interest of his personal estate to his wife for life, and the corpus after her death to his son and daughter; and he devised his Monmouthshire estates to trustees in trust to raise 600*l.* a-year, and pay the same to his wife till his son should attain twenty-five, the residue to be accumulated, and on his son attaining twenty-five to pay 200*l.* a-year to his wife, and then in trust for his son for life, remainder to his issue, remainder to his daughter for life, in the same manner as to the son (d), with remainders over. By his first codicil, the testator directed that the 150*l.* a-year which he was under an obligation to pay to his wife should be deducted from the annual sums of 600*l.* and 200*l.* respectively. By a second codicil, he directed that when his son or daughter should inherit the Monmouthshire estates, as an equivalent for the 200*l.* a-year being raised out of those estates, a certain mortgage for 2575*l.*, the interest of which inter alia was given for life to his wife, should revert to the possessor of the Monmouthshire estates. The wife and daughter survived: the question was whether the Monmouthshire estates were devised cum onere, or whether the devisees of those estates were entitled to have the mortgage debt raised out of the general personal estate of the testator. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce held, taking the will and codicils together, that the usual administration of the estate, so far as related to the mortgage, was changed during the same principle will, as I conceive, apply even now that the executor is trustee for the next of kin. Of the Exoneration of the personal estate from the payment of debts, v. supra, p. 333, et seq.

(a) Hawes v. Warner, 2 Vern. 477.

(b) Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. 730.

(c) Ball v. Ball, cited in Rider v. Wager, 2 P. W. 335; Pockley v. Pockley, 1 Vern. 36; Coote, 569.

(d) I presume this was so, though it is not specifically stated.

life of the widow, but not after her death; and that the Monmouthshire estates must bear the burthen during her life, but that after her death the devisees would be entitled to have the mortgage debt paid off out of the general personal estate (a).

When an estate in mortgage is devised, and the personal estate is insufficient to exonerate the estate, it then becomes a question as to how far, and in what order the real estate may be liable to exonerate the mortgaged estate. The rule on this subject follows the order above stated, in regard to the application of assets for the payment of specialty debts, in which the heirs are bound. Lands devised for payment of debts are liable to discharge such mortgaged lands, either descended or devised (b), even though the mortgaged lands may have been devised expressly subject to the incumbrance (c): lands descended shall exonerate mortgaged lands devised (d). Unencumbered lands, and mortgaged lands, both being specifically devised, but expressly after payment of all debts, shall contribute to the discharge of the mortgage (e); but such right of contribution, as it is given by the will, so it is in force only when the party claims under the will, and not where the demand is set up in defiance of it (f).

The Order in which the real assets are applicable for the payment of the mortgage debt may be varied by the testator, either by express declaration, or by an intention to be collected from the mode in which he has devised his estates.

"Where a person seised of three or four estates devises one estate for the particular purpose of paying his debts, that estate," said Lord Thurlow, "is applied;" and he added, "I therefore do not apprehend that the general rule, cited as sustaining Galton v. Hancock (g), that estates descended must always be applied to exonerate estates devised, is law: where an estate is particularly devised for payment of debts, yet the personal estate, as the primary fund, unless exempted by the

(a) Sargent v. Roberts, xii. Jur. 429.

(b) Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. p. 487: Marchioness of Tweeddale v. Earl of Coventry, 1 Bro. 240. I have taken this from Mr. Cox's note to Howel v. Price, 1 P. W. 294, which has often been referred to with commendation, and has been generally adopted; and see Coote on Mortgagees, 577.

(c) V. infra, and Serle v. St. Eloy, 2 P. W. 386, affirmed by Lord King, ibid. note; this case, though not always approved of, has since been considered as a leading authority, Duke of Ancaster v. Mayor, 1 Bro. 454, and other cases cited, ibid. p. 386; see Coote, 573.

(d) Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436.

(e) Carter v. Barnadiston, 1 P. W. p. 505, 521: it was there decided that where one seised in fee of two estates mortgaged one, and by will charged all his real estates with the payment of his debts, and devised the mortgaged estate to A. and the unencumbered estate to B., A. might compel B. to contribute to pay off the mortgage. The decision on the appeal, 3 Bro. P. C. 64, turned on another point.

(f) Ibid.

(g) 2 Atk. 424, 427, 430.

testator, shall be first applied; but I do not recollect any case where debts have been directed to be paid out of the real assets descended, in preference to estates so devised" (a): "however," his Lordship added, "the principle of Galton v. Hancock, as stated, is that the testator did not mean to charge his estate, with a view to future property; yet he might so mean: it is unfit, however, where cases are precisely similar, that different judgments should be given (b); therefore, whatever might be the reasoning upon Galton v. Hancock when decided, it is exceedingly fit to collect the principle upon which it was decided, to govern other cases." In Galton v. Hancock, and in the case before his Lordship, there was a general charge, not a devise or trust for payment; his Lordship, therefore, in deference to authority, held that the descended estate, subsequently acquired, was liable to exonerate the devised estates: but he took this distinction. The principle which seems to distinguish the case is this—"When a general charge is made applicable to the whole estate of the testator at the time, no intention appears that the estate is so charged, with a view to exonerate future property; but where a testator charges part of his estate, leaving other parts to descend, his inclination to burthen a part in exoneration of the rest is manifest" (c). Lord Thurlow, in the subsequent case of Donne v. Lewis (d), held that the devised estates, under the circumstances, were liable for the deficiency of the primary fund selected for the payment of the debts, before the descended estates acquired subsequently to the date of the will.

The doctrine is now established, that if a person selects the mortgaged estate itself, or a portion of his estate, and going beyond a charge (e), devises it or creates a term, expressly for the payment of his mortgage debts; or he expressly declares that the devisee shall pay the mortgages, (so that there is in effect no devise of the estate mortgaged, beneficially, excepting to the extent that it may not be exhausted by such payment); the estate or interest so pointed out will be the first fund to be applied to the payment of the debts, to the exoneration of descended estates, whether subsequently acquired or not: and if there be also a direction that the personal estate shall not be applied in payment of debts, even the next of kin taking it as

(a) Lord Thurlow, Davies v. Topp, 1 Bro. 527, append.

(b) See 2 Bro. 263.

(c) Davies v. Topp, 1 Bro. 528, although a testator may now pass estates subsequently acquired, the doctrine now under consideration may be applicable in many cases.

(d) 2 Bro. 257, 265; sup. p. 324, followed in Manning v. Spooner, 3 Ves. 114.

(e) See Harmood v. Oglander, 8 Ves. 116. Lord Thurlow made the distinction between a devise and a charge, putting the former first in order, only in deference to previous authorities; and see Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 303.

undisposed of will not be liable to the payment of the mortgage debts (a).

Where the testator has expressly directed that his personal estate, the primary fund, shall not be applied in payment of his mortgage debts, but has not said that the descended estates, the secondary fund, shall not be so applied; the secondary fund will not be exonerated (b). When the estates are devised subject to the incumbrances, that will not exempt the primary fund: "for a primary fund is not exonerated merely because another fund is provided; such other fund is considered as auxiliary only, unless the primary fund be expressly exonerated" (c).

On the principle that regard must be had to the testator's intention in adjusting the claims upon his estate for exoneration or compensation, where real estate before the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, § 3, was devised to the heir, though he took by his preferable title, namely, by descent, so that the estate as descended assets was liable to the creditors in priority to the other devised estates, yet the heir was entitled to contribution from the other devisees (d).

It has already been mentioned, that to enable the devisee of a mortgaged estate to claim exoneration, the debt must have been the proper debt of the mortgagor (e). The following case, decided by Lord Langdale, on that point is important, on account of the principle which it involves, and the observations made by the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in the late cases of The Earl of Clarendon v. Barham (1842) (f), upon that case, and Scott v. Beecher (g) and Evans v. Smithson (h), on which it was founded. Henry Earl of Carnarvon purchased an estate called Marston, for 8400*l.*, which he raised by a mortgage of that and another estate, called Blunsden, and his bond. By his

(a) Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 295, 304, 306, 307, and see Donne v. Lewis, 2 Bro. 262; Manning v. Spooner, 3 Ves. 114; Lord Eldon and Lord Redesdale seem to have considered that a distinction ought to have been taken where the descended estate came to the testator after the date of his will; but in all cases where the principle, that all that is given is what remains, applies, there seems to be no ground on which the devisee can claim to have his estate exonerated out of any property real or personal.

(b) Barnewell v. Lord Cawdor, 3 Mad. 456; Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 305, Lord Eldon.

(c) Sir J. Leach, Barnewell v. Lord Cawdor, ubi sup. citing Watson v. Brickwood, 9 Ves. 447.

(d) Biederman v. Seymour, 3 Beav. 372; the heir now takes as devisee for all purposes, see Strickland v. Strickland, 10 Sim. 374.

(e) V. supra, p. 335; and Coote, 577.

(f) 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 708, 712. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce followed the cases mentioned in the text, though disapproving of them; his Honour particularly referred to Lex Prætor. 315, where C. B. Gilbert distinguishes between the case where the son is executor, and has received assets of the father; and where the personal estate which he leaves is strictly his own; in Scott v. Beecher, ubi supra, this passage was not cited.

(g) 5 Mad. 96.

(h) Not reported.

will, made previously to this purchase, he devised the Blunsden estate to his younger son Charles, and his issue ; and he gave all the rest of his estate to his eldest son, Henry George, the second Earl, subject to the payment of his debts and legacies. The personal estate received by Henry George was more than sufficient for payment of the debts and legacies. The Marston estate descended to Henry George. The Blunsden estate went to Charles's daughter Augusta, and on her marriage (1824) it was settled on certain trusts ; Henry George, the second Earl, covenanting to exonerate it from the principal and interest due on the mortgage. Henry George, the second Earl, devised all his estate, real and personal, to Henry John George, the present Earl, subject as to both to the payment of his debts, &c., and to any legacies he might give. By a codicil he devised certain freehold and leasehold estates, including the Marston estate, upon trust, to sell and raise an annuity for his daughter Harriett ; the residue of the rents and produce to be accumulated till the same amounted to 5000*l.*, and then to be laid out in the purchase of lands, to the same uses as his settled estates in Hants ; the residue of the moneys to arise from the devised estates, after securing the annuity, were to be laid out in the purchase of lands to the same uses as the settled estates. In July, 1830, the mortgagee being satisfied that the Marston estate was a sufficient security for the 8000*l.* and interest, that mortgage was assigned to certain trustees to secure the mortgage money. The testator's daughter, Harriett, died in 1836. The testator, Henry George, died in 1833. The question in the cause was, whether the devisees in trust of the Marston estate were entitled to have the mortgage on that estate paid out of the general personal estate of the testator Henry George ; or were to take it cum onere. It was contended that Henry George, having received assets, was bound to have exonerated the Blunsden estate, and in effect Marston ; distinguishing this case (a) from Scott v. Beecher (b) ; and that Henry George, having in the settlement of 1824 entered into a personal liability to discharge the mortgage, and bequeathed his estate, subject to his liabilities, to the defendant Henry John George ; he had adopted the debt. The Master of the Rolls, Lord Langdale, agreed that Henry George was liable to exonerate the Blunsden estate out of his testator's personal estate, or, if necessary, the descended estates ; but he considered that in both instances, namely, on the occasion of the settlement, and of the transfer of the mortgage, he made an exclusive charge on the descended (Marston) estate, instead of paying

(a) See pp. 215, 216.

(b) Ubi supra.

off the mortgage, only for his own convenience. Lord Langdale thought that the case of Scott v. Beecher distinctly applied; and it followed that the mere circumstance of Henry George being the owner of the personal estate which in his hands was the primary fund, and also of the descended real estate which was the secondary fund, was not a reason why, as between those who were entitled to his personal estate, and those who were entitled to the devised mortgaged estate, the latter should be relieved. Lord Langdale thought that the transactions of 1824 and 1830 did not amount to an adoption of the debt as his own, or to evidence of an intention that the estate should be exonerated; and on the whole his Lordship was of opinion that the devisees of the Marston estate must take it cum onere (a).

A testator gave an estate, which was subject to a mortgage, to A., expressly declaring that it should be enjoyed discharged of the mortgage; he appropriated another estate for the payment of all his debts, and gave the residue of his estate, real and personal, to B., free from his debts: the estate appropriated to the payment of the debts turned out not to be sufficient for the payment of the whole of the debts, including the mortgage debt; the question was between A., the specific devisee, and the residuary legatee,—each according to the words of the will being entitled to receive what was given to him discharged of debts—how the debts were to be borne or paid. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and the Lord Chancellor on appeal, held, that the residue was liable to pay the deficiency: the testator had expressed no intention on the subject as affecting the state of things that had happened, the case must therefore be determined on principle: the testator had no power to exonerate his estate generally, but he had to exonerate a particular estate, and that he had done: he had also thought that the residue would not have to be resorted to; but as he could not exonerate the residue from payment of his debts, without providing some other sufficient fund for that purpose, the residue, in the events that had happened, must therefore bear its natural burthen (b).

An important question frequently arises where the estate of a deceased person consists of various distinct subjects, each of which is liable to the demands of different claimants by security or otherwise, as to how the different estates and funds may be applied in paying off

(a) Earl of Ilchester v. Earl of Carnarvon, 1 Beav. 221-2.

Chancellor, 18th Jan. 1849, MS., and 1 Hall & Twells, 142, 148.

(b) Brooke v. Earl of Warwick, Lord

the various claims affecting different portions of the property of the deceased ; so as to prevent the assertion of the rights of one claimant turning to the injury of the others, where his rights may be secured to him by an equitable adjustment, the effect of which shall be, that his security and those of the other encumbrancers or claimants, shall all be provided for, at least so far as the funds will extend : and this question may present itself, not only as regards the creditors inter se, but as regards legatees, who may be affected, by the funds to which they have to resort having been taken by the creditors (a).

It being the object of the Court of Chancery (b) that every claimant upon the assets of a deceased person shall be satisfied as far as such assets can, by any arrangement consistent with the nature of the respective claims, be applied in satisfaction of such claims : it has long been settled, that where one claimant has more than one fund to resort to, and another claimant only one, the first claimant shall resort to that fund to which the second cannot resort (c). This, in legal language, is called Marshalling the Assets.

It has been observed that there is not a more useful power in this court than that of marshalling assets and funds ; particularly in cases where there are creditors and legacies to children for their portions (d). The principle of marshalling, said Sir J. Wigram, in a late case, may not, perhaps, always be just in practice towards creditors, but the principle is sound and cannot be disputed : one party has two funds to resort to, and the court compels him to resort to that which will leave the rights of others inter se undisturbed (e).

On this principle it was established, at a time when simple-contract creditors could only resort to the personal assets for payment of their debts, that if a specialty creditor, whose debt might be recovered from the real assets—that is, a creditor whose debt was secured by a security in which the heirs were bound—received satisfaction out of

(a) V. supra, pp. 233, 315, 318, 327, note, 334, 410. The doctrine as regards legatees is treated of in Williams on Executors, p. 1344, et seq., 3rd edit.

(b) I am here following Mr. Cox's note to Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. W. 679 : in Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382, the accuracy of Mr. Cox's statement of the principles of the court is recognized, and Robinson v. Tonge, stated in Cox's note, 1 P. W. p. 680, was overruled, as being inconsistent with the principles so laid down.

(c) Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atk. 446 ; Lacam v. Mertins, 1 Ves. p. 312 ; Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. 53 ; Trimmer v. Bayne, 9 Ves. 209 (4 Russ. 339) ; Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves.

388 ; and see Ex parte Stephenson, xii. Jur. 8. It does not appear to me that the maxim, Nemo ex alterius detrimento fieri debet locupletior, on which the author of the Treatise on Equity, and after him Mr. Justice Story, found this doctrine, is at all applicable.

(d) Lord Harcourt, Hanby v. Fisher, from De Grey's MS., cited 2 Coll. p. 514 ; and see 2 Coll. 497, p. 507 : see also Ram on Assets, ch. xxviii. p. 410, where this subject is treated at large, and all the important cases down to the date of the publication are collected.

(e) Per Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare, 94 ; Savage v. Lane, 6 Hare, p. 39.

the personal assets, the simple-contract creditors should stand in the place of the specialty creditor against the real assets, whether they were devised or left to descend (a), so far as the latter should have exhausted the personal assets in payment of his debt (b). Formerly the court would control the creditor's right of election to resort to the real or personal fund; but the practice of marshalling being in general sufficiently protective of the equity of other creditors, has rendered such controlling interference in most cases unnecessary (c). In marshalling, it must be observed that simple-contract creditors, and the same principle will apply to all others who seek to have the benefit of this process, are not entitled to have a larger fund raised out of the real estate than the personal estate originally amounted to (d). The covenantees in a voluntary bond, though they are not entitled to compete with creditors for valuable consideration even by simple contract, are entitled to stand in the place of mortgagees who have been satisfied out of the funds applicable for payment of debts (e).

Lord Eldon observed, that in order that the doctrine of marshalling may hold between two creditors, both must be creditors of the same person, and have demands against funds, the property of the same person. "But it was never said," observed his Lordship, "that if I have a demand against A. and B., a creditor of B. shall compel me to go against A. without more; as if B. himself could insist that A. ought to pay in the first instance, as in the ordinary case of Drawer and Acceptor, or Principal and Surety, to the intent that all the obligations arising out of these complicated transactions may be satisfied: but if I have a demand against both, the creditors of B. have no right to compel me to seek payment from A., if not founded on some Equity, giving B. the right for his own sake to compel me to seek payment from A." (f).

In a case before Sir J. Leach, a mortgagee having realized his security, sought to prove in the Master's office, under a Decree for the administration of the mortgagor's Estate, for the full amount of his

(a) Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. 455; Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. 341.

(b) Anon. 2 Ch. Ca. 4; Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. p. 455; Neave v. Alderton, 1 Eq. Ab. 144, pl. 21; Wilson v. Fielding, 2 Vern. 763; Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436.

(c) 2 Fonbl. p. 299; see Mr. Fonblanque's observations as to where such interference may still be necessary or proper; ibid.

(d) Cradock v. Piper, 15 Sim. 302.

(e) Lomas v. Wright, 2 My. & K. 775.

(f) Ex parte Kendall, 17 Ves. p. 520; this passage would probably have been put in rather different language by Mr. Swanston or Mr. Walker. Devaynes had been a partner in a firm, of which there were four surviving partners: "Unless," said Lord Eldon, "the creditors of the four could establish that it was just and equitable that Devaynes' estate should pay in the first instance, they have no equity to compel a man to go against that estate who has resort to both funds;" this subject will be further considered in Vol. iii. title Partnership.

debt: it was insisted that the mortgage was quite independent of his claim as a creditor against the general assets, that he might therefore, according to the general rule, pursue all his remedies concurrently; but Sir J. Leach, adverting to the rule above referred to, that he who has two funds must first resort to that which he only can touch, carried it to this extent, that he would not permit the mortgagee to prove for more than the deficiency of the proceeds of the mortgage to satisfy his debt (a); but this decision has not been approved (b). On the same principle, a wife is protected from her paraphernalia being taken by creditors, if the assets, real and personal, are sufficient for payment of debts without resorting to the paraphernalia (c). Where specialty creditors have exhausted the personal Estate, they will not be let in to any participation in the Equitable assets until the simple-contract creditors have first had so much paid to them as will put them on an equality with the specialty creditors in proportion to the amount of their respective debts (d).

Legatees, as has been already adverted to, claiming only from bounty, stand in a somewhat different situation from creditors. Where lands are specifically devised, the legatees shall not stand in the place of the creditors against devisees (e): where nothing appears but certain devises and bequests, it must equally be the intention of the testator that the devisees should have the estates devised to them, as that the legatees should have their legacies; and if there should be no fund to pay the legacies, which the testator must be taken to have known, they are payable out of the personal estate only: it requires some expression to that effect in the will to enable the legatees to diminish the interests given to the devisees, to the extent of making them even participate in payment of

(a) Greenwood v. Taylor, 1 R. & M. 187. Sir J. Leach said, "The question did not depend on the rule in bankruptcy, that a mortgagee who seeks to prove must first have the estate sold, and prove for the deficiency."

(b) Lord Cottenham, in Mason v. Bogg, 2 My. & Cr. 448, observed, in regard to Greenwood v. Taylor, "With respect to the principle of that case, it is to be observed, that a mortgagee has a double security; he has a right to proceed against both, and to make the best he can of both: why he should be deprived of this right because the debtor dies, and dies insolvent, it is not easy to see:" see, as to this point, Williams on Executors, 1459, where the other authorities are collected.

(c) Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. 729-30; Tynt v. Tynt, 2 P. W. 542; 2 Coll. 507.

(d) Soames v. Robinson, 1 My. & K. 500;

Bailey v. Ploughman, Moseley, 95; cited sup. 314, 315, 318.

(e) Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. W. 678; Scott v. Scott, Ambl. 383; S. C. 1 Eden, 458; Hamly v. Fisher, Dick. 105; S. C. Ambl. 128; Forrester v. Lord Leigh, Ambl. 172-174; Keeling v. Brown, 5 Ves. 359; Lord Eldon, Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. p. 397; supra, p. 327. Until the late Wills Act, no one could devise any estate of which he was not seised, so that a residuary devise was specific, and affected only the estates of which the testator was seised at the date of his will; now a residuary devise carries all the real estate which the testator may have subsequently acquired; but this would not seem to make any difference as regards the principle adverted to in the text: see however and consider Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 495.

the debts; the personal estate being the natural fund for the payment of debts, and the residue after payment of the debts, as the testator must also be taken to have known, being the only fund applicable to the payment of simple legacies. But of course, if the testator expresses his intention to prefer the pecuniary legatee to the specific devisee or even to a specific legatee, or if that intention must be necessarily implied from the context, the court must give effect to it (a). Where the testator has left any part of his real estate to descend to his heir, there the legatees have the same equity as simple-contract creditors, as against the real estates descended; the bounty of the testator towards the legatees is thus effectuated, without interfering with any other object of his bounty (b).

Now that, by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, simple-contract creditors may proceed to recover payment of their debts against the real estate they have a double fund: the same principle will therefore apply in favour of the legatees as against descended estates, in case simple-contract creditors should exhaust the personal estate, as was formerly applied to the case of specialty creditors (c). In the late case of Tombs v. Roch (1846), before referred to, it was insisted by the devisees that the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, 3 & 4 Will. & M. and the Statute of 1833, namely, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, were intended for the benefit of creditors merely, and that they were not intended to advance the rights or improve the condition of legatees. This

(a) Sugd. Law of Prop. 422, referring to 3 Bli. N. S. 108; and see Creed v. Creed, 1 Dru. & W. 424. Sir E. Sugden, in p. 424 and the following pages of his late valuable work above referred to, enters into a full consideration of the important case of Spong v. Spong, 3 Bli. N. S. 84 (sup. p. 327): and in page 426, Sir Edward, with a view to its being clearly understood what was the effect of that decision, examines and comments upon Lord Cottenham's view of that case in Mirehouse v. Scaife (supra, 328). Sir Edward also states the case of Creed v. Creed, 1 Dr. & W. 416; 11 Cl. & Fin. 491, which is also an important case as to the question of priority, as between persons having legacies or annuities directly charged on the real estate, such legacies and annuities being considered as specific not in terms but from the nature of the property on which they are charged, and legacies given generally and charged on the lands in the event of the personal estate not being sufficient not so as to be considered to be specific; Willox v. Rhodes, 2 Russ. p. 452, being cited to this point: annuities and legacies stand upon the same footing in this respect; Creed v. Creed, 1 Dru. & W. 424.

(b) Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. p. 117; Bowaman v. Reeve, Prec. Ch. 578; Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. p. 730; Lucy v. Gardener, Bunb. 137; Lutkins v. Leigh, Forrest. p. 54. "In the case of legatees against assets descended," said Lord Eldon, "a legatee has not so strong a claim to this species of equity as a creditor. But the mere bounty of the testator enables the legatee to call for this species of marshalling; that if those creditors, having a right to go to the real estate descended, will go to the personal estate, the choice of the creditor shall not determine whether the legatees shall be paid or not. That in some measure," added his Lordship, "is upon the doctrine of assets; but with relation to the fact of a double fund, both are in law liable to the creditors, and therefore by making the option to go against the one, they shall not disappoint another person, who the testator intended should be satisfied;" Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 396. I have not here, or in p. 828, followed Mr. Vesey's punctuation; indeed it is seldom to be implicitly followed.

(c) See Williams on Executors, 4th edit. p. 1460.

called forth the following remarks from the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce:—

“The equity of marshalling arises from a creditor’s power to resort, not from the mode in which he acquired the power of resorting,” (viz., whether under the Act of Fraudulent Devises, or for making Real Estates liable for Debts, or otherwise,) “to each or either of two funds belonging to the debtor whose rights, subject to the debt, have become divided; and though,” said the Vice-Chancellor, “I do not forget the passages to be found in the reports of Galton v. Hancock (a) and Forrester v. Lord Leigh (b), it seems to me impossible, consistently with the principle of decisions of the highest authority, or consistently with any legal principle, to take the view of the effect and consequences of a liability to creditors, creditors created merely by statute, that the devisees take in this case: certainly the liability in general of personal estate in the first instance to the debts of a deceased debtor, the intent of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, and the intent of the Statute of 1833, do not, in my judgment, establish their proposition.” “The argument,” added his Honour, “seems in substance not to stop short of asserting that inasmuch as it is by statute that copyholds are assets for creditors, and freeholds for simple-contract creditors, therefore there cannot be marshalling for legatees against descended copyholds, or in respect of simple-contract debts, against descended freeholds: it will surprise me exceedingly to hear of such a doctrine having met, or meeting, with support or acceptance” (c). And if, though specifically devised, the land is made subject to all debts, that distinguishes the case, for there is a double fund; and as by that denotation of intention the creditor has a double fund, the land devised and the personal estate, he shall not disappoint the legatee (d).

Legatees, as indeed may be collected from what has been already stated, are not entitled to stand in the place of bond creditors, and to have satisfaction out of the real estate devised (e); the creditors have no specific lien on the lands devised, and it cannot be supposed that the testator intended to diminish the estate devised by a deduction on account of general debts: the same principle will still apply as regards simple-contract creditors, for they have only the same remedies as were given to specialty creditors before the act.

But where the creditor has a specific lien on the land, as a mortgage

(a) 2 Atk. 424.

(b) Ambl. 171.

(c) Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 499.

(d) And see Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 397, Lord Eldon; Hanby v. Roberts, Ambl. 129, Lord Hardwicke; and Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. p. 347.

(e) Dict. Herne v. Meyrick, 1 P. W. 203; Forrester v. Lord Leigh, Ambl. pp. 172-174; Scott v. Scott, Ambl. 383.

created by the testator, and it is presumed that the same principle will apply to a judgment registered prior to the death of the testator, the assets will be marshalled as well against real estate devised as against the descended estates: so that, in case of a deficiency of the personal estate, the legatee will be entitled to stand in the place of the mortgagee against the estate mortgaged, or the judgment creditor against all the estates devised on which he has a lien by his judgment (at least if judgments are to be put on the same footing as mortgages), to such extent as they may have been paid out of the personal estate (a). In the late case of Johnson v. Child, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram held, in a case involving special circumstances, on the general principle, that a legatee of a leasehold estate must take cum onere, there being a deficiency of the personal estate to pay the debts and general legacies (b).

Lord Hardwicke (c) laid down that, "If one having land and personal estate makes his will, being indebted by specialty, and he gives specific legacies, and then gives the rest and residue of his real and personal estate; if the creditors exhaust the personalty, the legatees shall stand in their place and come upon the residuary devisee, because he has only the rest and the residue:" this only means, said Lord Cottenham, in Mirehouse v. Scaife (d), adverted to below, that as between a specific legatee of personalty and a residuary devisee of land, the land shall be first applied in payment of specialty debts, which Lord Cowper had before said in Long v. Short (e). In Mirehouse v. Scaife, where Lord Cottenham examined the leading cases on this subject, including Hanby v. Roberts, and Spong v. Spong (f), in the House of Lords, it was held that there was no equity on the part of general pecuniary legacies to have the assets marshalled, so as to throw the debts upon the real estates taken under a residuary devise of real and personal estate (g).

(a) Lutkins v. Leigh, Forrest. p. 54, followed by Lord Hardwicke, Forrester v. Lord Leigh, Ambl. p. 172; dict. note to Davis v. Gardiner, 2 P. W. p. 190; Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. 341; Wythe v. Henniker, 2 My. & K. 644-5, following Forrester v. Lord Leigh, ubi supra; and see Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 497. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare, 94, puts it on the ground that the testator is presumed to have intended that the devisee should take cum onere, if the personal estate should be insufficient to pay his debts and legacies: the distinction taken by Lord Talbot between specialty debts and mortgages (Forrest. pp. 54-5), would seem to bring judgment debts, registered, within the rule, for neither heir or devisee can sell, so as to make a good title against the judgment creditor: however it is to be observed that the doctrine of Lord Talbot and Lord Hardwicke, in the above-cited cases, though followed in the instance of mortgages, has not been universally approved; 2 My. & K. 644-5, sup.

(b) Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare, 87, 95, supra; this case is also referred to infra.

(c) Dict. Lord Hardwicke, Hanby v. Roberts, Amb. p. 127; S. C. 1 Dick. 104, nom. Hamly v. Fisher.

(d) Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 My. & Cr. p. 700.

(e) 1 P. W. 403; v. infra as to this case.

(f) 1 You. & J. 300; 3 Bli. N. S. p. 84: Lord Cottenham, 2 My. & Cr. 705, observed that Spong v. Spong, and Hanley v. Roberts, were not cases of marshalling, but of priority of liability to the charge.

(g) Mirehouse v. Scaife, on appeal, 2 My.

Where legacies given by the will are charged on the real estate, but not the legacies given by codicil, the legatees under the will, on the general principle above stated, upon a deficiency of the personal assets to pay the whole, will be compelled to resort to the real assets, or the assets will be marshalled so as to produce the same effect (a).

The exception to the rule of marshalling, as regards Charity Legacies, has before been adverted to (b).

In order to entitle a creditor to the benefit of marshalling, the bill must be filed on behalf of all the creditors (c).

There is a considerable conflict of authority as to the right of a legatee to have the assets marshalled in the case of a purchaser exhausting the personal estate, and not resorting to his lien. It has been insisted that the lien exists for the benefit of the vendor alone (d); however, in the late case of Sproule v. Prior, the Vice-Chancellor of England decided that the legatees, being objects of bounty, were entitled, as against the heir who took the estate purchased by descent, to have the assets marshalled, so as to give them the benefit of the vendor's lien (e): but where the estate is devised, the principle of marshalling does not apply as regards legatees, for all are equally objects of bounty; though it did apply in the case of a devise, as regards simple-contract creditors (f).

We are now to proceed to the doctrine as to the Marshalling of Securities. On the principle above adverted to—namely, that if a party

& Cr. p. 695: the question as to marshalling turned on whether a residuary devise of land must be considered as specific, or as so much as shall remain after payment of the debts to which it was liable, so as to enable legatees to resort to the real estate to the extent of such debts; or, in other words, whether the same terms are to be held to constitute a residuary devise of land, which amount to a residuary gift of personalty, and with the same consequences; v. ibid. 705, 706: Lord Cottenham held they are not: there must be something giving to the legatees a title to claim payment out of the real estate in their own right, and then marshalling is excluded; v. ibid. p. 707. In the case before Lord Cottenham, the testator had directed all his debts and legacies to be paid within six months after his death, which was held to amount to a charge, v. supra, p. 322. See Sir E. Sugden's observations on this case, and on Spong v. Spong, Law of Prop. 425-6-7 (sup. p. 830, n. (a)); and Lord Cottenham's observations on the dictum of Lord Manners (sup. p. 327, note), 2 My. & Cr. 705.

(a) Hyde v. Hyde, 3 Ch. Rep. 83; Masters v. Masters, 1 P. W. 422; Bligh v. Earl of Darnley, 2 P. W. 620; Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. 769; Bonner v. Bonner, 13 Ves. 379.

(b) V. supra, p. 233; and see Williams on Executors, ii. p. 1349, 3rd edit.

(c) Conolly v. M'Dermot, 3 Jones & Lat. pp. 263-4.

(d) See Sugd. V. and P. 874-8.

(e) Sproule v. Prior, 8 Sim. 189 (and see 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 712); Sir E. Sugden objects to this decision; saying, after going through the cases, "Thus we may observe how step by step error becomes confirmed," V. and P. ubi sup.; but the error appears to be on the side of justice and good sense; see Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. 340, 341.

(f) Sugd. V. and P. 878; Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. p. 336. Now, by the effect of the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, the estate would be liable for simple-contract debts, as before stated.

has two funds by which his debt is secured, a person having an interest in one fund only has a right in equity to compel the former to resort to the other fund, if that should be necessary in order that both may be satisfied:—if A. has two mortgages for his debt, and B. has one, B. has a right to throw A. upon the security which B. cannot touch, provided that in so doing the rights of the person having the two funds cannot be prejudiced (a).

A person having two funds, said Lord Eldon, will not be permitted by his election to disappoint the party who has one fund only, or to determine by his act whether such person shall be paid or not (b); and equity in such case, to satisfy both, will throw him who has two funds upon that which can be affected by him only, to the intent that the only fund to which the other has access may remain clear to him (c).

On this principle, “a mortgagee, whose interest in the estate was affected by an extent of the Crown, has found his way, even in a question with general creditors, to this relief; that he was held entitled to stand in the place of the Crown as to those securities, which he could not affect per directum, because the Crown affected those in pledge to him” (d). It is to be observed that this rule does not subject any fund to a claim to which it was not before subject, but only provides that the election of one claimant shall not prejudice the claims of the others (e).

But, according to Lord C. Sugden, this doctrine cannot generally be enforced against an encumbrancer who is a mortgagee of two different estates; that is, as I understand, where no one offers to pay him off

(a) V. supra; Lanoy v. Duke and Duchess of Athol, 2 Atk. 446; the other leading cases to be referred to are Att.-Gen. v. Tyndall, Ambl. 614; Trimmer v. Bayne, 9 Ves. 209, Averall v. Wade, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 259; a special case; Gwynne v. Edwards, 2 Russ. 289, note; Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. p. 341; Greenwood v. Taylor, 1 Russ. & M. p. 185; stated supra; Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 388, 395, so often referred to, which contains an ample exposition of the subject, by Lord Eldon, in all its bearings; though sometimes conveyed in language not eminent for propriety or perspicuity: and Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. 455; see also for other distinctions on the same principle, Porye's case, 2 Freem. 51; Peters v. Erving, 3 Bro. C. C. 54; Wright v. Nutt, ib. 326, and 1 H. Bl. 136.

(b) “Suppose another case,” says Lord Eldon, ubi sup.: “two estates mortgaged to A., and one of them mortgaged to B., he has no claim under the deed upon the other estate; it may be so constructed that he could not affect that estate after the death of the mortgagor; but it is the ordinary case to say a person having two funds shall not by his election disappoint the party having one fund.”

(c) Lord Eldon, Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 388, 396; and see Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atk. 446; and see Porey v. Marsh, 2 Vern. 182; Mills v. Eden, 10 Mod. 489; particularly the latter (2 Fonbl. 299). Lord Eldon also refers to Lutkins v. Leigh, Forrest. p. 53, a case of legatees, and to the case of Paraphernalia; but he adds, as regards the latter case, “Though this court will not restrain the party, yet he shall not so operate his payment as to disappoint another claim, whether arising by the law or by the act of the testator;” but unless the sale be restrained in this case the widow must be disappointed to this extent, that she cannot get the very jewels or ornaments that have been sold: see Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. 731.

(d) Lord Eldon, Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 388, 395.

(e) 2 Atk. 438; 1 Ves. 312.

and he therefore has to foreclose: whatever may be the equity of the creditor with only one security, the mortgagee of both estates has a right to compel the debtor to redeem, or he may foreclose (a). Where a second mortgagee, having the security of two estates, filed a bill to redeem against the prior mortgagee of one estate only, who also claimed to be entitled to an equitable lease of the estate comprised in the prior mortgage, under an agreement entered into by the mortgagor subsequently to the second mortgage; it was held by Lord Chancellor Sugden, that the plaintiff could not be compelled in that suit to resort to the estate not in mortgage to the prior mortgagee, in order to give operation to the equitable lease claimed by the prior mortgagee; if he had any right under the agreement independently of his mortgage, it would be to redeem (b).

A judgment was entered up against the owner of estates A. and B., which were therefore, as regards those persons to whom the respective estates might pass, primâ facie liable in proportion to their respective values: afterwards the owner against whom the judgment was obtained settled estate A. for valuable consideration, covenanting that it was free from incumbrances; and then a second judgment was obtained against him for valuable consideration; he then died. A question as to marshalling arose between the subsequent judgment creditor and the persons entitled to the settled estate. It was contended by the person who had obtained the second judgment, that he was entitled to throw the prior judgment altogether on the settled estate, or, if not, that he had at least a right to demand contribution: Lord Chancellor Sugden held that there was no equity on the part of the subsequent judgment creditor to throw the prior incumbrance upon the settled estate; that a subsequent transaction could not increase the charge on the settled estate (c). The persons claiming under the settlement contended that they were entitled to throw both judgments on the unsettled estate. The Lord Chancellor said that even if there had been no covenant, if the owner had settled the estate A. without noticing the judgment, equity would have thrown the whole on the unsettled part in the hands of the original owner; but here there was an express covenant which the court would have specifically enforced (d): and the Lord Chancellor held, not only that there was no right to throw any part of the second judgment on the settled estate, but that that estate had a right to be indemnified against both at the expense

(a) Lord C. Sugden, Averall v. Wade, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 255.

(b) Gregg v. Arrott, Llo. & G. 250-1.

(c) Averall v. Wade, Lloyd & G. 256.

(d) Ibid. 260, 262; and see Whitworth v. Gaugain, supra, p. 794.

of the unsettled estate; saying that no subsequent judgment creditor could disturb that right after it had once attached (a).

One Rackster, being seised of Foxall Coppice, and a piece of land (No. 32), mortgaged Foxall in 1792 to Barnes, in 1795 to Hartwright; in 1800 he mortgaged Foxall and No. 32 to Barnes, to secure a further advance, together with what was originally due on Foxall alone, and in 1804 he mortgaged both to Williams; all the subsequent incumbrances were taken with notice; the proceeds of the property were insufficient to pay all the incumbrances, but No. 32 was sufficient to pay the whole of Barnes's demand under both his securities. The question was, whether Hartwright, who had no charge on No. 32, could, as against Williams, compel Barnes to resort to No. 32, so as to make Hartwright the first incumbrancer on Foxall. Williams insisted that the burthen of the first mortgage ought to be borne rateably by Foxall and No. 32. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce was of opinion, that prior to 1804 Rackster had full right, as against every one but Barnes, to deal with No. 32 as he pleased, and that by his subsequent mortgage to Williams the latter took No. 32, subject only to a rateable proportion of the prior charge upon that estate and Foxall, so that Barnes must be paid out of the respective proceeds of No. 32 and Foxall rateably; that the residue of the proceeds of Foxall must be paid to Hartwright, and the residue of the proceeds of No. 32 to Williams (b).

Where a testator devised two several estates for the payment of his debts, and also gave an annuity payable out of one of them, and the trustees sold the estate out of which the annuity was payable; the court decreed that the other estate should stand charged with the annuity (c).

If a mortgagor sells a portion of his equity of redemption for valuable or good consideration, the entire residue, if undisposed of by him, is applicable in the first instance to the discharge of the mortgage, and in ease of a bonâ fide purchaser; and it is contrary to

(a) Lord Chancellor Sugden, ibid. p. 264; the Lord Chancellor in this case examined the cases of Hartly v. O'Flaherty, 1 Beat. 61, decided by Sir A. Hart, and Lord Plunket's reversal of that decision, p. 262; as to which, v. infra, and Hamilton v. Royse, 2 Scho. & Lef. 315; and Boazman v. Johnson, 3 Sim. 377: see as to the principal case, Barnes v. Rackster, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 401, p. 403. There is an useful collection of the cases on this subject in the reporter's note, including the doctrine as to contribution by Sureties, Llo. & G. pp. 264-9, as to which v. infra.

(b) Barnes v. Rackster, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 408-9; and see Bugden v. Bignold, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 377; Barnes v. Rackster is adverted to in the latter case, p. 393; the Vice-Chancellor considered that the case of Titley v. Davies, from Serg. Hill's MS. ibid. p. 388, supported his views in the former case.

(c) Mad. Pr. & P., citing 1 Ch. Rep. p. 295; I cannot find the case. Mr. Maddock adds: "and see Fran. Max. Eq. 10, where other cases are mentioned, illustrative of the doctrine of marshalling securities."

every principle of justice, said Lord Chancellor Plunket, that a person purchasing from that mortgagor should be in a better situation than the mortgagor himself with respect to any of his rights (a).

The right which a subsequent mortgagee has in general of compelling the prior mortgagee, when he has a second fund to resort to, and the common fund is a deficient one, to exhaust the second fund before he touches the common one, equally exists where the mortgagor has become bankrupt (b).

We have now more particularly to consider another branch of this subject, namely, the right which a person may have to call for Contribution:—

“Contribution, if it differs from marshalling, does so in specie rather than generically, in form rather than in nature. Marshalling and Contribution are each of them between several persons of their rights respectively inter se, in respect of a charge or claim, which, affecting all of them, or properties belonging to all of them respectively, has been or may be enforced in a manner not unjust as far as the person is concerned by whom it was or may be enforced, but not just as between the persons or properties liable—a branch of Jurisprudence known to the civil law, and which could not but belong, in some form more or less extensive, to an enlightened system of laws; in ours it is well established and familiar” (c). The question as to the right to contribution arises, sometimes upon the instruments themselves; sometimes between persons claiming by gift under the will of a testator: in the latter case it may be stated as a general rule that, for the purposes of this adjustment, every will ought to be read as in effect embodying a declaration of the testator that the payment of his debts shall be as far as possible so arranged as not to disappoint any gifts made by it unless the instrument discloses a different intention (d).

Where several estates, or parts of estates, are comprized in one mortgage, and they devolve or become vested by devise, descent or otherwise, upon several persons, the general rule is that each estate, or part of estate, mortgaged, according to its value, shall bear a pro-

(a) Per Plunket, C., Hartly v. O'Flaherty, 1 Ll. & G. temp. Plunket, 219, reversing the decision of Sir A. Hart, C., 1 Beat. 61; which decisions are, as above stated, examined by Sir E. Sugden in Averall v. Wade, Ll. & G. temp. Sugden, 252, supra, note.

(b) In re Cornwall, 2 Con. & L. 131. I shall have occasion again to recur to the subject of Marshalling in the next volume.

(c) Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 500. The early cases on the subject of Contribution are collected in 1 Eq. Abr. chap. xviii. p. 113, et seq. which Sir A. Hart in Hartly v. O'Flaherty, 1 Beatty, 78, referred to with approbation.

(d) Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 502. See as to the qualifications, ib. 504-5.

portionate part of the mortgage money (a); but this rule is liable to be varied by an intention clearly expressed to be found in the instrument, that one estate shall be primarily liable. As regards what shall be considered as an expression of such intention: where an estate is conveyed, and in the same deed the mortgagor covenants that “for better securing” the payment of the mortgage money he will surrender a copyhold estate (b), this is not sufficient to make the freehold estate the primary security (c): but in a case where a second estate, which chiefly consisted of mines and the necessary apparatus, was conveyed by a second witnessing part, and it was expressed that it was for further better and more effectually securing the mortgage money, and by way of collateral (d) security; Lord Eldon, in giving judgment, said the question must be decided by the effect of the deeds, regard being had to the contents of those deeds and the nature of the property which was the subject of the disposition; and his Lordship held, on the circumstances, without laying down any general rule, that the freehold estate was to be considered as the primary security as between the persons claiming under the mortgagor (e).

As regards the question in reference to devisees and legatees: in the case of Oneal v. Mead (f) it was decided that as between a devisee of a mortgaged fee-simple estate, and a specific legatee of personalty, the devisee shall not have his mortgage paid by the specific legatee, for that would have the effect of defeating the legacy, but shall take the mortgaged estate cum onere: A fortiori a specific legatee of a mortgaged leasehold shall not have contribution towards his mortgage from specific legatees of other leaseholds. So where the testator had bequeathed three leaseholds to three different persons, one being mortgaged, and directed that his residuary personal estate should pay the mortgage; the residuary estate having turned out to be insufficient, it was held that the legatee of the mortgaged leasehold was not entitled to contribution against the other two (g). But where there is a general charge of debts, and then an estate subject to a mortgage is devised to one, and other estates clear of incumbrances are devised to other persons; the devisee of the incumbered estate is entitled to contribution against the other devisees (h).

(a) Heveningham v. Heveningham, 2 Vern. 355.

(b) Lord Eldon observed, 2 Russ. 290, that as this provision referred to copyholds, there was a reason for its being in a distinct part of the instrument.

(c) Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382; Marquis of Bute v. Cunynghame, ubi inf.

(d) It was contended that “collateral” meant “concurrent.”

(e) Marquis of Bute v. Cunynghame, 2 Russ. 275; see pp. 298, 299, 300.

(f) 1 P. W. 693.

(g) Halliwell v. Tanner, 1 Russ. & M. 633; and see Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. 730.

(h) Carter v. Barnadiston, 1 P. W. 505.

It is now settled, that upon the failure of the general personal estate, the devisees and specific legatees shall each, according to the proportional value of the benefits conferred on each, contribute to the payment of specialty debts (a).

A testator after contracting for the purchase of an estate, by his will directed his executors to pay the purchase-money out of his personal estate, and devised the estate to his natural son, giving annuities and legacies to other persons; the personal estate turned out not to be sufficient to pay all: it was held that the son and the annuitants and legatees should all contribute rateably to the deficiency, the direction to the executor to pay the purchase-money was in the nature of a legacy, all therefore were equally the objects of bounty (b).

(a) Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 490, approved by Lord Langdale, Bateman v. Hotchkin, xi. Jur. 812, 1847; 10 Beav. 426, 434, stated supra. This had been decided (see Raithby's note, 2 Vern. 757) in Short v. Long, 2 Vern. 756-7; S. C. by the name of Long v. Short, 1 P. W. 402, 404, and Silk v. Prime, 1 Bro. 138, n.; but the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Cornewall v. Cornewall, 12 Sim. 303, had held that the specific legacies must be exhausted before the real estates were resorted to. In the case of Tombs v. Roch, above referred to, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce reviewed the authorities, and examined the principle applicable to such cases in an elaborate judgment, which embraces the principles applicable to the entire subject. In that case the testator (whose will was made after the late Wills Act, and therefore would have carried subsequently acquired property, though he did not appear to have had any such) devised his real estate, so that every portion of it was to be considered as specifically devised; the will also gave specific and pecuniary legacies; there was no charge of debts in the will, nor was any part of the property in mortgage; the assets were wholly legal. The personal estate, not specifically bequeathed, was admitted to be more than sufficient for the payment of the simple-contract debts, but it was insufficient for the payment of the specialty debts, and the question was whether the amount necessary, in addition to the personal estate not specifically bequeathed, to pay the specialty debts, was to fall wholly on the specific legatees, or rateably on them and the devisees; for the specific legatees did not deny their liability to contribute. "Every thing," said the Vice-Chancellor (pp. 500-1), "claimed by each party is claimed under the bounty of the testator;—making to different persons various specific gifts of moveable and immoveable chattels and real estate; did the testator wish, did he mean that the portion of them consisting of real estate should be wholly indemnified from his debts by the rest? for that is the question. We have only to refer to the doctrine of what is called Election, to be satisfied of the proposition that a testator must desire the fulfilment of all the provisions of his will according to their apparent purport: if so, then, where one mode of arranging his assets for the payment of his creditors must wholly or partially disappoint those provisions according to their apparent purport, while by another they stand whole or are less invaded, it must surely be right to attribute to him a wish and meaning in favour of the latter course, so far as the objects of those provisions are concerned" (and see Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382; 2 Coll. 502): and the V.-Chancellor held that the amount necessary for payment of the specialty debts must be contributed rateably by the specific legatees and devisees; and see the additional note, No. 1. Lord Chancellor Sugden had expressed the same opinion in Young v. Hassard, 1 Jones & Lat. 466: and on the question again coming before the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Gervis v. Gervis, 14 Sim. 654, his Honour adopted the decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and decreed accordingly; saying he was satisfied that his decision in Cornewall v. Cornewall, was erroneous. In these cases, the cases of Silk v. Prime and Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. W. 322, int. al. are particularly examined. The Vice-Chancellor of England stated, referring also to a statement of Lord Eldon's to the same effect, that the cases in the 3rd vol. of Peere Williams' Reports were not of equal authority with those in the 1st and 2nd vols. In Bateman v. Hotchkin, ubi supra, Lord Langdale held that the testator, by the terms of his will, had excluded the general rule as to contribution, xi. Jur. 812; 10 Beav. p. 435.

(b) Headley v. Readhead, G. Coop. 50, cited 4 Russ. 340.

The following case, of a late date, affords an instance of three of the points which we have had under consideration—Exoneration—Contribution—and Marshalling—under special circumstance. A testator at his death was entitled to a leasehold property in Lambeth, called the Belvidere wharf, subject to a mortgage for £5000, which was further secured by two policies of insurance for £3000; it was likewise subject to a mortgage for £1500, also secured by the testator's bond, and an assignment of a policy for £3000: he was also entitled to some leasehold premises at Streatham, subject to a mortgage, which was further secured by a policy. The testator, by his will, gave the whole of his real and personal estate, including the Belvidere wharf, to trustees in trust out of the rents of the Belvedere wharf to pay an annuity of £500 a year to his wife; if the rents should fall short (as they did), he directed the deficiency to be raised out of his general personal estate. After the death of the wife the trustees were to stand possessed of the Belvidere wharf, subject to a charge, in trust for the testator's son. The testator gave the residue of his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees, in trust to pay his debts and the legacies and annuities given by his will, and to pay off the incumbrances affecting his leasehold premises at Streatham and Brixton (sic), and to stand possessed of what should remain in trust for his son; the wife was one of the executors. After the death of the testator the three mortgages were paid off by means of the policies and the other personal estate of the testator; the assets were not sufficient to pay the other debts and the legacies. It was declared that the widow was entitled to have the leasehold premises at Streatham exonerated from the mortgage debt out of the general personal estate in priority to the legacies and annuities directed to be paid thereout (a)—that the widow had no priority in respect of the charge of the deficiency of the rents to pay her annuity as regards the general personal estate—that the mortgages which, at the testator's death, affected the Belvidere wharf and the policies of insurance respectively charged therewith, ought, as between the specific legatees of such wharf and the parties interested in the testator's general personal estate, to be borne by the wharf and the policies, rateably in proportion to their values at the testator's death (b)—and that the annuitants and legatees, under the will, as far as might be necessary for the payment of their annuities and legacies, were entitled to have the testator's assets marshalled, and to stand

(a) See on the point of priority, Pepper v. Blomfield, 2 Con. & L. 198, 204-5.

(b) Special directions were given as to how the apportionment was to be made in respect of each policy.

as incumbrancers on the Belvidere wharf, and in the place of the mortgagees who had been so paid to the extent to which their mortgages ought to have been paid out of the Belvidere wharf, and to be recompensed to that extent, what should have been paid for the principal and interest of such mortgages and subsequent interest on such principal sums, the amount to be raised by sale or mortgage of the Belvidere wharf (a).

The right to Contribution and Exoneration may arise between parties under other circumstances besides those which have been hitherto considered, as in the following cases :—and first as to the right to contribution between the Tenant for life and those in Remainder. Where the mortgage is paid off, the rule now is, as between the tenant for life and remainderman, that the tenant for life, who it is to be observed is under no obligation to pay off the principal, shall contribute, beyond the interest which he is bound to keep down (b), in proportion to the benefit he derives from the liquidation of the debt. If the estate is sold to pay the incumbrance the tenant for life takes the interest of the surplus, the capital belongs to the remainderman (c).

As regards the exoneration of the estate of a Married woman. Where a mortgage is made of the wife's lands, to secure money borrowed by the husband—and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the loan will be presumed to have been obtained for his purposes—his estate, especially where he covenants to pay the debt, must therefore pay the mortgage money, at the instance of the heir of the wife as well as the wife herself (d); although the husband may have paid off the mortgage, and taken an assignment in trust for himself, his executors, &c. and though by consequence legacies given by the husband may be defeated: for the wife joining in the security does not make it less the

(a) Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare, 94-6: the Vice-Chancellor himself raised the point as to marshalling, observing that there was no case precisely like that before him; in giving his final judgment his Honour made the observations contained in the additional note, No. 2.

(b) V. supra, p. 307, 344, 345, 546, 551; and Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 199.

(c) V. supra, Sect. x. pp. 345, 551; and the other references, supra, note (b). "In general a court of equity endeavours to make every part of the ownership of the estate bear a part of the incumbrance," Lord Hardwicke, Amesbury v. Brown, 1 Ves. p. 480; and see Powell on Mortg., i. pp. 311, 312, Coventry's note; ii. 1043, Cov. note (c); 1 Fonbl. book i.

c. 5, § 9, n. (a), p. 386: and as to apportionment of charges, v. supra p. 304, n., 545, 546, 549, 551.

(d) Tate v. Austin, 1 P. W. 264, and the cases cited in the notes, p. 266. The legacies were charity legacies, and it was attempted, without effect, to raise a distinction in their favour; charity legacies abate equally as other pecuniary legacies; Attorney-General v. Robins, 2 P. W. 25: and see, as to the points in the text, Lord Huntington v. Lady Huntington, 2 Vern. 437; 2 Bro. P. C. 1; 1 Ves. 252; Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bli. p. 104; Innes v. Jackson, 16 Ves. 356; Ruscombe v. Hare, 6 Dow, 1; 2 Bli. N. S. 192; Sugd. Law of Prop. 172.

debt of the husband, and her estate is considered as Surety only for the debt (a). Lord Cowper held that all other debts of the husband should be preferred to this (b); however, Lord Hardwicke laid down that the creditors could not stand in the place of the mortgagee against the wife's estate (c). But if the money be borrowed for the use of the wife or for the purpose of discharging debts contracted by her when sole, the mortgage will be considered as a charge on her estate, and no liability will attach on the husband (d); and where at the time of executing the mortgage of the wife's estate a settlement is made, whether before or after marriage, the husband's estate as a general rule will not be considered answerable to the wife's estate for the money borrowed (e); but particular circumstances may affect this as every other general rule.

In the late case of Lancaster v. Evors (f), the case was this: In 1772, Sir John and Lady Price mortgaged their respective estates for securing a debt of the husband; the husband died in 1776, and in 1782 the husband's estate was sold and the produce brought into court, and the surplus accumulated, in a suit (Earl Temple v. Price) which had been instituted by the mortgagee (Earl Temple). In another suit (Burney v. Scott) which was in effect a suit to administer Lady Price's estate, an account of her debts was taken, and the whole of her estate was administered (g). Burney, the plaintiff in that suit, was a judgment creditor of Lady Price, and the then plaintiff, his representative, claimed to have his debt paid out of the funds in the cause of Earl Temple v. Price, being part of the estate of Sir J. Price, alleging that two of the debts which had been paid out of Lady Price's estate to one Jaques were really debts of Sir J. Price, so that Lady Price was surety only, and that her estate ought to be indemnified to that extent, and he filed a bill against the heir-at-law of Sir J. Price praying accordingly: a great length of time had elapsed before the claim was made; but that objection was disallowed, as the fund was in court (h): it was declared that the legal personal representa-

(a) Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 252; Tate v. Austin, 2 Vern. 689; 1 P. W. p. 264; Parteniche v. Powlet, 2 Atk. 384; Jarman, Mortgage, by Sweet, 374.

(b) Ibid. 1 P. W. p. 264; see the decree, p. 265.

(c) Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 252.

(d) Lewis v. Nangle, Ambl. 150; 2 P. W. 664, n.; 1 Cox, 240; Jarman, 374.

(e) Lewis v. Nangle, Ambl. 150; Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bli. 122, Sugd. L. of P. 174; in which case all the material cases prior to that date are observed upon by Lord Redesdale, in moving the reversal of Lord Eldon's decree.

(f) 10 Beav. p. 154, affirmed by Lord Cottenham, on appeal.

(g) Ibid. pp. 160, 162.

(h) Ibid. p. 164; the defendant, the heir-at-law, also alleged that, not knowing of the plaintiff's claim, he had purchased incumbrances to an amount exceeding the fund in court; he was allowed as against the plaintiff, and in priority of him, only the amount he had paid, according to the usual rule; supra, tives of Lady Price (a) ought to be considered as creditors upon the funds in the cause of Earl Temple v. Price, for the amount paid to Jacques out of Lady Price's estate (b).

Where the father, tenant for life, and the son, tenant in fee in remainder, join in a mortgage in fee, for a sum of money borrowed by the father for his own use; the son will be considered as a creditor on the real and personal assets of the father to the amount of the mortgage: and Lord Eldon added, that he might call upon the mortgagee to make use of the mortgage against the real and personal assets of his father to work out his relief (c). Payments made by or at the expense of the tenant for life will, as has already been stated, be primâ facie considered to be intended to be kept alive for the benefit of the tenant for life and his representatives (d).

The principle of equitable contribution is also applied in regard to Sureties. Where several sureties join in one deed, or the creditor has distinct collateral securities for the same debt; if he sue one of the sureties only, that surety has primâ facie a right, on grounds of natural justice independently of contract—excepting as from the universality of the rule a contract is to be implied (and so it has been treated by the courts of common law)—to be placed in the situation of the principal creditor as against the sureties: he is entitled to have all the separate securities which the creditor may hold, though they may have been entered into without the knowledge of such surety, provided all the sureties are bound for the same principal and for the same debt, applied for his indemnity in a fair proportion as between him and the other sureties (e): on the principle that equality is equity, the creditor who can call upon all shall not be at liberty to fix one with the payment of the entire debt; and if the creditor will not make all to see the references in note (b), p. 841, and sup. p. 545 to 550: the authorities on this subject are collected in the note, 10 Beav. 166.

(a) No objection seems to have been taken that they were not the plaintiffs.

(b) Nothing was said as to the right of the executors to interest, or to a corresponding portion of the accumulations of Sir J. Pryce's estate.

(c) Lord Rosse v. Stirling, 4 Dow, 442; Sugd. Law of Prop. 577.

(d) V. supra, references in note (c), supra, p. 841; and Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 217.

(e) Mayhew v. Cricket, 2 Swanst. 185, 191; and the notes, p. 190, 191, & 193. Stirling

v. Forrester, 3 Bli. 590, 591; Deering v. Lord Winchelsea, 2 Bos. & Pull. 270 (1 Cox, 318, 4 Y. & C. 441); Hodgson v. Shaw, 3 My. & K. 191, dict. of Lord Brougham, adopted from Sir Samuel Romilly's argument in Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. 162; and Lord Eldon's judgment in that case, 164, 165, 169, 171; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. p. 21; Parsons v. Briddock, 2 Vern. 608; Stirling v. Forrester, 3 Bli. 575, 590; and see the cases collected in the Appendix to Mr. C. P. Cooper's first volume of Reports, p. 653: in p. 645, Dowbiggin v. Bourne, 2 Yo. & Coll. 462, on another point is particularly observed upon. See on this subject, supra, Vol. i. p. 661-3.

contribute equally, this court will finally, by arrangement, secure that object. But this principle does not apply where the suretiship of each is a distinct transaction (a), or where it is arranged by contract that each surety shall be liable only to a given extent (b):—where the sureties all join in the same deed, or by separate deeds for the entire debt, all must contribute equally; where, by separate deeds and for unequal sums, no one can be called upon to contribute beyond the amount to which he is liable on his own deed (c). Where a surety gives a bond for one part of the debt, and another security is afterwards given for another part of it, if the surety pays off his part of the debt he cannot claim contribution or indemnity out of the property comprised in the second security. The doctrine, said the Vice-Chancellor of England, never applies to a person who becomes surety at one time, and a security is given to the same creditor either for another debt, or, what is the same thing, for a distinct portion of the debt for which the first security was given. The doctrine, continued his Honour, is stinted to the particular contingency of the debt being one, and the security being given for the same debt at the time when the person becomes security for it (d). Lord Plunket held, on principle and analogy, that a surety paying and seeking contribution, cannot claim Interest from his co-surety upon the money paid or upon any part of it, but that in the absence of express agreement he is only entitled to contribution at any time towards the sum actually paid (e).

If one of three sureties has paid the debt, and the third has become insolvent, the surety who pays is entitled in equity to contribution to the extent of a moiety against the solvent co-surety (f). A surety for a surety cannot be called upon to contribute (g).

If a man borrow money on the mortgage of his estate for another, he may come into equity as every surety may against his principal to have his estate disincumbered by the actual debtor (h): parol evidence may be given to show who is principal and who is surety (i). If the

(a) Coope v. Twynam, Turn. & R. 426.

(b) Swain v. Wall, 1 Ch. Rep. 80; Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. 169, 170; Pendlebury v. Walker, 4 Y. & C. 424, 442.

(c) Lord Eldon, Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. 165, 169: this case and Deering v. Lord Winchelsea, ubi sup. are the leading cases on this subject.

(d) Wade v. Coope, 2 Sim. 155, 160.

(e) Onge v. Truelock, 2 Molloy, 44; Lord Plunket particularly referred to Copis v. Middleton, 1 Turn. & R. 224; which he considered to be a hard case, and contrary to previous authorities; Bell v. Free, 1 Swanst. 90; but see

Swain v. Wall, 1 Ch. Rep. 81, where interest by way of damages was allowed. In Cox v. King, 9 Beav. 530, Lord Langdale held that though the Master cannot give interest by way of damages on an unliquidated demand, the Court may do so in a case calling for it.

(f) Peter v. Rich, 1 Rep. Ch. 19; Hole v. Harrison, 1 Ch. Ca. 246; Finch, Rep. 15, 203.

(g) Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. 166.

(h) Lee v. Rook, Moseley, 318; see also the other cases in the note to 2 Powell on Mortgages, by Coventry, 871 a, n. (c).

(i) Lord Eldon, Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. 170.

principal creditor omits to sue for the recovery of the debt, the surety may compel him to do so, indemnifying him for the expences (a): in the Court of Chancery you cannot go against the surety whilst the fund previously applicable remains, for the surety has a right to have that fund first applied for his benefit (b).

The debtor himself has no right to insist that the creditor shall refrain from exercising any of his remedies, unless there be some other circumstances raising an equity which shall induce the court to interfere (c).

In concluding the general subject of Trust, or Equitable Estates in real estate, it may be well to observe that, "Where a man brings his bill in this court, where there is a trust, and upon a mere equitable title, there he shall recover the estate; and the court will give him an account of the rents and profits, and that from the time the title accrued, unless upon special circumstances, and then they will restrain it to the time of bringing the bill" (d). But when the right to possession depends upon a purely legal question, and no impediment is suggested, the necessity of removing which would entitle the plaintiff to transfer his complaint from a court of law and bring it into a court of equity, the court will not entertain jurisdiction to order possession to be delivered. So if the plaintiff, in addition to the prayer that possession may be given to him, also prays that the defendant may account for the mesne profits, these profits being of the ordinary character of rents of real estate, the Court of Chancery in such case also will not entertain jurisdiction; and it will not be inferred that the account of such profits cannot be properly taken in a court of law merely from the circumstance that they arise from the produce of a mine; and where a person out of possession of an estate claims equi-

(a) Com. Dig. Ch. 4, D 6; Ranelagh v. Hayes, 1 Vern. 190; Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 733; Antrobus v. Davidson, 3 Meriv. 579; Mitford, Pl. 148.

(b) Caulfield v. Macquire, 2 Jo. & Lat. 141, 164; and see the same case as to the surety's right to be indemnified out of the interest made by the fund: the doctrines as to Principal and Surety generally will be considered in the next volume.

(c) Holditch v. Mist, 1 P. W. 695. The ground relied upon was that by Act of Parliament all the debtor's property was vested in trustees, to pay his debts; therefore he ought not to be sued, but the Lord Chancellor would not grant an injunction; recognised by Lord Eldon, Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 714, where Lord Eldon disputed the authority of Wright v. Nutt, 1 H. Bl. 136, and 3 Bro. 326; and see the notes, 1 P. W. 695; and see 6 Ves. 726, 728-738. For a more ample account of this doctrine, as applicable to Sureties, I beg to refer to Mr. Pitman's work on Principal and Surety, chap. iv. p. 146, et seq.: as to how the right to contribution may be lost or affected, v. ib. p. 152, et seq.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. p. 130. See also Tates v. Hambly, 2 Atk. p. 363, and the other cases cited in the notes of the reporters to Vice v. Thomas, 470, 4 Yo. & Coll. 550.

table relief, the right to which depends upon the right to possession, the court requires that the party so circumstanced should recover the possession at law before he files his bill for the consequential equitable relief (a).

We now proceed to another description of equitable interest, namely, that which may be acquired in a Chose in action, or other subject which is not transferable according to the Rules of the Common Law.

(a) Judgment of H. R. H. Prince Albert, Lord Warden of the Stannaries, Vice v. Thomas, 4 Yo. & Coll. 558-60. The case of an infant is an exception, and there may be other exceptions arising from peculiar circumstances. See Tilly v. Bridges, Prec. Ch. 252; Blomfield v. Eyre, 8 Beav. 258.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

General Rule—Personal Estate liable in First Instance, and its Qualifications in favour of Legatees.—V. supra, p. 839.

“The mere fact that a testator by his will makes gifts,” said the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in Tombs v. Roch, which has been so often referred to, “though he does not mention his debts or allude to a debt or a creditor, has the effect of changing the order and manner in which his assets bear the burthen of his debts. If a man dies intestate, owning freehold and personal estate, and indebted by specialty and simple contract, all his debts, whether by specialty or simple contract, whether secured or not secured by mortgage, fall in the first instance on his personal estate, and if that be deficient, on the various portions of his freehold estate, rateably; so that, should it devolve in different lines of descent, each heir suffers equally or in proportion. But let him leave a will making gifts, though wholly silent on the subject of his debts, nor alluding to a debt, or to a creditor, and the case is altered: for the portion, if any, of his freehold estate which he has allowed to descend, though also not mentioned or alluded to, may, in relief of the personal estate, be practically subjected to debts with which, had there not been a will, it would not have been burthened, or would have been to a less extent burthened; and the portion of the freehold estate devised, if mortgaged by the testator for his own debt, may be made practically liable to that debt, in exoneration or relief also of the personal estate, though the will does not in any manner allude to the mortgage. “All this,” said the Vice-Chancellor, “can, I apprehend, only be on the foundation of ascribing to the testator such an intention as I have stated, though the will is silent upon it. In truth,” said his Honour, “I consider it to be perfectly correct in principle, to say that every will ought to be read, as in effect embodying a declaration by the testator, that the payment of his debts shall be, as far as possible, so arranged as not to disappoint any of the gifts made by it, unless the instrument discloses a different intention.” And as regards authority, said the learned Judge, “How indeed else is the bulk, not to say the whole, of the various cases in which marshalling clearly takes place under different circumstances for general as well as specific legatees—how else is the liability of descended to indemnify devised freeholds from debts, secured or not secured by mortgage, to be satisfactorily accounted for?" (Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, Tombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. 501-2.) The Vice-Chancellor, pp. 503-4-5-6, refers to the qualifications or explanations of the general doctrine; noticing particularly Pearce v. Loman, 3 Ves. 135, where it was held that there should be no marshalling in respect of a legacy charged on real estate which had fallen into the real estate by the death of the legatee, and the preference given to a specific legacy over a general legacy.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Extract from the Judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram in Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare, 94-5.—V. supra, p. 841.

"It is not very easy to understand the principle upon which the court has proceeded in some of the cases referred to. The rule of law is clear, that a testator, by devising lands expressly 'subject to a mortgage,' does not thereby declare any intention that the devisee shall take cum onere, as against the testator's personal estate. It is equally well settled, that the amount of a testator's general personal estate is not a circumstance from which any inference can be legitimately drawn as to the construction of his will. Yet, if the amount of a testator's personal estate be insufficient for the payment of his debts and legacies, the court discovers an intention on the part of the testator, that the devisee of his real estate, subject to a mortgage, should take it cum onere. If the court, in that state of circumstances, had decided upon apportioning the deficiency between the pecuniary legatees and the devisee of the land, a reason might have been found for the determination, in the consideration that the court was dividing a burthen which the caprice of the creditor might otherwise have thrown wholly upon either. But that is not the determination of the court. The court is active in throwing the burthen wholly upon the devisee of the land,—upon the party apparently, and upon the ordinary principles of the court, entitled to be exonerated. And it is remarkable, that in Forrester v. Lord Leigh (1), the possibility of this very circumstance is stated as the reason why the court will not, in favour of a pecuniary legatee, marshal the assets, by compelling a bond creditor to proceed against devised estates. I am, however, bound by authority; and upon the authorities I think the specific legatee of the Belvedere leasehold must take the legacy cum onere, so far as the pecuniary legatees may be entitled, under the rule referred to, to have their legacies protected. The question then remains, What is the onus with which he must be charged? If the policies as well as the leaseholds had been specifically given, there must have been an apportionment of the mortgage debts between the leaseholds and the policies; and by reasoning analogous to that by which I suppose the court to be governed in holding the pecuniary legatees entitled to come upon the property charged with the debts in the place of the mortgagee, I think the apportionment must still take place. The court compels the creditor to take payment of his debt out of his security, or places the legatees in the same situation as if he had done so, not because the security is specifically bequeathed, but in spite of that circumstance. A rule which, in a specific case, marshals the assets in favour of pecuniary legatees at the expense of specific legatees, is not to be extended beyond the letter of authority, which only confines the creditor to his entire security."

(1) Amb. 171.

CHAPTER IX.

EQUITABLE INTERESTS ARISING FROM ASSIGNMENTS OF CHOSSES IN ACTION, POSSIBILITIES, AND CONTINGENT INTERESTS—ASSIGNMENTS OF SUCH INTERESTS AND OF RIGHTS OF ACTION—MAINTENANCE.

General Rule of Common Law that no Possibility, Right, nor Thing in Action shall be assigned.

The true Ground of the Rule.

Exception in favour of the Crown.

Bills of Exchange, &c.

Court of Chancery would not adopt this Doctrine.

Allowed Assignments of Choses in Action, and Possibilities for Valuable Consideration.

Assignment operates as Agreement.

Wright v. Wright.

Lord Hardwicke's Observations in this case.

Buckley v. Newland.

Remedy at Law on Assignment of Chose in Action.

Possibilities coupled with an Interest in Real Estate, now Assignable at Law.

Doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to the Assignment of Choses in Action and Possibilities, &c., have given rise to a class of Equitable Interests.

Sometimes the subject of Settlement.

Not competent to an Executor or a Trustee of himself to leave Chose in Action outstanding.

No particular Words or Form necessary in an Assignment of a Chose in Action.

May be by Parol.

Covenant to Assign.

Debts are Goods within the Stat. 21 Jas. I.

To complete a Transfer of a Debt, so as to avoid the Operation of the Statute, all must be done towards Delivery of Possession that can be done.

Notice to the Debtor or Holder of the Property Essential.

Particularly incumbent on Trustees of a Settlement to give Notice.

Consequences generally of not giving Notice. Advantages of giving Notice.

Notice to one of several Obligors or Trustees sufficient.

Any actual Notice, though only in Conversation, sufficient.

In the case of an Assignment of a Mortgage, or of the Equity of Redemption, Notice not necessary.

Any Order given by Debtor to his Creditor, having a Fund in his hands, when shewn to the Party, amounts to an Equitable Assignment.

Bill of Exchange.

Any Order appropriating an Existing Fund to a particular Purpose, amounts to an Equitable Assignment.

But the Appropriation must be complete.

Adams v. Claxton.

In cases where Third Persons have been held to be entitled, there has usually been a Consideration for the Actual Assignment or Appropriation.

Mere Voluntary Remittances, with Orders to pay to a Third Person, not sufficient if revoked.

If not revoked Mandatory bound.

Though there may be an Assignment in Equity, which is not such at Law, it seems that what is not a Lien at Law is not a Lien in Equity.

Assignment of a Contract for Sale of an Estate may be made notwithstanding Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9.

Assignee of Chose in Action, as he is entitled to all the Remedies of Assignor, so he takes it subject to all Equities.

Length of Time, &c. may place the Assignee in a better Situation.

Assignment of Mortgage.

Assignment of a Legacy.

A Legacy may be assigned.

Expression of Intention communicated to the Executor not sufficient.

Where an Assignment is made of a Legacy charged on Land, though in a Register County, it is only considered as an Assignment of the Money.

Where a Legacy is assigned the Executor cannot set off a Debt due to himself from the Legatee.—Assignment by Executor of Legacy given to Himself.

Assignment of Possibilities, &c.

Mere Possibilities may be subject of Contract to be enforced in the Court of Chancery. So may an Interest to be acquired.

Freight to be acquired may be assigned in Equity.

So as to be good against Assignees in Bankruptcy.

The Court of Chancery binds the Property.

Interests not Assignable on the ground of Public Policy.

Half-Pay, &c.

Alimony.

It is only in respect of Assignments of Property that the Court of Chancery will exercise its Jurisdiction.

Right to avoid the Effect of a Legal Instrument on Equitable Grounds, not Assignable.

Doctrines as to Maintenance and Champerty.

Maintenance and Champerty still discouraged at Law and in Equity.

Not Maintenance to purchase an Interest which is the subject of a Suit.

Number of Persons having a common Interest joining in a Suit.

Assignment of Right to file a Bill in Equity.

Prosser v. Edmonds.

In the preceding pages we have considered that kind of equitable estate or interest in transferable property, which a cestui que trust enjoys, where the legal estate is vested in a trustee in trust for him: we have also considered the nature of the equitable estate or interest which the mortgagor is entitled to in the property mortgaged (a). Some account of the general doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to Legacies might be here expected, inasmuch as the legatee, at least until the executor's assent, and afterwards where the demand is for a pecuniary legacy, has an equitable interest only. The nature of legacies, and the origin of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in regard to legatory matters, have been treated of in the former volume (a); and some of the more important doctrines, such as in regard to the vesting of legacies, the marshalling of assets in favour of legatees, and many other topics relating to legacies, have been incidentally adverted to; and the subject of legacies given by way of Portion has been gone into at large in this volume: as Mr. Roper's work, with the large additions made to it by its learned and industrious editor, contains an elaborate exposition of the law relating to Legacies; and Mr. Justice Williams's very learned work on Executors contains a comprehensive summary of the law on this subject, which I could only repeat in different words, and certainly without any improvement either as regards arrangement, diction, or accuracy; and as the works above referred to are in every one's hands, I have thought it would be superfluous to enter into the general subject of Legacies. I therefore propose now to proceed to consider that kind of equitable interest which a person may become entitled to in property not assignable at the common law, such as choses in action and contingent interests and possibilities: this is the only remaining equitable interest to which our attention has to be directed (b).

"The wisdom and policy of the sages and founders of the law," says Lord Coke, and this has often been repeated, "have provided that no possibility, right, title nor thing in action shall be granted or assigned to strangers, for that would be the occasion of multiplying contentions and suits" (c). But, in regard to choses in action, as the same doctrine has been adopted in every other state of Europe, it may be doubted whether the reason, which has been the foundation of the rule everywhere else, was not also the reason for its introduction in this country; namely, that the credit being a personal right of the creditor, the debtor being obliged towards that person could not by a transfer of the credit, which was not an act of his, become obliged towards another; and the more especially as the mode of effecting

(a) Supra, Vol. i. p. 193, 194, 581.

(b) Equitable interests, arising from the maxim that "What ought to be done is considered as done," form the subject of the 4th Section of Chap. vi. sup. p. 251, et seq.

(c) Lampet's case, 10 Co. 48, a.

a virtual transfer which was invented by the Roman juriconsults, namely, by constituting the assignee the mandatory of the creditor (a) to sue for and recover the debt in the name of the creditor (b), has also been adopted in our system of jurisprudence. It may be observed that the sale of a debt, together with the security was declared to be valid by the Emperor Alexander Severus (c), and it was evidently not an uncommon thing for debtors to assign debts owing to them by others to their own creditors; and if notice were given to the debtor, the receipt of the assignor was no discharge: the same principle, as will be presently seen, now prevails in our system of jurisprudence (d).

It was once doubted whether an annuity was assignable though assigns were mentioned in the grant, the argument being that it was a mere personal contract, and therefore a chose in action, but it was settled in Maund's case (e), that express words would make the annuity assignable (f): and on the ground that a mere Possibility could not be assigned, it was held at law, that, if a term were devised or granted to one if he should live as long as the term should last and if he should die before the term should end with remainder to another, in such case, so long as the first grantee was alive, the remainderman could not at law assign his interest in the term, it being but a possibility (g).

As regards choses in action there was and is at law an exception to the general rule as laid down by Lord Coke in favour of the crown: thus a debt may be assigned to the king though it be not ascertained, as a debt upon a bond for performance of covenants; also the king may assign a chose in action, as a recognizance, obligation, &c., or a thing for which another is accountable, and the king's grantee may sue in his own name, or he may prosecute an extent in the king's name: but the king cannot assign an uncertain thing, as damages for a trespass; and where an obligation forfeited by outlawry is assigned, the grantee cannot sue in his own name unless he has special words enabling to do it (h).

There is also at law an exception as regards private persons in the instance of bills of exchange and promissory notes: the property which

(a) Ibid.; and see Cod. J. viii. 42, 1; Do-mat. lib. iv. tit. 4, § 3, 4.

(b) See Pothier's Treatise on Contract of Sale, quoted, Story, § 1040, note.

(c) Cod. J. iv. tit. 39, l. 3.

(d) Cod. J. viii. 42, 3; v. infra as to the same doctrine in the Court of Chancery.

(e) 7 Co. 28, a.

(f) So it is said, Harg. note to Co. Litt. 144, b.; but Maund's case seems to apply to a rent-charge; the reason given, namely, modus et conventio vincunt legum, if applicable to the case of a personal annuity, would extend to annulling a rule founded on general policy, for Lord Coke puts the rule against assigning choses in action on that foundation.

(g) 4 Co. 66, b.; Touchst. p. 239.

(h) Com. Dig. Assignment, D. [p. 555]; Miles v. Williams, 1 P. W. 252-3.

is vested in the payee may be transferred or assigned by him to any other person, which power of assignment, as Sir Wm. Blackstone observes, is the life of paper credit. Still a promissory note is not a chattel in possession; though by statute it is made assignable and transferable according to the custom of merchants like a bill of exchange, yet it is still a chose in action and nothing more (a).

But the Courts of Chancery from the earliest times thought the doctrine on which the common law proceeded in these cases, as too absurd for it to adopt (b): that court, acting upon principles of general jurisprudence, held, that a man may bind himself to do anything which is not in itself impossible (c), and that he ought to perform his obligations (d); and accordingly it has always been held in the Court of Chancery as far back as its records reach, that the assignment of a chose in action (e), founded on a valuable consideration (f), ought to be enforced (g). So the Court of Chancery has given effect to assignments of every kind of future and contingent interests and possibilities in real and personal property, if made for valuable consideration (h). "An assignment," said Lord Hardwicke, speaking of cases of this kind, "always operates by way of agreement or contract amounting in the consideration of this court to this, that one agrees with another to transfer and make good that right or interest, and like any other agreement the court will cause it to be specifically performed (not leaving the assignee to his action for damages for a breach) when the assignor is in a condition to transfer the property, or to cause it to be transferred to the assignee" (i).

(a) 2 Black. Comm. 468-9, Sweet's edit.; 6 Mees. & W. 426, there cited; et v. supra, p. 476.

(b) Buller, J., Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 340.

(c) Heinnecc. Jur. Nat. et Gent. c. 14, § 397; 1 Fonbl. 213.

(d) Ibid. and 1 Roll. Abr. 419; 5 Vin. Abr. 110, there cited.

(e) As to what legal choses in action are, see Vol. i. p. 180, 181. There are equitable choses in action, as legacies, which, as will presently be noticed, are equally assignable; so the benefit of a decree or judgment may be assigned in equity, and a judgment may be assigned at law in Ireland, O'Fallon v. Dillon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 22.

(f) In Lord Carteret v. Paschal, 3 P. W. 199, it is stated (obiter) that a chose in action may be assigned without consideration, though, if treated only as a contract, the assignment would require a consideration; see 2 Vern. 595, 3 Ch. Rep. 50; Anon. 2 Freem. 145; et v. infra, Edwards v. Jones: as to Voluntary Assignments, v. infra, Chapter x.

(g) Squib v. Wyn, 1 P. W. 381; Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. p. 411; Row v. Dawson, 1 Ves. 333, overruling Thomas v. Freeman, 2 Vern. 563; Anon. 2 Freem. 145.

(h) Warmstrey v. Tanfield, 1 Ch. Rep. 16; Goring v. Bickerstaffe, 1 Ch. Ca. 8, and the other cases cited, 1 Fonbl. 215, n. (5); and Raithby's note to Thomas v. Freeman, 2 Vern. 563 (though in the case itself the contrary was decided, the Lord Keeper erroneously adopting the maxim, Equitas sequitur legem); Jewson v. Moulson, 2 Atk. p. 421; Spraggs v. Binks, 5 Ves. 588; Stokes v. Holden, 1 Keen, 152-3. In that case it was attempted to deduce from this doctrine, that a contingent legacy was forfeited to the crown on the legatee being convicted of felony before the contingency happened; but Lord Langdale held, that as neither the original legatee nor the purchaser had any right immediately to receive and enjoy the property, but it was only in contingency, it was not subject to forfeiture for felony, ibid.

(i) Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. p. 411. That was a case of meritorious consideration only, but the circumstances were peculiar. A father had by deed granted a possibility of a legal interest under an executory devise, to his younger son in consideration of natural love and affection—the heir-at-law of the father, who was otherwise provided for (Belt's note), claimed it after it had come into possession, he having the legal title.

It has already been observed that the courts of law have adopted the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to assignments of

The observations and judgment of Lord Hardwicke in this case are of so much importance in reference to the sale and transfer of possibilities and expectancies, that I have thought it best to set them forth at some length. "It is now established in this court that a chose in action may be assigned for valuable consideration, and this (i. e. the contingent interest, the subject of the suit,) may be released as a chose in action may; and then why may not it be put into such a shape as to be disposed of to a stranger, or to make him (i. e. the assignor) trustee for a stranger? This court admits the contingent interest of terms for years to be assigned for valuable consideration, though the law does not, and further permits them to be disposed of by will, as in Wind v. Jekyl (1 P. W. 572). But that depends on the same reason as a bequest of a chose in action, viz. that the court will not permit an executor, or administrator with the will annexed, to claim in contradiction to the will; and besides will make it good in case of a consideration, as in Theobald v. Defay, in the House of Lords, 1729, which was the strongest case, being an act of a feme covert, and yet it was established; and I should not doubt in the case of an assignment of a term of years, not for money, but for a younger child, this court would make it good against the other children, and the executor or administrator. But this is said to be a contingent interest or possibility of an inheritance, and there is no case of making that good; as to which there is no difference in the reason of the thing between that and the allowance of an assignment of a personal thing, or chattel real the heir must take by descent and succession from the ancestor. Trevor's case (Hobson v. Trevor, 2 P. W. p. 191, Lord Macclesfield) goes a great way: there was an agreement on marriage to settle all such lands as should come by descent or otherwise from his father, which this court carried into execution, notwithstanding an expectancy of an heir-at-law in the life of the ancestor is less than a possibility. In that case it was made good by way of agreement for valuable consideration; then how does an assignment differ from it? An assignment always operates by way of agreement or contract, amounting in the consideration of this court to this, that one agrees with another to transfer and make good that right or interest, which is made good here by way of agreement. So was Beckley v. Newland (infra) which was as little to be favoured as any case whatever. I agree that to some purposes the present consideration is not so strong as for money. If the question came to be between the child so advanced for love, &c. and a creditor bonâ fide, the equity of the creditor will be superior to that of the child; but as against any claiming voluntarily from the father as executor or administrator, or heir-at-law, it is a consideration, and only made so in the second degree where the question is with a creditor who is a purchaser. If the father had entered into a contract for himself and his heirs with his younger son, in consideration of natural love and the advancement he was naturally bound to make for him, that he should have the lands when the event should happen, the heir would be bound, and upon a bill brought against him the court would have decreed it on the foot of the equitable consideration, and within the cases of making good defective executions of powers, and a decree of copyhold without surrender (as to this, see Ellis v. Nimmo, supra, p. 58, 285, 286, and the other cases referred to in connection with it); this is the same thing, though not in that shape, the court not laying weight on the manner but the substance." "I agree with the plaintiff," added his Lordship, in reference to the then state of the law, "that this would not have been good by a will; and I think all these cases of personal things differ from cases of real estate, in which, if not well devised in point of law, for want of a legal manner of executing the instrument or power in the deviser, the heir may claim in contradiction of the ancestor in a different manner from the executor or administrator (with will annexed), who must claim according to the will."

Beckley v. Newland, 2 P. W. 185, referred to in the last case, was this:—The plaintiff, Beckley, and Sir George Newland, who had married the presumptive heiresses of one Turgis, entered into articles, whereby they agreed that whatever should be given to either of them should be equally divided; Turgis left a considerable property to Sir G. Newland, and the plaintiff filed his bill claiming under the agreement one half. Lord Macclesfield made a decree in the plaintiff's favour, though there was no other consideration than the mutual benefit of the chance; saying the agreement to share was not disappointing the intent of the chooses in action (a): now, if the obligor in a bond, after notice of its being assigned, take a release from the obligee, and plead it to an action brought by the assignee in the name of the obligor, a court of law will set aside the plea; so if he plead payment, unless he had no notice of the assignment (b); but the action is not considered to be the action of the cestui que trust, so far as that a debt due to him from the cestui que trust can be set off in such action (c): there is however this inconvenience at law, that the defendant in such action may give in evidence the declarations or admissions of the plaintiff on the record, to defeat the action, although such plaintiff appear to be only a trustee for a third person: evidence of admissions of the parties really interested is also admissible (d).

In ordinary cases, where the plaintiff has an easy remedy by suing in the name of the assignor, the Court of Chancery will not entertain jurisdiction, but leave the party to his remedy at law (e); and, in a late case, the Vice-Chancellor allowed a demurrer to such a bill: but if the assignor refuses to allow his name to be used, or threatens to impede the assignee in his proceedings, or is acting in collusion with the debtor, these are special circumstances, which will justify such a bill being filed (f): and the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is so much more effectual in such cases than that of a court of law, that there can be no doubt that in all cases where there is any complexity the jurisdiction will be sustained: the obligee, like every other trustee, whose name is used by the cestui que trust as plaintiff in an action at law, has a right, unless there be a stipulation to the contrary, to an indemnity against the costs of proceeding in his name (g).

As regards Possibilities:—Even prior to the late Statute of Wills, a Devise of a Possibility, coupled with an interest, and of a con-testator, for the devisee would have power to dispose of the estate as he pleased after it came to him.

(a) Vol. i. p. 181: and see Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 340-1; Mr. Justice Buller there gives a history of the law on this topic; he would have abolished the forcing the assignee to declare in the assignor's name.

(b) Legh v. Legh, 1 Bos. & P. 447; Manning v. Cox, 7 Moore, 617; Emery v. Mucklow, 10 Bing. p. 23; see the cases collected, Harrison's Digest, p. 1522; and Chitty on Contracts, 605.

(c) Tucker v. Tucker, 4 Barn. & Ad. 745; disputing Bottomley v. Brooke, 1 T. R. 621; and Rudge v. Birch, 1 T. R. 622. Of Set-off in Equity, v. infra, 3rd Vol.; and Clark v. Cort, Cr. & Phill. 154: the statute 2 Geo. II. c. 22, § 13, governs the principle of set-off at law; et v. supra, Vol. i. pp. 247, 651.

(d) Smith's Leading Cases, ii. 228, ed. 1840: in the note, p. 236, those cases, in which courts of law have to take notice of equitable interests, are stated.

(e) Keys v. Williams, 3 Y. & Coll. 466-7; and see the cases cited by Mr. Spurrier, ibid. p. 463, and by the Vice-Chancellor of England in the case cited below.

(f) Hammond v. Messenger, 9 Simons, 327.

(g) See Annesley v. Simeon, 4 Mad. 390.

tingent interest, whether in real or personal estate, was good at law (a); and possibilities coupled with an interest, not naked possibilities, and contingent interests in real estate, may now be granted and assigned at law; the assignment is no longer a contract only to be carried into effect by the Court of Chancery, but an actual conveyance (b), so that in such cases the Court of Chancery has no longer any occasion to interfere: but assignments of possibilities and contingent interests in personal chattels, and assignments of naked possibilities, are still subject to the exclusive cognizance of the Court of Chancery (c).

The Assignment of choses in action and of possibilities and contingent and future interests in real and personal estate, being, as above stated, allowed to be valid in equity, gave rise to a distinct and important class of Equitable Interests. Choses in action, such as policies of insurance, and contingent interests, and possibilities, may be, and frequently are, the subjects of settlement, and indeed of every kind of disposition of which a trust estate is capable: an assignee of a bond several times removed, has the same rights as the original obligee, and such rights may be the subject of settlement or disposition (d). It is very common in settlements to introduce a covenant on the part of the husband to effect a policy of insurance, and to assign it to trustees, so that the amount, when recovered, may be settled on the wife and issue of the marriage; and not unfrequently the money to be recovered on a bond is settled in the same manner (e).

To constitute an assignment of a bond, judgment, or other chose in action, no particular words or special form is necessary; indeed the same may be said of every equitable assignment, at least where there is a good consideration (f): it is usual to introduce a power of attorney, or an agreement to permit the assignee to make use of the name of the assignor to recover the property; but where these are wanting it is considered in the nature of a declaration of

(a) See Jones v. Roe, 3 T. R. 93-98; and the other cases cited, 1 Fonbl. 215, n. (g), and see Wright v. Wright, supra, p. 853.

(b) See the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106; sup. vol. i. pp. 291-2.

(c) A term for years being an interest in a "tenement" or "hereditament," there is no doubt, I presume, that contingent interests in terms for years are within the provisions of the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106: the statute 9 Geo. II. c. 36, enacts that no "hereditaments" shall be conveyed or settled, &c.; and it has been held that the statute comprises leaseholds, see the cases collected, Bythewood's Convey. by Jarman, p. 28. As to the assignment of possibilities, &c., in equity v. infra, p. 865.

(d) See Ord v. White, 3 Beav. 365.

(e) As in Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, pp. 457-459. As to who will be entitled to any Bonus that may be declared on a Policy so settled, see Courtney v. Ferrers, 1 Sim. 137; Parkes v. Bott, 9 Sim. 388. V. sup. Vol. i. 456.

(f) Row v. Dawson, 1 Ves. 332; Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 52.

trust (a); and the court has implied, as part of the contract, that the assigning creditor should suffer his name to be used for the purpose of recovering at law the subject of the assignment (b). An assignment of a chose in action may be made by parol (c).

A covenant for valuable consideration to assign a chose in action will operate in the Court of Chancery, as between the parties as an assignment; for this court considers what ought to be done as done, a maxim which has been fully considered in a preceding section; and if such a covenant be made to a creditor, in the absence of fraud, the creditor, on the death of the covenantor, will be entitled to the benefit of the preference thus given to him; for it is not like an attempt to give a creditor a preference not allowed by the rules of law or equity out of the general assets, which cannot be done; by the effect of the covenant the chose in action is removed from the general assets, just as, where a person is entitled to a remainder of a term, he may assign it without its being said to interrupt the course of administration (d).

But some important considerations are to be attended to, in order that an assignment of a chose in action may be good as against third persons. It was decided in Ryall v. Rowles (e), that debts are within the statute 21 Jas. I. c. 19, § 11 (f); therefore, in order that an assignment of a debt may be good against assignees in bankruptcy or in insolvency, all must be done that the nature of the case will permit, to complete the transfer. A chose in action does not of course admit of tangible possession or by consequence of delivery (g); but in order that a person may acquire by assignment a complete title to a chose in action as against assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency—and the same principle holds as between a prior and a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer—everything must be done towards the obtaining of quasi possession that the subject admits of; the assignee must do that which is tantamount to obtaining possession, by placing every person who has,

(a) See Butler's note to Co. Litt. 232, b, note (1); et v. supra, 853, et infra, p. 867.

(b) V. sup. p. 854; where a person enters into a covenant with a third person, as trustee for another, the cestui que trust cannot institute a suit against the covenantor for a specific performance, without making the trustee a party; Cooke v. Cooke, 2 Vern. p. 36; Cope v. Parry, 2 Jac. & W. 538.

(c) Heath v. Hall, 4 Taunt. 328; S. C. 2 Rose's R. 271; Tibbits v. George, 5 Ad. & Ell. 115-16.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Lord Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 6.

(e) 1 Ves. 348, 375.

(f) By that statute, which is re-enacted by 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 72, with some verbal alterations, if any bankrupt shall, by consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order or disposition, any goods or chattels, whereof he was reputed owner, or whereof he shall have taken upon himself the sale, alteration or disposition, as owner, the commissioners may dispose of the same for the benefit of the creditors. The decisions on this statute, as will be again noticed, might have afforded a good test as to whether all has been done that could have been done so as to make a voluntary assignment effectual (g). As to delivery, V. supra, Vol. i. p. 184.

within his knowledge, an equitable or legal interest in the matter under an obligation to treat it as his property: for this purpose he must give Notice to the holder of the fund. In the case of a debt, for instance, notice to the debtor is for many purposes tantamount to obtaining possession (a): if the assignee omit to give that notice he is guilty of the same degree and species of neglect as he who leaves a personal chattel, to which he has acquired a title, in the actual possession and under the actual control of another person; but if notice be given, the notice converts the debtor into a trustee or quasi trustee for the purchaser (b). If a bond be left in the hands of the assignor, he may assign it again, or may show it to any creditor as an evidence of so much money due to him, and so deceive the creditor (c); and such a case is within the purview of the statute (d). In the instance of book debts, notice to the debtor alone is sufficient, for a book debt cannot, in any sense, be the subject of delivery, as in one sense, namely, by the delivery of the security, a bond debt or a policy of insurance may (e).

If shares in a company are purchased by one person in the name of another, and no express notice that the holder is trustee is given to the company; a purchaser, or mortgagee, who gives actual notice to the company—that is, to the directors or managers—will have priority; the notice which the holder has cannot be considered within the rule (f), that notice to one partner is notice to the company (g). It was held by Vice-Chancellor Sir L. Shadwell, that notice to one of the assured, in an insurance company where all the assured are partners, is notice to the company (h); but this was overruled by the same learned judge in a later case (i).

It is particularly incumbent on trustees, in all cases where a chose in action, such as a bond or other debt or a policy of insurance, is assigned to them in a settlement or in any other way for the benefit of others, to give notice to the debtor or persons liable, for without (a) And see Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 410.

(b) Sir T. Plumer, Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 23; et v. p. 12; Loveridge v. Cooper, ib. p. 30; Foster v. Blackstone, 1 My. & K. 297; S. C. 9 Bli. N. S. 332; Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 73; ibid. p. 473. The debtor is a trustee in this sense, that if he pay to the original creditor, it will not be a discharge.

(c) Ryall v. Rolle, 1 Atk. 172-77; 1 Ves. Sen. 367, where Chief Baron Parker, referring to the doctrine of the Roman law, sup. p. 851, says, "After notice the debtor cannot afterwards justify payment to the assignees;" et v. Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 410.

(d) 21 Jac. I. c. 19, § 11, ibid.

(e) Ex parte Monro, Buck, 303.

(f) See as to this rule cases cited in notes

(h) & (i) infra, and Feltham v. Clark, 1 De G. & S. 307.

(g) Martin v. Sedgwick, 9 Beav. 338; in Ex parte Hennessey, 1 Conn. & L. 561, Lord C. Sugden expressed his disapprobation of Ex parte Waithman, 4 Deac. & C. p. 412, and see West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 249; particularly p. 255, where the authorities are examined, and the practice of particular offices is adverted to.

(h) Duncan v. Chamberlayne, 11 Sim. 126.

(i) Thompson v. Spiers, 13 Sim. 469, and see Martin v. Sedgwick, 9 Beav. 336, suprà; Ex parte Hennessey, infra.

such notice the debtor may pay to the obligee or person legally entitled, or to a subsequent assignee who has given notice; indeed the subsequent assignee for value is entitled to preference, for it was by the default of the persons having the prior assignment, in not giving notice, that the subsequent purchaser was drawn in to advance his money (a); and a trustee, to prevent any subsequent fraudulent transfer, independently of the consideration that the assignment is not complete without it, should procure the bond or policy to be delivered to him, and he ought to keep it (b); for any default in the performance of these requisites he will be personally liable.

Where the debtor has notice of the assignment the title of the assignee is perfect as to him; he is, in equity, bound to pay the money to the assignee, and not to the original creditor (c). But want of notice to the debtor does not affect the rights of the assignee as against the assignor; as between themselves the agreement subsists, and if for valuable consideration the court will enforce it (d): the debtor, however, in the absence of notice may of course pay to the original creditor, or as he may direct, without reference to the right of such assignee, of which he is ignorant (e); and if before notice given to the debtor of a prior assignment, a person advances money upon an assignment of the debt, without notice of the prior assignment, and he perfects his title by notice to the debtor; such subsequent assignee will be entitled to priority as against all parties (f); and that, notwithstanding the subsequent assignee may have made no inquiry of the debtor, for the inquiry in such case would have been nugatory (g).

Notice to one of several obligors, or to one of several trustees, operates as effectually as notice to all, so long as such person remains a co-obligor or trustee, inasmuch as a purchaser, in order to acquire priority, must apply to all (h); but if the person to whom notice has

(a) Wright v. Lord Dorchester, 3 Russ. 49, n. (see 3 Russ. 58); Dearle v. Hall, Loveridge v. Cooper, Forster v. Blackstone, Timson v. Ramsbottom, ubi sup.

(b) Evans v. Bicknell, ubi sup.; 6 Ves. 174; Knye v. Moore, 1 S. & S. 65; Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 98; Booth v. Lightfoot, L. C. 17 Jan. 1844; Hill on Trustees, 456.

(c) Row v. Dawson, 1 Ves. 332; Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. 348, 362, 367; Langley v. Lord Oxford, Amb. 17.

(d) See Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 407, 410.

(e) See Jones v. Gibbons, ubi sup.; Priddy v. Rose, 3 Meriv. 107.

(f) See Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 84-5, 95. The cases of Dearle v. Hall, Loveridge v. Cooper (suprà), Foster v. Blackstone, 1 My.

& K.; S. C., reported as Foster v. Cockerell, 9 Bli. N.S. 332, have established the general rule that in all assignments of equitable interests, other than equitable estates, he who gives notice to the trustees has priority over him that does not, on the principle that without such notice the title is not complete. See 5 Hare, 20, 21, Wilmot v. Pike.

(g) See Timson v. Ramsbottom, 2 Keen, 49; Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 89. See on this subject, Lewin on Trusts, 511, et seq.; and Hill on Trustees, p. 454, et seq.

(h) It may be useful to observe that under the stat. 5 Vict. c. 5, § 4, a Distringas may be obtained to restrain the transfer of stock. See Dan. Pr. 1552.

been given has died, or ceased to be a person to whom a purchaser would, in the ordinary course apply, then the notice will not secure a preference to the person giving such notice, for it will not be presumed that the notice was communicated to the co-obligors (a). If an assignment or deposit of a policy be made before an act of bankruptcy, and notice be not given to the insurance company until after the act of bankruptcy, but before the fiat and without notice of the act of bankruptcy, still the assignment is good as against the assignees (b).

The general rule is, that the notice must be sufficient to effect its object, that object being to prevent mistakes as to the property in the chose in action (c); it must be such notice as must reach the party who has to pay (d): but any actual notice is sufficient to secure to the purchaser or mortgagee his priority over a trust fund, though it be only communicated in conversation with one of the trustees (e). Where notice cannot be given to the trustee in whose name the stock assigned is standing, he who first obtains a distringas on the stock will have priority (f). Where a sum standing in the name of trustees is given by a testator as a specific legacy, the executor not having assented to the legacy, the incumbrancer under the specific legatee who first gives notice to the executor is entitled to priority (g).

Where, in the case of a mortgage, the estate in mortgage is assigned, the debt, as before noticed, follows the estate; the estate cannot vest in one person and the right to receive the debt remain in another, so that notice to the mortgagor is not necessary, though a bond may have been given as a collateral security (h): an assignment of a trust estate in land, and a conveyance of an equity of redemption absolute, or by way of security, as has already been mentioned, requires no notice to be given to any one, because each of those subjects is an Estate (i). The interest which a creditor has by the deposit of a deed may be assigned (k).

An order given by a debtor to his creditor (l), directed to a third

(a) Smith v. Smith, 2 Cr. & Mees. 231, and other cases cited; Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 73, 97; Wise v. Wise, 2 Jones & Lat. 403.

(b) In re Styant, 1 Phill. 105.

(c) Sir E. Sugden, Ex parte Hennessey, 1 Conn. & L. p. 564, and see Martin v. Sedgwick, 9 Beav. 337.

(d) Sir Edward Sugden, ubi sup.; but see Duncan v. Chamberlayne, sup.

(e) Smith v. Smith, 2 Cr. & Mees. 231, the person to whom the communication was made was not the acting trustee: in Foster v. Blackstone, ubi sup., the notice was to the solicitor.

(f) Etty v. Bridges, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 486.

(g) Holt v. Dewell, 4 Hare, 447, 451.

(h) Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 407; 1 Buck, 303; v. sup. pp. 655, 656.

(i) V. int. alia, Jones v. Jones, 9 Sim. 633 (see the remarks on this case, Jarm. by Sweet, 473-4, and sup. 642, 764.)

(k) Hobson v. Millard, 2 M. & Rob. 343, Rolfe, B.

(l) See Lord Braybrooke v. Meredith, 13 Sim. 275, as to exigencies of the Stamp Acts in such cases; see also Lett v. Morris, 4 Sim. 611. In the latter case an important question as to the right to call for production of the person having in his hands funds of the debtor, in specie, or in the way of a debt due, desiring him to pay the creditor out of that specific fund, is a binding equitable assignment of so much of the fund or credit, not only against the party giving the order, but his assignees in bankruptcy or on insolvency (a). “If he could transfer,” said Lord Thurlow, in a case of this description, “he has done it, and it being his own money he could transfer (b); the order being shown to the debtor, he is bound (c), and the transaction is complete (d) even as against assignees” (e). So a bill of exchange, drawn in respect of a particular demand in favour of a creditor, has been held to be an assignment in equity of that demand pro tanto to the legal holder of the bill (f): and it has been repeatedly decided, both at law and in equity, that where a creditor on whose behalf a stake has been deposited by the debtor with a third person, receives notice of that fact, the notice will convert the stake-holder into an agent for and a debtor to that creditor, on the ground that the creditor may have forborne to sue on the faith of the notice he has received (g): indeed, as a general rule, any order, writing or act, by which a fund is appropriated to any particular purpose, amounts to an equitable assignment of that fund (h). But in all these cases there must be an express engagement or a direction to pay out of the particular fund, amounting to an appropriation of a part of an existing fund for that purpose (i): and where the title depends on a direction only, in order to make the transfer effectual, the owner must have done that which puts the fund, or that part of it which is intended to be transferred, document by the plaintiff when it is admitted in the answer, is decided.

(a) Ex parte Alderson, 1 Mad. 53; affirmed on appeal, 3 Swanst. p. 292; the debtor had there accepted the order upon him.

(b) Yeates v. Groves, 1 Ves. J. 281; this was an order to pay out of purchase-money; there was no express acceptance; 4 My. & Cr. 702; Row v. Dawson, 1 Ves. 333.

(c) Ex parte South, 3 Swanst. 393; Burn v. Carvalho, 4 My. & Cr. p. 702; in that case there was a distinct contract to give an order to appropriate the funds in question to the discharge of the debt.

(d) 1 Ves. J. 282.

(e) See the cases cited above, and the Vice-Chancellor Wigram’s judgment in Meux v. Bell, ubi sup. The course of the decisions at law has been that the party receiving the order should in some way enter into a contract to apply the money as desired, or he cannot be sued at law; see Ex parte South, ubi sup.; Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 597.

(f) Schank v. Morland, before the Vice-Chancellor, 13 July, 1819, Mad. Pr. i. 686, 3rd ed.; and see Lett v. Morris, 4 Sim. 607.

(g) Vice-Chancellor Wigram’s judgment, Kirwan v. Daniel, 5 Hare, 493; in that case the modern cases at law are cited. See the observations of the Vice-Chancellor in this case, p. 499, 500, on the doctrine in Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, (supra, p. 60,) that notice to the creditor cannot enlarge the effect of the deed which per se gives no interest to the creditor; and see Sir J. Leach’s observations on that doctrine in Acton v. Woodgate, (also sup. p. 60).

(h) See, in addition to the cases above cited, Tibbits v. George, 5 Ad. & El. p. 116; Collyer v. Fallon, Turn. & R. p. 470; Smith v. Everett, 4 Bro. 67; Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 231. I am now speaking of transfers for value.

(i) Watson v. Duke of Wellington, 1 Russ. & M. 605; and see Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 45, 55: as to where the direction amounts only to a lien, v. infra.

out of his control (a). An act intended to be an assignment, but which is not perfected, will not amount to an appropriation. One William Wood, who had been executor to one Byfield, and who had misapplied part of the assets, had effected a policy on his life: he voluntarily signed a written instrument, and annexed it to the policy by means of a pin, to the following effect:—The annexed policy of insurance (describing it) for securing to my executors, &c., payment of 1000*l.* upon the event of my death, is hereby agreed and intended by me to be vested in Mary Woodyear, interest to be laid out by her upon the trusts stated (which were for the benefit of Mrs. Byfield and her family); but he did not state that it was to be in satisfaction of any debt; the date was false, for Byfield was not dead at the date of the memorandum: the policy and the memorandum were kept by Wood, and no communication was made to the insurance office or any of the parties interested. Wood afterwards assigned all his effects to trustees for his creditors, and delivered the policy and the memorandum to the trustees; the question was (b) whether the written instrument amounted to an appropriation of the policy. Sir William Grant held that it did not. It was originally, said the learned Judge, Wood's own property, it had not ceased to be so, it had not been transferred; and the paper was insufficient to give to any other person a lien so as to prevent the effect of any general or special assignment; he might have destroyed it (c): he had not done all that he might have done; he might have assigned it immediately to a trustee upon the trusts of Byfield's will, and he professed to intend to do that; it did not purport to be a final instrument, it rested upon a mere declaration of intention, which could produce no effect whatever (d).

It is to be observed, that in most of the cases above cited in which third persons have been held to be absolutely entitled to the benefit of the assignment or appropriation in their favour, the act has been done in pursuance of some contract or engagement, and there has been an actual consideration for the assignment itself, not merely a consideration which would support such an assignment; or the directions have

(a) Gaskell v. Gaskell, 2 Yo. & J. 502; there the fund had been by the directions of the owner carried over to certain persons with the intent that they should be trustees for another; but as no notice had been given to the trustees, Lord C. Alexander considered that it was still under the control of the owner; and see Wheatley v. Purr, 1 Keen, 551.

(b) Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 226.

(c) P. 230.

(d) P. 231. Sir Wm. Grant added, "I do not very well know what is meant by an appropriation of the policy to a debt; how a man, sitting in his closet, could, by writing a paper declaring that certain bonds or part of his stock should be applied to a particular debt, appropriate that property."

been given in pursuance of a promise by the debtor to a creditor, in answer to an application to pay the debt out of that particular fund (a); but it must be remembered (b), that where a remittance of bills or a consignment of property of any kind is made by the owner, not in consequence of any obligation or contract express or implied, but of his own motion, with orders to pay over the proceeds to a third person, this is not an irrevocable appropriation at law (c) or in equity, though the third person be a creditor (d): nor is a merely voluntary arrangement made by the debtor himself for payment of a creditor out of a particular fund, though communicated to the creditor, absolutely binding so that it cannot be revoked, that is, in the absence of special circumstances, as forbearance and the like on the part of the creditor so as to raise a case of contract or of fraud (e): but if there be no revocation, the mandatory it is presumed is bound, on the application of the party for whose benefit the remittance is made, to apply the property according to the directions he has received; and on the death of the mandatory, the property being bound by the trust would not form part of his general assets, nor would it pass to his assignees on his becoming bankrupt (f). Nor, on the death or bankruptcy (g) of the mandant, it is presumed, would the property so remitted form part of his general assets, in any case where there had been no revocation; but more especially if the mandate had been communicated to the creditor interested in its specific application; and à fortiori if it had been acted upon or recognized so as to make the creditor a party to the transaction (h).

Though there may be an assignment of a fund or of a part of a fund

(a) As in Burn v. Carvalho, 4 My. & Cr. 690; 3 Hare, 52-3.

(b) V. supra, Chap. i. Sect. iii. p. 33.

(c) Taylor v. Lendey, 9 East, 49; see 1 Mad. 184.

(d) Scott v. Porcher, 3 Meriv. 664; 3 Hare, 46. The late intelligent and accomplished Mr. Justice Story, in delivering judgment in the case of Tiernan v. Jackson, 5 Peters, Amer. Rep. pp. 592-602, entered into an elaborate examination of the cases relating to the right to recover, at law or in equity, under a mandate or order given for the benefit of a third person, of which a summary may be seen in his Commentaries on Eq. Jurisprudence, vol. i. 374, § 1041, et seq.; et v. supra, Vol. i. p. 458, n. (b); et sup. p. 59; and see Wilding v. Richards, 1 Coll. 664-5.

(e) See 3 Hare, 62.

(f) Hassall v. Smithers, 12 Ves. 122; De Bernales v. Fuller, 14 East, 590, note; and 2 Campb. 426; and see Fitzgerald v. Stewart, 2 Sim. 342, but that case was on demurrer, and there was an allegation that the defendant held the money in trust to pay the plaintiff; Thomas v. Tyler, 3 Yo. & Coll. 262-3; and see Vance v. Vance, 1 Beav. 606.

(g) See Burn v. Carvalho, 4 My. & Cr. 690, but that, as before mentioned, was a case of precedent contract.

(h) See 2 Sim. 342; Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 182; Kirwan v. Daniel, ubi sup. The question, as to the effect of notice to the creditor for whose benefit the remittance is made, simply, without reference to any special circumstances, must remain in doubt until it is settled whether Sir J. Leach's doctrine in Acton v. Woodgate, supported as it is by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, supra, p. 860, is to be upheld: such a case as Hassall v. Smithers, ubi supra, where the bills were remitted for the specific purpose of taking up bills outstanding, perhaps affords stronger grounds for considering it as a constituted trust: in Ex parte Heywood, infra, p. 863, there was notice to the creditors.

in equity, which would not be held such at law (a); yet it would seem that when the transaction is such that the party does not intend to make an assignment of an existing fund or a part of it, but only to give a lien—that is, as Lord Eldon defines it, a right to possess and retain (b)—on a fund to be realized, the party will not have a lien in equity unless he have a lien at law (c).

An assignment of a contract for the sale of an estate may be made notwithstanding the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9 (d), for the purchaser from the time of the contract is in equity the owner of the estate, and he may devise, sell or dispose of it in the same manner as if the fee were conveyed to him: there may be reasons indeed which may induce the court to refuse a specific performance, and then all his acts will be avoided; but primâ facie the title is in the person who has entered into the contract, and the court not only considers such a contract as lawful, but will compel the assignor to permit his name to be used for the benefit of the second purchaser (e).

An assignee of a chose in action, as he is entitled to all the remedies of the assignor (f), so he takes it subject to the same equities as it was liable to in the hands of the assignor (g): the assignor cannot, generally speaking, give more than he possesses (h); if there was any vice affecting the property assigned in his hands, it will equally affect the property in the hands of the assignee, whatever may have been the consideration for the assignment. The assignment of bills of exchange,

(a) Ex parte South, 3 Swanst. 393.

(b) 2 Rose, 357.

(c) Ex parte Heywood, 2 Rose, 357. There an order was given to a person to whom a cargo was remitted to pay a debt out of the proceeds, which order was communicated to the creditor; Lord Eldon held that the order did not create a lien, it gave no specific interest in the proceeds to the creditor; but he offered to the creditor an issue to try whether he had any lien on the proceeds: on the trial, Lord Ellenborough held that he had not; 1 Starkie, N. P. Rep. 143; 2 Rose, 357.

(d) By that statute it is enacted, That no person shall bargain, buy, or sell, or by any means obtain any pretended rights or titles, or take, promise, grant or covenant to have any right or title to any hereditaments [whether freehold or copyhold], unless the seller, &c. his ancestors, or they from whom he claims have been in possession of the same, or of the reversion or remainder thereof, for one whole year next before the said bargain and sale, &c.; the penalty is forfeiture of the value by each, both buyer and seller: but it made it lawful for any person in lawful possession to buy in any pretended right or title. The intent of the statute was to restrain persons from transferring any disputed right to strangers; iv. Bac. Abr. 495, Maintenance, E.; and Plowd. 88, there cited: there are other statutes on the subject: the whole law is very fully gone into by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, Kenney v. Browne, 3 Ridgway's P. C. 498; and see 1 Yo. & Coll. 498-9.

(e) See Sugd. V. and P. 422-3, 11th ed.: and see Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swanst. 56, 58.

(f) Ex parte Lloyd, 17 Ves. 245; 1 Rose, R. 4.

(g) Coles v. Jones, 2 Vern. 692; Davies v. Austen, 1 Ves. Jun. 247; Turton v. Benson, 1 P. W. 496-7; S. C. 2 Vern. 765; 3 Hamil v. Stokes, 4 Price, 161; Priddy v. Rose, 3 Meriv. 107; Ord v. White, 3 Beav. 366; Moore v. Jervis, 2 Coll. 69; 3 Yo. & Coll. 465.

(h) See Perdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 26, 45, 47, 50.

or notes before they are due, is an exception to this rule; they may be enforced by an assignee for a valuable consideration, though no consideration was given by the person who assigned to him; this exception is made in favour of trade, and prevails at law and in equity (a). Length of time and other circumstances may, however, vary the rule and make the case of the assignee for valuable consideration stronger than that of the seller (b). So the assignee of a mortgage as has been noticed in a former chapter, generally speaking, takes it entirely at his risk as to what is due between the mortgagor and mortgagee, upon taking the account from beginning to end, unless the former joins in the assignment (c). If therefore, after an assignment of a mortgage, payments are made to the mortgagee, without notice of the assignment, the assignee must allow such payments; and this, though the assignment of the mortgage be registered, for the registry is not notice for that purpose (d). So where a mortgagee is in possession, without notice from a second mortgagee, he may pay the rents over to the mortgagor; and the second mortgagee, if he has been so imprudent as not to give notice, as he cannot have an account of the by-gone rents from the mortgagor, so he cannot have it from the other mortgagee, though after notice given the first mortgagee is answerable to the second (e). A statement in an assignment of a mortgage, that so much is due for principal, and so much for interest, concludes a mortgagee though not the mortgagor, unless he is a party to the assignment (f): it is therefore ill-advised to take an assignment of a mortgage without making the mortgagor a party, or being made sure as to the sum really due (g). As between the mortgagee and the persons claiming under him, they cannot, without the privity of the mortgagor, add to what is due, settle the account, or turn the interest into principal (h); but if a mortgagor permits an assignee to pay the assignor a sum of money, which he, with the knowledge of the mortgagor, represents to be due, he will himself be bound by the transaction (i).

A legacy may be assigned: a share of the personal estate of an in-

(a) Anon. Com. Rep. 49; S. C. 2 Eq. Ab. 85.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, 1 Ves. 123, Hill v. Caillovel; and see 1 Russ. 47.

(c) Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. p. 127; Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. 264, 268; Sir Wm. Grant there notices the doubt which Lord Kenyon had entertained on the subject; Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Mad. 479, 481.

(d) Williams v. Sorrell, 4 Ves. 389; v.

supra, p. 656.

(e) Berney v. Sewell, 1 Jac. & Walk. 650, Lord Eldon.

(f) Carew v. Johnstone, 2 Sch. & Lef. 296.

(g) Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. 127.

(h) Ib. 128; and see Ashenhurst v. James, 3 Atk. 271; the rule it seems was not so settled in 1690, see Gladwyn v. Hitchman, 2 Vern. 135.

(i) Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. 270.

testate not ascertained may also be assigned even without consideration (a); but a mere expression of an intention to give, communicated to the executors, will not in this or in any other case entitle the donee to come to the court to have the gift completed (b). Where an assignment is made of a legacy charged on land in a register county the assignment is treated as an assignment of money charged on land and of money only; it is not therefore affected by the policy of the registration laws, by which conveyances of interests in lands in these counties are required to be registered (c).

Where a legacy is assigned, the executor cannot set off a debt due to himself from the legatee which was incurred without reference to the legacy (d). If an executor assigns a legacy given to him, the assignee takes it subject to the equities which attached on the executor; and therefore, if the executor, though subsequently to the assignment, waste the assets, the assignee can only take so much of the legacy as remains after satisfying the breach of trust (e).

As regards the assignment of Possibilities and Contingent Interests. The alteration of the law in regard to Contingent Interests and Possibilities coupled with an interest in real Estate has already been noticed (f). A naked possibility or expectancy of an heir to his ancestor's estate, or even of the anticipated rights of a person as next of kin, may be the subject of contract in equity, which will be equivalent to an Assignment of the property if and when it shall fall into possession (g). Thus,

(a) See Petre v. Espinasse, 2 My. & K. 496, sup. 55: it is analogous to an equitable estate.

(b) In Cotteen v. Missing, 1 Mad. 176, Ann Lee Missing being entitled to a residue under a testator's will, the executors wrote to her stating that in their opinion 500*l.* ought to be given by her to Charlotte Missing one of the daughters of the testator; she wrote in answer, "With respect to Charlotte, as you and Mr. Missing say she ought to be allowed 500*l.* I will readily consent to it. I am willing to do anything that is right." Ann Lee Missing, afterwards Ann Lee Lace being dead Charlotte Missing claimed this 500*l.* as a gift. Sir T. Plumer held that the letter was only an intention to give not perfected. To make a complete gift there must be not only a clear intention, but the intention must be executed and carried into effect (ibid. 185); here nothing was said as to who was to pay the money, or when it was to be paid, she might have intended to enforce terms, ibid. 186: there was another question; namely, revocation by the subsequent marriage. V. inf. Chap. x. Sect. iv.

(c) Malcolm v. Charlesworth, 1 Keen, 73.

(d) Whitaker v. Rush, Amb. p. 407. The ground of the decision, deduced from the principles of the Roman law, was that there was no connection between the demands and no presumptive evidence of an agreement or intention that the one should be set off against the other, so that the debt could not even have been set off against the legatee, ib. 408.

(e) Morris v. Livie, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 383.

(f) Sup. p. 855, and Vol. i. p. 291-2.

(g) Hobson v. Trevor, 2 P. Wms. 191; Beckley v. Newland, 2 P. Wms. 182. In Jones v. Roe, 3 T. R. 88, Lord Kenyon held that the case of an heir, dealing in respect of his hope of succession, is a void contract. Lord Eldon, in Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Meriv. 671, (1805,) and Harwood v. Took, (1804,) Mad. Pr. 549, 2nd edit., expressed a similar opinion; but from the subsequent expressions of Lord Eldon, as to the effect of Beckley v. Newland, and Hobson v. Trevor, 3 Meriv. 671-2, it is to be presumed that Lord Eldon only meant that no action at law would lie in a late case it was admitted that the prospective right of a mother under a settlement, to a sum of money, as next of kin of her daughter at her death, depending upon the double contingency of the daughter dying without issue, and the mother surviving, might be assigned for valuable consideration, and that such assignment would be enforced in the Court of Chancery (a). An expectancy or contingent interest may be Sold, and the Court of Chancery after the event has happened will enforce the sale (b). A subject to be acquired may be the subject of contract and may be claimed in equity by a purchaser for value under that contract (c); thus an assignment of freight to be earned is good in equity, and the assignee for value may enforce it against the assignor, and the party to pay it, when it becomes due (d). In like manner an assignment for value of the oil, head matter, and other future cargo of a whale ship will be enforced by the Court of Chancery (e), though at law such an assignment is invalid; for at law the thing assigned must have an existence actual or potential at the time of the contract (f): and if the assignee does all that he can do to perfect his title, and to gain the only possession the subject is capable of, namely, by sending notice (g) to the master and especially if he afterwards procures a delivery of the cargo, the title of the assignee will be good against third persons; thus it cannot be defeated by a judgment creditor, on a judgment obtained subsequently to the assignment, nor by the assignees in bankruptcy of the assignor (h): it is fully established that a contract to charge property to be subsequently acquired will be enforced in the Court of Chancery (i).

upon such a contract, not that such a contract might not be enforced in equity, thus furnishing another instance of a contract being capable of being enforced in equity, in which no damages could be obtained at law; see 1 Fonbl. 216, note (k), et v. infra, et supra, Vol. i. p. 646, n. (b); and see Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183; ibid, 192; and Smith v. Baker, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 229. The case referred to by Mr. Maddock, p. 549, note (f), depends upon the same principle as Stokes v. Holden, (Rolls,) 1 Keen, 153, supra, p. 852; and see Mr. Merivale's note, 3 Meriv. 672.

(a) Admitted Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Phill. 347, on appeal; as to which case see the next Chapter, and see Grey v. Kentish, 1 Atk. 280, and Chauncy v. Graydon, 2 Atk. p. 621, and Higden v. Williamson, 3 P. Wms. 132, there cited.

(b) Hobson v. Trevor, Beckley v. Newland, ubi sup.; Wright v. Wright, sup. p. 853; recognized 2 Anstr. 539; Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183; Harwood v. Tooke, ibid. 192.

(c) In re Ship Warre, 8 Price, 269, note; Curtis v. Auber, 1 Jac. & W. 526; Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 524, 535, affirmed on appeal, 1 My. & K. 488. In this case the doctrine that "Equitas sequitur legem" was again attempted to be revived, 4 Sim. 533.

(d) V. supra, p. 775.

(e) Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 549, 556-7; S. C. 5 Beavan, 9, on a point of construction.

(f) Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 Maule & S. 236. A man may at law sell the wool to be shorn from the sheep he then has, but not from those he is about to buy.

(g) See Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 22, before referred to, in which case Sir T. Plumer has thoroughly expounded this principle in its bearing on almost all cases that can occur of equitable assignments for valuable consideration.

(h) See 1 Hare, 551; 4 Sim. 536.

(i) Lord Cottenham, Wellesley v. Wellesley, 4 My & Cr. 579; Lyde v. Mynn, 4 Sim. 505; S. C. 1 My. & K. 683.

From the cases above referred to, it will be seen that although the Court of Chancery is said only to act upon the person, yet in these instances as in almost every other instance of the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction in regard to property, the court in effect for all beneficial and equitable purposes binds the property itself. "Whatever," says Lord Thurlow, "is the agreement concerning any subject, real or personal, though in form and construction purely personal and suable only at law, yet in this court it binds the conscience: this maxim I take to be universal, that whenever persons agree concerning any particular subject, that, in a court of equity, as against the party himself and any claiming under him, voluntarily or with notice, raises a trust" (a), and this effect is further secured by the operation of the equitable maxim, that what is agreed to be done for good consideration is considered as done as against all those whose consciences are affected (b).

It is to be observed that there are some subjects which on grounds of Public Policy cannot be assigned; such are the full pay and the half-pay of an officer in the army (c); the same rule applies to the salary of any public officer whose services are due to the Crown or to the public, though those services may not yet have been required. The true distinction is, said Mr. Baron Parke, that a man may always assign a pension given to him entirely as a compensation for past services whether granted to him for life or during the pleasure of others; but where the pension is granted not exclusively for past services but as a consideration for some continuing service, although the amount of it may be influenced by the length of services which the party has performed, it is against the policy of the law that it should be assignable (d). But prize money is not in the nature of military pay, and is therefore assignable (e).

(a) Legard v. Hodges, 1 Ves. J. 478, affirmed by Lord Loughborough, 4 Bro. 421; Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Scho. & Lef. 373, 380; but see the qualifications, Turn. & R. 469.

(b) Sydney v. Sydney, 3 P. Wms. 276. V. supra, Chap. vi. Sect. iv. p. 251.

(c) Collyer v. Fallon, Turn. & R. p. 474; Priddy v. Rose, 3 Meriv. 102, and the cases cited in the note p. 93; Stone v. Lidderdale, 2 Anst. 533; Davis v. Duke of Marlborough, 1 Swanst. 79.

(d) Wells v. Foster, 8 Mees. & W. 151; in this case and Davis v. Duke of Marlborough, all the leading cases are cited; and see Grenfell v. Dean and Canons of Windsor; Fiestel v. King's College, ubi infra.

(e) Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 2

Russ. & M. 51; not however pendente lite; see Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. p. 156; and see Tunstall v. Boothby, 10 Sim. 549; and Grenfell v. The Dean and Canons of Windsor, 2 Beav. 544, and the other cases cited in Fiestel v. King's College, xi. Jurist, 506, 10 Beav. 499, et seq., where Lord Langdale held that the emoluments of a fellowship were assignable, but see Berkeley v. King's College, Cambridge, before the Vice Chancellor of England, ibid. 602. The following cases may also be referred to: Flarty v. Odum, 3 T. R. 681; S. P. Palmer v. Bate, 2 Brod. & Bing. p. 673; as to the office of clerk of the peace, Ex parte Cossens in re Worrall, 1 Buck. B. C. 541, as to that of town clerk, as being connected with the administration of jus-

Alimony is a creature of the Ecclesiastical Court, and the Court of Chancery will not exercise any jurisdiction over it, excepting in granting a ne exeat regno (a); therefore although where a married woman having a separate estate gives her bill for a debt she has contracted, the Court of Chancery will give the holder a remedy against her income settled to her separate use by preventing her from receiving her separate income whilst the creditor remains unsatisfied (b), a bill drawn by a married woman who has obtained a sentence for alimony cannot be made effectual in the Court of Chancery against her alimony (c).

It was observed in the former volume, and has been repeated in this also, that the only subject of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is property, and it is in respect of some definite property to which the assignor has a title or in the natural course of events may have a title that the court entertains jurisdiction: a right which can only produce property by means of a successful litigation is not a subject which generally speaking the court will recognise as property for the purposes now under consideration. As regards a chose in action indeed, which is admitted to be assignable, a litigation may ensue for the purpose of enforcing the demand, but the litigation is not an essential consequence of the assignment; it is not to be assumed that the party to pay will resist a demand which is founded on a civil contract or obligation; the title is such as prima facie at least would be recognised by third persons, not merely by the party insisting upon it (d): thus in the case above adverted to of the assignment of a bond, it is assumed that the bond is a valid bond, and consequently that there is no doubt as to there being a debt, though the amount may be in dispute; the debt may be paid without suit, so that such an assignment does not necessarily involve the necessity of a suit being instituted (e).

The kinds of possibilities also which have been referred to as capable of assignment in equity have reference to certain property which in tice; as to the office of assistant parliamentary counsel, Cooper v. Reilly, 2 Sim. 560; 1 Russ. & M. 560; and see 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16: and as to the offices in King's Bench and Common Pleas, abolished by 6 Geo. IV. c. 82, 83, and the late acts as to offices in Exchequer, 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 58, and 2 Will. IV. c. 110, see Clarke v. Richards, 1 Yo. & C. 351.

(a) Stones v. Cooke, 7 Sim. 22; 5 My. & Cr. 241.

(b) Stuart v. Lord Kirkwall, 3 Mad. 387; Murray v. Barlee, 4 Sim. 82; S. C. on appeal, 3 My. & K. 209, 225.

(c) Vandergucht v. De Blaquiére, 5 My. & Cr. 243, et v. sup. p. 540.

(d) See Lord Abinger's judgment in Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Yo. & Coll. 496, inf. 873.

(e) See 1 Yo. & Coll. 497-9, where this illustration is put differently, but the meaning is the same.

the existing state of things on a possible natural contingency will come into possession (a); or which, as in the case of a mere expectancy—for instance, what may be obtained under a will—may possibly come into possession by an undisputed title; but a right to avoid the effect of a legal instrument on equitable grounds—for instance, to set aside a release obtained by fraud,—though there may be the strongest grounds for presuming that the litigation will be successful, is not such a possibility or such a chose in action as can be assigned even in the view of the Court of Chancery; it is only by litigation that the right can be constituted, and the property acquired (b).

Care however must be taken even in cases otherwise unobjectionable that the bargain be not such as to bring it within the common-law doctrines of maintenance (c), or champerty, which is a species of maintenance. Maintenance in general, so far as relates to the present subject, signifies an unlawful taking in hand or upholding of quarrels or sides to the disturbance or hindrance of common right, and is twofold—1. Where one stirs up quarrels and suits in the country in relation to matters wherein he is no way concerned; this kind of maintenance is punishable by fine and imprisonment at the king's suit, whether the matter in dispute in any way depend in plea or not: or 2. Where one officiously intermeddles in a suit depending in any court which no ways belongs to him, by assisting either party with money or otherwise in the prosecution or defence of any such suit; of this second kind of maintenance (and that which more particularly refers to the present subject) one instance is, where a third person interferes and maintains one side, on an agreement or understanding that he is to have part of the thing in dispute, which is called Champerty (d). By the common law all unlawful maintainers are not only liable to render damages in an action at the suit of the party grieved, but may also be indicted and fined and imprisoned (e); maintenance is also made an offence by several early statutes (f).

(a) See Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Yo. & Coll. 481. It is to be observed that in Williams v. Protheroe, (3 Yo. & J. 135,) in error, it was held, that an agreement, by which a purchaser of an estate was to have the benefit of certain suits commenced by the vendor to recover rent due previous to the purchase, and that the purchaser should have the benefit of whatever should be recovered for dilapidations, and for which purpose the purchaser was to be at liberty to use the vendor's name, the purchaser paying the expenses, was not void for champerty, and no objection was taken to the agreement per se.

(b) See Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Yo. & Coll. 481. So it has been held in America, as it would be no doubt here, that a mere right of action for a tort is not assignable: Story on Eq. 400.

(c) V. supra, Vol. i. p. 686.

(d) Bacon's Abr. title Maintenance, vol. iv. p. 488, 6th edit.; see Hartley v. Russell, 2 Sim. & St. 252.

(e) Bacon's Abr. Maintenance, C., p. 492.

(f) Ibid. D., p. 493; and see 2 Inst. 208. Lord Chief Justice Best seems to have thought

Maintenance and champerty are still discouraged both at law and in equity (a), because they promote litigation and lead to oppression. The court in examining into agreements in reference to the objection of champerty does not confine itself to the question whether the agreement falls within some of the old definitions of champerty, but looks to see whether the transaction amounts to champerty in the sense in which at this day champerty is forbidden by law (b). There is no doubt that where there is an agreement by which one party gives to a stranger (c) the benefit of a suit upon condition that he prosecutes it, it is maintenance; but the mere assignment of the subject of a suit cannot be considered as maintenance (d). Some cases have been decided on the ground that the transaction savoured of maintenance or champerty (e). In Wood v. Downes, which was the case of an agreement between an attorney and his client, by which the plaintiff sold to the defendant, his solicitor, an estate of which he was not in possession (f), but to recover which legal proceedings were contemplated, Lord Eldon "assuming, as he might infer, that the deed would give the defendant, the solicitor, a benefit of some amount," regarding it as an agreement executed between attorney and client, it could not, said his Lordship, be enforced; and farther, upon the doctrine of champerty, if the defendant had not been an attorney it could not be permitted to stand (g). So in a case where a bond was given at the instigation of the attorney who was prosecuting a suit for the obligor, for 4000*l.* with a defeazance that in case the obligor did not recover an estate or half of it in the suit that he was then prosecuting, the bond should be delivered up, Lord Northington ordered it to stand as a security for the money that the law which was necessary to be upheld in early times, in the then state of society, (v. supra, Vol. i. pp. 342, 686, 688,) might now be relaxed: see Williams v. Protheroe, 3 Y. & Jer. 135.

(a) Wallis v. Duke of Portland, 3 Ves. 502; and 15 Ves. 156. Skapholme v. Hart, Finch, 477, is one of the earliest cases: a counsellor took a bond from his client, conditioned to surrender one moiety of the estate when recovered, before he would engage in the suit; it was ordered to stand as a security only for moneys actually advanced; and that has been the course ever since, when the obligor has come for relief to the Court of Chancery.

(b) Hunter v. Daniel, 4 Hare, 429; stated infra.

(c) The only relations who can advance money to another, in order to the carrying on a suit, according to Hawkins's P. C. 540, 6th edit., are a father, a son, or heir apparent, (see Burke v. Greene, 2 Ball & B. p. 521,) a master may also make advances to his servant; 4 Bla. Comm. 135. V. supra, Vol. i. p. 686. note (c).

(d) Leach, Master of the Rolls, Harrington v. Long, 2 My. & K. p. 593; and see Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 156.

(e) There was a solicitor in the case in most of them; and see Stone v. Yea, Jacob, 436; Bayly v. Tyrrell, 2 Ball & B. 362.

(f) This is an additional objection, being contrary to the Statute of Hen. VIII., cited supra, p. 863; and see Burke v. Greene, 2 Ball & B. 521.

(g) Lord Eldon, Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 122-3; but see Sir J. Wigram's observations on this case, 4 Hare, 431; and see Conry v. Caulfield, 2 Ball & B. 268.

actually advanced, "As the defeazance," said his Lordship, "is unconscionable and savours of champerty" (a).

It is not maintenance to purchase an interest in land which is the subject of a suit (b); but in a case where the assignment of a debt proved in a cause contained an indemnity from the purchaser to the seller against the expences which had been incurred or might be incurred by the seller in the prosecution of the suit, and the vendor's name was to be continued as plaintiff in the cause, it was held that the transaction amounted to maintenance (c). A person may clearly assign his equity of redemption in securities held by a third person, even pendente lite, without incurring the pains of maintenance (d).

In a late case (e) on the subject of the sale of interests the subject of litigation; the plaintiff and the defendants were mortgagees, the defendants having the prior title under the same mortgagor: on his death a stranger instituted proceedings at law and in equity to recover the property under a title paramount to that of the mortgagor; pending such proceedings, the plaintiff and the defendants entered into an agreement by which the latter agreed to sell to the plaintiff all their interest under their securities for a certain price, and the plaintiff was to indemnify the defendants the prior mortgagees against the past and future costs of the suits and proceedings (f): it was held that the agreement was unobjectionable on the ground of champerty, as the plaintiff had a common interest with the defendants in resisting the proceedings which had been instituted; and notwithstanding the case of Harrington v. Long, it was decided that the clause of indemnity, and the fact that the names of the defendants were to be continued to be used in the suits, did not affect the agreement with champerty. So that it may now be considered that such a clause of indemnity will not be sufficient to invalidate a simple case of a purchase of the interest of another (g); nor where it is necessary for the prosecution of the suit, that the name of the vendor should be continued to be used, as it must be where he has the legal estate subject to the contract, will that now be considered as an objection. In the case of a purchase, pend-

(a) Strachan v. Brander, 1 Eden, 308.

(b) 2 My. & K. 593; Hunter v. Daniel, 4 Hare, 431, infra.

(c) Harrington v. Long, 2 My. & K. 590; Sir E. Sugden adds to his quotation, sed qu., (p. 423,) and Sir J. Wigram, 4 Hare, p. 430, doubts whether the decision is reconcilable with that in Hartley v. Russell, cited in the next note, and he adds, "It is not easy to understand why, in that case, the vendor, in whom the legal interest was, and who was trustee for the plaintiff, should not have been allowed to join as plaintiff in the suit;" ibid. See 2 Sim. & St. 252-3, on this point.

(d) Hartley v. Russell, 2 Sim. & St. 252; Booth v. Creswicke, sup. 668.

(e) Hunter v. Daniel, 4 Hare, 420; it is to be noticed that here the purchaser was a solicitor.

(f) See the clauses in the agreement, pp. 422-3.

(g) V. supra, n. (c).

ing the suit, of a plaintiff's interest under similar circumstances, the regular and proper course is not to let the suit go on in the name of the assignor the assignee paying the expences, but that the purchaser should file a supplemental bill making the assignor a defendant.

Where a number of persons having a common interest in the same thing by the same title unite in a defence, it cannot be called maintenance: champerty is out of the question; it wants that which constitutes the offence, alienam litem. But though the court will not be very strict in observing unguarded expressions, yet it will take care not to encourage such combinations; it might operate materially to impede the course of justice if persons uniting in this manner against an individual, could carry it beyond the immediate purpose in which they are jointly interested. Where the rector threatens to attack the farm moduses in which the occupiers in the parish are jointly interested, that will not justify an agreement to assist any one whom he may attack, whether interested in that common defence or not (a). A person hearing or believing that he has an interest in the subject of dispute and bonâ fide acting in the suit—for the authorities go as far as this,—may lawfully assist in the defence of that suit (b).

In Prosser v. Edmonds (c), before referred to, the question arose whether or not a party who either becomes a purchaser for a valuable consideration, or who takes an assignment in trust of a mere naked right to file a bill in equity to set aside a transaction for fraud, or on any other merely equitable ground, shall be entitled to become plaintiff in equity in respect of the title so acquired: Lord Chief Baron Abinger decided that he could not; it was but the purchase of a mere right to recover, a dealing for a suit in Chancery (d). All our cases, said his Lordship, of maintenance and champerty, are founded on the principle that no encouragement should be given to litigation by the introduction of parties to enforce those rights which others are not disposed to enforce; there are many cases where the acts charged

(a) Sir Thos. Plumer, Master of the Rolls, Stone v. Yea, Jac. 434-5: that was a bill filed for contribution under such an agreement under seal, after a great lapse of time, (though less than twenty years,) which for that and for the reasons in the text, was dismissed with costs. One of the questions raised by Sir T. Plumer, in the case of Cholmondeley v. Clinton, (2 Jac. & W. 135-6,) was whether a devisee and heir-at-law could join in a suit claiming an equity of redemption, on an allegation that a question having arisen as to which was entitled, they had agreed to join and divide the subject-matter between them; he seemed to think it was champerty.

(b) Hunter v. Daniel, 4 Hare, 432; Hawkins, Pl. C. i. p. 456, 8th edit., there cited; and see Findon v. Parker, 11 Mees. & W. 682; Pechell v. Watson, 8 Mees. & W. 691; Flight v. Leman, 4 Adol. & Ell. N. Rep. 883.

(c) 1 Yo. & Coll. 496.

(d) See Bayly v. Tyrrell, 2 Ball & B. 363.

may not amount precisely to maintenance or champerty, yet of which upon general principles and by analogy to such acts, a court of equity will discourage the practice (a): in this case the assignor was in possession of a mere naked right; he could obtain nothing without filing a bill; it was therefore clearly within the principle of public policy, and his Lordship allowed a demurrer to the bill (b).

(a) See Strachan v. Brander; and Wood v. Downes, supra: Powell v. Knowler, 2 Atk. 226; Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 156; and see Kenney v. Browne, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 462, 498-501.

(b) Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Yo. & Coll. 500; et v. supra, p. 868.

CHAPTER X.

OF THE TRANSFER OF EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS AND CONTINGENT INTERESTS AND POSSIBILITIES, BY CONVEYANCE AND ASSIGNMENT AND DECLARATION OF TRUST, AND OF CONTRACTS AND PROMISES AS REGARDS SUCH INTERESTS, AND OF THE EFFECT OF WANT OF CONSIDERATION OR OF VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

SECTION I.—Of Conveyances and Assignments of Equitable Estates for Valuable Consideration.

Of the Alienation of Trust Estates and Equitable Estates and Interests.

As regards Equitable Estates in Fee, Fee Tail, for Life and for Years, and Estates in Remainder.

A Trust Estate is not now considered as a Chose in Action, but an Estate.

Devises of Trusts are considered by the Court of Chancery as distinct Substantive Devises.

Attorney-General v. Lady Downing, Wilm.

Legal Estate follows Equitable as its Shadow.

Unless it come into the hands of Purchaser for Valuable Consideration, without Notice.

Negligence, &c. of Trustee not permitted to disappoint Interests of Cestuis que Trust.

Lapse of Legal Estate has no Influence upon the Trust—If no Trustee appointed Court of Chancery assumes the Office.

The Principle that the Equitable Estate is a distinct Substantive Estate has been acted upon in various ways.—Instances.

Court will act upon it exactly as if it was a Legal Estate.

The Husband of a Woman seised in Fee of an Equitable Estate of Inheritance is entitled to an Estate by Curtesy.

Prior to the Fines and Recoveries Act an Equitable Estate Tail in a Trust might be barred by a Recovery with an Equitable Tenant to the Præcipe.

A Feoffment or Bargain and Sale, or even a Will, was sufficient to bar the Issue in the time of Lord Clarendon.

Always held that a Fine was sufficient.

The Requisites for making the quasi Tenant to the Præcipe for suffering a Recovery of the Equitable Estate.

Conveyance by Person having Equitable Interest without Possession sufficient. Equitable Disseisin.

If Equitable Tenant in Tail had aliened for an Estate of Freehold by way of Mortgage he might suffer a Recovery of his Secondary Equitable Title.

Equity of Redemption ; also an Estate in the Land.

Any Conveyance shall have the same Effect on an Equitable Estate as Legal Conveyance on a Legal Estate—Lord Nottingham.

Act for barring Entails, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74.

Equitable Estate Tail.

Tenant in Tail must convey by one of the Modes of Assurance pointed out by the Act.

Policy of the Legislature in requiring a Deed analogous to a Legal Conveyance.

No Difference in Equity between Legal Interests in and the Trust of a Term belonging to a Wife, as regards Husband's Power of Alienation.

Of the Merger of the Equitable in the Legal Estate.

THE general doctrines in regard to the creation of trust or other equitable estates and interests in land and personal property assignable at law and in choses in action and other subjects not assignable at the common law, having been stated, and the nature of such estates and interests having been adverted to, it is proposed to recur to the subject of the alienation of equitable estates or interests in land and personal property which may be so created, by the persons beneficially entitled, or, as they are denominated in ordinary legal language, the cestuis que trust (a); first, where there is a valuable consideration, and secondly, where there is no consideration. The passing of equitable interests in choses in action for valuable consideration has already been adverted to, it remains therefore as regards this description of property only to advert to voluntary assignments, which will be the subject of one of the following sections of this chapter.

It will be proper first to ascertain in what light the interest of the cestui que trust is viewed by the Court of Chancery, as regards trust or equitable estates in fee, in fee tail, for life and for years, in possession and in remainder. A trust or equitable estate is not now what it was once considered, a chose in action, it is a present interest or, as has been frequently before observed (b), an Estate. Trusts, said Sir Thomas Clarke, are here considered, as between the cestui que trust and the trustee and all claiming by, through or under them, or in consequence of their estates, as the ownership or legal estate; whatever would be the rule of law, if it were a legal estate, is applied in equity to a trust estate (c).

The legal estate follows the trust or equitable estate as its shadow, into whose hands soever the legal estate may descend or be conveyed, except it pass to a purchaser for valuable consideration without no-

(a) V. supra, Vol. i. pp. 506-7: see, on this subject, Lewin, p. 495.

(b) V. int. al. sup. 764; et v. sup. 23, 24.

(c) Sir Thomas Clarke, M. R., Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, p. 223. There are but two species of Estates, the legal and the equitable estate, Lord Rosslyn, Burnaby v. Griffin, 3 Ves. 276. Many such expressions might be cited by other Judges, all showing that the interest of the cestui que trust, in real estate, equally as the equity of redemption of a mortgagee (v. supra, p. 642), is an Estate.

tice (a). It is considered that the individuals named as trustees are only the nominal instruments to execute that intention; so that neither the negligence of the trustee, or accident, or any other circumstance, with the exception above adverted to, will be permitted to disappoint the interests of those for whose benefit the trustee is called upon to execute it (b). The persons having the equitable estate may, without the intervention of the trustees, or the possibility of their preventing them from exercising their ownership, act as if no trustees existed (c). The lapse of the legal estate never has the least influence upon the trusts to which it is subject: if the individuals named as trustees fail either by death, or by being under disability, or by refusing to act, the court will provide a trustee: if no trustees are appointed at all, the Court of Chancery assumes the office in the first instance (d): if the trust cannot be executed through the medium which was in the primary view of the testator, it must be executed through the medium of the Court of Chancery (e). Therefore the trustee is in fact a mere machine; and for whom he shall be trustee depends entirely upon the will of his cestui que trust, whether he was such on the original creation of the trust, or has become such by devolution or by transfer.

The principle that the equitable estate is a distinct substantive estate, has been acted upon in various ways. "My principle is this," said Lord Alvanley, "that equitable estates in this court are considered to all intents and purposes as legal estates; if a man has an equitable interest he is supposed to act upon it, and this court will act upon it exactly as if it was a legal estate" (f). An equitable estate of in-

(a) Adair v. Shaw, 1 Scho. & L. p. 262; Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. W. 681; Lord Chief Justice Wilmot, Attorney-General v. Downing, Wilm. R. p. 23. "I take it to be a first and fundamental principle in equity," says Lord Chief Justice Wilmot, "that the trust follows the legal estate wherever it goes, except it come into the hands of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. I never heard any distinction made, nor has any case been cited to prove that a trust, fit and proper to be executed against a trustee, should be suffered to fall to the ground, or remain unexecuted against an heir-at-law, where there was no trustee. The lapse of the legal estate never has the least influence upon the trusts to which it is subject. Trust estates do not depend upon the legal estate for an existence. A court of equity considers devises of trusts as distinct substantive devises, standing on their own basis, independent of the legal estate or of one another, and the legal estate is nothing but the shadow which always follows the trust estate in the eye of a court of equity."—Wilm. R. 22; Lewin, 577-8; et v. supra, p. 23, n. (c).

(b) Lord Eldon, Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. p. 574, v. supra, p. 52.

(c) Lord Alvanley, in his judgment in Brydges v. Brydges, 3 Ves. p. 126, which was commended by Lord Eldon, and see Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 341.

(d) Attorney-General v. Lady Downing, Wilm. R. 21, 22.

(e) Attorney-General v. Lady Downing, Wilm. ubi sup.; et v. supra, pp. 33, 51, 81, 368.

(f) Lord Alvanley, M. R., Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. J. 603. The question was one of revocation; it was this: a person, in marriage articles, executed on his marriage, covenanted to convey an estate, of which he was seised in fee, for the benefit of himself for life, remainder to the issue of the marriage, with heritance in the wife always conferred a tenancy by the curtesy (a). Prior to the act for creating a substitute for fines and recoveries (b), an equitable estate tail in a trust estate might have been barred by an equitable recovery, that is, by a recovery to which no person but those who were entitled to equitable estates equivalent to those which had the estate been legal would have enabled them to have suffered a recovery, were parties; it being only necessary that there should be a good equitable tenant to the præcipe (c). It was indeed held, in the time of Lord Clarendon, and even afterwards, that a feoffment or bargain and sale was sufficient to bar the issue in an entail of a trust estate (d), and even in some cases an agreement or a will (e): it was always held that a fine would bar the issue (f).

The requisites for making the quasi tenant to the præcipe were determined by the nature of an equitable estate, as distinguished from a legal estate. Thus, as regards the deed to make a tenant to the præcipe: at law possession could not pass by conveyance from a person who had not himself the possession; but, as regards the conveyance by a person having an equitable interest only, said Sir W. Grant, it was not the object, nor could it be the effect of the conveyance to transfer the possession, but only to pass the equitable interest; the only inquiry therefore was, whether there was in the party such a quantum of equitable interest as entitled him to suffer an equitable recovery (g): so, although a recovery could not be suffered by the owner of a legal estate tail without obtaining the concurrence of the person who had the legal freehold, yet the analogy was not followed where an equitable tenant in tail had aliened for an estate of freehold by way of mortgage; for the tenant in tail might suffer a recovery of his secondary remainder to his own right heirs, and then devised the estate, in the event of his having no issue: he afterwards conveyed the legal estate to the trustees, according to the articles: the question was, whether the conveyance revoked the will: it was held it did not; and see Viscountess Cranbourne v. Delahay, 2 Freem. by Hovenden, 170.

(a) Watts v. Ball, 1 P. W. 107; Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. W. 234; Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603; see on this subject, Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 400.

(b) V. supra, Vol. i. p. 166, 167.

(c) Brydges v. Brydges, 3 Ves. p. 127; Lord Alvanley, Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. 417; Preston on Conveyancing, vol. i. p. 22, 3rd edit.

(d) Dict. Lord Nottingham, North v. Williams, 2 Ch. Ca. 63; S. C. 1 Vern. 13; Lord Rosslyn, Fletcher v. Tollet, 5 Ves. 12; Bur- naby v. Griffin, 3 Ves. 277; and his Lordship said he did not know why that had not been adhered to; and see Viscountess Cranbourne v. Delahay, 2 Freem. 170.

(e) See the cases referred to, Lewin on Trusts, p. 499.

(f) Goodrick v. Brown, 1 Ch. Ca. p. 49; Washborne v. Brown, ibid. 213, 439.

(g) Sir W. Grant, Lord Grenville v. Blyth, 16 Ves. p. 230; but seisin, by perception of rent, was so far material, that in the absence of it, there might be such an equitable disseisin as the Statute of Limitations, by analogy, would have operated upon; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. pp. 147, 155, 165-6; supra, Vol. i. p. 551-3; et v. Mad. Pr. and P. i. 575, n. (t); but this doctrine is superseded, at least for the most part, by the new Statute of Limitations.

equitable title without the concurrence of the mortgagee (a). Lord Nottingham gave effect to an equitable recovery on the broad ground, "that any conveyance or assurance made by cestui que trust should have the same effect or operation upon the trust estate as it would upon the estate in law, in case the trustees had executed their trust" (b), meaning, as I presume, had given him a corresponding legal estate.

By the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, passed in August, 1833, which provided a substitute for fines and recoveries, it is enacted, § 40, 41, that every disposition of lands under that act, by a tenant in tail thereof, shall be effected by some one of the assurances (not being a will) by which such tenant in tail would have made the disposition, if his estate were an estate at law in fee simple absolute (c). Whether the estate tail be legal or equitable, vested or contingent, still the tenant in tail, or would-be tenant in tail, must be treated for the purposes of this act as having a legal estate in fee simple in the lands, and must convey by one of those modes of assurance which the law has appropriated to the transfer of a freehold interest (d). The act, says Mr. Hayes, in requiring a legal conveyance, as well of estates in the land, as of unsubstantial rights and equities in respect of the land, may be thought to have strained the application of technical forms beyond technical reasoning; but it was the policy of the legislature, whilst abolishing the old solemnities, and substituting more simple modes of assurance, still to exact the observance of ceremony, and to prevent settlements framed with caution and deliberation for the purpose of preserving estates in families, from being annulled by instruments unadvisedly prepared or inadvertently executed (e).

Another instance of an equitable interest being treated as an estate may be given in the power of the husband over the wife's trust of a term. We have before observed that there is no difference in equity between the legal interest in, and the trusts of, a term belonging to a wife, as regards the husband's right of alienation: equitable interests of the wife of the same description as legal interests which might be absolutely assigned by the husband at law so as to be binding on the wife without consideration, may be assigned by the husband without

(a) Nouaille v. Greenwood, T. & R. p. 29; Lord Eldon.

(b) North v. Williams, (1681,) 1 Vern. 13; S. C. 2 Ch. Ca. 63, 78; 1 Eq. Abr. 255: and see Viscountess Cranbourne v. Delahay, 2 Freem. p. 170; and Villirs v. Beaumont, 1 Vern. p. 100, stated infra; Carpenter v. Car- penter, and Washbourne v. Downes, 1 Vern. 439.

(c) Or as if an estate in fee simple absolute occupied the very place of the estate tail, Hayes' Introd. to Convey. i. p. 156.

(d) Hayes' Introd. ubi supra.

(e) Ibid.

consideration so as to bind the wife, though not so as to preclude her from her Equity to a settlement (a).

As regards the equity of redemption of a mortgagor, though not strictly coming under the head of trust, that also, as has already been mentioned, is an Estate. A mortgage in fee by a person seised of a legal estate, though without doubt it was a revocation at law before the passing of the stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, was not a revocation of a previous devise of the equitable interest, the equity of redemption over which the mortgagor had a disposing power was still held to pass (b).

If the analogy to the law is still to be followed, namely, that where a person has such an interest in equity as that, if legal he could assign it at law he may assign in equity; then, as contingent interests and possibilities, coupled with an interest, in real estate, are now assignable at law by deed (c); corresponding equitable interests ought now to be assignable directly by deed, if the act does not actually of itself authorize such assignments.

It should be observed, that if the cestui que trust of the equitable estate shall acquire the legal estate, the equitable estate will, generally speaking, merge in the legal estate, and no longer exist; but in order to operate a Merger, the equitable and the legal estate must be of the same quality; an estate tail and the fee simple are not of the same quality, and therefore an equitable estate tail will not merge in the fee (d). I admit, said Lord Alvanley (e), that where a person has the same interest in the legal and equitable estate he ceases to have the equitable estate, and has the legal estate, upon which this court will

(a) Sir Edw. Turner's case, 1 Vernon, 7, and the cases in Raithby's note; Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 97, 98, and Donne v. Hart, 2 Russ. & M. 364; et v. supra, p. 475. So an equitable extent, that is under a decree, is equally assignable by the husband as a legal extent would be, Lord Carteret v. Paschal, 3 P. W. 200: but if the intent and object of the alienation be only to give a security to a mortgagee, the wife surviving will be entitled to the equity of redemption, Clark v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 230. It should be observed that Mr. Macqueen, as stated by him in his late valuable Publication on Husband and Wife, p. 82, has ascertained that the doctrine, which is usually supposed to have been established in Sir E. Clare's case, against the wife's equity to a settlement in such event, did not, apparently, come into question in that case; and see as to this case, 5 My. & Cr. 107; et v. sup. p. 475, n. 484, 485. At p. 295 of Mr. Macqueen's work there is an important note on the case of Stiffe v. Everitt, 1 My. & Cr. 37; supra, p. 476.

(b) Williams v. Owen, 2 Ves. J. 598, the stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 23, has put an end to all such constructive revocations.

(c) See the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 110; supra, Vol. 1, p. 221. A deed may not be necessary to pass an equitable interest, but as evidence of a concluded final transaction it must be important: it will be remembered that by analogy to the law a deed was necessary to declare the uses of a grant of a rent or the like, supra, Vol. i. p. 446, et v. ib. p. 453, though a deed, as it has been held, has no greater efficacy than a mere writing where the thing itself is not assignable, as in the instance of a mere expectancy, Meek v. Kettlewell, infra.

(d) Per Vice-Chancellor, Merest v. James, 6 Mad. 118; Browne v. Blake, 1 Molloy, 382. See on this subject, Lewin, pp. 18, 19.

(e) Brydges v. Brydges, 3 Ves. 125 a.

not act, but leaves it to the rules of law; but it must always be understood, with this distinction, that it holds only where the legal and equitable estates are co-extensive and commensurate; but I do not by any means admit that, where a person has the whole legal estate, and a partial equitable estate, the latter sinks into the former, for it would be a disadvantage to him: there is no absurdity in saying that a person may have the whole legal estate, and a limited interest in the beneficial interest in that estate, as there is in saying he has the whole legal fee and a legal remainder (a).

Assuming then that an equitable interest of the cestui que trust in real estate corresponding with a legal interest which might pass by deed, will equally pass by deed as would the corresponding legal interest; in principle, it would seem that there can be no distinction whether the conveyance or assignment be with or without consideration; indeed, as we have seen, this has been expressly decided as regards the assignment by the husband of the equitable estate of his wife in a term, excepting as respects the wife's equity to a settlement. The analogy has indeed been acted upon as regards equitable interests in property passing at law not by assignment, but by delivery or transfer (b); but the subject of voluntary transfers of equitable estates and interests requires a distinct consideration.

(a) Lord Eldon, Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. p. 418, highly commends this judgment. So a legal and an equitable estate will not unite, so as to bring the rule in Shelley's case into operation; v. supra, p. 24, n.

(b) V. supra, pp. 864, 865, note (a), and see Sloane v. Cadogan, and other like cases which are cited and observed upon in the next chapter.

SECTION II.—Of Voluntary Conveyances, Assignments, and Transfers of Equitable Estates and Interests in Property, capable of being Conveyed or Transferred at Law.

Of Voluntary Conveyances.

State of Law as regards Transfer of Property without Consideration.

Voluntary Assignments of Legal Interests.

Where a Person executes a perfect Conveyance passing the Estate he cannot revoke it.

Such a Deed not revocable by Will.

Particularly if in favour of Children.

Sear v. Ashwell.

Where Sum of Stock transferred to Trustees and a Trust of it declared, it is binding—no Locus Pœnitentiæ.

Voluntary Settlement followed by Marriage cannot be impeached.

Questions sometimes arise whether the Deed is to be considered as a Definitive Act.

Parol Evidence may be given to show that a Deed was not intended as an Irrevocable Act.

Subsequent Instructions, &c. not admissible.

Where a Counterpart executed that is primâ facie Evidence that it was not to be revocable, also where One Part executed and delivered to Third Person.

Where the Deed is kept in Donor's Possession it is important, as a Basis for Evidence, to show that it is not final.

Sir Thomas Plumer's Statement of the Result of the Authorities.

Cecil v. Butcher.

But where Locus Pœnitentiæ is reserved and no Evidence of Repentance, the Deed, as it is presumed, will operate.

Though Instructions, however explicit, are revoked by Death.

Keeping a Deed which passes the Estate not of itself sufficient to enable him to revoke. Law, as stated by Justice Bayley, as to Effect of keeping Deed, formally delivered, in the Possession of the Donor.

Doe v. Garnons.

As to passing of Chattels.

Revocation.

Deed or Contract between Husband and Wife, which is in substance a Gratuitous Settlement, may be revoked.

In cases where Legal Estate passes the Court of Chancery is not bound to interfere, and will not where Fraud or Improper Practices have taken place.

Where there are Two Voluntary Deeds he who has the Advantage of the Law may keep it.

Additional Note—As to Voluntary Deeds void against Creditors under 13 Elizabeth.

As regards voluntary conveyances and transfers of equitable estates; it may perhaps be stated as a general rule, that where a man makes a perfect conveyance of an estate in lands or hereditaments, that is, where he executes and delivers a deed of conveyance as his final act, the estate in the property, if equitable, at once passes to the grantee, equally as it would on a conveyance of a legal estate; the grantor cannot revoke such a deed, certainly not where an estate at law has passed, or in any manner get rid of it, so as to transfer the property to another volunteer, unless he has reserved to himself a power of revocation: and where such a deed is destroyed by the donor, if secondary evidence of the contents can be given, the deed will be set up against all volunteers (a): such a deed is not revocable by will, for if it were there would be no difference between a deed with a power of revocation and one without it (b): more especially such a deed will be binding if made in favour of a child (c).—This doctrine is analogous

(a) In Villers v. Beaumont, 1 Vern. 100, A. D. 1682, a man possessed of a trust of a term for three lives, by a deed, [Raithby's note (2),] signed, sealed and executed, (as it is stated, at an ale-house,) granted and assigned the term to the plaintiffs, his cousins, for the payment of his and his mother's debts, but to permit him to hold the same for his life; he delivered the deed to a creditor. Five months afterwards, he being dissatisfied with the settlement, made his will, devising the estate, subject to the payment of his debts, to his half-brother the defendant, Lord Beaumont. The question was whether the will or the deed should prevail. The Lord Chancellor (Nottingham) said there was no colour in this case; if a man will improvidently bind himself up by a voluntary deed, without reserving to himself a power of revocation, he must lie down under his own folly. (Leech v. Leech, 1 Ch. Ca. p. 249, is to same effect; and see Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 2 R. & M. 453; and Brookbank v. Brookbank, (1691,) 1 Eq. Ab. 168; and 2 My. & K. 510; (it is there put not upon the Creation of a Trust as well as on Conveyance.) "If you relieve him," added Lord Nottingham, "you must consequently establish this proposition, 'That a man cannot make a voluntary disposition of his estate but by will only, which would be absurd'" (and see Allen v. Arme, 1 Vern. 365; Bale v. Newton, 1 Vern. 463). In this case, by analogy to the law, the deed was treated as a conveyance of the estate, in the same manner as a recovery suffered of a trust estate in tail was treated as a bar to the entail; v. supra, p. 878.

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram (1 Hare, 475) seems to have considered that the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor of England was that assignments of equitable interests only amounted to an agreement, referring int. al. to Holloway v. Headington, 8 Sim. 324; but that observation I presume had reference only to choses in action or the like; though what was the nature of the property that was assigned in Holloway v. Headington, is not stated in the Report. It was admitted in the argument on the appeal in the late case of Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Phill. 346, that an equitable estate, corresponding with a legal estate, might be effectually assigned without consideration equally as might a legal estate at law; and see Collinson v. Patrick, supra, p. 56, note; Clavering v. Clavering, Prec. Ch. 235; 2 Vern. 473 (1704), by Sir N. Wright, Lord Keeper, affirmed in Dom. Proc. ibid. in notâ; Lady Hudson's case, cited 2 Vern. 475; and the dict. of Lord Keeper Bridgman, Barlow v. Heneage, Prec. Ch. 211, are to the same effect: other cases are cited, in Dillon v. Coppin, 4 My. & Cr. 661; see Hayes, Introd. to Convey. i. 201, on this subject.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Bolton v. Bolton, 3 Swanst. 414, note; Clavell v. Littleton, Prec. Chan. 305, to same effect. In Boughton v. Boughton, 1 Atk. 625, Lord Hardwicke established a voluntary deed, by which the donor charged his estates with various sums of money in favour of his sister, her two sons, and gave 4000*l.* a piece to each of his children; though the donor had kept the deed in his possession, and devised away the estate, it being a question between two sets of volunteers. Lord Hardwicke in this case cited with approbation Naldred v. Gilham, 1 P. W. 577, infra, et v. supra, p. 199.

(c) In Sear v. Ashwell, 3 Swanst. 411, A. D. 1730, one Atkins intending to marry again, made a settlement by granting to trustees a term of 500 years, by way of mortgage, to secure 300*l.* to his eldest son, and 200*l.* a piece to his other sons (a reasonable settlement, as the Lord Chancellor said); after his second marriage he burnt it: it was set up from a copy, the ground there stated was that being made to that which has before been adverted to in treating of the creation of trusts, namely, that where the legal estate in property or interest is transferred, and a trust of it declared, the trust so declared is irrevocable; thus, where a person transfers a sum of stock or hands over money to trustees, and declares a trust, and there is nothing upon the face of the transaction (a), or from contemporaneous evidence, to show that it was intended to be revocable, he takes from himself all locus pœnitentiæ: the cestuis que trust, though unborn at the date of the transfer and declaration of trust, will acquire a perfect title: and even if the donor should procure a retransfer by the trustees, and, where it is in writing, should cancel the instrument and by will make a provision for the same cestuis que trust, the settlement is binding; and unless the subsequent provision be expressed to be substitutionary, the cestuis que trust, if strangers (b), will take both; they will have their election if it be expressed to be in substitution (c): and stock not being within the statute 27 Elizabeth, a purchaser from the donor cannot avoid the voluntary settlement or gift (d).

Questions not unfrequently arise as to whether a deed purporting to be an actual conveyance or a binding obligation is to be considered as a definitive act, so as to give a complete title to the donee or obligee. The mere execution of a conveyance or other deed, whether it relate to legal or equitable property, is not of itself conclusive that it was intended to take effect in all events; parol evidence may be given of the circumstances under which it was executed, and of the manner in which it has been dealt with, in order to show that it was not intended as a final and irrevocable act (e); but subsequent instructions or declarations, unconnected with acts or declarations which took place at the time, cannot be received in evidence (f).

Where a counterpart of a deed is executed, and one part is delivered, by a father for the benefit of children for whom he was bound to provide, it was therefore good against every one but creditors by specialty.

(a) V. supra, p. 59, et infra, p. 886.

(b) Namely, if the gift be not by way of Portion, as to which, v. supra, p. 427, et seq.

(c) Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 656; Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 84; Smith v. Lyne, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 350; the settlor in that case had delivered a copy of the deed to one of the cestuis que trust in a sealed envelope; and see Bill v. Cureton, 2 My. & K. 503, 510, Sir C. Pepys: Petre v. Espinasse, 2 My. & K. 502, supra, p. 55, is a stronger case, for in that case the legal interest was in a third person, the assignment only operated on the equitable interest; v. supra, pp. 52, 53; et v. supra, p. 220; George v. Howard, 7 Price, p. 661; Leche v. Lord Kilmorey, Turn. & R. 207, is rather a peculiar case of a trust of personal estate being carried into effect in substance.

(d) See 2 My. & K. 512; but Sir J. Leach, in Petre v. Espinasse, (which was the case of an assignment available only in equity,) intimates a doubt on this subject; 2 My. & K. p. 502.

(e) Stratford v. Powell, (1807,) 1 Ball & B. 14, 21; et vide Ward v. Lant, Prec. Ch. 182; Johnson v. Smith, 1 Ves. 314; and see Hill v. Gomme, infra.

(f) Clavell v. Littleton, Prec. Ch. 305.

that is primâ facie evidence of an intention that it should not be revocable; and where one part only is executed, and that is delivered to a third person, so as to put it out of the power of the donor, it will, in the absence of any circumstances showing a contrary intention, be treated as absolute (a). Where one part only is executed, and that is kept in the possession of the donor, this circumstance may be important, as the basis whereon to rest evidence of an intention to reserve a power to revoke, or, as it has been called, a Locus Pœnitentiæ (b). Sir Thomas Plumer, who examined all the leading cases on this subject, considered it to be established by the preponderance of authority, that in a case where a voluntary deed is made without the knowledge of the grantee, when it is made for a special purpose for which it was never required to be made use of (c), and when it has been kept in the hands of the grantor (or his agent (d)) without ever having been acted upon, a court of equity will not give any relief upon it, it being considered as an imperfect instrument: the question in such cases, said Sir T. Plumer, is, whether there is not then a locus pœnitentiæ (e).

Very much must, of course, depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. If it should appear that a deed was kept by the donor only that he might secure to himself during his life a locus pœnitentiæ; if he should die without having done anything indicative of an altered intention; then (as I presume) the act would be considered as consummated and complete as against all persons claiming as volunteers under the donor: but if the deed should appear to have been executed only as a preparatory measure, and in contemplation of something more being done by the donor in order that it might take effect;

(a) Uniacke v. Giles, 2 Molloy, 268; and see Cotton v. King, 2 P. W. 358; there one of the deeds which was enforced, was a covenant to transfer stock which had not been transferred, see King v. Cotton, 2 P. W. 674; but the daughters had recovered at law upon the covenant.

(b) Naldred v. Gilham, 1 P. Wms. 577; Disher v. Disher, ibid. 204, supra; and Duke of Norfolk v. Brown, ubi supra, p. 198-9. In that case, v. sup. p. 198, it is highly probable that the presentation was kept in the donor's possession, to be delivered or not as the Duke should think fit on a vacancy happening; and see Ward v. Lant, Prec. Ch. 182; Barlow v. Heneage, Prec. Ch. 211; et vide Leoffès v. Lewen, Prec. Ch. 370; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 32; Cecil v. Butcher, 2 Jac. & W. 574; see Hill on Trustees, p. 46, et seq.

(c) See Birch v. Blagrove, Ambl. p. 264;

Roberts v. Roberts, Daniel's R. 143, is apparently contra, the deed never having been used; but the deed was complete, and the intended purposes attempted to be carried into execution, and the deed had been actually delivered to the donee, so that the donor had put it out of his power, Sir T. Plumer, 2 Jac. & W. 577.

(d) Cotton v. King, 2 P. W. 358.

(e) Cecil v. Butcher, 2 Jac. & W. 573, 574, 578; in the case itself, Sir T. Plumer retained the bill for a year with liberty to bring an action. Sir A. Hart, 2 Molloy, 264, states that this case was re-heard before Lord Eldon, but the result is not stated. In one case, Hughes v. Stubbs, 1 Hare, p. 479, the court held that the donee might have been compelled to give up the deed, the purpose being at an end; indeed this would seem to follow, see Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 100.

or if it should appear to have been executed only to take effect in case some event should happen or not happen, that would not be a case of reservation of a locus pœnitentiæ: in such case there would need no revocation; and, in the event of the person executing the deed dying in the interim, it could not take effect. Where the matter rests on directions or instructions only, they will clearly be revoked or become ineffectual by death, however explicit they may be (a), more especially if the property is left under the dominion of the presumed grantor (b).

But the keeping a deed, so executed as to pass the estate, in the donor's possession, is not of itself sufficient to enable the donor to revoke it by cancellation or by will (c), for the estate having passed, it would require the active interference of the Court of Chancery to revest the estate; and it is no ground for such interference that the act was foolishly or inconsiderately done (d). In one case such a deed was set up against a devisee, though the party claiming under it had obtained possession of it by stealth (e): but in another case where a voluntary settlement was executed, which the donor kept in his possession, and he afterwards burned it and made another settle-

(a) Coningham v. Plunkett, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 245; Whitechurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. 559. So where a cheque is drawn upon a banker, if the drawer dies before the cheque is paid, the authority to pay is revoked or annulled, in equity as it is at law, Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. J. 112.

(b) See Smith v. Warde, 15 Sim. 63.

(c) Clavering v. Clavering, 2 Vern. 475; Barlow v. Heneage, ubi sup. This was a voluntary settlement by a father on his daughter, (qu. immediate) he had not only kept possession of the deed, but received the rents down to his death; Boughton v. Boughton, 1 Atk. 625; Sear v. Ashwell, 3 Swanst. 411, case of younger children, and see the dictum of Sir Wm. Grant, Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 46.

(d) Lord Nottingham, Villiers v. Beaumont, 1 Vern. 100; and see Follett v. Delaney, xii. Jur. 551, sup. p. 221, n.; but see Naldred v. Gilham, infra.

(e) Brackenbury v. Brackenbury, 2 Jac. & W. 391. In Doe dem. Garnons v. Knight, 5 Barn. & C. 691, Bayley, J., stated the law to be that where an instrument is formally sealed and delivered, and there is nothing to qualify the delivery but the keeping the deed in the hands of the executing party, nothing to show he did not intend it to operate immediately, it is a valid and effectual deed, and that the delivery to the party who is to take by it is not essential, ibid. p. 692: but in that case there was the further circumstance that the deed had been delivered to a third person, though without the privity of the donee. If A. makes an obligation to B. and delivers it to C. to the use of B. it is the deed of A. immediately, but B. may refuse it, and by that the bond will lose its force, Buller, J., citing Baker's case, 3 Co. 26 b. So of a gift of goods and chattels, if a deed be delivered to the use of the donee the goods and chattels are in the donee immediately before notice or agreement; but the donee may refuse, and by that the property and interest shall be divested, Gould, J., Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 301; see 1 Fonbl. 206-7. But if a man deliver a chattel to one for the use of another, he may revoke it at any time before it is delivered over, Dict. Dyer, 49 a & b: the case was that a man had placed a sum of money in the hands of another for the use of and to be delivered to a woman on her marriage; before her marriage he revoked the gift; and it was held that he might do so, ibid. 49 b (and see Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. J. 112); but if there had been any consideration the depositor could not have revoked, ibid. However, as regards acceptance by the donee, "The law," says Bayley, J., in Doe v. Knight, citing Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, p. 623, "will presume, if nothing appear to the contrary, that a man will accept what is for his benefit;" see, on this subject, Hill on Trustees, p. 78, et seq.

ment in favour of another person, and the original donee surreptitiously obtained a copy of the first settlement; Lord Macclesfield reversed a decree of the Master of the Rolls, who had set up the copy, and he left the party to obtain what he could at law, saying the donor might have reserved to himself a locus pœnitentiæ (a).

It is to be observed that the Court of Chancery will not remedy a defect or supply an omission in a deed in favour of a stranger where there is no consideration, even in the plainest case, and when it has arisen from mere mistake, and though the correction would not be inconsistent with the deed (b).

The general rule is, that where there are two voluntary conveyances, he that hath the advantage at law ought to keep it (c); there is no equity to assist the one against the other (d).

An irrevocable transfer of equitable interests, whether in real or in personal estate, may be effected, as has already been noticed, by means of a declaration of trust on the part of the cestui que trust, that his trustee shall be trustee for the intended donee (e). A definite and final declaration of trust is considered as equivalent to a transfer of the legal estate or interest at law (f); and it is clear upon the authorities, as an abstract proposition, that in a case of personal property, a declaration of trust may be made without writing (g). But if a person entitled to property which is capable of a legal transfer, as stock, or tolls, or shares in a concern the title to which may be transferred in a particular way by the constitution of the concern or by custom, voluntarily executes what purports to be an actual assignment of such property, nothing will pass, though it be by deed: the deed is not an assignment; and as it is not intended to be a declaration of trust, it will not operate as such (h); this subject, however, will be more particularly adverted to in the succeeding sections. Where a trust is constituted, though without consideration, there is, as regards equitable interests, a cessation of property in the donor, and he is not a necessary

(a) Naldred v. Gilham, 1 P. W. 577, 1719; and see the dict. Cotton v. King, 2 P. W. 358. King v. Cotton, ibid. 674; and see Uniacke v. Giles, 2 Molloy, 268.

(b) Pickering v. Keeling, 1 Ch. Rep. 78; Benham v. Newcomb, 2 Ventr. 365; Lee v. Sir R. Henley, 1 Vern. 37, ib. 40, the claimants were nephews: as to a wife or child unprovided for, v. infra, and v. supra, p. 285, note (d).

(c) Dict. Lord C. J. Treby, Bath and Montague's case, 3 Ch. Ca. 88.

(d) Lord K. Somers, Bath and Montague's case, 3 Ch. Ca. 123.

(e) V. supra 52, et seq. and p. 883, and see Searle v. Law, ubi infra; and Newton v. Askeu, Rolls, June, 1848.

(f) Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 134; v. supra, pp. 51-58.

(g) Vice-Ch. Wigram, M'Fadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Hare, p. 462; Nab v. Nab, 10 Mod. 405; Fordyce v. Willis, 3 Bro. 577; Bayley v. Boulcott, 4 Russ. 345; Benbow v. Townsend, 1 My. & K. 506.

(h) Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 95, and the cases there cited, as to which see Section iv. infra.

party in a suit by the cestui que trust against the trustee to have it carried into execution (a); this subject has already been noticed in the fourth Section of the first Chapter of this volume, to which I would refer (b).

The subject of voluntary Assignments of equitable interests in stock held in trust, will be considered in the fourth Section of this Chapter, where also some observations on the subject generally will be introduced.

The effect of the statute of the 13th Elizabeth in the avoidance of voluntary conveyances as against creditors and purchasers, has already been considered (c).

(a) Reed v. O'Brien, 7 Beav. 32, 35; but, as a general rule, all the cestuis que trust must be parties, ibid.

(b) V. sup. p. 52-58.

(c) See the additional note below.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

Voluntary Deed—when void as against Creditors.

In a late number of the Jurist (xiii. Jur. No. 364) the leading cases relating to the question whether a voluntary deed, which is executed by a person who is indebted at the time, can prevail as against creditors, looking to the provisions of the statute of the 13th Elizabeth (namely, Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 1; Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; Whittington v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 493; Ede v. Knowles, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 178; Townsend v. Westacott, 2 Beav. 340; and Skarff v. Soulby, xiii. Jur. 89), are discussed. The writer comes to this conclusion, "That the true principle to be collected from the cases is this: that in order to set aside a voluntary settlement under the 13th Elizabeth, it must be shown that the settlor was at the time in such circumstances that inability to pay his debts was actually existent or reasonably to be apprehended by him, so that a presumption must arise that the settlement was made with intent to hinder creditors; that indebted or not indebted, and the extent to which the settlor was indebted, are merely evidence from which the court will conclude that such a presumption does arise; and that a trifling debt due at the time of the settlement and remaining unpaid, if it were shown that at the time of the settlement the settlor was abundantly solvent, would not be sufficient to set aside the deed;" which appears to me to be a correct exposition of the law. See also Martyn v. Macnamara, 2 Conn. & L. 554. On this subject, v. supra, p. 290: as to the effect of the statute 27th of Eliz. in annulling voluntary conveyances as against purchasers for valuable consideration, v. supra, p. 288, et infra, 893.

SECTION III.—Voluntary Contracts as affecting Equitable Estates and Interests.

Voluntary Bond not to be relieved against in Equity, if no Fraud.

But it is not to take place of Real Debts, though by Simple Contract, though it shall take place of Legacies.

More especially if entered into in favour of a Child.

Voluntary Covenant in favour of Natural Children enforced.

Williamson v. Codrington.

Court of Chancery will so far assist Volunteer as to enable him to put it in Suit at Law.

Fletcher v. Fletcher.

Clough v. Lambert.

WE have already fully considered what is the effect of a contract for valuable consideration (a), as regards every kind of interest, whether legal or equitable: it is proposed now to consider the doctrines of the Court of Chancery, which have already been adverted to, in regard to mere contracts or promises, and imperfect assignments relating to such interests where the transaction is not founded on a valuable consideration.

It is to be observed, that if a man enters into a bond without any consideration, yet if no fraudulent practices were used in obtaining it, the bond is binding in law, and will not be relieved against in equity (b); a voluntary bond will not be paid in a course of administration, so as to take place of debts incurred for a valuable consideration, though by simple contract only; but it will take precedence of legacies (c): a voluntary bond in favour of a child has especial claims for its being enforced. Where a wife was induced to give up a voluntary bond, which had been given by her husband to her upon certain lands being settled upon her as an equivalent; on her being (a) What ought to be done considered as done; supra, pp. 253-293, where the doctrine of the Court of Chancery as to strangers to the contract is considered, p. 280 to 288, and where the doctrine as to the rights of creditors and purchasers as against voluntary settlements has been incidentally considered, p. 288 to 293.

(b) Dict. Wright v. Moor, 1 Ch. Rep. 84; 1 Eq. Abr. 84; Cray v. Rooke, Forrest. 155; and see Crompton, 49 b.

(c) Jones v. Powell, 1 Eq. Abr. 84; Cray v. Rooke, Forrest. 155-6; Fairebeard v. Bowers,

2 Vern. 202: Eales v. Gee, Barnardist. 399; in that case a bond, entered into by the eldest son, pursuant to a promise (without consideration) to the father, to secure a sum of money to his younger brothers and sisters, was held not to be voluntary; Boughton v. Boughton, 1 Atk. 626: Hill v. Spencer, Ambl. 643: a voluntary bond, given to a common prostitute, stands on the same footing as any other; ibid.: but not if it were given to her as præmium pudicitiae; dict. Clarke v. Periam, 2 Atk. 337, 340; though the order in that case was made by consent; Lomas v. Wright, 2 My. & K. 775.

afterwards evicted from such lands, she was held to be entitled in equity to recover upon the bond against the husband's estate (a): a voluntary settlement followed by marriage cannot be revoked (b).

Lord Hardwicke enforced in equity a voluntary covenant in favour of natural children, under the following circumstances (c). Sir W. Codrington executed a conveyance of a plantation, negroes, stock, &c. in America, to trustees in trust for his natural children, with a clause binding himself, his heirs, &c. to warrant and for ever defend the said plantation, &c. to the donees; he in his lifetime sold the estate, but it did not appear that he intended thereby to deprive his natural children of the benefit of the provision for them. The sale was not attempted to be impeached as regards the purchaser; but Lord Hardwicke held that the trustees might recover upon the clause of warranty, as a covenant at law, for the value of the property: and on a bill filed he decreed the value of the plantation as it stood at the time of the sale, to be paid to the children, without sending them to law (d); though his Lordship admitted (e) that a jury would not have been bound to give damages ad valorem, but might have mitigated them according to circumstances. The same distinguished judge specifically enforced a voluntary bond with a penalty, in favour of children against volunteers (f).

But the general rule is that the court will not enforce the performance of a voluntary contract; that is, where something is sought beyond what, if anything, may be recovered under it at law. "I have no doubt," said Lord Cottenham, in a late case, "that the court will not execute a voluntary contract, and my impression is, that the principle of the court to withhold its assistance from a volunteer, applies

(a) Beard v. Nutthall, 1 Vern. 427; the releasing the arrears due on a voluntary bond is a valuable consideration; see Hepburn v. Brown, 2 Dow. P. C. 342; and Stiles v. Att.-Gen. 2 Atk. p. 152; Gilham v. Locke, 9 Ves. 612; Tanner v. Byne, 1 Sim. 160.

(b) Brown v. Carter, 5 Ves. 864; Roddy v. Williams, 3 Jo. & Lat. 17; as to the doctrine in regard to promises made in consideration of marriage, see Greene v. Cramer, 2 Con. & Law. 54, and De Reil v. Thomson, 3 Beav. 469.

(c) Williamson v. Codrington, 1 Ves. Sen. 511, 1750: and see Bolton v. Bolton, infra, and Lewin, 707; and see Clavell v. Littleton, Prec. Ch. 305, et v. supra, p. 853.

(d) 1 Ves. 514-16.

(e) Ibid. p. 516.

(f) A father entered into a covenant, in a penalty of 25,000*l.*, to settle his estates equally amongst his children. The covenantor devised his estates in a manner inconsistent with his covenant. Lord Hardwicke held that as there was a kind of consideration (v. supra, p. 853), the covenant ought to take place of all other voluntary settlements, as was the will, but not of debts; and he decreed that the estates should be divided amongst all the children, not simply leaving them to enforce the covenant at law; Bolton v. Bolton, 3 Swanst. 414, note, (1739); Williamson v. Codrington was acted upon by Sir J. Wigram, in Fletcher v. Fletcher. As the assistance of the court was not required to render the covenant effectual, and nothing was sought beyond giving effect to the legal obligation, that case is not at variance with Lord Thurlow's doctrine in Evelyn v. Templar, cited by Lord Eldon in Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, v. supra, pp. 282, 285, or with Lord Cottenham's general declaration in Jeffreys v. Jeffreys, see the next note; but Bolton v.

equally, whether he seeks to have the benefit of a contract, a covenant, or a settlement" (a); though the court will not interfere to prevent the party from recovering what he can at law (b). But though, as regards voluntary obligations, the Court of Chancery will not generally interfere (c), yet the court will so far assist the volunteer claiming the benefit of a voluntary bond, that if by reason of the obligor having kept the bond in his possession, it shall have come into the hands of his executors, and they and the obligees in trust omit or decline to act upon it; the court (at least when the fact of possession by the donor can be accounted for, as where it is not intended to operate till the donor's death), having all parties before it, will give such directions as shall enable the cestui que trust of the money secured by the bond, to have its legal validity tried at law; or if that should be declined by the representatives of the testator, the court will act upon the bond according to its tenor in the administration of the estate of the obligor (d).

Following out the principle that a contract will not be enforced at

Bolton is not so easily to be reconciled: however the full amount of the penalty might have been recovered at law, and the estates must have gone in satisfaction in the whole or in part: so that in substance the covenant was literally enforced: et v. supra, p. 283, note.

(a) Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & Phill. 141, stated infra: and see Sowerby v. Gutteridge, L. C. 13 November, 1848. In Bellingham v. Lowther, 1 Ch. Ca. p. 243, stated infra, an attempt was made to distinguish between a covenant and a voluntary imperfect conveyance, on the ground that there was no tie in the latter case, so that the rule governing such cases ought not to be applied to a covenant to do an act where there is a tie; but it did not prevail: though that case was not decided on the broad ground that a voluntary covenant will not be enforced.

(b) Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 202.

(c) Lord Thurlow, Evelyn v. Templar, ubi supra.

(d) Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare, p. 67. In this case Ellis Fletcher executed in due form a deed, dated 1st Sept. 1829, by which he covenanted, for himself, his heirs, &c., with five trustees, that in case his two natural sons, John and Jacob, or either of them, should survive him, his heirs, executors, &c., should pay to them, or such one as should attain 21, a fixed sum, namely, 60,000*l.* The deed was never communicated to the trustees, or to the natural children, who were infants, and the deed, which it will be observed was not to operate till the donor's death, was kept in his own possession. E. Fletcher, in 1834, made his will, giving the whole of his real and personal property amongst the two natural children and his three legitimate children. Jacob died under 21, and John, the surviving natural child, filed a bill to have the 60,000*l.* paid to him out of the assets of E. Fletcher. The surviving trustee named in the deed, stated that he had never accepted the trust, and declined in any way to interfere, excepting under the direction of the court. The deed was in the possession of the executors, and they declined to sue without directions, so that, as the deed could not be put in suit, John could not obtain the benefit of it without the aid of the court. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram held that the court was bound to interfere, so far as to direct that the name of the trustee should be used for the purpose of suing upon it, if it should be required that it should be established as a valid instrument at law, and that if necessary the executors should produce the deed for this purpose; and the parties having, under those circumstances, waived a trial at law, the Vice-Chancellor declared that the deed constituted a good debt at law, and ordered payment out of the testator's assets. This covenant, according to the doctrine of the juriconsults, would have been a mere solicitation; see Pothier, tom. v. p. 5, § ii. 4; See also Clough v. Lambert, 10 Sim. 174, where the Vice-Chancellor of England enforced against the executors a covenant under seal, entered into by a husband with trustees on the part of his wife on separation; but in that case the deed had been acted upon in the donor's life.

the instance of a volunteer; where a person, as has been noticed in the preceding section, without consideration, signs or executes an instrument by which he intends to pass the property in a subject capable of immediate transfer, and that instrument is not effectual to pass the property, but something is required to be done in order to complete the transfer; in such case neither he, nor his representatives (a), can be compelled by the court to do the act necessary for its completion; although, as it seems, the donor may have given a power of attorney to complete the act, at least if it be not put in operation during his life: the transaction is incomplete, and it cannot be enforced, even though a child be the subject of the intended gift (b). We may therefore consider it as established, that

(a) For the general rule is, that the personal representative stands in the place of the donor, and if the party could not enforce it against the one he cannot against the other, Lord Chancellor Hart, Uniacke v. Giles, 2 Moll. p. 269; Vice-Chancellor Wigram, M'Fadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Hare, 460, and cases there cited: there may be, as after stated, an exception to this rule, in the case where a person has executed an instrument effectual in itself, but has reserved a locus pœnitentiæ personal to himself till his death.

(b) Antrobus v. Smith (1805), 12 Ves. 39. That case was shortly as follows:—Gibbs Crawford, being entitled to ten shares of 100*l.* each, in the Forth and Clyde Navigation, wrote on a receipt for one of the subscriptions, and signed this memorandum: "I do hereby assign to my daughter, Anna Crawford, all my right, title and interest of and in the inclosed call, and all other calls of my subscription in the Clyde and Forth Navigation;" it was not delivered; but it was kept in the donor's possession, and was found in a pocket book, with other papers relating to his estate: the testator continued to act as owner, and afterwards gave a large sum to this daughter. The plaintiff in the suit sought to have this imperfect gift completed, it being in favour of a daughter. Sir Wm. Grant said, "If it was to be presumed that he had delivered it, and that it had been delivered back, coupling this with the subsequent provision made for the daughter, it would be conclusive against the plaintiff," (p. 44). And the bill was dismissed. Sir W. Grant observed, in his judgment, that Mr. Crawford did not, as had been urged, constitute himself a trustee—he meant a gift; for he says he assigns the property, but it was a gift not complete; the property was not transferred; "There is no case in which a party has been compelled to perfect a gift, which in the mode of making it he has left imperfect. There is locus pœnitentiæ as long as it is incomplete, and Mr. Crawford did repent, (ibid. p. 46). If it could be executed now it might have been executed against Mr. Crawford himself, for which no authority can be found," (p. 47); and see the judgment of Lord Langdale, in Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. p. 202. Dillon v. Coppin, 4 My. & Cr. 647, was a most favourable case, to induce the court to complete an imperfect gift in favour of a child. The donor had three daughters; he had advanced to two, on their respective marriages, but not to the third, Mrs. Coppin, who was also married. The father executed a deed-poll, attested by two witnesses, which purported to be an assignment to his daughter, for the benefit of herself, her husband and children, of some East India stock and Globe shares, which, it was proved, could only pass by transfer (as to this, see Antrobus v. Smith, supra); he kept the deed in his possession, as it would appear, in order that he might have the control over it during his life, but died intestate, without revoking it; he signed a memorandum, desiring that the deed should be delivered to his daughter immediately on his death; and he had, in the deed, directed his representatives to do all that was necessary for perfecting the title. Most of the cases in regard to meritorious consideration, including Ellis v. Nimmo, after stated, were cited, pp. 664-5-6; Lord Cottenham decided that the stock and the shares formed part of the intestate's general estate: Mrs. Coppin, as administratrix, had transferred the stock to herself, on the trusts of the deed-poll. In Bellingham v. Lowther, 1 Ch. Ca. 243, a person covenanted to surrender certain copyhold premises to another, for the benefit of the brother of the covenantor and his issue, and had given a power of attorney to make the surrender, but the covenantor died before the surrender was made, so that the power of attorney was revoked: Lord Nottingham refused to compel the covenantor to perform his covenant. In Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & P.

where a person voluntarily signs or executes any instrument by which he purports to convey or assign property of any kind or description to another, the transaction being in the form of a transfer or intended transfer of the property to that other; if the transfer be not complete, that is, if anything that might have been done by the donor for the completion of the transfer has been left undone, whether the donor contemplated the doing it or not, it is at most a contract only, and the Court of Chancery will not complete it, either as against the party himself, or those claiming under him, even in favour of a child (a).

The point that the court will not lend its assistance to compel the completion of an agreement or stipulation on the part of a father as against the father to grant or convey in favour of a child, was not finally settled till very lately.

Lord Keeper Wright, in Watts v. Bullas (1702) (b), made good a defective voluntary conveyance to the brother of the half-blood against the heir, on the ground that as the consideration of blood would raise an use at law, so should this imperfect conveyance raise a trust in equity, in respect of the consideration of blood. The authority of this case was controverted by Lord Hardwicke, as pursuing the maxim as regards uses too far (c); but his Lordship seemed to admit, that when confined to a wife and children, the doctrine was reasonable, and might be adhered to.

The question whether the claims of a child afforded the meritorious consideration which Lord Thurlow considered essential (d), and which Lord Hardwicke, in numerous cases, appears to have considered valuable though in a second degree (e), came directly before Lord Chancellor Sugden in 1835. In that case (f), a father signed a paper to which no person was named as a party but himself (so that it was a mere pollicitation), by which he agreed to grant an annuity charged on an estate in favour of his daughter. The 141 (1841), supra, p. 890, a person had entered into a voluntary covenant, dated Sept. 1834, to surrender certain copyholds, for the benefit of his daughters; he died some years afterwards, having by his will, dated Aug. 1836, in violation of the covenant, devised part of the copyhold premises to his wife, who had been admitted; he had therefore taken advantage of his locus pœnitentiæ: Lord Cottenham declined to enforce the covenant, on the ground that it was voluntary.

(a) Et v. infra, Edwards v. Jones; that case, which is a very material one, relates to assignments of choses in action, and will be introduced in the next section.

(b) 1 P. W. 60.

(c) Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. p. 189, stated supra, p. 283. Defects in surrenders of copyholds, and in the execution of powers, are now only supplied in favour of creditors, a wife, and children; Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 1 Ves. p. 228; Byas v. Byas, 2 Ves. 164; Tudor v. Anson, ibid. 582, v. supra, p. 285, note.

(d) Colman v. Sarrel, 1 Ves. J. 52; and see 3 Bro. C. C. 14; supra, p. 58.

(e) Supra, p. 853, Wright v. Wright; Bolton v. Bolton, sup. p. 889, et v. sup. p. 284.

(f) Ellis v. Nimmo, Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. p. 339, et seq.

father refused to carry the agreement into execution; in fact, as far as he could, he revoked it. The daughter and her husband filed a bill against the father to compel him to perform it: the Lord Chancellor, on the ground that the claims of a child were a sufficient consideration to induce the court to support a covenant to stand seised, and to aid a defective conveyance or surrender (a), was of opinion that in the absence of authority to the contrary, they might be considered as a sufficient consideration to support an agreement in fieri; and he decreed a specific performance of the promise as a contract. This case has not been expressly overruled, but (b) the cases of Dillon v. Coppen, and Jefferys v. Jefferys, have overruled it in effect (c).

In the following case, which is peculiar in its circumstances, an obligation was implied and specifically enforced, at the instance of a stranger:—the defendant executed a deed, purporting to convey to the plaintiff, his female servant, lands of the value of 22*l.* a year; when she came to inquire where the lands were, the defendant laughed at her, and said they were in nubibus, in fact the whole was a fiction: the Court of Exchequer ordered the defendant to convey to the plaintiff lands of that value (d).

The question as to who are to be considered as purchasers under a settlement, and who as mere volunteers, in reference to that character generally and in reference to the statute of the 27th of Elizabeth, has been discussed in a preceding part of this volume (e); but as the following case, from Sir E. Sugden's late valuable work, is material as regards that point, I therefore here insert it.

A person being tenant in tail under his father's will, with successive remainders to his two brothers in tail, by articles before marriage agreed to settle the estate in strict settlement, making himself tenant for life, with remainder to the sons of the marriage in tail. After the marriage he suffered a recovery, and executed a settlement ac-

(a) See particularly Thompson v. Attfeild, 1 Vern. 40, recognized by Lord Hardwicke; Saltern v. Melhuish, Amb. 251; Fothergill v. Fothergill, 2 Freem. 256.

(b) Withy v. Mangles, 10 Cl. & Fin. 215.

(c) As in this case an attempt was made to enforce the contract against the father himself, and as he had in fact revoked it, the cases as to aiding defective surrenders, which proceed upon a continued intention to benefit the child, were not directly applicable, see Lloyd & G. p. 348. The implied reversal does not necessarily decide that there was not sufficient consideration to have supported it, if unrevoked, as against other volunteers (v. sup. p. 284, 853, 882, n. (b), 889, and see Uniacke

v. Giles, 2 Moll. 265); but Lord Cottenham's doctrine appears to embrace that case. Mr. Lewin, Appendix, iii. p. 705, has collected and observed upon the cases on Meritorious consideration.

(d) Carey v. Stafford, 3 Swanst. p. 427. Chief Baron Gilbert said it was not like the ordinary case, where the volunteer may be left to get what he can at law: "for here nothing at all is given, and therefore no remedy can be at law;" from Hale, B.'s, judgment, ibid. it is clear that the court was influenced by the consideration that the plaintiff had been seduced, and that a scandalous trick had been played off upon her; see Knye v. Moore, 1 Sim. & St. 64.

according to the articles, adding remainders to his two brothers successively for life, with remainders in like succession to their sons in tail male, remainder as he should appoint; he then mortgaged the premises in fee. Lord Manners held that the limitations to the brothers (being volunteers) were void as against the mortgagee, he being a purchaser pro tanto: this decree was affirmed in the House of Lords, Lord Eldon holding that the brothers took new estates under the settlement, and that there was no substantial difference in such cases between tenant in tail and tenant in fee (a).

(a) Cormick v. Trapaud, 6 Dow. p. 60; Sugd. Law of Prop. p. 148: et v. supra, p. 288, 293, et infra, 887.

SECTION IV.—Voluntary Assignments of Choses in Action, and of Contingent Interests and Possibilities in Personal Chattels.

Choses in Action, and Contingent Interests in Personalty considered as Property.

How far capable of Gift—What amounts to a Gift.

Transfer of Chose in Action by Declaration of Trust.

Trust Created by Directions given to the Debtor.

Voluntary Transfer by Assignment.

Assignment followed by such Acts as would give a Title against Assignees.

Whether Notice may be dispensed with.

Fortescue v. Barnett.

Assignment of Equitable Interest in Stock.

Sloane v. Cadogan.

Assignment of Bond by Writing not under Seal.

Edwards v. Jones, before Lord Cottenham.

Assignment by Deed.

Blakely v. Brady, before Lord Plunket.

Ward v. Audland, before Lord Langdale.

Remarks on the preceding Cases.

Declaration of Trust the only sure way of effecting a transfer in Equity.

Voluntary Assignments of Contingent Interest and Possibilities in Personal Estate.

Meek v. Kettlewell, before Sir J. Wigram and Lord Lyndhurst.

Gift inter vivos cannot be set up as a Donatio Mortis Causâ.

What will and what will not amount to a Release in Equity, there being no Consideration.

WE have now to consider the most difficult part of the subject; namely, by what means an effectual gift of a chose in action and of a contingent interest or a possibility may be effected.

A right to recover a debt or sum of money from another, whether recoverable by the party himself or by some other person as his trustee, is admitted to be Property: and a contingent right to money or other valuables, whether recoverable at law or in equity, which must depend upon the nature of the subject, even though the right may rest in possibility only, is also recognised as property; for every such interest which does not cease with the death of the party entitled, will pass to the representatives of such party, and may be disposed of by will (a); and contingent interests and possibilities coupled with an interest of every kind in tenements and hereditaments, may, as has been already noticed, be conveyed by deed (a), and all such interests in personal estates may, without question, be the subject of contract for valuable consideration. A mere expectancy may also be the subject of contract for valuable consideration, though whether any thing shall be obtained under such contract must, from the nature of the subject-matter, depend upon chance (b); so that in this way at least such an interest may be effectually transferred to another.

(a) 1 Vict. c. 26, § 3.

It is one of the incidents of property that a person may give it away as well as sell it, hence it has never been explicitly denied that a person has a right to give away any interest, whether legal or equitable, which is recognised at law or in equity as property (c). However, the obstacles which have, in some instances, been thrown in the way of the donee recovering that which has been intended to be given to him, where he has to resort to the Court of Chancery, have, in effect, almost amounted to a denial of the right to give: the great difficulty is as to what is to be considered as amounting to a gift in fact, and to this question I am about to direct the reader's attention by submitting to him some of the leading authorities.

As regards choses in action:—It is to be observed that a debtor, by contracting the debt, does not in any sense become a trustee; his contract is to pay to his debtor, and it is only by his own acts that he can become strictly a trustee for another; though, as we have seen, after notice of an assignment, he makes himself liable, if he pay to his original debtor (d). Generally speaking, as we have seen in a former chapter (e), an effectual assignment of a debt cannot be made, unless by way of declaration of trust as after mentioned, at least as regards third persons, without notice to the debtor; this notice is in effect, on the part of the assignor, the substitute for delivery, and on the part of the assignee of the taking of possession, which is essential to pass an interest in personal property; and if it had been held that no gift of a chose in action should be considered as complete, unless notice

(a) 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106; Vol. i. p. 291, et supra, p. 879.

(b) V. infra, p. 912, Lythe v. Milne, 1 My. & K. 683-93; and the cases there cited. In that case the grantor of an annuity covenanted for value, to charge it on such property as he might derive under the will of a person then living: after the grantor had obtained his certificate he became entitled to a legacy under the contemplated will: it was held to be charged in equity with the annuity; and see Bennett v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 252, 254-5; Phipson v. Turner, 9 Sim. 245.

(c) The interests I am speaking of are those in which there is an existing right, though depending as regards the enjoyment of its fruits on a contingency, and some specific property which is the subject of such right: the interest of an heir or an expectant legatee is of a different character; it is only in the way of enforcing a contract that the subject can in any way be affected in these instances; there is neither a right nor a subject on which a gift can operate during the life of the ancestor or testator.

(d) Sup. p. 858.

(e) V. sup. p. 856, 857.

were given to the debtor or person liable, at least an intelligible rule of easy application in most cases would have been established: but, as we shall see in the following pages, in some cases notice has not been treated as a requisite, as between the parties, where what has been considered as equivalent to delivery has been effected in another manner (a). Where the right to recover the debt is vested in one as trustee for another, in principle, as between the parties, notice to such trustee of an assignment of the equitable interest in the debt by the cestui que trust, can no more be requisite in such a case, than it is in the case of an assignment of an equitable interest in any other property (b): such notice being given by the donor, may be cogent evidence of a definitive intention to give, but cannot in principle be essential to constitute the gift.

It seems to be agreed, as a general rule, that if a person effectually declares himself or his debtor, to be trustee for another of the money or property to be recovered, whether in writing or (as trusts of personal estate are capable of being created without writing (c),) by acts and declarations of a decisive and definitive nature sufficiently proved, the transaction will be binding against him and his representatives (d);

(a) V. infra, p. 906.

(b) V. supra, p. 856, 857.

(c) See Bayley v. Boulcott, 4 Russ. 347; Bill v. Cureton, 2 My. & K. 503; Jones v. Croucher, 1 Sim. & S. 315; and 1 Hare, 461; and the other cases there cited. In Benbow v. Townsend, 1 My. & K. 506, (1833,) a person lent 2000*l.* on the security of a copyhold estate, and took the security in the name of his brother. He received the interest, telling the mortgagor at the time that he should himself receive the interest, but that the principal would belong to his brother. Sir J. Leach said, "But in this case, the trust being of personal estate, the case is not within the Statute of Frauds, or the doctrine of resulting trusts under that statute, but the property will belong to the brother after the testator's death, by force of the testator's declaration that the 2000*l.* should after his own death be the property of his brother Job," p. 510; and see M'Fadden v. Jenkyns, additional note No. 1, to this Section.

(d) "You may constitute one a trustee for a volunteer," Sir Wm. Grant, Sloane v. Cadogan, Sugden, V. and P. appendix. In James v. Bydder, 4 Beav. 600, (1841,) John Betts executed a post-nuptial settlement, by which he assigned to trustees certain bonds and promissory notes for securing 600*l.* in trust for himself for life, then for his wife, after their deaths for their children; and he covenanted that his executors, twelve months after his death, should pay to the trustees 300*l.* additional on the same trusts. The bonds and promissory notes were delivered to the trustees, but the notes were not indorsed to them, and no notice was given to the debtors. One of the trustees afterwards handed over two of the securities (p. 603) to the settlor, who recovered 200*l.* upon them, the remaining 400*l.* could not be recovered. The settlor signed two memorandums, by which he acknowledged that this sum was money held in trust for his children, and that he had laid it out in part in the purchase of a copyhold estate. Being pressed by the trustees he deposited with them the title deeds of the purchased estate, by way of security for the 200*l.* Lord Langdale held that this last transaction was one which rested on a valuable consideration, and his lordship established it to the extent of 200*l.* against his devisees and representatives, he having devised the estate upon trust for other persons, namely, his children by a second marriage. Lord Langdale considered that as regards these sums, the memoranda signed by him affected them with a trust which he was not at liberty to dispute, p. 606, and that his subsequent dealing with these funds was not to be considered as a mere voluntary matter, though in doing so he did not appear to have been acting under the notion of any liability, p. 603. The bill was so framed as to have embraced the remaining 400*l.* and the 300*l.* covenanted to be paid;

and this whether the property be recoverable by the party himself or by a trustee for him. The doctrine, said the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, is not confined to cases where the legal interest is conferred or acquired in pursuance and execution of an antecedent agreement or direction leading to the uses or trusts of that property, it extends to all cases where the transaction is complete (a): that is, where the declaration by the party entitled, whether legally or equitably, shows a definitive intention by that act, at once to denude himself of all beneficial interest in the subject in favour of another.

If a person by a written instrument or by word directs the debtor to hold the money due, in trust for a third person, and such direction is, at least with his sanction, communicated to the debtor and to the donee, an effectual trust is created in favour of the donee; it is the same in effect as if the donor had declared himself to be a trustee of the debt for the donee; especially where the debtor has acted upon such direction by payment of interest to the donee without objection, for this leaves no room to doubt that the transaction was final and complete: such a transaction is binding on the party himself, and by consequence on his representatives (b); both are volunteers, and the donee has a specific paramount claim.

Where the transaction has been in the form of an Assignment, not being a declaration of trust, it has created greater difficulty; such cases have frequently arisen in respect of policies of insurance. In the case of Adams v. Claxton (c), Sir William Grant seems to admit that a policy of insurance may be effectually assigned, but the question is, What acts will amount to such an assignment as that the Court of Chancery will feel itself bound to support or enforce it by making the legal holder of the policy a trustee for the donee without looking to the subject of consideration? It is quite clear, as a general rule, that where a person shows the clearest intention to give, but leaves the gift imperfect, let the subject of it be what it may, the Court of but this does not appear to have been pressed. As regards conveyances of equitable estates and interests in real estates, a deed under seal may be necessary to keep up the analogy to the law; (but see Hayes' Introduction to Conveyancing, p. 98, and Hayes' Elementary View, 71; sup. Vol. i. 506;) but as regards a declaration of trust of personal estate, it would seem to make no difference whether the instrument be under seal or not, excepting that a deed evinces a more fixed determination (see 1 Hare, 474, as to the efficacy of a seal). As regards Assignments by deed as distinguished from Assignments by writing merely, v. infra,

p. 908.

(a) Vice-Chanc. Wigram, Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare, 470, observing upon Colman v. Sarel, 3 Bro. 12; Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 656, and Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, v. sup. p. 52, 53.

(b) M'Fadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Hare, 458, 1 Phillips, 156-7-8, additional note No. 1, to this Section; and see Ex parte Pye; Ellison v. Ellison; Fortescue v. Barnett, infra, Sloane v. Cadogan, inf.; Roberts v. Lloyd, 2 Beav. 376; Wheatley v. Purr, and Collinson v. Patrick, all cited supra et infra.

(c) 6 Ves. 226; sup. p. 861.

Chancery will not interfere at the instance of a volunteer to make it perfect (a); but where every thing has been done in regard to a voluntary assignment of a chose in action, that is considered to be requisite to complete the title on an assignment for value as against assignees or subsequent purchasers (b), perhaps it may be stated, that without doubt the donor and his representatives would be held to be bound and to be trustees for the donee: but a voluntary assignment of a policy has been supported without all these requisites having been complied with.

John Barnett, shortly after the marriage of his sister Mary, then White, by indenture made between himself, Henry White and the said Mary wife of Henry White, and Thomas White and the plaintiff Fortescue as trustees, assigned a policy of assurance for 1000*l.*, to the trustees in trust for Henry White and wife for life, then for their children; Barnett covenanted to pay the premiums: there does not appear to have been any power of attorney to the trustees to receive the money. Barnett kept the policy, and did not give notice to the insurance company, but he delivered the deed to one of the trustees: he afterwards received a bonus, and then for a sum of money surrendered the policy to the office; if he had any locus pœnitentiæ he exercised it: the bill was filed by Fortescue against the grantor himself, to enforce the voluntary assignment. Sir John Leach, Master of the Rolls, decided that the assignment was binding, and that Barnett was liable to pay the amount which would have been received if the policy had not been surrendered, and the amount of the bonus; though Barnett swore that he considered that he was to have the control of the policy during his life, and to have power to revoke (c), but no evidence was given to show that such power was omitted to be inserted by mistake or otherwise: in effect Barnett was held to be constructively a trustee for the donee (d). The ground of the decision was that nothing (at least nothing essential) remained to be done by the grantor (e): the gift, that is of all the

(a) Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 39, Sir W. Grant, stated sup. Sect. iii. p. 891.

(b) V. supra, p. 858, 859.

(c) In Naldred v. Gilham Sir Jos. Jekyll's decree was reversed, because Mrs. Gilham thought there was a power of revocation in the deed, which she had kept; see 5 Barn. & C. p. 691.

(d) Fortescue v. Barnett, (1834,) 3 My. & K. 36. Though that fact is not noticed in the argument or judgment, Barnett had treated Mrs. White as having a direct interest in the policy, by procuring her consent to the surrender, on an understanding that the amount of the premium should be paid to Mrs. White, Barnett making at the same time a provision in his will for Mrs. White and her children, her husband being then dead (see p. 39): so that Mrs. White might have altered her habits of life on the strength of Barnett's assurance.

(e) Assuming this to be the fact, (which it was not, as the policy had not been delivered to the trustee, and no notice had been given to the insurance company,) Lord Cottenham recognised it in Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & C. 239, inf.; his Lordship also recognised Sloane v. Cadogan, infra, on the same principle, ibid., but unwillingly, see 1 Hare, 475.

donor's beneficial interest, was considered as complete, notwithstanding the retention of the policy. Sir J. Leach observed that, if the trustees had given notice to the office, implying that such was their duty, Barnett would not have been able to have defeated his grant (a); but the not giving notice to the office could not, in his opinion, affect the cestuis que trust—at least, the infant children (b).

The case of Sloane v. Cadogan, before Sir William Grant (c), which has been already noticed, and which relates to the assignments of equitable interests in stock and the like (a very material case on the subject of the completeness of the gift whatever may be the subject), is so pointedly referred to in the next case to which we have to direct our attention (Edwards v. Jones), and it has been the subject of so many varying opinions (d), that it is proper here to introduce it.

William Bromley Cadogan was entitled to one-fourth of 20,000*l.* on his father's death. By indenture, 26th May, 1798, he assigned all his interest in this fund (being then reversionary) to trustees, on certain trusts which had run out, with the ultimate trust in favour of his father, Lord Cadogan, with a power of revocation. William Bromley Cadogan did not exercise the power of revocation (e), and died, having left the residue of his property to the plaintiff, his wife. One question raised was, whether this deed was operative to pass William Bromley Cadogan's interest in one-fourth of the fund to Lord Cadogan. The 20,000*l.* having been lent to Lord Cadogan, who was dead, the fund was actually in the hands of his executors, so that they did not require any assistance from the court to obtain the fund, but Sir William Grant does not appear to have considered this to be material. Sir E. Sugden, for the plaintiff, admitted that Mr. Cadogan, by executing the deed, had done all he could, but he insisted that was not enough: he had not made and could not make, an actual transfer. This argument, it may be observed, amounts to this; that an equitable interest in property of this description cannot be assigned so as to become actually vested in another, and that every attempt to do so is but a contract, only to be carried into execution where there is a consideration; to which the Vice-Chancellor of England, as before observed in Holloway v. Headington, appears to have given his sanction (f). If a man, continued Sir E. Sugden,

(a) Lord Cottenham, 1 My. & C. 239, seems to have founded on this allegation the assumption that the office would have recognised the assignee as the person entitled to the policy, which Lord Langdale, in Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 212, does not consider to be warranted by any of the facts in the case.

(b) 3 My. & K. p. 43: holding, therefore, that notice is not essential to complete the gift.

(c) Appendix to Sugd. V. and P. p. 1119.

(d) See particularly supra, p. 56, note.

(e) Sugd. App. p. 1123.

(f) See this case in the additional note, No. 2, to this Section.

is seised of the legal estate, and agrees to make a voluntary conveyance, it cannot be enforced; can it make any difference that the legal estate happens to be outstanding (a)? Sir William Grant, in giving judgment, said, "The court will not interfere to give perfection to the instrument, but you may constitute one" (that is your own trustee) "a trustee for a volunteer" (that is, looking to the facts, constructively by assigning your interest, which is saying in effect that the assignment is good). "As against the party himself and his representatives, a voluntary settlement is binding" (Sir Wm. Grant, it will be remembered, is referring to an equitable interest); "here the fund was vested in trustees: Mr. W. Cadogan had an equitable reversionary interest in that fund, and he has assigned it" (viz. his equitable interest) (b) "to certain trustees; and then the first trustees are trustees for his assigns, and they may come here" (that was more, as it happened, than they required), "for when the trust is created, no consideration is essential:" and the bill of the plaintiff, who was a general legatee, was dismissed (c).

The most important case in relation to the point immediately before us is that of Edwards v. Jones (d). Mary Custance, being eighty years of age, but in full possession of her faculties, five days before her death, signed the following indorsement on a bond given to her for 300*l.* by one Williams: "I, Mary Custance, hereby assign and transfer the within bond or obligation, and all my right, title and interest thereto, unto and to the use of my niece, Esther Edwards, with full power for her to sue for and recover the amount, and all interest now due and hereafter to become due thereon" (e). The instrument itself therefore showed an evident intention on her part to assign all her interest in the bond, and evidence was given

(a) To this the answer appears to be, that in the first case he has not done all that he could have done: if the legal estate is outstanding all that he can do by way of conveyance is to assign his equitable interest.

(b) The Vice-Chancellor of England, in Beatson v. Beatson, (1841,) 12 Sim. 294, assumed that Sir Wm. Grant had said that Mr. Cadogan had assigned the fund itself; v. supra, p. 56, note.

(c) Lord Cottenham, in Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & Cr. 239, adverts to the fact that no attempt was made in that case to call in aid the jurisdiction of the court, and see Sir S. Romilly's argt., Sugd. V. and P. 1126; in fact all that was actually done was to dismiss the bill as to the fund in question. His lordship also in Edwards v. Jones, said, upon the principle stated by Sir W. Grant, (that the transaction constituted the old trustees, trustees for the cestuis que trust under the deed), the case was free from all possible question, for there was no attempt in that case to call in aid the jurisdiction of this court (Sed qu., v. infra). The Vice-Chancellor Wigram in the course of the argument in Fletcher v. Fletcher, supra, stated that he did not consider that Sloane v. Cadogan had ever been overruled.

(d) Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & Cr., 226, (1836,) on appeal; this case is also referred to sup. p. 285.

(e) It is to be observed that a power of attorney merely to sue, does not require to be under seal; that is necessary only where a deed is to be executed, Berkeley v. Hardy, 5 Barn. & C. pp. 355, 359. Could the donor have restrained the donee from suing on the power of attorney? see 7 Ves. 28, and infra, p. 905.

to the same effect (a). Mary Custance had another bond from the same person for securing 123*l.*; both were kept by her together. Immediately after signing the indorsement, Mary Custance delivered both the bonds to Esther Edwards, the plaintiff, who still had them in her possession at the filing of the bill by her; no notice had been given to the obligor (b), not from any intentional omission, but apparently because the donor desired that her sister might not be apprized of the transaction; and after the death of Mary Custance, her executors, under the supposition that the bonds had been lost, persuaded the obligor to give a fresh bond. The bill mistakenly claimed the bond as a donatio mortis causâ, but that failing, it was claimed, at least on the hearing of the appeal, as a gift. The Vice-Chancellor of England, on the original hearing, dismissed the bill with costs. Lord Cottenham, on appeal, held that the transaction neither amounted to a donatio mortis causâ, nor to a gift. His Lordship relied chiefly upon Sir William Grant's judgment in Antrobus v. Smith (c). "Every word of that judgment," said his Lordship, "applies directly to the circumstances of the present case; it is impossible, indeed, to distinguish the two cases." His Lordship, though objecting to some of the expressions of Sir J. Leach, did not dispute the decision in Fortescue v. Barnett, which was urged upon him as governing the case then before him; if, said his Lordship, as Sir J. Leach held, that transaction was complete, and it was not necessary to come to the court in order to constitute a trust—if a trust was created—then the decision was right: and his Lordship recognized Sloane v. Cadogan, which, it is to be observed, was also a case of an assignment, not a declaration of trust, as a case where the act was complete, and such as constituted the donor a trustee for the donee (d). However, his Lordship considered that in the case before him the transaction was not complete; that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was not created, and he therefore, and looking to the case made by the bill, confirmed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England (e).

(a) See 1 My. & Cr. p. 229. Sir James Wigram, V. C., in Meek v. Kettlewell, observes upon the case of Edwards v. Jones, "That the most distinct evidence of intention to pass an interest may not be conclusive."

(b) But which, as the assignment and the bond had been delivered, according to Fortescue v. Barnett, supra, (at least unless the cases are to be distinguished by the assignment in the one having been by deed,) was not necessary; besides the donor had a reason for not giving notice (1 My. & C. 229).

(c) 12 Ves. 39; v. supra, p. 891, and which is also referred to supra, p. 56, 58, in notis. "There is no case," said Sir Wm. Grant in that case, "in which a party has been compelled to perfect a gift, which in the mode of making it he has left imperfect."

(d) 1 My. & Cr. 238, et v. sup. p. 899, 900.

(e) It is to be observed that the bill sought to establish the gift as a donatio mortis causâ, and charged that the testatrix intended it as such, see 1 My. & Cr. 234, which was wholly inconsistent with its being an absolute gift, as

The next case that particularly requires attention arose in Ireland. In Blakely v. Brady (a), Matthew Reilly being entitled to 1620*l.*, due to him from one Mitchell on a note of hand, by deed assigned all his interest in the said 1620*l.* and the note to the plaintiff, as trustee for the donor for life and afterwards upon trust for certain other persons; the plaintiff was irrevocably appointed Reilly's attorney to sue, and to give receipts; the deed was delivered to the plaintiff: whether any notice was given to the debtor does not appear; no point was made on that subject by either party. Matthew Reilly then died intestate. The administrator of Reilly having brought an action on the note, the plaintiff filed the bill. Lord Plunket, chiefly on the authority of Fortescue v. Barnett, held that the gift was complete, and not resting in contract; nothing, he said, remained to be done (b): the plaintiff came there because the property, by the grant of administration, was in the defendant as administrator, but he was administrator in trust. It is clear, said his Lordship, that you may constitute a trust for a volunteer; the only difference between this case and Sloane v. Cadogan (c), the authority of which his Lordship recognized, was this, that in the present case the law had created the trust, and in Sloane v. Cadogan the trust was created by the act of the donor; and was now contended in the argument: as to this point, see Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 97.

As this decision, so far as affects the question as to gifts inter vivos, was founded on Antrobus v. Smith, I have put together what appear to me to be some material features of distinction between the two cases. In the one case, that before Sir William Grant, which is shortly set forth in the preceding section, supra, p. 891, the language of the instrument was equivocal; in the other precise, leaving no doubt as to its object (see 1 My. & Cr. 235): in the one the instrument was not delivered to the donee, nor the fact communicated to him; in the other the instrument and the bond were delivered to the donee and with a view to a gift: in the one case the donor expressed his intention not to complete the assignment; in the other there was an absence of all intention to revoke, even by will: in the one case the subject (if the intention was to assign it) was capable of an effectual legal transfer, and the bill prayed that the canal share might be assigned to the plaintiff; in the other it was not: in the one case there were simply words of assignment; in the other the donee was empowered to recover in the name of the donor: in the one case there was no reason assigned why notice had not been given to the company; in the other there was a sufficient reason why notice was not given to the debtor; though his Lordship did not advert to the want of notice as a material feature. No doubt I am labouring under some mental incapacity or misapprehension; but I confess I can neither follow the distinctions taken by the eminent judge who decided this case between it and Fortescue v. Barnett; nor can I bring myself to think that it is supported by Antrobus v. Smith.

(a) Blakely v. Brady, 2 Drury & Walsh, 311 (1839), L. C. Plunket.

(b) Page 326. This was in answer to the objection, that if you want the assistance of this court to constitute you cestui que trust, and the instrument is voluntary, you shall not have the assistance of the court, Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. p. 661. Lord Plunket distinguished this case from Edwards v. Jones, by this, that in that case there was no assignment, that is, no assignment by deed, but a mere memorandum indorsed on one bond which was attached to another bond which latter bond clearly was not intended to be given to the plaintiff, and that the bill was dismissed on the ground that the transaction was not complete. But the Vice-Chancellor Wigram seems to consider that a deed has no more effect than a simple writing in these cases, Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare, 474.

(c) Supra, p. 900.

he accordingly declared that the deed ought to be established, and the trusts performed (a).

In a late case, Ward v. Audland, 1845 (b), the question as to the validity of an assignment of choses in action by deed arose before Lord Langdale, and all the preceding authorities were cited or adverted to. The case was this:—William Whitelock, a single man without children, being entitled inter alia to a policy of insurance on his life in the Norwich Union, and to a sum of money secured by mortgage for a term of years, executed an indenture made between himself of the first part, his niece Margaret Ward and her husband and Jos. Ward as trustee, of the third part; by which, without describing any particular property, he assigned to J. Ward, inter alia, all sums of money then owing to him, and all (c) securities for the same, and all other his personal estate, together with the mortgage-deeds and writings relating to the premises, upon trust for himself for life, and after his death for his two nieces, with benefit of survivorship in the event of either dying without issue (d), and for their children in the event of their dying before him leaving issue. By the same indenture he assigned all lands (not specifying them) vested in him by way of mortgage, and he appointed Jos. Ward and his heirs his attorney to receive the debts, &c. and to do all acts, &c., and he covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, for further assurance (e). The deed was executed by Whitelock and by Joseph Ward, and was delivered to Jos. Ward; but Whitelock continued in possession of the property assigned, and of the deeds and policies, and received the interest due on the mortgage, and no notice was given by him or by Jos. Ward the trustee of the assignment, to the mortgagor, or to the insurance office. Mary Hervey, one of the nieces, died, leaving two children; and then William Whitelock made his will, by which he gave specifically the mortgage and policy of insurance (inter alia) to Audland and Mason, as trustees upon trusts (which were inconsistent with the indenture), for the benefit of the children of Mary Hervey. The bill was filed by Jos. Ward, and the surviving niece and her

(a) 2 Dr. & Walsh, 329, the Lord Chancellor thought that the full power of attorney contained in the assignment ought alone to govern the case, ibid. 328; there was a power of attorney in Edwards v. Jones, which, if it was meant to be revocable, was not revoked during the life of the donor. Would the gift in Edwards v. Jones have been supported if it had been by deed? v. infra.

(b) Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 202; and see C. P. Cooper's Rep. (1838), p. 147, and 8 Sim.

571 (1837); in that case all the leading authorities with the exception of Blakely v. Brady were cited.

(c) C. P. Coop. R. 147. In Mr. Beavan's report the words "policies of insurance and other," are here inserted by mistake.

(d) C. P. Coop. Rep. 148.

(e) N.B. though moneys on mortgage were mentioned, the policy was not, and of course it could not have been the subject of the first trust for his life.

husband claiming to have the trusts of the deed as regards the mortgage and policy of insurance carried into execution. By the decree a reference to the Master was directed to inquire as to the property, and he, by his report, found that the policy and mortgage were included in the indenture. The executors of Whitelock had received the money due on the policy, which the bill sought to recover from them. The plaintiffs insisted, that as regards the choses in action, this was not an agreement, but an assignment (a): they also insisted that at law the trustee might have proceeded to recover (during Whitelock's life) all the choses in action then recoverable (b); could the trustee, it was asked, by omitting to sue, or to give notice to the insurance company, alter the rights of the parties (c)?

The Master of the Rolls, Lord Langdale, in giving judgment, said the intention of Whitelock was to assign the property to the plaintiff, the trustee, absolutely upon trusts to be executed by him, not to create himself a trustee (d). If the property was legally vested in the plaintiff, the trustee (which, as to the policy, of course it could not be,) he might recover it at law. "If the property was not legally and effectually vested in the plaintiff, then, as the deed was voluntary, this court could afford no assistance to the plaintiff in recovering it, and under these circumstances the only question between the parties is, What is the legal effect of the instrument?" "The debt and policy of assurance," continued his Lordship, "are choses in action not assignable at law, and it is plain that the whole estate and interest of the assignor did not, and could not, pass to an assignee; and I apprehend, that in the case of a voluntary deed, neither the assignor nor his executor could be compelled to permit the assignee to use his name for the recovery of the debt (e). The assignment was deficient, because it did not vest in the assignee all that the assignor possessed, and intended to pass" (f). "Mr. Whitelock," said his Lordship, "intended to make a gift by assignment, and not to declare a trust to be executed by himself" (g). Lord Langdale, in noticing Fortescue v. Barnett, following Lord Cottenham (h), said, it was clear that Sir John Leach did not in that

(a) C. P. Coop. Rep. 154, 156.

(b) Citing Winch v. Keeley, 1 T. R. 619; Morley v. Freer, 6 Bing. 547; Legh v. Legh, 1 Bos. & P. 447, and other cases, 8 Beav. p. 208, note (c); C. P. Coop. 158.

(c) See Fortescue v. Barnett, supra.

(d) So it was in Fortescue v. Barnett; et v. supra, p. 899.

(e) According to the language of the judgment the court ought not to interfere where an actual transfer does not take place, sed v.

infra, 906-7.

(f) But this could not be done as regards the policy, excepting that notice might have been given to the insurance company, v. infra.

(g) 8 Beav. 211. According to this dictum it would seem that a person cannot make himself trustee by the operation of any act he may do, without intending that he should by that act become a trustee, but see Fortescue v. Barnett, supra.

(h) See Dillon v. Coppin, 4 My. & C. 670.

case intend to alter the rule of the court, which was previously established, namely, that the transaction must be complete. But whether either of those learned Judges considered that Sir John Leach was right or was wrong in treating the transaction as complete in that case, is not, at least to my apprehension, to be collected with any certainty from their printed judgments. Lord Langdale then said it appeared to him that the voluntary assignment by deed of a policy of insurance, retained in the hands of the assignor, and without notice given to the company, though accompanied by a covenant for further assurance, could not be considered as a complete and effectual assignment to be acted upon and enforced by the assignee, without any further or other act done by the assignor. This case may stand without the aid of Edwards v. Jones, for the essential requisite of delivery of the policy was wanting as well as the want of notice to the company; though both were capable of this explanation, that the donor had secured to himself the beneficial interest for his life (a).

But although, if Fortescue v. Barnett and Blakely v. Brady are to be followed, notice to the debtor is not necessary, as between the donor and donee—though until such notice be given the debt is in fact to a certain extent under the dominion of the donor (b)—delivery of the deed, or instrument of gift, and of the bond or other security, seems to be absolutely necessary to make it a complete transaction (c). The equity of the claimant under a voluntary assignment of a chose in action, said Lord Chancellor Hart, depends altogether upon the purpose for which the deed was made, and how the party executing it has dealt

(a) Meek v. Kettlewell, decided in 1842, was cited. As to the mortgage, which was a mortgage in fee (C. P. Coop. 159) of copyholds, it was admitted that no case had been made; it was a legal mortgage, the legal estate might have been transferred; as it was all had not been done that might have been done, therefore that was within the rule: in Jefferys v. Jefferys, supra, a trust created by transmutation of possession was enforced, the covenant not. It appears that Ward, the plaintiff in Ward v. Audland, subsequently applied to prove under the covenant for further assurance in a suit for the administration of Whitlock's estate, and was sent to law, where he recovered the value of the furniture and other goods and chattels assigned, but with leave for the defendant to move to enter a verdict for nominal damages, see Hervey v. Audland, 14 Sim. 531, 537.

(b) V. supra: the propriety of notice being given is apparent from Sir J. Leach's observations in Fortescue v. Barnett, that if the insurance company had had notice they would not have paid the money; in Edwards v. Jones, the obligor, for want of such notice, gave another bond to the personal representative of the obligee, on which the debt might have been recovered. The distinction may perhaps be that notice, as a species of delivery, is requisite, where the property in the debt is intended to pass; without it a trust only can be created, the property remaining as it is. It is on the ground that the debt, until notice, remains in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, that the statute is held to give the debt to the assignees.

(c) Uniacke v. Giles, 2 Molloy, 257; and see Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 44-5; Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 212: retaining possession of a deed of gift is evidence of an intent to keep the control, and therefore in some cases is treated as evidence of fraud, Hall v. Hall, 2 Vern. 277, and the cases in the note; et v. supra, p. 884.

with it : if the deed is regularly executed and delivered over to a trustee, and so put out of the control of the party, showing a design to divest the power of revocation, then no doubt the party is bound (a).

The foregoing cases, together with those which are cited in the preceding pages of this volume (b), are, I believe, all the important cases on the subject of voluntary assignments and transfers of equitable interests, and of choses in action. On a review of these authorities, as regards equitable estates and interests, all of them seem to agree in the general proposition, that if the transaction be complete, whether as an assignment or as a declaration of trust, the party is bound, and by consequence so are his representatives ; but what particular acts are necessary to make the transaction complete, cannot be extracted with precision as applicable to any particular case : it can only be said generally, that nothing must remain to be done to complete the purpose which the party has in view ; and that purpose must be the complete divesting of the interest which is intended to be transferred : if, as it has been said, what has been done is equivalent to a transfer of the legal interest (c), that will be sufficient. As regards choses in action, this much perhaps may be stated to be clear, that if a person, with a view to confer the beneficial interest in a chose in action, in which he has the legal interest, on another, makes an assignment in writing, particularly if by deed, and delivers the assignment and the security to the donee or to a trustee for him, showing an intention to put both the one and the other and consequently the debt out of his control, and also gives notice to the debtor, so as to make the debtor a quasi trustee for the donee, then the transaction is complete and binding, and the donor becomes a trustee of the legal interest, which must of course remain in him, for the donee ; a clear and explicit verbal declaration, accompanied by the delivery of the securities and notice, would, it is presumed, be equivalent to an assignment in writing : but in cases not embracing all these ingredients the authorities are not uniform, and particularly there is, as above mentioned, authority (Fortescue v. Barnett) for saying that such a transaction may be complete, if by deed, although no notice should have been given to the debtor or person from whom the money is to be recovered.

In the above-cited case of Ward v. Audland, the several authorities

(a) Uniacke v. Giles, 2 Molloy, 267. In this case, which related to a chose in action, the Lord Chancellor considered that the donor intended the assignment to be in the nature of a testamentary gift, and that the donor intended to preserve her power till her death, and that she had executed such power by destroying it.

(b) V. supra, p. 52 to p. 58, et v. p. 285.

(c) Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, p. 123 ; but see Beatson v. Beatson, 12 Sim. p. 281, supra.

before adverted to were reviewed by Lord Langdale. His Lordship endeavours to reconcile the authorities, as I understand his judgment, by holding that where a person executes any instrument, even a deed, which purports to be an assignment of property which is not assignable, for instance, the money due on a Policy of Insurance, without doing that which amounts to a quasi delivery, namely, giving notice to the debtor or person to pay, no title will pass to the donee; for no title passes which is available at law, and in equity all that the Court could do would be to declare that the donor was trustee of the money for the donee, which would be contrary to his intent, which was to pass all his interest, not to make himself a trustee.

If this is to be considered as the rule, it is at least intelligible and capable of application: in principle, however, the same doctrine might be held to apply to the case where notice has been given to the person to pay, namely, to the debtor or insurance company; for still the donor's name must be used to recover the money, and so far therefore he must be treated as a trustee.

Where the donor assigns to the donee his interest in, or the right to recover the money, as such a form of assignment involves the right to use the donor's name to recover the money, then Lord Langdale's objection will not apply; for when the beneficial interest only of the party is assigned, it is not contrary to the apparent intent that he should be a trustee; and it is possible to contend, on the authority of Blakely v. Brady, that where the assignment is of the donor's interest only, and of Fortescue v. Barnett, where the assignment embraces the security and also the donor's interest in the debt and security, the transaction is complete and binding if it be by deed: but not if it be only by writing signed but not sealed as in Edwards v. Jones, at least according to Lord Plunket's interpretation of that case. Whether this be a satisfactory state of the law or not, is of course not the question, if the authorities have so settled the law.

So where the subject of the gift is vested in a trustee, where, for instance, it is a legacy or share of a residue as in Petre v. Espinasse (a), or a reversionary interest in a sum of stock as in Sloane v. Cadogan, Lord Langdale's objection will not apply; for it is not in any way contrary to the ostensible intention to contend that such an assignment converts the trustee of the donor into a trustee for the donee, or to assimilate it to an express declaration that the trustee should be a trustee for the donee (b): to avoid the authority of those cases, it

(a) 2 My. & K. 496; supra, p. 55.

(b) "If A. is trustee for me of 1000*l.*, I may assign my interest to B., and then A. is trustee for B."; Lord Lyndhurst, Meek v.

must be contended, as I understand the Vice-Chancellor of England actually does contend, that an assignment of an equitable interest, such as was the subject of the assignment in each of those cases, can only amount to a contract (a).

From the dicta in the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Meek v. Kettlewell, after stated, it might seem that in cases of the latter description there are yet two other requisites that may be deemed necessary in order to make an assignment of such an interest effectual, namely, notice of the assignment to the trustee and his acceptance; and also, where the subject is of such a nature as to make it practicable, that some act should be done in affirmance of the donee's title, as payment of interest to him by the trustee: but to hold that these are requisites would, contrary to the ordinary principle, put it in the power of the trustee to determine whether the act should be binding or not: however, the cases put by the learned Judge (b), are only, as I conceive, intended as instances of what would probably be considered as effectual transfers.

It will be remembered that where the transaction is such that the donor, having some interest that is capable of legal transfer, clearly intends to part with the whole of his interest, so that the donee shall stand precisely in his situation, and the instrument which he signs or executes does not amount to a transfer; the transaction is not incomplete merely, it is abortive: the court cannot act upon the donor in the character of a trustee, for that would be contrary to the intention: if it be anything it is a contract; and when once the transaction is reduced to that, its completion cannot be enforced either against himself or against his representatives, unless there be a consideration (c). On the whole, it appears that the only sure way short of a legal transfer, where that is practicable, of effecting a voluntary transfer to a stranger in any of these cases, is by the party entitled signing a declaration, (a deed does not appear to be necessary,) declaring a trust in favor of the intended donee (d).

As regards Voluntary Assignments of Contingent Interests, Possi-

Kettlewell, MS.: this was said by his Lordship in answer to the argument that assignments of equitable interests in personalty must be considered as contracts. In Jones v. Croucher, 1 Sim. & St. 315, a voluntary assignment of a vested reversionary interest in stock was held to be binding as against a subsequent assignee for value.

(a) See the additional note, No. 2, p. 915; et inf. p. 912.

(b) 1 Hare, 471.

(c) V. supra, p. 57, 58, and see Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 95: there the turnpike-road securities and shares were delivered to the person to whom the abortive assignment in trust was made: Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 149, 150; all the early leading cases are cited in Meek v. Kettlewell; see also 284, 285, supra, as to Covenants.

(d) See Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 100; Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 134; Wheatley v. Purrr, 1 Keen, 558, and supra, p. 53, et seq.

bilities and Expectancies in personal chattels, such as stock in the funds and the like—

It has been noticed, in a preceding Section, that as possibilities coupled with an interest, and contingent interests in real estate, are capable of being granted at law without consideration, probably it would now be held, by analogy, if not upon the words of the act, that corresponding equitable interests are capable of being granted in the same way in equity, namely, by deed (a), or by declaration of trust. As regards corresponding interests in personal estate: a writing, signed by the party, and delivered to the donee, declaring that the trustee of the donor should stand possessed of the donor's interest in the property as trustee for the donee, would probably also be held to be sufficient to transfer such an interest: but whether such an interest is capable of assignment by any act short of such a declaration, is matter of doubt.

In the late case of Meek v. Kettlewell, the doctrine as to contingent or expectant interests in personal estate, was fully entered into by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram and by Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst. The principal defendant in this case by deed dated 10th September, 1839, assigned to the plaintiff, the husband of the defendant's daughter, for his own use, all her reversionary or expectant interest, which she would take under a settlement as next of kin of her daughter in the event of her surviving her daughter and the daughter dying without issue (b), in a sum of 7900*l.* part of 11,000*l.*; which sum had been devised to trustees in trust for the daughter and her issue, and in default of issue for her next of kin. The subject therefore was a mere possibility not coupled with an interest, for on the death of the mother, the defendant, before her daughter, of course it would not have been transmissible. There was an irrevocable power of attorney to the plaintiff to sue and give receipts, and a covenant for further assurance. The deed was delivered to the plaintiff: in December, 1839, he at the request of the mother the grantor, signed a memorandum indorsed on the deed, in which he agreed to give up to the mother 3000*l.* part of the 7900*l.*; it did not appear that any notice had been given to the trustees either of the deed or the indorsement. The daughter died without issue in 1840; and then a bill was filed by the plaintiff the grantee, against the mother and the trustees of the fund. The defendant, the mother, insisted that the deed could not operate as an assignment,

(a) V. supra, 879, 895-6.

(b) This expectancy was not of such a description as is referred to by Lord Eldon in Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Meriv. 670, v. sup. p.

614, n., for in the event of the daughter dying first without issue the mother's title could not have been intercepted; that of the heir of course may.

and that it was not a binding declaration of trust; and that was the question in the suit. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, after observing that no notice had been given to the trustees, and that the assignment had not been acted upon by the grantor (meaning, I presume, that she had not given notice of it to the trustees, for she had clearly recognised it by requiring the indorsement above referred to to be made), said, that in his opinion the facts established did not constitute the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the plaintiff and the trustees of the fund. It might perhaps have reasonably been expected, said that learned Judge, that when the beneficial owner of the fund had done that which unequivocally amounted to a declaration on his part that an interest in his property should thereby become vested in another, and the person in whom the legal interest was and also the intended cestui que trust, had notice of that declaration, the court would as against the party making the declaration have fastened upon it, and held that he had thereby actually created that trust which in the case of volunteers the rule of the court requires and acts upon; it was however impossible to say that the reported cases support that proposition: and after referring to Edwards v. Jones (a), his Honour said he considered himself bound by that case in the absence of a formal declaration of trust (whatever the effect of such a declaration might have been) (b) to hold, that whether a trust has been created or not must be determined upon principles of strict law, and not merely upon the intention, for the most distinct evidence of intention to pass an interest may not be conclusive. His Honour thought the instruments in this case being under seal made no difference, and that this case was less favourable than many where such claims had been rejected, as the intended donor had nothing but an Expectancy; and the learned Judge dismissed the bill without costs, saying however that he did not mean to express any opinion as to what the effect of a formal declaration of trust might have been, or what might have been the effect of the assignment if the donor had had more than an expectancy, and if, in addition to the facts which here took place, notice had been given to the trustees and they had accepted it; he decided only that a voluntary assignment of a mere expectancy not communicated to those in whom the legal interest is, did not create a trust in equity within the cases relied upon by the plaintiff (c). Lord Lyndhurst on appeal

(a) See, as to this case, supra, p. 56, note.

(b) V. supra, p. 909, Searle v. Law.

(c) 1 Hare, 475-6. The learned judge seems to have followed Sir E. Sugden and the Vice-Chancellor of England in their disapproval of Sloane v. Cadogan, (Append. to Sugd. V. and supported this decision, on the ground that being an expectancy only it was not assignable in equity, though if there had been a consideration a court of equity would have given effect to the attempted assignment as a contract: as it purported to be an assignment, added his Lordship, it could not be treated as a declaration of trust, relying on Antrobus v. Smith and Edwards v. Jones, which have been stated in a preceding page. This decision would perhaps have been more satisfactory had his Lordship rested it on the first ground, without referring to Antrobus v. Smith, which related to property capable of legal transfer, which that in the case before him was not (a). Lord Lyndhurst's judgment, as will be seen, equally as that of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, leaves open the question whether such an interest can be transferred by way of declaration of trust.

A claim to property on the ground of its having been a donatio mortis causâ must fail if it appear to be a transaction of present gift (b). A party making a donatio mortis causâ does not part with the whole interest, save only in a certain event, and it is of the essence of such a gift that it shall not otherwise take effect (c); but words of absolute gift, if accompanied by expressions showing that the intention was that the property should be enjoyed only in the event of the death of the donor, will be sufficient to constitute a donatio mortis causâ (d).

It may here be observed that Acts and Declarations may amount to what, in the Court of Chancery, will be considered as equivalent to a release of a debt; but a mere acquittance, not amounting to a release at law, unaccompanied by any act, is not sufficient to induce the Court of Chancery to deprive the creditor or his representatives of the right of enforcing their legal remedies against the debtor (e).

P.); v. supra, p. 900. The case of Hinde v. Blake, 3 Beavan, 237, (1840.)—which arose upon an assignment of a mere possibility, (anticipated share as next of kin of a lunatic,) for the benefit of creditors, which had come into possession—decided nothing, as the assignor submitted to be bound by the deed, and Lord Langdale's observation, that he was inclined to think there was a sufficient consideration, the trustees having paid moneys on the faith of it, does not necessarily imply that the creditors could have enforced it, of themselves, or through the trustees.

(a) 1 Phillips, 347; the counsel in support of the appeal (pp. 345-6), admitted, seeming to assume that the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's judgment had thrown some doubt upon the subject, that an equitable estate, which, if clothed with the legal estate would be assignable at law, was assignable—not merely capable of being the subject of contract—in equity; which admission would now include equitable estates in contingencies and possibilities in real estate coupled with an interest; v. sup. p. 909.

(b) Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. J. 111.

(c) Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & Cr. 235.

(d) Gardner v. Parker, 3 Mad. 184; Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. W. p. 441 (1 My. & Cr. 234).

(e) In the case of Tuffnell v. Constable, 8 Sim. 69, the testator had signed a memorandum acquitting the plaintiff of 700*l.* out of 1700*l.* due to him on bond, verbally stating that in consideration of such release he had revoked a legacy of 700*l.* given by him to the plaintiff by his will; but the connection between this revocation and the release was not proved. The plaintiff was sued upon the bond, he filed a bill to be relieved offering to pay the difference. The Vice-Chancellor of England refused to interfere, saying the plaintiff gave no consideration for the alleged release, and that as he was a volunteer, he had no right to come into equity (p. 70); which was equivalent to refusing him the benefit of the alleged release. The claim was endeavoured to be supported as cognizable in equity on the authority of Eden v. Smyth, (Lord Rosslyn) 5 Ves. 341; but there the Court had jurisdiction in respect of the legacy, and the evidence, by accounts, letters, and the memorandums in the testator's handwriting, proved that the testator did not consider the debt as part of his estate. But in Flower v. Marten, 2 My. & Cr. 474, where the bill was filed solely to obtain the delivery up of a bond, it was decreed on the authority of that case (which was a bond from a son-in-law,) and Wekett v. Raby, 2 Bro. P. C. 386, that the bond should be delivered up, as it was clear on the evidence, not of declarations merely, but of conduct, that the testator did not intend that it should be enforced. In Gilbert v. Wetherell, 2 Sim. & Stu. 258, the testator had directed the promissory note to be burned, and made verbal declarations, p. 256. The case of Wekett v. Raby was as follows: Mr. Piggot a short time before his death, said to his wife, who was his executrix and residuary legatee, he had Raby's bond which he did not deliver up, as he might live to want it, but added "when I die he shall have it, he shall not be troubled or asked about it." On the death of Mr. Piggot, Raby asked the widow to give up the bond, on which she did not deny that the directions had been given to her, and told Raby he might be easy, for it was safe in her hands, and that if she married she would give it up to him. Lord Macclesfield, and afterwards the House of Lords held that the executrix, who had married and sought to put the bond in suit, was trustee of the bond for Raby, p. 488, and she was ordered to deliver it up; this may be considered in the nature of a locus pœnitentiæ reserved to be exercised only during life. In Richard v. Syms, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 617; S. C. Barnard. p. 90, the facts appear to have been that the mortgagee said to the mortgagor, "Take back your writings," namely, a mortgage and bond; "I freely forgive you the debt;" the mortgagor accordingly took them, and it was alleged the mortgagee at the same time made a verbal statement to the mother of the mortgagor, to the effect that he had intended to forgive the debt. Lord Hardwicke considered that by the parol declaration, if proved, the debt would be extinguished, and that the heir of the mortgagee would become by construction of law trustee for the mortgagor.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

Difference between the Effect of a Declaration of Trust, and Attempt to assign—Vice-Chancellor Wigram's Judgment in M'Fadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Hare, 462.—Supra, p. 987, 988.

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram endeavours to explain the different view which is taken of a declaration of trust and an attempt to assign thus:—"There may be difficulty," said his Honour, "in reconciling with each other all the cases which have been cited. Perhaps they are to be explained on the principle that a declaration of trust purports to be, and is in form and substance, a complete transaction; and the court need not look beyond the transaction itself or inquire into its origin, in order that it may be in a position to uphold and enforce it (1): whereas, an agreement, or an attempt to assign, is in form and nature incomplete, and the origin of the transaction must be inquired into by the court; and where there is no consideration, the court, upon its general principles, cannot complete what it finds imperfect." "There is a close analogy for this reasoning," continued his Honour, "in the case of suits to enforce demands arising out of illicit dealings between parties. If, in such cases, the court finds an account rendered or other act done by one of the parties, upon which account or act the court can proceed without investigating the origin of

(1) So where a gift by way of transfer is complete—requires nothing more for the donor to do, as in Fortescue v. Barnett, the same doctrine seems to apply.

the demand, it will do so (1): but it will not so proceed when the form of the transaction is such as to oblige the court to go into the original transaction out of which the demand arises."

The facts were these:—Thomas Warry lent 500*l.* to the defendant Jenkyns; Thomas Warry then died: the defendant, George Warry, who was his personal representative, brought an action against Jenkyns to recover the 500*l.*; the plaintiff filed the bill, alleging and showing (for the purposes of the motion then before the court) that Thomas Warry, shortly after the loan, sent a verbal message to Jenkyns, desiring him no longer to consider the money as due to him, Warry, but to hold it upon trust for the plaintiff. Jenkyns acquiesced in this direction; the transaction was communicated to the plaintiff [N. B. it was to take effect immediately]; and Jenkyns, during Warry's life, paid 10*l.*, part of the debt, to the plaintiff, in part execution of the trust; the trust was considered as complete. This decision was affirmed, Nov. 4, 1842. On the hearing before Lord Lyndhurst, 1 Phill. 153, though it was not denied that the person having the legal estate may declare himself to be trustee for another, it was insisted that the rule did not apply [where the legal title to the fund was not in the trustee, but in a third person, as it is stated in the report, p. 156, but it must mean,] where the person, having the legal interest, declares that the debtor shall hold the debt in trust for another, not that he will himself be a trustee. "The distinctions on this subject," said the Lord Chancellor, "are undoubtedly refined, but it does not appear to me that there is any substantial difference between such a case and the present. The testator (who had the legal interest), in directing Jenkyns to hold the money in trust for the plaintiff, which was assented to and acted upon by Jenkyns, impressed, I think, a trust upon the money which was complete and irrevocable. It was equivalent to a declaration by the testator that the debt was a trust for the plaintiff," p. 157-8. The assent was so far material, that Jenkyns, till such assent, was a debtor only, not a trustee: from the language of the judgment, I presume that, but for this assent and the subsequent act, the direction might have been revoked by Warry; would it, if unrevoked, have been binding on his executors? V. supra, p. 897.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Voluntary Assignment—Holloway v. Headington.—V. supra, p. 900.

In Holloway v. Headington, 8 Sim. 324 (1837), the husband and the wife had assigned to trustees certain property, but of what it consisted is not stated, to which the wife was entitled, and contracted to assign all other property, to which the husband might become entitled in right of the wife, to trustees in trust for the wife, for her separate use for life, after her death for her husband for life, and after the deaths of the survivor, for the children of the marriage as the wife should appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for all the children of the wife living at her death by her then present or any future husband. The husband and wife afterwards parted, and the wife, living separate, filed a bill against her husband and the trustees, to have the trusts of the settlement carried into execution. The Vice-Chancellor of England refused to interfere, and dismissed the bill on the original hearing, and again on a re-hearing, observing

(1) Davenport v. Whitmore, 2 My. & Cr. 177; see p. 189, and the cases there cited. But does not that case proceed on the contract being good as to the freight and bad as to the ship? p. 190; Prouting v. Hammond, 8 Taunt. cited p. 191, seems directly to support Sir J. Wigram's conclusion.

that no reason was given why the agreement should have been entered into at all; that the parties appeared to have been dealing "quite at random;" it was not clear what the parties meant, "whether the wife or the husband, or both of them, should be bound;" that children by a future husband were preferred to grandchildren by her present husband: the whole transaction was vague and unreasonable. Whatever legal rights the trustees had acquired, were of course untouched by that decree. It was in this case that the Vice-Chancellor expressed his doubts as to the authority of Ellis v. Nimmo, on which the plaintiff relied, as establishing the general proposition that meritorious consideration was sufficient, saying that Lord Plunket, on rehearing, had rejected Lord C. Sugden's reasons for his judgment. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in noticing this case, 1 Hare, 474, said he understood the Vice-Chancellor of England, whose great experience as a conveyancer gave peculiar value to his opinion on such a subject, always held that a voluntary assignment in a legal form, unaccompanied by any other acts, is not to be regarded as effectual to pass an equitable interest: that it is a mere agreement; see 1 Hare, 474, 475; v. supra, p. 909. This view of the Vice-Chancellor of England's opinion is confirmed by the case of Beatson v. Beatson, stated supra, p. 56, of this volume.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.

Assignments of Policies of Insurance—Voluntary Covenant for further Assurance.

Since the text was printed off I have been made acquainted, through the kindness of Mr. Jackson, of St. Helen's Place, that a Bill for making life policies of assurance assignable at law now waits for the third reading in the House of Commons. The Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, was printed the 8th of June instant.

The same gentleman has referred me to the ultimate decision of the case of Ward v. Audland, in the Court of Exchequer, referred to supra, p. 906, n. (a): the plaintiff had judgment for the value of the furniture; see 16 Mees. & W. 862: and this decision was considered by the parties as also concluding the question as to the covenant for further assurance of the choses in action assigned: it is therefore a very important decision. In the argument of this case Mr. Baron Parke took occasion to say, "No doubt the plaintiff might have recovered in trover. In Irons v. Smallpiece (2 Barn. & Ald. p. 557), it was held that the verbal gift of a chattel without actual delivery does not pass the property to the donee, Abbott, C. J., saying, 'By the law of England, in order to transfer property by gift, there must either be a deed or instrument of gift, or there must be an actual delivery of the thing to the donee;' that is not correct;" 16 Mees. & W. p. 670: the passages supra, Vol. i. p. 184, and Vol. ii. p. 896, therefore require correction in reference to this statement of the law.

I also learn, from the same gentleman, that, by the constitution of some of the insurance offices, ("The Amicable" is one; Bye Laws, § xxv. § 1.) assignments of policies are recognised and registered. Lord Cottenham probably referred to this practice in his observations on Fortescue v. Barnett, noticed in note (a), p. 900, supra. I presume that a voluntary assignment of a policy in "The Amicable" would clearly not be effectual without its being registered; for it would come within the principle of Antrobus v. Smith; v. supra, p. 891. But most of these questions are likely to be put an end to by the Bill to which I have above referred.

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES, AND SOME OTHER MATTERS CONNECTED WITH THEIR OFFICE.

*Ostensible Principle that Trustees and Executors not to be discouraged from acting.
General Rules to which they must conform.*

*Person who has accepted a Trust can only be discharged by administering it.
He must execute it with Fidelity and reasonable Diligence.*

Executor who has proved, liable for Breaches of Trust by his Co-executor, in which he has acquiesced.

Trustee cannot of himself denude himself of the Trust.

Trustee must be always ready with his Accounts.

Interest on Balances in the hands of a Trustee.

Trustees and Executors liable for Omissions as well as Acts.

Investment of Trust Moneys.

Liability of Trustees who have power to invest in Real or Government Security, and they do neither.

What is a proper Investment on Mortgage.

General Rule that Trustees and Executors are only liable for their own Acts and Receipts.

Summary as to Liability of Trustees and Executors in regard to Joint Receipts.

When Executors and Trustees have merely committed an Error in Judgment, they will not be liable.

So where they have acted from Moral Necessity.

Money placed with Banker.

Handed to Co-executor for Express Purpose.

Money remitted for Purposes of Convenience.

Result of the Authorities stated by Lord Cottenham.

Clough v. Bond.

Trustees doing Acts under a Void Trust.

Relief to Trustee who acts under the Sanction of adult Cestui que Trust.

Concurrence.

Acquiescence.

Trustee robbed of Trust Property.

Distinction between Character of Trustee and Executor as regards the Statute of Limitations.

Condition imposed not to insist on Breach of Trust.

Allowance to Trustees for Expences.

Costs of Trustees and Executors.

Costs of Trustees appearing separately.

Where several Trustees have been jointly guilty of Breach of Trust—Parties.

Of opening Accounts as between Trustee and Cestui que Trust.

Appointment of New Trustees, under the Stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60, § 22.

Disability of Trustee to purchase the Trust Property.

Any Profit made by the Trustee accrues for the Benefit of the Cestui que Trust.

Not allowed to make a Profit of which he alone could take the Benefit.

Solicitor appointed Trustee.

Powers annexed to the Office of Trustee.

Disclaimer.

Trustees for Preserving Contingent Remainders.

Additional Notes :

No. I. Sir A. Hart's Exposition of the Rule as to Interest on Balances.

No. II. The Rule as to Executors and Trustees joining in Receipts, as laid down by Mr. Justice Story.

No. III. Practical Points—Admission of Assets—Charge and Discharge.

I PROPOSE to close this division of the Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery by taking a general view of the duties and liabilities of trustees, noticing also the general liabilities of executors (a).

It is continually repeated by every judge, that it is never the inclination of the Court of Chancery to discourage persons from acting as executors and trustees (b), or to throw difficulties in their way (c): however, the court has established certain rules, chiefly founded on public policy, for the guidance of trustees, in conformity to which they are bound to act; and, to use the language of the late Mr. Justice Story (d), the Court of Chancery requires, in most cases, that a trustee should act, particularly in the investment of the trust fund, with all the scrupulous circumspection, caution and wisdom, with which the court itself, from its long experience and superior means of information, is accustomed to act;—a doctrine certainly somewhat perilous to trustees, and startling to uninstructed minds: it is, to adopt the language of Lord Bacon, substituting for the private conscience of the trustee the general conscience of the realm, which is Chancery (e).

(a) The general doctrines only can be here noticed; the particulars are amply detailed by Mr. Lewin and more recently by Mr. Hill, in their respective works, to which I would refer the practitioner; et v. Vol. i. p. 458; and sup. 46-7.

(b) V. supra, p. 48; Lord Eldon, in Massey v. Banner, 1 Jac. & W. p. 247, says, "The principle applying to all these cases of trustees, executors, receivers, and assignees, is properly expressed in these terms, 'that the court does not expect them to take more care of the property entrusted to them than they would do of their own;' but it is material," he adds, "to ascertain the meaning of this:" and his Lordship proceeds to examine Wren v. Kirton, 11 Ves. p. 377, and other cases; see Mr. Vesey's note, 2 Ves. p. 679; and see int. al. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 64. However, the decrees, which the court, in pursuance of its fixed and paramount rules, felt bound to pronounce in the cases of Knatchbull v. Fearnhead, 3 My. & Cr. 122, and Urch v. Walker, 3 My. & Cr. 708, v. infra, might deter any one from acting in any way as executor or trustee.

(c) Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Meriv. 42; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 298.

(d) § 1273.

(e) Referring to Bacon on Uses, by Rowe, p. 10. Lord Harcourt made a difference be-

Where a person has expressly accepted the trust, or done such acts as are only referable to his character of trustee or executor, which is constructively an acceptance of the trust, as a general rule he can only be discharged by administering the trust himself, or putting the administration in the hands of the Court of Chancery (a).

Every person who accepts a trust is bound to execute it (b) with fidelity, and with reasonable diligence; it is no excuse to say that he had no benefit from it, but that it was merely honorary: the Court of Chancery looks upon all trusts as honorary, and as a burthen upon the honour and conscience of the party intrusted; and for the execution of which he is even precluded, as is more particularly noticed hereafter, from receiving or making any benefit or advantage whatsoever (c).

If a person who is appointed Executor prove the will (d) he becomes liable for the performance of the duties of the office, and for any consequences arising from a breach, to which he may be considered as a party or privy: if he is also appointed trustee, the taking probate is an acceptance of the entire trust (e). If he sanction or acquiesce in a breach of trust committed by his co-executor, more especially where it is contrary to the duties expressly imposed on the executors by the will, he is answerable: there may be no corrupt motive, no receipt of money which has been misapplied may be attributable to him; by proving the will he has undertaken the duty of seeing that the trusts imposed upon the executors are performed, which, by standing by without interference whilst the co-executor is dealing with the property in contravention of those directions, he has not fulfilled: and this tween the case where the claim was by a creditor, who has a legal claim, and a legatee who only has a right in equity; Churchill v. Lady Hobson, 1 P.W. p. 243; but that distinction is not now regarded, at least as a ground of decision.

(a) Doyle v. Blake, 2 Scho. & Lef. 245; a case of executors. Where a person appointed as executor merely receives a bill of exchange, and transmits it to his co-executor, and does not otherwise intermeddle, that is not such an acting as will charge him; Balchen v. Scott, 2 Ves. J. 678 (though the executor, in that case, had proved), et sic de similibus; and as to what will be an acceptance of the trust or not, see Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596; Stacey v. Elph, 1 My. & K. p. 195; Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 115, 123, et seq.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 406. As to what is a devastavit by an executor, v. supra, Vol. i. p. 192.

(c) 2 Fonbl. 176; Lord Hardwicke, Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 60; Fyler v. Fyler, 3 Beav. 550; Lord Cottenham, Home v. Pringle, 8 Cl. & Fin. 287; et v. infra in this Section. Mr. Justice Story, § 1268, note, has entered into a discussion of the propriety of the rule, that the trustee shall not be remunerated for the exercise of his duties. The rule appears to have been adopted from the Roman law by every other state in Europe; and by the common law of England as regards guardians in socage; Litt. § 123.

(d) And see James v. Frearson, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 376-7; there the co-executor had not proved till after the death of his co-executor, though he had acted.

(e) Ward v. Butler, 2 Moll. 533.

responsibility will attach, even though he may have been induced to become an executor at the instance of some of the parties interested; and had been informed that he would not thereby undertake any duty, or be responsible for anything (a).

Probate obtained by one of more executors enures for the benefit of all: on the death of the executor who proved, the survivor may renounce; but if he do any act in the character of executor, though it may have been but a slight one, he is liable to all the consequences which attach on the character of executor, and cannot renounce (b): but generally where an executor does not prove, but only acts, he is merely liable for what he himself receives, not for the defaults of a co-executor who has proved (c).

A trustee who commits a plain breach of trust is not protected from its consequences by the circumstance that he honestly took and followed the advice and opinion of his solicitor, whatever remedy he may have against his solicitor; nor can it make any difference that the solicitor was also the solicitor and adviser of the author of the trust (d). In a case where a person had been advised by counsel that the act which he had done—namely, the execution of a deed for a particular purpose and which his cestui que trust had required him to do—would not be an acceptance of the trust, and he had accordingly executed the deed under that impression; he was held to have accepted the trust, and an inquiry was directed, having for its object to make him liable constructively for a breach of trust by his co-trustee, in regard to a portion of the property as to which he had never in any manner interfered, or intended to interfere (e). Where a person is appointed prospectively a trustee, and is aware of that fact, if he omit to make inquiry, and having the trust fund in his possession pays it away, or applies it in violation of the trust, particularly if he has derived an advantage from such application, he is answerable for it (f).

(a) Mucklow v Fuller, Jac. R. pp. 198, 201; Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 129-30; and see Williams v. Nixon, 2 Beav. 475. In the case of an executor, where he is not actually aware that his co-executor is misapplying the money, he is not liable, as each executor has full power to deal with the personal estate; ibid.: Oliver v. Court, 8 Price, 127; Williams v. Nixon is stated infra, p. 928.

(b) See Cummins v. Cummins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 91-6.

(c) Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. p. 123; as to liability for the acts of a co-executor, v. infra.

(d) Doyle v. Blake, 2 Scho. & Lef. 243:

Bullock v. Wheatley, 1 Coll. 135; and see Urch v. Walker, infra.

(e) Bullock v. Wheatley, 1 Coll. 135; Urch v. Walker, 3 My. & Cr. 706, 708-10; this is perhaps the severest case to be found in the books. See, on this subject, Lewin, 294; Hill, 576-585. Urch v. Walker is a very material case as to the distinction between what seeming repudiation will amount to an acceptance and what to a disclaimer: see pp. 708-9; and Nicholson v. Wordsworth, 2 Swanst. p. 365, there cited.

(f) Cummins v. Cummins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 86, 87.

A trustee cannot by any act of his own, without communication with his cestui que trust, unless expressly authorized so to do by the instrument by which he is appointed, denude himself of the character of trustee till he has performed the trust (a). If the trustee assign the trust estate to another as trustee, without the consent of the cestuis que trust, or of the court, it is at his peril, and he will be answerable for the breaches of trust of the assignee whom he has so entrusted (b); and he will incur the same liability if he delegate the performance of the duties of the trust to a stranger, or even to his co-trustee (c). But trustees are not chargeable as having committed a breach of trust, merely by reason of their having appointed one of their number to be factor; they are however liable for his defaults as agent equally as they would for those of any other agent: the trustee who becomes factor or agent, does not become any further liable in respect of the management of the trust property than he is as trustee (d).

No allowance is made for human sympathies. We find a married woman, said Lord Langdale, in a late case, throwing herself at the feet of the trustee, begging and entreating the trustee to advance a sum of money out of the trust fund to save her husband and her family from utter and entire ruin, and making out a most plausible case for that purpose; his compassionate feelings are worked upon; he raises and advances the money; the object for which it was given entirely fails; the husband becomes bankrupt; and in a few months afterwards the very same woman who induced the trustee to do this, files a bill in the Court of Chancery to compel him to make good that loss to the trust. These are cases, added his Lordship, which, when they happen, shock everybody's feelings at the time; but it is necessary that relief should be given in such cases; for if relief were not given, and if such rights were not strictly maintained, no such thing as a trust would ever be preserved (e). Forgetfulness, (a) Sir Thos. Plumer, Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 Jac. & W. p. 68; Hamilton v. Fry, 2 Moll. p. 458; see Lewin, 227-8. As to how a trustee may obtain his discharge, see Lewin, 457, et seq. As to the office of executor I need only refer to Williams on Executors.

(b) Com. Dig. Chanc. 4 W. p. 6; and see Salway v. Salway, on appeal, 2 R. & M. pp. 219-20.

(c) Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, 16 Ves. 477; Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 212-13; Davis v. Spurling, 1 R. & M. 66: and see the other cases, Lewin on Trusts, 227-9.

(d) Home v. Pringle, 8 Cl. & Fin. 286-9.

(e) Lord Langdale, Fyler v. Fyler, 3 Beav. 563. In Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 562, a husband who had received all the money under the breach of trust, sought on his wife's death as her appointee, to have a portion of it paid to him over again; it is hardly necessary to add that he failed. There is one instance, before Sir Wm. Grant, (Mosley v. Lord Hawke, cited 2 Yo. & J. 520, see 1 Keen, 619,) where a tenant for life sui juris, who was a party to the breach of trust, being a co-plaintiff, a decree was made against the defendant and the offending tenant for life who was one of the plaintiffs.

we may remember, is no excuse for a trustee not having done what it was his duty to have done (a). If an executor has paid away the residue in ignorance of the existence of any debt, he is still liable (b).

It may be observed that, generally speaking, a trustee for a Charity is no otherwise or further chargeable as regards his receipts than is another trustee (c).

It is an imperative duty of an accounting party, whether an Agent, a Trustee, a Receiver, or an Executor—for in this respect, as was remarked by the Lord Chancellor in Lord Hardwicke v. Vernon, they all stand in the same situation—to keep his Accounts in a regular manner, and to be always ready with his Accounts (d): neglect of this duty is a ground for charging him with interest on the balances in his hands and with costs (e). So a trustee and executor is bound to render every necessary information that is required of him; and he who, undertaking to give information, gives but half information, in the view of the Court of Chancery conceals: if he have not all the information necessary, he is bound to seek for it, and, if practicable, to obtain it (f). “The court does not visit the improper holding of money, if there is nothing more, further than by charging the executor with interest; but if his account is falsified—if anything like fraud appears, then the court gives costs against him” (g).

Where it appears that the trustee or executor has improperly or unnecessarily kept Balances, or any considerable portion of the trust moneys, in his hands, he will be charged with interest on what he has so retained, generally at four per cent., but under special circumstances, at five per cent., and although it be not prayed by the bill (h). Where, by the terms of the instrument under which the trustee is appointed, he is under an obligation to accumulate, and he has omitted to do so (i); and where he has been guilty of fraud, or has sold out stock and made use of the funds in his own trade or otherwise for his own benefit; annual, and under particular circumstances half-yearly, rests have been directed against him:

(a) Supra, p. 762.

(b) Knatchbull v. Fearnhead, 3 My. & Cr. p. 122.

(c) Mann v. Ballet, 1 Vern. 44.

(d) Morony v. Vincent, 2 Moll. p. 461; Hardwicke v. Vernon, 14 Ves. 510-11, and see White v. Lincoln, 8 Ves. 363.

(e) Sir J. Plumer, Pearse v. Green, 1 Jac. & W. 140, 141 (14 Ves. 510); Lord Eldon, Freeman v. Fairlee, 3 Meriv. 43.

(f) Lord Eldon, Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 73.

(g) Sir A. Hart, Lord Chancellor, Flanagan v. Nolan, 1 Moll. 85, where his Lordship said, that in Raphael v. Boehm, the court did not give costs against the executor. See the remainder of the judgment, add. note, No. 1.

(h) Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. Cooper, R. p. 62; though the contrary has been held, see Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. J. p. 426; and Hooper v. Goodwin, 1 Swanst. 493.

(i) Of the duties of trustees under a trust to Accumulate, v. supra, pp. 190, 191; and infra, p. 926-7.

but a direction for charging a trustee to this extent will not be given unless a special case be made out: where trust money has been employed by a trustee for his own purposes, the court has sometimes declared him liable for interest at five per cent., or the amount of the profit made, at the option of the cestui que trust (a). The payment of interest on balances improperly retained by an executor or trustee will be enforced against his personal representatives and his assignees under his bankruptcy or insolvency (b). An indication of intention on the part of a trustee to satisfy a breach of trust by means of funds in his hands at his death may affect that property with a trust (c).

A trustee and an executor is not only liable for his acts, but for his Omissions, if such omissions amount to a neglect of duty, and if by reason thereof any loss shall happen to the trust estate (d); and

(a) See Heighington v. Grant, 5 My. & Cr. 258; Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. 92. Lord Cottenham in the first-mentioned case, after referring to Binnington v. Harwood, and the other cases where annual rests have been directed, explains how it is to be worked out. As to interest on balances see Ex parte Hilliard, 1 Ves. J. p. 89; Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 61 (Hill, 371). Interest at 5 per cent. Hall v. Hallett, 1 Cox, 134; Ex parte Hilliard, ubi supra; Forbes v. Ross, 2 Bro. 431; Mosley v. Ward, 11 Ves. 582; Piety v. Stace, 4 Ves. 620; Pearse v. Green, 1 Jac. & W. 135; Crackelt v. Bethune, 1 Jac. & W. p. 589; and see Docker v. Somes, 2 M. & K. 315, 670: on special case being made, Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. Coop. p. 63. Rests: "When the executor has unduly held the assets in his hands the court can give a direction to take the account with rests, though there be no express direction or accumulation clause in the will," Sir A. Hart, 3 Moll. p. 83, contrary to Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 290: rests were refused in Crackelt v. Bethune, ubi supra, though the executor had been guilty of great misconduct, and was charged with costs. Half-yearly rests, Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. 92; v. supra, pp. 190, 191, n., 811; and see Heighington v. Grant, 5 My. & Cr. 258; Stacpoole v. Stacpoole, 4 Dow. 209, and the other cases cited Hill on Trustees, p. 371, note (p). Profits, Brown v. Litton, 10 Mod. 21; Lonsdale v. Church, 3 Bro. 41; Massey v. Davies, 2 Ves. J. 317, case of an agent; Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 60; Docker v. Somes, 2 My. & K. 655; Palmer v. Mitchell, cited ibid. p. 672; and see Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen, p. 722; 4 My. & Cr. p. 41; and Willet v. Blanford, 1 Hare, p. 253, as to the analogous doctrine as between partners. Four per cent. is the usual rate charged on a breach of trust arising from mere negligence or mistake, v. inter alia, Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Meriv.

717; Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 61; and in some cases interest at that rate only has been given where there has been misconduct, Perkins v. Bayntun, 1 Bro. 375; Browne v. Southouse, 3 Bro. 107, cited 11 Ves. 60. The other cases on these several points are collected by Mr. Hill, p. 540, 541; and Mr. Lewin, 287-293: the cases are discussed by Mr. Lewin, Append. ix. 733; and see C. P. Coop. R. pp. 63, 64, n.; and add. note, No. 1.

(b) Seton on Decrees, p. 248.

(c) Robertson v. Morrice, ix. Jur. p. 122, Rolls.

(d) Maitland v. Bateman, viii. Jurist, 926. Admiral Maitland on his marriage with Mrs. Simpson, by marriage settlement, dated Jan. 1820, covenanted with the trustees, Patrick Maitland and C. Bateman, that he would on Martinmas-day, 1824, pay 1000*l.*, the trusts of which were to be for the husband for life, with remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage, and in default of children, for the persons therein mentioned; the trustees executed the settlement. In 1821 Patrick Maitland died; C. Bateman, the co-trustee, never took any steps to enforce the covenant. The Admiral died in 1836, without having performed the covenant; there was no issue of the marriage. After his death a suit was instituted by the widow against the trustee to make him personally liable for the non-performance of the covenant. On the hearing before Lord Cottenham, Nov. 1840, a reference was made to the Master to inquire whether the Admiral was of ability after 1824 to pay 10,000*l.* or any part of it. It appeared by the Master's report that the Admiral had for seven years after 1824, an income of 1800*l.* a-year, but that he had no other property than his income, and that he had always lived up to or exceeded his income. The Master found that the Admiral was of ability during these seven years to have although the omission be only that he, without any corrupt motive, passively looked on while his co-trustee diverted the property from its proper channel (a). If the loss is incurred by reason of a neglect of duty, whether the duty is expressly imposed, or the instrument is silent on the subject and the duty arises from the general obligation imposed by the law, the effect will be the same (b), excepting that the court may look to the circumstances as regards the costs.

As a general rule, trustees and executors are bound to press on all the remedies for the recovery of debts due to the trust estate; and if any securities shall seem proper to be continued, it seems the only safe course for trustees or executors to adopt is to submit the point to the judgment of the court, not to decide upon it themselves, unless a discretionary power to that extent be expressly, or by clear implication, given to them; else they will be answerable for any loss that may ensue in consequence of their misplaced confidence, however good may have been their intention (c). Where a chose in action forms part of a testator's estate, it is not such a description of property as that it should be competent to the executor to allow it to remain outstanding. In the exercise of a fair discretion he is not to commence proceedings unnecessarily, but he must exert himself to get in the debts, and if necessary must commence proceedings at law or in equity, as the case may require, to recover them; if he fails to do so, he becomes personally answerable if the debt be lost (d): a trustee to whom the personal estate of a testator may be bequeathed, in the absence of any special directions, will incur the same liability if he do not see that the whole, including the choses in action of which it may be in part composed, is realized.

It was laid down by Lord Keeper North, that the court will never paid 4200*l.* in part performance of the covenant: no exceptions were taken to the report. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce on further directions held that the trustee was liable to pay 4200*l.*, and that had the report been excepted to, it would have been confirmed, Maitland v. Bateman, xiii. Law J., N. S. 275; viii. Jur. 926; and see Fenwick v. Greenwell, Rolls, xi. Jurist, 622; in this case the trustees had merely executed the deed and thought no more of the matter, in the mean time the wife, one of the cestuis que trust, in whose name the fund, about 5000*l.* was originally standing, with her husband, sold it out and disposed of it to their own use.

(a) Mucklow v. Fuller, Jac. 198; Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 129; Winch v. Walker, infra.

(b) See Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 307, and the cases in the preceding note. As to the liability of a trustee on a Trust to Renew, v. sup. p. 544, et seq.; and Lewin, p. 300.

(c) Lord Eldon, Gaskell v. Harman, 11 Ves. 498; Lowson v. Copeland, 2 Bro. 157. There it did not appear whether or not the debt omitted to be got in was or not recoverable, the inquiry had not extended to that fact; and so far the decree was open to Lord Camden's objections, see Orr v. Newton, 2 Cox, 274; and see Powell v. Evans, 5 Ves. 839; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 298.

(d) Caney v. Bond, 6 Beav. 487. Trustees are not justified in giving any great indulgence where the debt is payable by instalments; Caffrey v. Darby, 6 Ves. p. 495. As to the discretion to be exercised by executors in selling Mexican bonds and the like, see Buxton v. Buxton, 1 My. & Cr. pp. 94-96; and Prendergast v. Lushington, 5 Hare, p. 176.

charge a trustee with imaginary values, but he shall be charged as a bailiff only; and although very supine negligence might indeed charge a trustee with more than he had received, yet the proof must then be very strong (a); or, as Lord Thurlow states the rule, you cannot affect trustees who are in the nature of mere stakeholders with more than they have actually received or might have received without wilful default (b): what is wilful default cannot be precisely defined; however, some general rules have been established by decision, which will be adverted to in the following pages, but the circumstances of each case must have a material influence. In order to charge trustees with wilful default, a special case must be made by the bill, and supported by admission or evidence (c).

A trustee, who originally let a farm at a proper rent, will not be held liable for the difference between that rent and the rent which, at a subsequent period of the tenancy, might have been obtained, merely because he neglected to give notice to quit a few months after there appeared to be a probability that the price of agricultural produce would enable him with propriety, as between landlord and tenant, to obtain a higher rent; and the fact of the tenant being a near relation of the trustee will not, in the absence of any circumstance to show personal favour on the part of the trustee, be sufficient to alter the decision to be made in such a case (d).

It has been held by Lord Langdale, following, it would seem, Hockley v. Bantock, before Lord Gifford (e), that where trustees are directed to invest trust money in government or real securities, and they do neither, they are answerable, at the option of the cestuis que trust, either for the money and interest at four per cent., or the stock which might have been purchased therewith, and the dividends (f). In the case referred to, the husband and wife had power to sell real estates, with the consent of the trustees; the moneys were, with all convenient speed, to be laid out in the purchase of other lands; and, until a convenient purchase could be effected, it was made lawful for the trustees, with the assent of the husband and wife, to invest the

(a) Treat. of Eq. ii. 178; Palmer v. Jones, 1 Vern. 144; Harnawl v. Webster.

(b) Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. J. 193; Sel. Ca. in Ch. 53. Connected with this subject is the common-law liability of a bailee, to which Mr. Fonblanque, ii. p. 180, and Mr. Justice Story, § 1268, have referred, citing the authorities from the Roman law.

(c) See additional note No. 3.

(d) Ferraby v. Hobson, 2 Phill. 255.

(e) 1 Russ. 141, but Marsh v. Hunter, 6 Mad. 295, where Sir J. Leach held that the omitting to do either was a breach of trust simply, was not cited in that case: see Shepherd v. Moulds, 4 Hare, 505.

(f) Watts v. Girdlestone, 6 Beav. 190; it is to be observed that the estate had been sold without necessity; ibid. 191.

money on government or real securities. A sale took place in 1811, and in 1816 the produce was lent by the trustees on personal security. It was held that the trustees were liable for so much stock as the money would have produced in 1816: Lord Langdale was of opinion that the trustees ought not to have consented to a sale without first providing the means of investing the purchase-money (a). But in a late case (Shepherd v. Mouls, 1845) Sir J. Wigram followed Sir J. Leach's decision in Marsh v. Hunter, and charged the trustees with the principal money and interest only; thinking that where, by the terms of the trust, the trustees have a discretion to invest the trust money in various ways, and instead of doing so they retain it in their hands, the trustees cannot properly be charged with the specific loss resulting from an act not having been done, which particular act the trustees were not, in the execution of their trust, imperatively bound to do (b). However, it is now the settled course at the Rolls, to act upon Watts v. Girdlestone, and, as I understand, not only in cases where the fund was originally invested, but also where it is a money fund, and the question arises on a simple omission to invest (c).

Where trustees are authorized to invest on mortgage of real estate, they ought to take security on land of the value of one-third more than the money advanced, such being the usual practice: if the security consist of houses, the value being fluctuating, they should see that they can, under no circumstances, be reduced below the value of the money advanced; and if the value depend upon fortuitous circumstances—for instance, if the property consist of a mill or factory, or houses situate in a watering-place or the like—the trustees run the risk of having the mortgage thrown upon themselves, and of being made answerable for the money advanced, in the event of the estate being administered in the Court of Chancery: and, if they should have sold out trust stock to raise the money advanced on such insufficient security, they will be in hazard of having to replace the stock as from the time of the sale (d). If an executor, without an express autho-

(a) 6 Beav. 191; see also Robinson v. Robinson, supra.

(b) 4 Hare, 504; the subject is discussed in a treatise in the Jurist, No. 443, vol. xi.

(c) See Ouseley v. Anstruther, 1 De G. & Sm.; 10 Beav. 459; and Robinson v. Robinson, xii. Jur. 972; supra, 581, add. note. In Rees v. Williams, 1 De G. & Sm. 314, where a real estate was sold under a power to sell and invest the proceeds on real or personal security, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce decided in conformity with Shepherd v. Mouls, as he had in a former case. Of the general duties of Trustees as to Investment, see Lewin, p. 275, et seq.; Hill, 367, et seq.

(d) Stickney v. Sewell, 1 My. & Cr. 8; Philipson v. Gatty, xiii. Jur. 318; and see Heywood v. Grazebrook, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, 1 May, 1849; Fowler v. Reynell, ibid. 7 May, 1849 (not yet reported): but where there is a power to purchase leaseholds, their being in a town is no objection; Beauchlere v. Ashburnham, ix Jur. 146.

urity to invest on real security, invests any part of the testator's estate on a mortgage instead of the funds, he is in danger of being made answerable if the mortgage turns out to be insufficient, however eligible it may have appeared to be at the time (a).

Trustees and executors are not justified in lending any part of the trust funds on personal security unless expressly authorized so to do (b). An authority to lend on such personal security as they shall think sufficient will not justify the trustees in lending it to the husband who is in trade, or indeed to a trading concern (c). Sir William Grant made the trustees liable in a case of this description where the money was lost; saying, it was evident the trustees had, on the marriage, been induced to accommodate the husband with the money, which they had no power to do (d). Nor are trustees or executors justified, unless under a clear authority for that purpose, in leaving the trust fund out on personal security: it must be a very special authority that will justify them in so leaving the trust fund, if the security has become diminished by the death of one of the parties liable, or there be good reason to believe that the fund is in jeopardy (e). Executors have been held personally liable in respect of the loss to the testator's estate of a sum outstanding on personal security, although the security was that of a bond from the testator's solicitor, and the money had been invested on that security by the testator himself some years before, and been suffered to remain on that security down to the time of his death (f). But it is not to be understood that trustees and executors are bound immediately to call in money which they find placed out on good security, in order to invest it in government funds (g): indeed, the Court of Chancery will not permit a real security, in which persons not sui juris are interested, to be called in without an inquiry whether it would be for the benefit of the parties interested (h).

If a trustee, being directed to invest the residue in Consols and to accumulate the dividends, shall invest the residue on real security,

(a) See the cases, Lewin, p. 279.

(b) See the cases, ibid. 277-9.

(c) Cock v. Goodfellow, 10 Mod. 489.

(d) Langston v. Olivant, G. Coop. 33.

(e) See Cummins v. Cummins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 84, where trustees are "required" to lend the fund to the husband on the requisition of the wife; if the husband has become insolvent that will justify a refusal, Boss v. God-sall, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 617.

(f) Bullock v. Wheatley, 1 Coll. 130; the testator had directed that the trustees should get in his outstanding personal estate as soon as conveniently might be after his death; and see Stiles v. Guy, 4 Yo. & Coll. Append. p. 571, 575, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord C. B.; and see Powell v. Evans, 5 Ves. p. 844; Attorney-General v. Higham, 2 Yo. & Col. C. C. 634. Lord Nottingham's doctrine in Harden v. Parsons, 1 Eden, p. 148, has been exploded; see Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. p. 62; and the cases cited, Lewin on Trusts, 276, n. (c).

(g) Orr v. Newton, 2 Cox, 277; Sadler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 621; Angerstein v. Martin, Turn. & R. 232.

(h) Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 150.

thus acting in defiance of the express directions given to him, he will be bound to make good as much stock as the residue would have purchased, together with the amount of the accumulation which would have arisen from a proper investment of the dividends from time to time (a): where there is no direction for accumulation, simple interest only will be charged, and only at four per cent. (b)

If a trustee be authorized to sell or convert the stock, with the consent of some or one of the cestuis que trust, the terms under which the consent is to be given, and the mode in which it is to be given must be strictly pursued, or the trustees will be liable as for a misapplication (c); and a stranger in whose hands the trust fund may be, if he part with the fund even to the person having the legal right to receive it, having had notice of the trust, may be equally liable. Certain moneys in the hands of B., to which S. was entitled, were, on the marriage of S., assigned to trustees in trust when requested by S., by writing under her hand, to call in and invest the same in the public funds, in trust to pay the income to S. for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, remainder to the husband, remainder to the children of the marriage, with a power to advance 200*l.* to the husband on his bond: B., who had notice of the settlement, with the concurrence of the trustees paid the money to the husband; it was held that he, as well as the trustees, was liable to make good the whole of the trust fund; the life interest of the husband, after the death of the wife, being declared to be liable to make compensation pro tanto to the parties so held to be liable (d).

It was established at a very early period, that, as a general rule, trustees are liable only for their own acts and receipts, and not for the acts, defaults, or receipts of their co-trustees, unless they can be mixed up as parties to, or as having given sanction or countenance to the act of their co-trustee (e). Co-executors also, like co-trustees, are generally answerable each for their own acts only, and not for the acts of any co-executor (f); particularly where the executor was not

(a) Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; and see Browne v. Sansome, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 427, and the other cases, Hill on Trustees, p. 371, note (p).

(b) Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. p. 60; and see Lewin, 292.

(c) Cocker v. Quayle, 1 Russ. & M. 538; Hopkins v. Myall, 2 Russ. & M. 87. Subsequent affirmance is not sufficient, Bateman v. Davis, 3 Mad. 98.

(d) Andrews v. Bousfield, 9 Law T. 353, Chan.

(e) Townley v. Sherborne, before Lord K. Coventry and four Judges, Bridgeman's R. 35, fully stated, Lewin on Trusts, 241-3.

(f) Hawkins v. Day, Amb. 162; Hargthorpe v. Milforth, 1 Cro. Eliz. 318; Littlehales v. Gascoyne, 3 Bro. p. 73; see Riky v. Kemmis, 1 Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 122, and the cases collected in the note.

aware either of the receipt of the money or of its application by his co-executor.

As regards executors: it has been taken into consideration, that in cases of this kind the testator himself, having invested certain persons with the character of executors, has trusted them to the extent to which the law allows them to act as executors; and in that character each has a separate right of receiving and of giving discharges for the property of the testator (a). In one case (b), the testator, having money in the funds, and other property to a considerable amount, directed certain annuities to be paid, and bequeathed his residuary estate, to be accumulated for the benefit of his son and his children, making two persons executors. Both executors proved the will; one of them received the property—namely, the dividends upon the stocks and funds, and the other personal estate—and misapplied the money; the other (Mr. Nixon) did not actually receive anything. “If,” said Lord Langdale, “Mr. Nixon knew that his co-executor was misapplying the moneys, and acquiesced in it, he became himself liable, because he was a witness or acquiescing party to the misapplication or breach of trust; but if he was not aware of the misapplication, I know of no case,” said his Lordship, “in which the court has gone the length of saying that an executor shall be held personally answerable for standing by and permitting his co-executor to do that which, for anything he knows to the contrary, was a performance of the trusts of the will.” “In this case,” continued his Lordship, “it was clear Mr. Nixon must have known there was stock in the funds. He might have known that the dividends arising from that stock were, from time to time, received by his co-executor, Mr. Mills: knowing that, he might nevertheless have full reason to believe that they were duly applied, according to the trusts and directions of the will, in satisfaction of the annuities or of the rent of the leasehold estate possessed by the testator at his death, and which was payable out of the whole estate. It was urged that the court ought to impute to Mr. Nixon a knowledge of all that he might have known; that as he proved the will, he must therefore be taken to have known its contents, and what was to be done in pursuance of the trusts. This is a presumption,” said his Lordship, “which I think the law itself will draw, and he must therefore be taken to have known the contents of the will. Then it is argued, that on proving the will he was bound to make a statement upon oath respecting the value of the property, and therefore must have become acquainted with the particulars. He might have had some knowledge of it," said his Lordship, "to the limited extent which can be known on such occasions; but I cannot impute to him a knowledge of the exact state or amount of the property, or of the claims upon it, or the clear amount of the balance in the hands of his co-executor. I certainly do not recollect any case in which the principle has been carried to the extent to which it has been here pressed; and if in this case I were to charge Mr. Nixon generally with all the assets received by his co-executor, I must in every other case say, that an executor who does not personally act, and who, having no reason to suspect any misapplication by his co-executor, permits him to act alone, is liable for every misapplication committed by his co-executor. I do not think I can lay down any such rule" (a).

(a) Supra, Vol. i. p. 585.

(b) Williams v. Nixon, 2 Beav. 475.

As regards trustees; though money may have come into the hands of a trustee, so that his co-trustee is not liable for the receipt, he may become liable for its misapplication: no one executor can be supposed to know all the calls that may be made upon the assets in the hands of his co-executors; but a trustee knows all the purposes for which the trust fund is to be applied: a trustee therefore must not permit the money to remain in the hands of his co-trustee for a longer period than the circumstances of the case may reasonably require that it should be retained (b). If a trustee leave the trust fund in the hands of his co-trustee to do what he pleases with it, he must then stand or fall by the purpose to which it may be applied (c). A fortiori if an executor or a trustee be privy to the embezzlement or misapplication of the trust fund by his companion, he shall be charged with the amount (d). As a general rule, if a trustee join in a sale of stock, he must account for its application (e).

At law, where trustees join in a receipt, all are considered as having received the money, and are estopped from averring the contrary (f); but the Court of Chancery, said Lord Northington, rejects estoppels and pursues truth, and will decree according to the justice and verity of the fact (g): as it is necessary that all should join in the receipt,

(a) Ibid. p. 475-6.

(b) Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. 327, (there also the acquiescing co-trustee knew that the fund had been misapplied,) Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, 16 Ves. 480.

(c) Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 199, the previous authorities are cited in the cases referred to in this and the preceding note; and see Urch v. Walker, ubi supra.

(d) Boardman v. Mosman, 1 Bro. 68; Bate

v. Scales, 12 Ves. 403; Williams v. Nixon, 2 Beav. 475.

(e) Williams v. Nixon, 2 Beav. 477.

(f) Lord Northington, Harden v. Parsons, 1 Eden, 147, v. supra.

(g) Lord Northington, Harden v. Parsons, 1 Eden, 147, referring to Churchill v. Hobson, 1 P. Wms. pp. 241, 243. That was a stronger instance, for it was a case of an executor, v. infra, p. 930.

the signature of each does not necessarily imply that the money was paid to all (a); the court will therefore inquire into the fact. The onus, however, is upon the trustee who has signed: to remove the prima facie presumption against him; it is necessary for him to show that the money acknowledged to be received by all, was, in fact, received by one, and that he only joined for conformity (b): and if the receipts by each cannot be distinguished, each is answerable for the whole (c).

As regards executors, the case is different: executors have each an absolute power over the whole: there is no necessity for an executor to join; the fact of his joining in the receipt has therefore been considered as assuming a power over the fund, and making him consequently answerable for the application as far as it is connected with the particular transaction in which he joins. Formerly executors joining in a receipt were as rigidly held to be jointly responsible in equity as were trustees at law (d); but the rule was relaxed, or pared down, first by Lord Harcourt, then by Lord Northington: and now, according to Lord Redesdale (e), the true question is whether, looking to the circumstances, the money was under the control of both executors (f). According to the modern doctrine, the difference seems to be this: if the trustee prove the single fact that it was his co-trustee who received the money, he discharges himself from all liability in respect of the mere receipt; if he is to be made liable in respect of any misapplication, it must be on the ground of fraud, negligence, or misconduct (g): where an executor has joined in a receipt, the single proof of the fact of the co-executor having received the money of itself amounts to nothing; it is of no avail if the executor prove simply that he joined for conformity only; in such case the old rule will prevail (h): in order to discharge himself—and whether this will

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Leigh v. Barry, 3 Atk. 584.

(b) Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. p. 324-5, Lord Eldon. The report of this case, corrected from the Registrar's books, was produced in Terrell v. Matthews, (v. infra), before Lord Cottenham, 13th Dec. 1840; Gregory v. Gregory, 2 Yo. & Coll. 316; Lewin, p. 250, n. (a). Assignees are trustees within the rule; see the cases in Mr. Blunt's note, Ambl. 219.

(c) Lord C. Somers, Fellows v. Mitchell, 1 P. W. 83; and see the other cases cited, 2 Fonbl. 183, note (i).

(d) See Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 199, Lord Eldon; Belchier v. Parsons, Ambl. 219.

(e) Lord Redesdale in Joy v. Campbell, 1 Scho. & Lef. 341; Doyle v. Blake, 2 Scho. &

Lef. 242; referring to Sadler v. Hobbs, 2 Bro. 114; and Scurfield v. Howes, 3 Bro. 91, see pp. 94-5.

(f) Lord Eldon, in Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 198, and Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. 325, notices the old rule and its relaxation, which he disapproved on solid grounds; "a plain general rule which once laid down is easily understood and may be generally known, is much more inviting to executors than a rule referring everything to particular circumstances." "The old rule is much more in favour of executors, enabling them to refuse to act because it is unnecessary," 7 Ves. 199.

(g) As to which v. infra.

(h) See the cases cited in Lord Henley's note, 1 Eden, 360-1.

be sufficient is not certain—he must prove to the satisfaction of the judge, in each particular case, that the circumstances under which he signed could neither have influenced the debtor or other person in paying, nor have given to the co-executor any sanction for his receiving the money: it may certainly be stated that without this proof he will be accountable for the whole, and if it shall have been misapplied, he will be bound to make it good, just as if he himself had been guilty of the misapplication (a). The simple fact of an executor being present when money is paid, and which is taken by his co-executor, is not sufficient to charge him (b).

The rule in all these cases appears to be, that if an executor does any act, by which money gets into the possession of another executor, the former is equally answerable with the other: not, however, where an executor is merely passive by not obstructing the other in receiving it (c).

If an executor permits his co-executor to obtain possession of money which he had at any time in his own possession, and afterwards the co-executor misapplies the money, both executors are personally responsible (d); and all who join in a sale are answerable, though one only receives the money (e). If the executor has been instrumental in any way whatever in money being placed in the hands of his co-executor, as joining in selling out stock or joining in a receipt

(a) Mr. Baron Alderson, after a review of the authorities in Gregory v. Gregory, 2 Yo. & Coll. 315 (1836), said the better opinion was that joining in the receipt (as a general proposition) makes the executor liable. Lord Alvanley stated that before the case of Westley v. Clarke, 1 Eden, p. 357, there was not one where an executor joining in a receipt was not held liable (but see Churchill v. Hobson, 1 P. W. 241). Lord Thurlow, in Sadler v. Hobbs, 2 Bro. 117, disapproved of Westley v. Clarke; Lord Alvanley approved it in Hovey v. Blake-man, 4 Ves. 608, again in Scurfield v. Howes, 3 Bro. 94. In Westley v. Clarke, one of the executors having received the money due on a mortgage, sent round the assignment to his co-executors to execute; they did so, and were held not to be liable (see 1 Eden, 360); the joining there could not amount to a direction to pay, or a sanction to receive: it is to be observed, however, that there was an express proviso in the will declaring that the one should not be answerable for the receipts of the other; on which Lord Northington, adopting Lord Hardwicke's distinction, laid some stress, p. 360. Lord Northington, in this case, Westley v. Clarke, said, "Though former authorities may and ought to bind the determination of subsequent cases, with respect to rights, as in the right of curtesy or dower, yet this can be no rule for the future determinations of this court concerning the acts of men;" but as to this, see 2 Fonbl. p. 183. In Stiles v. Guy, 4 Y. & Coll. p. 577, Lord Lyndhurst held that an executor, who was also a co-trustee, who had joined in an assignment of a mortgage, was not liable. Lord Eldon, though, as above stated, he was of opinion with Lord Thurlow, that the old rule, that where executors join in the receipt each should under all circumstances be charged, ought to have been retained, seems to have admitted in Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 64, that the rule had been altered, and that by the modern course of the court the circumstances may be taken into consideration to some extent in each particular case.

(b) Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 334.

(c) Sir Wm. Grant, Langford v. Gascoyne, ubi sup.

(d) Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, 11 Ves. p. 252; Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Mer. p. 712; Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. p. 333; Moses v. Levi, 3 Yo. & Coll. 367.

(e) Aplyn v. Brewer, Prec. Ch. 173.

for money (a), it is for him to discharge himself from the liability which such an act primâ facie imposes (b); and this he may do by showing a justifiable purpose or object (c), or that the money was applied in payment of debts owing from the testator's estate, or otherwise in the due administration of the estate (d), or in such other ways as will be presently mentioned. But this exemption from liability only applies where the executor places the money in the hands of his co-executor for the purpose of paying debts and specific legacies (e): it does not apply to the case of a residue distributable amongst several; each of the executors is bound to see that the residue is actually paid to the persons entitled (f).

If trustees or executors agree that each shall have the management of a particular part of the estate, each will be liable for the whole (g). An executor in a gross case will be charged with five per cent. interest on all sums which he has allowed his co-executor to receive, and which have been misapplied (h).

Inquiries, with a view to charge executors or trustees with interest, are usually granted on further directions only; but they may be obtained on a special case at the original hearing (i).

However, notwithstanding the stringency of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in cases of actual breaches of trust, the rule of law, as administered in the court, is stated to be, that where trustees bonâ

(a) See 1 Sch. & Lef. p. 341: generally the trustee is bound to replace stock improperly sold out, or to account for the proceeds of the sale, with interest at five per cent.; Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. p. 108: but where there is no corrupt motive, though he will be bound to replace the stock, the cestuis que trust will not have an option; O'Brien v. O'Brien, 1 Moll. p. 533.

(b) Murrell v. Cox, 2 Vern. 570; Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 186; Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 333, 335; Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 341; Clough v. Bond, 3 My. & Cr. 497; and see the cases, 2 Fonbl. 182.

(c) See Bacon v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 334-5; 7 Ves. 192; 11 Ves. 335; 16 Ves. 481; Joy v. Campbell, 2 Sch. & Lef. p. 341-2; Davis v. Spurling, 1 Russ. & M. 66; Balchen v. Scott, 2 Ves. J. 678; 7 Ves. 193; Terrell v. Matthews, xi. Law J. Chan. p. 34, Lord Ch.

(d) Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, 11 Ves. 252; Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Mer. 712; Williams v. Nixon, ubi sup., and see Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596; Westley v. Clarke 1 Eden, 357, as to joining in receipts v. sup. 929. In the following cases the executors and trustees have been ordered to replace stock sold out by them: Forrest v. Elwes, 4 Ves. 497; Long v. Stewart, 5 Ves. 800, note; Harrison v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 121; Bostock v. Blakeney, 2 Bro. 655, with costs; Waite v. Whorwood, 2 Atk. 159; Powlet v. Herbert, 1 Ves. J. 297; in this case the trustee had purchased land with the trust fund, under an idea that he was authorized to do so, he was ordered to replace the stock sold out with costs. In Warner v. Torkington, MS. 1835, Sir C. Pepys, Master of the Rolls, held that a trustee can only be liable to account for stock where the trust is imperative to lay out the trust fund in stock.

(e) As in Bacon v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 331.

(f) Baron Alderson, Moses v. Levi, 3 Yo. & Coll. 368.

(g) Gill v. Attorney-Gen., Hard. 314.

(h) Bick v. Motley, 2 My. & K. 315, both executors were largely indebted to the estate, when they signed the cheques. So 5 per cent. is given when a transaction savouring of fraud is set aside on grounds of public policy, Gillett v. Peppercorne, 3 Beav. 84; though 4 per cent. is the rate in ordinary cases of breach of trust, Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Mer. 713.

(i) Seton on Decrees, Law v. Hunter, 1 Russ. 105; Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. 142.

fide exert themselves to discharge their duty, and without exceeding the line of their duty, merely commit an error in judgment, unless there is a plain violation of trust, they shall not be visited severely; the fair exercise of their judgment is a protection to them, although the consequences may be attended with loss (a): and that where a trustee acts from moral necessity, and according to the usage of mankind, if he acts as prudently for the trust as for himself, and according to the usage of business, he will not be liable for any loss that may occur. Thus, if a trustee appoints rents to be paid to a banker at that time in credit, and leaves the money with them as he would his own only till wanted, and the banker fails before it is drawn out, the trustee is not liable: the same rule prevails in the employment of stewards and agents (b). If an executor possessing assets hands them over for the express purpose of a special administration by the co-executor, as for the payment of a particular debt, he will not in general be answerable in the event of the money being misapplied (c).

Where a trustee joins in signing a cheque, or does any other act to place money in the hands of his co-trustee, or a person employed by the trustees in a due course of business for the purpose of being applied in a due execution of the trust, such act being required for the purposes of convenience, and the money be lost; if no case of negligence in not making inquiry as to the proposed application of the money or looking after the application of the money, be made against the trustee (d), he will not be liable (e).

The result of all the best authorities upon the subject is, said Lord Cottenham in a late case, that although a personal representative, acting strictly within the line of his duty and exercising reasonable care and diligence, will not be answerable for the failure or depreciation of the fund in which any part of the estate may be involved, or for the insolvency or misconduct of any person who may have possessed it; yet if that line of duty be not strictly pursued, and any part of the property be invested by such personal representative in funds or upon

(a) Garrett v. Noble, 6 Sim. 516, the executors had carried on the testator's trade to a loss; and see Buxton v. Buxton, 1 My. & Cr. 80, where Mexican bonds were left unsold; Ashburnham v. Thompson, 13 Ves. 402; Munch v. Cockerell, Lord Cottenham, 5 My. & Cr. 214.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Ex parte Belcher, Ex parte Parsons, Ambl. 219; see also the cases in Mr. Blunt's note: but the immunity applies only to the trustee himself, and does not extend to a deposit made by a person employed by the trustee; Re Earl of Lichfield, 1 Atk. 87.

(c) See Davis v. Spurling, 1 Russ. & M. p. 66.

(d) See Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Mer. 713; Hanbury v. Kirkland, 3 Sim. 265, 271; Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. p. 319; Hewett v. Foster, 6 Beav. 261.

(e) Ex parte Griffin, 2 Gl. & J. p. 114; Bacon v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 331 (see 3 Sim. 272); Terrell v. Matthews, 11 Law J., N. S., Chan. 31; Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 28.

securities not authorized, or be put within the control of persons who ought not to be entrusted with it, and a loss be thereby eventually sustained, such personal representative will be liable to make it good, however unexpected the result, however little likely to arise from the course adopted, and however free such conduct may have been from any improper motive (a). Thus, if he omit to sell property when it ought to be sold, and it be afterwards lost, without any fault of his, he is liable (b); or if he leave money due upon personal security, which, though he found it there, and it was good at the time, afterwards fails (c), and the case is stronger if he be himself the author of the improper investment: he is not liable, upon a proper investment in £3 per Cents., for a loss occasioned by a fluctuation of that fund (d); but he is for the fluctuations of any unauthorized fund (e); and though liable for the loss, he is accountable for the profits, if any should be made (f). So, where the loss arises from the dishonesty or failure of any one to whom the possession of part of the property has been intrusted, necessity, which includes the regular course of business in administering the property, will in equity exonerate the personal representative: but if, without such necessity, he be instrumental in giving to the person failing possession of any part of the property, he will be liable, although the person possessing it be a co-executor or co-administrator (g).

But in the case of money paid to a Banker, care must be taken that it be placed to the account of the trustee, so that it would not pass to the assignees of the trustee in the event of his bankruptcy; if not, he will be answerable for the amount in the event of the failure of the bankers (h): and if it has been mixed with his own money, so that it may be supposed that he derived, or might have derived, a benefit from his increased balance, he will be charged with interest at four per cent. or five per cent., according to circumstances (i): and though it

(a) Lord Cottenham, Clough v. Bond, 3 My. & Cr. 496.

(b) See Phillips v. Phillips, 2 Freem. 11.

(c) See Powell v. Evans, 5 Ves. 839; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 290; Lowson v. Copeland, 2 Bro. 156, and Belt's note.

(d) Peat v. Crane, 2 Dick. 499, note.

(e) Hancom v. Allen, 2 Dick. 498; Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 150; Lord Cottenham, Clough v. Bond, 3 My. & Cr.; and see Hancom v. Allen, 2 Dick. 498; Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 444; Adye v. Feuillateau, 2 Dick. 499, note; S. C. 1 Cox, 24; Peat v. Crane, 2 Dick. 449, note; Holland v. Hughes, 16 Ves. 114; Fyler v. Fyler, 3 Beav. 550.

(f) Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Atk. 513; Adye

v. Feuillateau, 3 Swanst. 84, note; S. C. 1 Cox, 24; Holmes v. Dring, 2 Cox, 1.

(g) Clough v. Bond (supra), p. 497; Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 333; Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, 11 Ves. 252; 16 Ves. 477; Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Meriv. 712; and see Hanbury v. Kirkland, 3 Sim. 265, and Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 16, 28.

(h) Wren v. Kirton, 11 Ves. 377; Massey v. Banner, 4 Mad. 419; 1 Jac. & W. 249; Medland v. Gray, ubi inf.

(i) Medland v. Gray, 2 Coll. 300-1, 5 per cent.; Sutton v. Sharpe, 1 Russ. 146, the executor there was a trader.

may be necessary to employ an attorney for the getting in of money, as it is not necessary that the money should be allowed to remain in his hands, if it should be lost by being so left longer than is necessary, the trustee will be answerable for it (a).

In estimating what may be culpable negligence in a trustee residing here, and who may therefore have been compelled to leave the fund under the control of agents abroad, in not taking steps to secure a trust fund in the hands of the agents from misappropriation, the trustee having intimation that such agents were under embarrassment, it will be a material circumstance if the conduct of such trustee in his private transactions with such agents evinces a confidence that those embarrassments were only temporary (b). If the securities on which trust funds abroad have been invested in pursuance of a trust, are left or even placed under the control of agents, and it is necessary from the circumstances, or from the absence of the trustees in England, that they should have such control, the trustees will not be held liable for the acts of such agents in misapplying the funds, though by extraordinary precautions the trustee might have provided for their security; for in charging trustees with loss from the misconduct of agents, it is not sufficient to prove that it might have been prevented by extraordinary care and caution (c). But where the money is, with their knowledge, left not in a state of investment as required by the trust, but as a cash balance, there the trustees will be liable if they omit to call for an investment (d).

Where in an Indian settlement, the settlor living in Bengal, the deed directs the trustees to lay out the funds in some good and sufficient public or private security, at the best and highest interest that can be had or obtained for the same, and provides for the appointment of new trustees in the place of trustees departing from India, an investment in the government paper of the East India Company is a good investment (e).

If executors or trustees, acting by a mistake, cut timber under what by legal construction is declared to be a void trust, if there has been no profit either sought or acquired by the executors or trustees, and no fraud imputable to them, the court will not, on the ground of estoppel (that is, that the trustees are precluded from saying that they

(a) See Townsend, Ex parte, 1 Molloy, 140. 13-14.

(b) Lord Cottenham, Munch v. Cockerell, on appeal, 5 My. & Cr. 216.

(c) Munch v. Cockerell, 5 My. & Cr. 212-

(d) Ibid. 216-7.

(e) Munch v. Cockerell, 5 My. & Cr. 211.

did not do the act as trustees), charge them as trustees; for as the trust is void, upon what trust are they to be charged? And the consequence of charging them as trustees by estoppel only, would be that the court must charge them with all the timber cut, without the power of allowing them one farthing of discharge, and precluding them from any legal defence they might have from length of time. The court will therefore regard the trustees or executors so acting as strangers, and leave the complaining party to his remedy at law, subject to all the defences the trustee may be able to make at law; and the fact that the legal remedy may be rendered difficult, or even may have been lost by lapse of time, is not a ground for the interference of the Court of Chancery in such a case (a).

Where a person deliberately accepted a benefit under his mother's will, by which he was prohibited from setting up any claim on account of any error, irregularity, or impropriety in the execution of her father's will, it was held that he could not maintain a suit against the executor of the father's will, to make him accountable for having employed part of the father's estate in his business (b).

A breach of trust may be a specialty debt, but if not such as to be binding on the heirs, it will not have priority over simple-contract debts under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104 (c).

The court will endeavour to deliver a trustee from any loss or injury that may arise from a misapplication of trust money, where it is done with the sanction of any one of the cestuis que trust who is sui juris. The rule of the court in all such cases is, that if a trustee errs in the management of a trust, and is guilty of a breach, yet if he goes out of the trust with the approbation of the cestui que trust, it must be made good first out of the estate of the person who consented to it, if that can be laid hold of (d): and no man having a right to require the performance of a duty, who becomes a party to the delay in the performance of it, can complain of any consequences which may arise from such delay (e).

(a) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 383-5.

(b) Egg v. Devey, 10 Beav. 444; xi. Jur. 1023; in Tattersall v. Howell, 2 Meriv. 26, cited by Lord Langdale, the condition imposed was that the legatee would give up his irregular course of life. In Egg v. Devey, the testatrix does not appear to have had any interest in preventing the transaction being inquired into.

(c) Cummins v. Cummins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 90: the proviso in the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV.

c. 104, only preserves the priority of specialty debts where the heirs are bound; and see Hill, p. 536.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 444; Lord Montford v. Lord Cadogan, 17 Ves. 485; 19 Ves. 635; 2 Meriv. 3; Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 130. But see Ling v. Coleman, 10 Beav. 370, 375, as to the course which may have to be pursued.

(e) Lord Cottenham, Munch v. Cockerell, 5 My. & Cr. 207, and see 209-10.

There is a marked distinction between the degree of knowledge and sanction necessary for the purpose of exonerating trustees, on the ground of Acquiescence, from that which is clearly a breach of trust; and that which is necessary to preclude the cestui que trust from complaining of that not being done, the omission to do which with the concurrence of the cestui que trust, did not constitute a breach of trust (a). In the first case it is used to release a right, and discharge an obligation already perfected by the breach of trust; in the latter, only to prevent a right from arising from the non-performance of a duty which it was competent for the cestui que trust to dispense with (b): concurrence on the part of the cestuis que trust, or acquiescence on their part knowing the circumstances without original concurrence, will, in the latter case, exonerate the trustees; though, in the former case, as a positive obligation has been incurred on the part of the trustee towards the cestui que trust, the acquiescence must be such as will amount to an actual release, and such that it would amount to something like a fraud to endeavour then to insist on the liability of the trustee (c).

If a trustee is robbed of the money he received, he shall be allowed it in account, the robbery being proved, though the sum is only proved by his own oath, for he was to keep it but as his own (d).

Every executor is a trustee in some sense (e); but there is a material distinction between the character of executor and that of trustee as regards the application of the Statute of Limitations (f). A legacy cannot be claimed if twenty years have been suffered to elapse; but when the testator has bequeathed a legacy to the executor, upon certain trusts, and the executor assents to that legacy and sets it apart, he then becomes a trustee for the cestui que trust upon an express trust, and any misapplication of it is a breach of trust, so that time does not run against the cestui que trust, nor does the statute apply (g).

(a) By the decree in the suit a moiety of the trust fund had been ordered to be transferred to the trustees of the settlement executed on the marriage of one of the parties interested, the Vice Chancellor of England had held (9 Simons, 343-4) that the original trustees were liable for not having so invested it; the Lord Chancellor held that if any such duty was imposed, the conduct of the parties interested had relieved the trustees from their liability; 5 My. & Cr. 210.

(b) Lord C., Munch v. Cockerell, 5 My. & C. 218; and see Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Y.

& C. C. C. p. 31.

(c) Lord Eldon, Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 64; Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. 326.

(d) Morley v. Morley, 2 Ch. Ca. 2; Knight v. Lord Plymouth, 3 Atk. 480; 1 Dick, 127; Jones v. Lewes, 2 Ves. 240, and see Rowth v. Howell, 3 Ves. 565. So in the case of a factor, for he cannot have other proof, Co. Litt. 89 a, Southcote's case, 4 Co. 84 a; 2 Fonbl. 179.

(e) V. supra, Vol. i. p. 578, et seq.

(f) 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27; see sect. 40.

(g) Philippo v. Munnings, sup. 48; and see Ravenscroft v. Frisby, 1 Coll. 21, and p. 22-3,

According to the rule which applies to all cases of trust, if Expenses have been legitimately and properly incurred in the execution of the trust, or in the performance of the duties thrown on any parties and arising out of the situation in which they are placed, such parties are entitled, without any express provision for that purpose, to make payments required to meet those expenses out of the funds in their hands belonging to the trust: such is the rule of this court, and such also is the rule at common law (a).

Trustees empowered under an act of Parliament to apply the funds under their control (in this case raised by rate), in doing and constructing and executing such works, acts, matters, and things as they should from time to time deem necessary, proper, and expedient for putting the banks of a river (of which they were the conservators) into and maintaining the same in a permanent state of stability, were held to be justified in applying part of the funds in watching and, if necessary, opposing, a bill in Parliament for a project which was likely to be injurious to the banks of the river (b).

It is not an improper application of the funds by trustees to employ them in defending proceedings against individual members of the corporation, which, if successful, might have the effect of destroying the corporation, and thus affecting even the existence of the corporation, an event in which every inhabitant must have an interest where the surplus funds in the hands of the corporation are to be applied for the benefit of the inhabitants (c).

A trustee will be allowed for sums properly expended in the maintenance of his cestui que trust (d). It was said by Lord Cowper that if a trustee lends money to his cestui que trust, he shall hold the trust estate as a security, because it must be presumed he lent the money upon the credit of the estate (e).

In suits between the trustees and cestuis que trust, the trustee is primâ facie entitled to have his costs as between solicitor and client, which present an important view of the construction of the words "a present right to receive," in the 40th section; and see Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, p. 212. Before the statute time might lead to a presumption of payment, and the like presumption might arise in the case of specialty debts, but it was liable to be rebutted by circumstances.

(a) Lord Cottenham, Att.-Gen. v. Mayor of Norwich, 2 My. & Cr. 424-5; The King v. The Inhabitants of Essex, 4 T. R. 591; The King v. The Commissioners of Sewers, 1 B. & Ad. 232; 2 Fonbl. 177. But in this respect assignees in bankruptcy do not stand exactly in the same situation as trustees, Ex parte Elsee, 1 Mont. p. 3. On this subject, see Lewin, 445, 446.

(b) Bright v. North, 2 Phill. 216; 16 Law J. 255, Ch.

(c) Attorney-General v. Mayor of Norwich, on Appeal, 2 My. & Cr. p. 428, and see Att.-Gen. v. Pearson, 2 Coll. 581.

(d) Nelson v. Duncombe, 9 Beav. 211.

(e) Draper v. Burlace, 30 Apr. 1808; Melmoth, MS. p. 64, amongst the Hargrave MSS. No. 72, Mad. Pr. and P. ii. 160.

more especially where such costs are or may be directed to be paid out of any fund under the control of the court (a); and although an executor in the result is made answerable for a loss incurred by his neglect, or is charged with interest for retaining money in his hands, still, if he has only been guilty of negligence, or undue retention of money, he is entitled to the benefit of the rule, and will have his general costs, provided he duly account (b). A trustee, it is said, will be allowed his costs, charges, and expences, without any express direction, under the head of just allowances (c); but it is now the usual practice to make a distinct reference as to charges and expences properly incurred beyond the costs of the suit; and in one branch of the court at least (the Rolls), as I understand the practice there, only when the fact appears on the bill or the answer, or on a petition presented for that purpose, or by the consent of the parties, they being competent to consent. An executor is entitled to the immediate payment of his costs, though he may be indebted to the estate upon a security payable at a future day (d).

A trustee seeking the indemnity and directions of the court, as to the execution of the trust, is always allowed his costs as between solicitor and client, unless the act which has been required to be done by him would lead to no responsibility, and the motives of the trustee

(a) Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 437; the costs there would be paid out of the fund coming from the trustee on the result of the account: Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. p. 717, out of a fund; Gough v. Andrews, viii. Jur. 305, 1 Coll. 71, costs given out of a term; and see York v. Brown, 1 Coll. 260. In Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanst. 203, the Master of the Rolls, in answer to a claim for costs, as between solicitor and client, said, "When the court finds a will and a fund, it avails itself of the fund to relieve the difficulties created by the will; but here is no will, nothing that can affect the real estate: were there a fund in the hands of the trustees, they would be entitled to the costs as proposed, but they are trustees of a nullity:" they had their costs as between party and party. But in Poole v. Pass, 1 Beav. 600, there was no fund to be administered in the suit, nor could be; yet Lord Langdale gave the trustee, a defendant, the costs as between solicitor and client, saying, "I think no trustee would be safe unless such costs were allowed;" and such costs were ordered to be paid by the plaintiff; ibid. p. 605: so in Holford v. Phipps, 4 Beav. 475; and see Edenborough v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 2 Russ. 112; Perrot v. Treby, Prec. Ch. 254; Fearn v. Young, 10 Ves. p. 184; Terrell v. Matthews, xi. Law J., N. S., Chan. p. 36; Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. Coop. 72; and Heighington v. Grant, 1 Phill. 604. The executor, as he volunteers to prove the will, must be content to take his costs out of the personal estate only, Nash v. Dillon, 1 Moll. p. 237; the case of an heir is different, for the estate is thrown upon him, Humphrey v. Morse, 2 Atk. 408; and see Uvedale v. Uvedale, 3 Atk. p. 119.

(b) Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. 362; Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox, p. 141; Raphael v. Boehm, 13 Ves. 590; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 308; there a suit was necessary to determine the rights of the parties. Freeman v. Fairlee, 3 Meriv. p. 43; Piety v. Stace, 4 Ves. p. 620; Travers v. Townsend, 1 Molloy, 499; Taylor v. Tabrum, 6 Sim. 282; Fozier v. Andrews, 2 Jones & L. 199: and see Hill on Trustees, p. 572, et seq. Where a principle of taxation is once adopted, unless in a particular instance by consent, it will in general be continued throughout the proceedings; see Hill on Trustees, p. 590, and the references, note (x).

(c) Fearn v. Young, 10 Ves. p. 184. As to charges and expenses, see Lewin, p. 448.

(d) Stevens v. Pillen, xii. Jur. 282, Vice-Chancellor Wigram. Of the Lien of the trustee on the trust fund for his expences, v. sup. pp. 803-4.

are obviously vexatious (a). But an executor or trustee may, in respect of his misconduct in the execution of his trust, be deprived of his costs, or even made to pay the costs (b): a distinction has been taken in this respect, as in every moral point of view there ought to have been, between negligence and corruption (c). If the refusal of the trustee to make good the loss occasioned by his improper acts has alone occasioned the suit, he will be ordered to pay the whole of the costs (d). It is not of course that the personal representative of a defaulting person who is dead, without leaving assets, should, without default on his part, be liable to costs, as there might be many reasons why there must be a personal representative to the defaulter, and, being so, he is a necessary party to the bill (e). Where trustees

(a) Curteis v. Candler, 6 Mad. 123, a trustee must be satisfied with reasonable evidence, Lyse v. Kingdon, 1 Coll. 188-9.

(b) See the cases where costs have been refused, Daniel's Pr. by Headlam, p. 1288; where the trustee or executor has been ordered to pay costs; ibid. 1291; Hill, p. 578, et seq.; and see the next note.

(c) Sir Thos. Plumer, Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 306; and see Sammes v. Rickman, 2 Ves. Jun. 38.

The following are instances of executors and trustees being ordered to pay costs of the suit, or so much as was occasioned by their misconduct; Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox, p. 141, there the executors had (int. al.) purchased debts due to the estate for their own benefit; Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. p. 362; Powlet v. Herbert, 1 Ves. J. 297; Seers v. Hind, 1 Ves. J. 294, there Lord Thurlow laid it down that where the executor is charged with interest costs will follow (but this rule has not been adhered to, see Ashburnham v. Thompson, 13 Ves. 404; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 308); Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 62 (2 My. & K. 670), Sir Wm. Grant; there the executor had withheld the money and gone to the East Indies, but quære, whether it was intended to charge him with the whole costs of the suit; Mosley v. Ward, 11 Ves. p. 583, Lord Eldon, case of infants' funds out on good securities unnecessarily called in and not reinvested (but quære here also whether more was meant than the costs occasioned by the improper conduct); Caffrey v. Darby, 6 Ves. p. 488, negligence; Pearse v. Green, 1 Jac. & W. 135, agents of privateer, money retained for twelve years, previous refusal to account; Crackelt v. Bethune, 1 Jac. & W. 589, false statement in answer, funds sold out without necessity, Statute of Limitations set up; Piety v. Stace, 4 Ves. 620, (2 My. & K. 670,) Lord Alvanley, funds sold out unnecessarily, the suit entirely occasioned by misconduct of executor; Ashburnham v. Thompson, 13 Ves. p. 404, Sir Wm. Grant, balance kept in hand for twenty years; Anon. 4 Mad. 273, costs up to decree, the suit having been occasioned by refusal to account; Mucklow v. Fuller, Jac. 202, negligence, in not getting in a debt due from co-executor; Watts v. Turner, 1 Russ. & M. 634, trustee after having approved a deed for conveying the legal estate, refusing capriciously to execute it; Wheeler v. Little, Rolls, July 4th, 1834, defendant ordered to replace fund he had permitted his co-trustee to receive with costs.

The following are instances where costs have been refused to executors and trustees: Knight v. Martin, 1 Russ. & M. 70, on refusal to pay a legacy in a case clear of doubt; Davies v. Austen, 1 Ves. J. 249; Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. 362.

Of so much of the suit as related to inquiries arising from breach of trust, Raphael v. Boehm, 13 Ves. 590; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. p. 308; Pocock v. Reddington, 5 Ves. 599; Turquand v. Knight, 14 Sim. 643, on account of false recital in a deed. Of suit generally, O'Callaghan v. Cooper, 5 Ves. 117, for neglect. A trustee, having claimed a balance in his favour, and the Master having found a smaller sum to be due to him, he was ordered on further directions, to pay the costs up to the hearing, but no costs on either side were given after the hearing, Attorney-General v. Gibbs, xi. Jur. p. 745. And on the subject of costs, v. supra, p. 47, where, at note (h), substitute Curteis v. Candler, 6 Mad. p. 123, for Goodson v. Ellison. A trustee must be satisfied with reasonable evidence; Lyse v. Kingdon, 1 Coll. 188-9.

(d) V. int. al. Hall v. Franck, xiii. Jur. 222.

(e) Lord Manners, Morony v. Vincent, 2 Moll. 461.

appear separately they will, unless under very special circumstances, only be allowed one set of costs (a).

The trustee is the most proper party to file the bill where there is any question to be disposed of, as the court can hardly dismiss the bill, and therefore all the costs may be ordered to be paid; but where the question is one of nicety, costs may be given out of the fund, if in court, though the bill be dismissed by reason of the court having to decide against the claim of the plaintiff (b).

In cases of breaches of trust, where the liability arises from the wrongful act of the parties, each is liable for all the consequences, and there is no contribution between them, and each case is distinct, depending upon the evidence against each party. It is therefore not necessary to make all the trustees who may more or less have joined in the act complained of parties to the suit; nor would any one of them derive any advantage from their being all made defendants, because, as the decree would be general against all found to be guilty of the charge, it might be executed against any of them (c). If a case of wilful default is made against an executor or trustee by the bill, and no case is admitted or proved to justify such a decree, according to the present practice, at least according to my experience, the defendant ought to apply to have the bill dismissed so far as relates to wilful default, else, if on taking the accounts a case of wilful default should appear, the defendant will be liable to be charged with wilful default on further directions (d).

Where several defendants are involved in a breach of trust, and a decree is made against all in respect of it, the court decrees the costs of the suit against them all, on the principle of giving to the plaintiff the greater security for the payment, and without regard to the relative degrees of culpability in the defendants (e): one trustee or the

(a) Wiles v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 298; and the cases in the reporter's note, ib. p. 299; Webb v. Webb, 10 Law T., Ch. 154.

(b) Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. p. 347. The same thing was done in Green v. Jackson, ex relatione the late Master Duckworth.

(c) Lord Cottenham, Attorney-General v. Wilson, 1 Cr. & P. 28; Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 406; and Attorney-General v. Brown, 1 Swanst. 265, there cited: see the General Order, No. 38, Aug., 1841. However, there is this advantage in all the trustees being parties, that no one of them can afterwards dispute that there has been a breach of trust; and if nothing can be recovered from the one the other is there to answer.

(d) In Garland v. Littlewood, 1 Beav. 527, Lord Langdale held that where the bill makes a case for wilful default, and the common accounts only are directed, it is not competent to the plaintiff to charge the defendant with wilful default at a subsequent stage of the cause. Lord Cottenham in Terrell v. Matthews, xi. Law J., N. S. 35, supra, expressed his disapproval of that doctrine, and stated that he had acted under a contrary impression, and the practice has since been, as I believe, according to what is stated in the text. And see the additional note, No. 3.

(e) See Lawrence v. Bowle, 2 Phill. 140.

representatives of a trustee may it seems file a bill against a co-trustee, to make him contribute his share towards making good a joint breach of trust without making the cestuis que trust parties (a).

Generally where an Account has been Settled, the rule is only to give liberty to surcharge and falsify the account, when errors of fact or of law are shown in the account; but where an account has been settled between a trustee and his cestui que trust, under circumstances of fraud or misrepresentation or undue influence used on the part of the trustee, there is scarcely any length of time that will prevent the court from opening the account altogether (b): but directions will be given that the Master be at liberty to state special circumstances as to any difficulty that may arise from lapse of time and the consequent loss of evidence and documents (c). An error discovered and corrected before suit is not a ground for a bill to surcharge and falsify (d). Where accounts are said to be falsified, it means that they contain charges in the nature of fraud (e).

A release to one trustee, in respect of a breach of trust, will be a release to both, independently of technical grounds, where the effect of the release is an adoption of the act and an acceptance of the securities on which the trust fund had been invested (f). Where a release is given under the superintendence of a solicitor of the cestui que trust, it will be binding, though the trustee may have charged in his accounts for professional services, which, as will be presently mentioned, he is not permitted to do (g).

The plaintiff having read from the answer of the defendant a statement of the trusts on which, as she alleged, a trust fund had been transferred to her (according to which the residue after certain payments was to belong to herself), was not permitted to withdraw that part of the answer which had been read; but an issue was directed,

(a) Robinson v. Evans, vii. Jur. p. 738, Vice-Chancellor Wigram; no objection was taken in this case, or in May v. Selby, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 235, to the bill, except for want of parties; but see Attorney-General v. Wilson, 1 Cr. & Phill. p. 28, and supra, Vol. i. p. 664. Does that dictum mean only that there can be no contribution in the suit of the cestui que trust?

(b) Allfrey v. Allfrey, 10 Beav. 353; et v. Hardwicke v. Vernon, 14 Ves. 504, 510, 511: see, on this subject, Portlock v. Gardner, 1 Hare, p. 594; Carmichael v. Carmichael, 2 Phil. 101; additional note, No. 3; and Vol. iii. title "Account."

(c) Allfrey v. Allfrey, supra; and see Morgan v. Lewes, 4 Dow. 48; Turner v. Corney, 5 Beav. 515; Miller v. Craig, 6 Beav. 444; Rowley v. Adams, 7 Beav. 415; In re Watts, 7 Beav. 491 (Reporter's note); and see Hickson v. Aylward, 3 Moll. 1.

(d) Davis v. Spurling, 1 R. & M. 67.

(e) Heighington v. Grant, 1 Phill. pp. 601, 603: the merely surcharging does not deprive the trustee of his costs; ibid. 604.

(f) Blackwood v. Borrowes, 2 Conn. & L. p. 478.

(g) Stanes v. Parker, 9 Beav. p. 385; and see Todd v. Wilson, ibid. 486.

the plaintiff to have liberty to examine the defendant as to the directions given to her in regard to the trust fund (a).

Where it is essential for the due execution of the trust, the court will remove trustees, and appoint others in their place; and the court will remove one of the trustees, even though he may not have been guilty of any act of misconduct and may be desirous of remaining, if it be inexpedient that he should continue to be a trustee (b).

The court may appoint new trustees on petition under 1 Will. IV. c. 60, § 22, although the instrument creating the trust contains a power to appoint new trustees (c). Tenant for life of estates decreed to be sold for payment of debts in a creditor's suit, is a trustee for the purchaser within the meaning of 1 Will. IV. c. 60, § 18 (d).

The general rule is, that trustees, (unless they are nominally such, as trustees to preserve contingent remainders,) agents, commissioners of bankrupts, assignees of bankrupts, solicitors to the commission, auctioneers, creditors who have been consulted as to the mode of sale, counsel, or any persons who by having been employed or concerned in the affairs of another may have acquired a knowledge of his property, are incapable of Purchasing such property except under certain regulations; for if persons having a confidential character were permitted to purchase they might avail themselves of knowledge acquired in that capacity, and might be induced to conceal their information, and not to make use of it for the benefit of the parties relying on their integrity: the two characters of trustee and purchaser are inconsistent (e).

It is not necessary, in order to set aside a sale to a trustee, to prove that he has made any advantage in the article of the purchase (f); the principle is, that as the trustee is bound by his duty

(a) Freeman v. Tatham, 5 Hare, 329; and see the additional note.

(b) See the cases collected, Hill on Trustees, chap. ii. p. 166; in that chapter the rules of the court in regard to the appointment of new trustees is fully entered into: and see a Treatise in the Jurist, (No. 616, p. 449,) on the subject of where the court will insert a power for appointing new trustees. It is to be observed that a reference to a Master to approve of new trustees in the place of deceased or retiring trustees, in the absence of any special direction in the decree, will supersede any right of nomination given to the continuing trustee; Middleton v. Reay, xiii. Jur. p. 116, Vice-Chancellor Wigram. As to the passing of the trust estate by the will of a trustee, v. supra, p. 364; and see add. note, No. 3.

(c) Re Foxhall, 2 Phill. 281; on this subject see Hill on Trustees, ubi sup.

(d) Re Milfield, 2 Phill. 254.

(e) Richardson v. Chapman, 7 Bro. P. C. 324; Forbes v. Ross, 2 Cox, 116; Randall v. Errington, 10 Ves. 428; Sugd. V. and P. chap. xix. sect. ii. p. 887, et seq., where all the authorities on the subject, and the several qualifications of the rule may be found. See also chap. xv. sect. xi. of Mr. Lewin's work on Trusts, p. 361; et v. supra, p. 208, 299.

(f) 10 Ves. p. 393. As to the Terms on which the sale will be set aside, see Lewin, p. 366.

to acquire all the knowledge possible to enable him to sell to the utmost advantage for the cestui que trust, the question what knowledge he has obtained, and whether he has fairly given the benefit of that knowledge to the cestui que trust which he always acquires at the expense of the cestui que trust, no court can discuss with competent sufficiency or safety to the parties (a): it makes no difference that the sale was by auction (b). The principal has a right to have such a transaction set aside, and to be placed in the same situation as if the transaction had not taken place, after the fact of the agent having been the purchaser comes to his knowledge, provided he act with sufficient promptitude after he so becomes acquainted with the fact. However, it is not sufficient to say that the probabilities (however strong) are that the facts were known to the principal, that there were books open to his own inspection, in which the facts appeared, or that some person intimately connected with him (his son, for instance) was in such a position as to make it highly probable that he had seen entries in the books which would have apprized him of the facts; the knowledge ought to be brought home to the principal before lapse of time or acquiescence can be relied upon by the agents (c). This subject belongs to one class of Equitable Rights.

A trustee may buy from the cestui que trust, provided there is a distinct and clear contract, ascertained to be such after a zealous and scrupulous examination of all the circumstances, proving that the cestui que trust intended the trustee should buy, and there is no fraud, no concealment, no advantage taken by the trustee of information acquired by him in the character of trustee,—the parties being at arms' length, as it has been called (d): it is obvious that it must be a difficult task to establish the exception; and the rule precludes the possibility of a trustee ever purchasing the property of an infant (e).

It has been decided that if a man chooses to give a benefit to his trustee, agent, or receiver, he may do so (f); but it is for the party dealing with his principal or cestui que trust, to show, and he is bound to show, that he dealt for value or that the employer made him a present; but in either case, it must be made clear, that the principal had all the knowledge that he had, and that it was a fair dealing between them (g).

(a) Ex parte James, 8 Ves. 337; Ex parte Bennett, 10 Ves. p. 394-5; Gillett v. Pepper-corne, 3 Beav. 84.

(b) Ibid.; Sanderson v. Walker, 13 Ves. 602: the trustee pays the costs of setting aside the sale, though if the suit embraces the administration of the trust he will have his costs of the remainder of the suit.

(c) Gillett v. Pepper-corne, 3 Beav. 85.

(d) Lord Eldon, Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 247; Sanderson v. Walker, 13 Ves. 601.

(e) 13 Ves. 602.

(f) Selsey v. Rhoades, 1 Bligh, N. S. p. 1.

(g) See the dict. of Sir E. Sugden, Chancellor, Kerr v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Conn. & L. 360; and 1 Dru. & W. 542, S. C.

It is owing to the jealousy which the court entertains of executors or trustees, that if they compound debts, and buy them in for less than is due upon them, they shall not take the benefit of it themselves, but the other creditors and legatees shall have the advantage of it, and for want of them the benefit shall go to those who are entitled to the surplus; whereas if one who acts for himself, and does not stand in a fiduciary character, buys in a mortgage for less than is due, or for less than it is worth, he shall be allowed all that is due thereon (a).

Where a trustee or other person standing in a fiduciary character, makes a profit by means of any transaction within the scope of his agency or authority, that profit belongs to the cestui que trust (b), and he is precluded from making any profit which could only redound to his own benefit. This latter doctrine often comes into operation as regards Solicitors who are appointed trustees. Where the business of a trusteeship is conducted by two solicitors in partnership, one of whom is a trustee, they can only charge the costs out of pocket (c). A trustee or executor may indeed take all the benefit, by way of remuneration, which the will or other instrument by which he is appointed may provide for him (d): and it is now held that a trustee may stipulate beforehand (e), and make it part of the contract under which he accepts the trust that he shall have a remuneration for his trouble, or that he shall be allowed his professional charges as solicitor, auctioneer, or otherwise (f): but all such agreements between the trustee and cestui que trust are looked upon with great jealousy and are construed strictly (g). Where a suit has been instituted and a trustee declines further to act, by reason that due attention to the affairs of the trust will occupy too much of his time, it is competent to the court in

(a) 3 P. Wms. p. 251, the Reporter's note; Salk. p. 155; and the principle extends to a mortgagee, Baldwin v. Banister, there cited, et v. supra.

(b) Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & M. 132, 149, q. v.; Com. Dig. Chancery, 4 W. 30; and see Bulkley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & Finell. 177, the case of an attorney who advised his client to levy a fine by reason of which, though it was not proved that the attorney knew that such would be the consequence, his client's will was revoked, and the estate descended to him; he was declared to be trustee for the devisee: see Sir E. Sugden's remarks on the principle of this case, Law of Prop. p. 194.

(c) Collins v. Carey, 2 Beav. 128.

(d) Robinson v. Pett, 3 P. Wms. 250-1;

Ellison v. Airey, 1 Ves. 115; Willes v. Kibble, 1 Beav. 560.

(e) See Brocksopp v. Barnes, 5 Mad. p. 91; Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 59, 60.

(f) Moore v. Frowd, 3 My. & Cra. 48; Re Sherwood, 3 Beav. 338.

(g) See Gould v. Fleetwood, stated in note, 3 P. Wms. p. 250; 2 Fonb. p. 176; Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 60, was a case of undue influence. A mortgagee, as we may remember, cannot by contract with the mortgagor obtain any allowance for his trouble, French v. Baron, 2 Atk. 120, supra, p. 657: see, on this subject, Hill on Trustees, p. 600, 601, where also the subject of contracts between cestui que trust and trustee as to the allowance of professional charges is discussed.

such case to award to him a compensation, on its being ascertained that the continuance of his personal exertions is essential for the benefit of the estate, and that although he may have had a legacy given to him by the testator for his care and trouble; but such legacy must be taken into account (a). A trustee acting as solicitor will be allowed the costs he actually pays to the town agent whom he may employ (b).

The reason of the rule that a trustee, executor, or administrator, shall have no allowance for his care and trouble is, that on these pretences, if allowed, the trust estate might be loaded and rendered of little value; besides which there might be great difficulty in settling and adjusting the quantum of such allowance, especially as one man's time may be more valuable than another's; and it has been said, there is no hardship in the rule, for every one is at liberty to reject the office, even though he may have promised to accept it (c). In a late case in Ireland, securities containing charges for costs by a solicitor being a trustee, were set aside as against a purchaser with notice, the trust deed not having authorized them, notwithstanding that letters had been written by the cestui que trust, clearly recognizing the right to charge such costs, but which appeared to have been written under the influence of the trustee (d).

In order to entitle an executor or trustee to a legacy given to him as such executor or trustee, he must act in the performance of the duties of the office (e); but a legacy may be so given to the person who is appointed trustee or executor, and not annexed to his office, that he may renounce and still receive the legacy (f).

The powers and duties of trustees for sale have already been noticed (g). But it may be useful here to introduce a late case, decided

(a) Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swanst. 453; Freeman v. Fairlie, infra, is not inconsistent or conflicting—here the trustee makes a bargain, and gives a valuable consideration.

(b) Burge v. Brutton, 2 Hare, 378, though, as the Vice-Chancellor Wigram observed, the general rule of policy, if fully carried out, might exclude even those costs. Where the court decrees that the costs of a defendant trustee, who is a solicitor, shall be taxed, the order will be drawn up in the usual form, that is, giving him his costs as between solicitor and client, and it seems it is for the taxing officer to determine how the language is to be construed in reference to any business he may have transacted as solicitor; York v. Brown, 1 Coll. 260.

(c) Robinson v. Pett, 3 P. Wms. p. 251; Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 239.

(d) Gomley v. Wood, 9 Ir. Eq. Rep. 418.

(e) See the authorities cited in Compton v. Bloxam, 2 Coll. 202, infra, next note.

(f) Compton v. Bloxam, 2 Coll. 201, is an instance. In this case the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce sent for the original will, which only related to personalty, and the construction which his Honour put upon the will was influenced by such inspection.

(g) V. supra, pp. 366, 369, 370, additional note; and see Lewin, p. 330.

by Sir J. Wigram, on the subject of powers conferred upon trustees. Where a power is annexed to the office of trustee, the disclaimer of one will vest the office of trustee in the remaining two (a). A testator gave to three persons by name his real and personal estate upon trust to sell and invest the proceeds upon certain trusts therein mentioned, the effect of which was that the amount, after payment of certain legacies, was to be paid in sixths, as therein mentioned; and if the trustees named, or any succeeding trustee to be named, should happen to die, or refuse, or neglect, or become incapable to act in the execution of the trusts or powers, then the testator empowered the survivor of them his trustees named, and such new trustee or trustees to be nominated in their or either of their place or stead, as thereafter mentioned, to appoint a new trustee or trustees for the purposes aforesaid; and thereupon the trust property should be transferred and assigned upon the same trusts to such new trustee, and such new trustees should have the same powers as if he or they had been named in the said will (b). One of the trustees renounced and disclaimed by deed; the two other trustees sold the estates devised for sale; afterwards, one of the two continuing trustees died, and the survivor of the two, the disclaiming trustees being then living, appointed two new trustees in the stead of the one who had disclaimed and the one who had died: a question was raised whether this was a good appointment, and the Vice-Chancellor held that it was. If the three trustees had not been mentioned by name in the introductory part of the will, it would have been clear that the power was annexed to the office of trustee, in which case the disclaimer would have vested the office in the remaining two, and the power would, in fact, have been exercised by the surviving trustee; and the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion, on the cases cited (c), that the trustees were so named in the introductory part of the clause, not for the purpose of founding a distinction between them and future trustees, but only because they happened, in fact, to be the trustees for the time being (d).

Where one trustee only has been appointed in a case where, according to the exigencies of the trust, there ought to have been two, payment by the outgoing trustee to the one is not a good payment (e).

(a) Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare, 37; v. supra, 366. & W. 287.

(b) See S. C. 3 Hare, 245.

(c) Int. alia, Townsend v. Wilson, 1 Barn. & Ald. 608; Morris v. Preston, 7 Ves. 547; Hall v. Dewes, Jac. 189; In re Roche, 2 Dru.

(d) Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare, 37; as to this exercise of a discretion to be exercised by a trustee, v. supra, p. 87, 88.

(e) Hulme v. Hulme, 2 My. & K. 682.

I propose to conclude by taking a cursory view of the doctrines as to Trustees to support Contingent Remainders.

It has been noticed in the preceding volume that the law in regard to the destruction of contingent remainders has been altered by a late statute (a), so that it is no longer necessary to limit an estate to trustees in trust to support contingent remainders: contingent remainders must still be created according to the forms of law; when legally created, they become, by reason of their indestructibility, similar in their nature to executory devises. It may be well to give the leading doctrines as to this description of trust, which was once universally introduced into settlements where the legal estate was settled in strict settlement. The text and the notes are chiefly taken from the late Mr. Maddock's valuable work (b).

These trusts arose out of the doctrine in Chudleigh's case (c), and in Archer's case (d), but they were not put in practice till the time of the Usurpation (e), when Sir Francis More first made use of them. Duncomb and Duncomb (f) appears to have been the first case in which such a limitation of trustees came in question (g).

Where an estate (h) was limited to A. for life, remainder to his first, &c., sons in tail, though it were a plain wrong and tort in him to do any act which would destroy those contingent remainders ("a most barbarous thing," Lord Talbot calls it) (i), before the birth of a son, notwithstanding his legal power of doing so, yet, as in such case there was no trustee, there could be no trust, nor consequently any breach of trust, and therefore a court of equity had no cognizance of such a case, the matter being left purely to the common law.

The appointment of trustees was invented on purpose to disable the tenant for life from destroying contingent remainders; for if before the birth of a son, a mere trustee to preserve contingent remainders (it was different if he were tenant for life, as well as trustee (k)), whether appointed under a settlement voluntary or for a valuable

(a) 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 4; supra, Vol. i. p. 156, 291, 500, note (d).

(b) Mr. Hill, on Trustees, pp. 309 to 316, has collected all the authorities on this subject, but the act he refers to, 7 & 8 Vict. 76, was repealed by the act of the 8 & 9 Vict., above cited. The Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, supra, Vol. i. p. 166, creating a protector of the settlement, had also a material influence upon the powers of trustees of this description, see Hill, 315.

(c) 1 Co. 120.

(d) Ibid. 66.

(e) Garth v. Cotton, 1 Ves. 555; 1 Dick. 191, where the whole doctrine is to be found.

(f) 3 Lev. 437.

(g) Garth v. Cotton, 1 Ves. 555.

(h) Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 681; Pye v. George, Salk. 680; Garth v. Cotton, 3 Atk. 754; cases overruling what is said in Duke of Norfolk's case, Pollexf. 250; 1 Dick. 199; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 589.

(i) For. 239.

(k) Osborne v. Bury, 1 Ball & Beatty, 58.

consideration or by will (a), joined in barring such remainders, it was a breach of trust, and he was answerable to a son afterwards coming into existence; and so was a purchaser with notice (b), or a person taking by voluntary conveyance (c): but it seems that only the first son, and not second and other sons, had this shield thrown over their interest (d), though a difference was made where the limitation was by settlement, and where by will, as in the latter case all persons are volunteers (e): and though Lord Harcourt, in the case of a settlement, thought that the second and other sons of the marriage were entitled to relief as parties to the consideration, yet he held that the remainders after to the heirs of the body of the husband, remainder to his right heirs, were merely voluntary, and not to be aided by the court (f).

Where trustees to preserve contingent remainders were called upon to join for the purpose of a new settlement, upon the marriage of the eldest son, making the tenant in tail tenant for life, and continuing instead of destroying the object of the settlement, in such cases it has been said the court would compel them to join (g); and also in some cases, though not for that purpose, but under some particular distress, or other special circumstances (h); but, generally, in all other cases, and where instead of the ordinary limitation to a tenant for life, it was to the husband for a term of years, if he should so long live, with remainder to trustees during his life, to preserve contingent remainders, the court would leave it to the discretion of the trustees (i). If the trustees improperly used their discretion, or refused to exercise it upon a proper occasion, the court, it was said, would interfere (k).

And where the court at the instance of an eldest son, ordered trustees to join in the destruction of contingent remainders, it sometimes imposed conditions upon the son, as that he should make a provision for a sister (l).

Trustees in a voluntary settlement have, upon the bill of creditors,

(a) Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 678; Symance v. Tattam, 1 Atk. 614.

(b) Mansell v. Mansell, For. 253; S. C. MS.; Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 303, 307; Pye v. George, 1 P. Wms. 128; S. C. 2 Salk. 680; and in Eq. Ab. 384; Biscoe v. Perkins, 1 V. & B. 491.

(c) 1 P. Wms. 129; Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 680.

(d) Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 304; but see Ib. 305; Tipping v. Piggot, 1 Eq. Ab. 385.

(e) See Barnard v. Large, 1 Bro. C. C. 535.

(f) Tipping v. Piggot, 1 Eq. Abr. 385, § 2;

16 Ves. 304; though Jenkins v. Keymes, 1 Lev. 237, seems to the contrary.

(g) As in Winnington v. Foley, 1 P. Wms. 536; and see Symance v. Tattam, 1 Atk. 613; but see Biscoe v. Perkins, 1 V. & B. 492.

(h) See Barnard v. Large, Ambl. 774.

(i) See Woodhouse v. Hoskins, 3 Atk. 24; and arguendo Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 291; Fearne, Cont. Rem. p. 331, 5th ed. and cases there cited.

(k) Barnard v. Large, 1 Bro. C. C. 535; Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 307.

(l) Frewin v. Charleton, 1 Eq. Ab. p. 386, quoted 16 Ves. 304.

claiming under a subsequent conveyance in trust for payment of debts, been decreed to join in destroying the contingent remainders (a). And such trustees (there being no issue) have been decreed to join in a sale where the settlement was only of an equity of redemption, and the wife consented to the sale (b).

It was said, that trustees ought never to join in the destruction of contingent remainders without the direction of the court (c); but it seems, that as the court only decrees the trustees to do what they ought to do, it was not necessary for trustees, in clear cases, to apply to the court; and that the absence of that sanction would not render the act a breach of trust (d). The doctrine on this subject was, however, involved in difficulties; so much so, that Lord Eldon declared upon a review of the cases as to the duties and liabilities of trustees, "The task of deducing from them what is the true principle, is greater than I have abilities well to execute. The cases," said his Lordship, "are uniform to this extent, that if trustees, before the first tenant in tail is of age, join in destroying the remainders, they are liable for a breach of trust; and so is every purchaser under them with notice; but when we come to the situation of trustees to preserve remainders, who have joined in a recovery after the first tenant in tail is of age, it is difficult to say more than that no judge in equity has gone the length of holding that he would punish them as for a breach of trust, even in a case where they would not have been directed to join. The result is, that they seem to have laid down, as the safest rule for trustees, but certainly most inconvenient for the general interests of mankind, that it is better for trustees never to destroy the remainders, even if tenant in tail of age concurs, without the direction of the court" (e).

Trustees created by express limitation, for the purpose of preserving contingent estates, are guilty of a neglect of their duty and answerable accordingly, if they permit the tenant for life liable to impeachment for waste, or a tenant pur autre vie who by the nature of his estate is liable for waste, to cut down or destroy timber (f); their duty is to preserve the inheritance as entire as possible to go according to the succession established by the donor: I hold it, said Lord Hardwicke, agreeable to natural justice and in support of right to construe their

(a) Basset v. Clapham, 1 P. Wms. p. 358, quoted 16 Ves. 305.

(b) Platt v. Sprigg, 2 Vern. 303.

(c) See Fearne, Cont. Rem. pp. 335-6, and Cox's note to Basset v. Clapham, 1 P. Wms. p. 358.

(d) See Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 310;

Woodhouse v. Hoskins, 3 Atk. 24.

(e) Per Lord Eldon, in Biscoe v. Perkins, 1 V. & B. 491; and see Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 301 to 314, where Lord Eldon examines all the cases.

(f) Stansfield v. Habergham, 10 Ves. 283; Garth v. Cotton, 1 Dick. 200-1.

trust in the most liberal manner ; the inheritance consists of the land, timber, and mines, and cannot be preserved entire without preserving all three : in many estates the timber is the most valuable part ; in more the mines ; and the destruction of the one, or the exhausting of the other, might take away or be an alienation of the best part of the inheritance (a) : and it has been held that such trustees ought not to permit the tenant for life or years, by the destruction of his estate, to bring forward a remainder to himself or another for the purpose of cutting timber (b). In the case of copyholds the lord's estate would preserve contingent remainders, without any express nomination of trustees for that purpose ; but Lord Eldon seems to have doubted whether it was his duty to interpose actively to prevent waste (c).

Here I conclude the subject of Equitable Estates and Interests. I have already noticed the reason that has induced me not to include the general subject of Legacies (d) : nor does this volume embrace the general subject of Charities (e). Some of the doctrines in regard to the Equitable Interests of the vendor and purchaser under a contract for sale, have also been omitted as more properly belonging to the title of specific performance, which is one of the subjects embraced in the second principal head or division of the jurisdiction of the court. With these exceptions, I hope that the present volume will be found to contain a general view of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, in regard to every description of Equitable Estate or interest which may come before the Court of Chancery for adjudication.

(a) Garth v. Cotton, 1 Dick. p. 196, from Lord Hardwicke's written judgment.

(b) Ibid. 3 Atk. 751 ; 1 Ves. 524, 546 ; Stansfield v. Habergham, 10 Ves. 279.

(c) 10 Ves. 282.

(d) Supra, p. 580.

(e) The general nature of the jurisdiction in respect of charities is described, Vol. i. pp. 587-593.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. I.

Sir A. Hart's Exposition of the Rule as to Interest on Balances.—Supra, p. 921.

“ We are not to look so closely into the dates of a running account to calculate interest upon it, as to deter respectable men from undertaking the office of executor, and on the other hand we are not loosely to permit any man, however respectable, to retain the money of others in his hands without making it productive. An executor's duty in this respect is to deal with the trust estate as a provident man would deal with his own ; and every provident man makes interest of his money when he has got together a sum which he thinks to be worth while to lay out at interest.” “ But a court of equity takes upon itself to distinguish : if there has been an actual use of the money by the executor, then the court imposes the highest rate of interest ; but if no benefit has been sought by the executor from using the money, then that is a case for a reduced rate of interest. In looking accurately into the cases a difference will be found where an executor retaining a balance, was at the same time liable to outstanding demands, which, though not called for, it was uncertain when they might be made; the balance in such a case may be called only an ostensible balance. Again, in taking the account to ascertain balances in the executor's hands for the purpose of charging him with interest; if he made any payments by anticipation to legatees, regard is to be had to that fact:" Flanagan v. Nolan, 1 Molloy, 84, 85, 86: the remainder of the judgment is also material. In Heighington v. Grant, 1 Phillips, 604, the Lord Chancellor confirmed the general doctrine laid down by Sir A. Hart.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. II.

Executors and Trustees joining in Receipts.—Supra, p. 929.

Mr. Justice Story has collected from the judgments of Chancellor Kent in Monell v. Monell, 5 Johns, Ch. R., U. S. 926; and Clark v. Clark, 8 Paige, R. 152, the following as the result of the authorities. "It is, that, if two executors, guardians, or trustees, join in a receipt for trust-money, it is prima facie although not absolutely conclusive evidence, that the money came to the hands of both. But either of them may show by satisfactory proof, that his joining in the receipt was necessary, or merely formal and that the money was, in fact, all received by his companion. And, without such satisfactory proof, he ought to be held jointly liable to account to the cestui que trust for the money, upon the fair implication resulting from his acts, that he did not intend to exclude a joint responsibility. But, wherever either a trustee or an executor, by his own negligence or laches, suffers his co-trustee or co-executor to receive and waste the trust fund or assets of the testator, when he has the means of preventing such receipt and waste by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence; then, and in such a case, such trustee or executor will be held personally responsible for the loss occasioned by such receipt and waste of his co-trustee or co-executor."

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—No. III.

Wilful Default, Supplemental Bill to charge Trustee or Executor with—Settled Account, Executor de son Tort—Admission of Assets—Charge and Discharge—Parties—Orders for carrying out the Stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96 (supra, p. 49); Costs under that Act.

Some recent decisions on the following points, which may frequently arise in suits to which trustees or executors are parties, may perhaps be usefully referred to.

As to Wilful Default, Supplemental Bill to Charge, supra, p. 941.—A plaintiff, who has taken a common decree against a trustee or executor, cannot, unless under special circumstances, and on leave obtained, file a new bill to charge the trustee or executor with wilful default; Hodson v. Ball, 1 Phil. 177 (but note, Bainbrigge v. Baddeley, 9 Beav. 538, referred to, int. al., 10 Beav. 440, has been reversed by Lord Cottenham). But if a case for it has been made by the plaintiff, and he has notwithstanding abandoned it though admitted in the answer, a co-defendant may file a supplemental bill to charge the defendant the trustee with wilful default, but the decree will be confined to the specific instances alleged and proved; Berrow v. Morris, 10 Beav. 441, et seq.; Shepherd v. Towgood, Turn. & R. 379.

Settled Accounts—Executor de son Tort, supra, p. 942.—A direction to the Master to take the account against the defendants, not disturbing any settled account, cannot be directed on an allegation that one of the defendants has settled the account of his receipts and payments with the other—for instance, the defendant executor de son tort with the rightful executor: nor can an executor de son tort in any case discharge himself from his liability to the persons beneficially interested by settling his account with the rightful executor; Carmichael v. Carmichael, 2 Phill. 105. An executor de son tort has all the liabilities, but none of the privileges, that belong to that character; ibid. 103.

As to the course to be pursued in Administering the estate of an executor, where he has bequeathed part of the testator's assets in specie as his own (supra, p. 943), see Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 13 Sim. 544.

As to what amounts to an Admission of Assets.—As a general rule, the assent by an executor to a legacy is an admission of assets for its payment; see Attorney-General v. Higham, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 645; and see Attorney-General v. Chapman, 3 Beav. 256. However, payment of one legacy will not of itself bind the executor, as an admission of assets, to pay all the legacies. "Suppose a case," said the Vice-Chancellor Sir J. Wigram on a late occasion, Postlethwaite v. Mounsey, 6 Hare, 33, n. (1842), "in which small legacies were given to servants, and the executor chose, on his own responsibility, to pay these legacies at once, without reference to the state of the assets, it would be hard to say that he had thereby bound himself to pay all the legacies given by the will:" and the Vice-Chancellor in that case, where the defendant had paid one legacy and the interest on the others, as he alleged, under mistake and also in ignorance of the true construction of the will, declined to hold the defendant to be absolutely bound personally to pay the legacies. In that case (6 Hare, pp. 34, 35) most of the material cases on the subject of the admission of assets may be found: and see Purcell v. Blennerhassett, 3 Jo. & Lat. 42, and Clark v. Bates, xii. Jur. p. 597, before the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, where the circumstances were held not to amount to an admission of assets. An admission of assets to pay testamentary expences and legacies is an admission which embraces the costs, Roch v. Callen, 6 Hare, 531. If the bill prays for an account, and nothing more, the payment of legacies cannot be insisted upon by a creditor at the hearing, as making the executor personally liable for the payment of his debt, Savage v. Lane, 4 Hare, 33; and where the case is properly made against the executor, the circumstances under which the payment of the legacies was made may be examined into; ibid. 35. An actual admission of assets cannot, generally speaking, be got rid of; nor does it follow that accounts are to be taken in those cases where, with the denial of assets, the answer discloses circumstances which show a personal liability for what is asked; Rogers v. Soutten, 2 Keen, 600; Savage v. Lane, 6 Hare, 36. And see on the subject of the admission of assets, Davys v. Pritchard, before the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, 6 June, 1848, not yet reported, and Prichard v. Murray, xii. Jur. 616.

Charge and Discharge.—As to the effect of reading admissions to charge an executor or trustee, which are coupled with what may amount to a discharge in the whole or in part, see Inge v. Kenny, 4 Hare, 452; and Freeman v. Tatham, 5 Hare, 329.

As to Parties.—On a question as to the liability of trustees to replace a trust fund belonging to classes, or a class, of persons—as children, or grandchildren, or the like—as a general rule, all the persons constituting the class must be parties, and there must be evidence of that fact at the hearing; for if the Court, at the instance of some, should decide against the claim, the trustees would be liable to another suit, but the trustees are entitled to have the question decided once for all, Philipson v. Gatty, 6 Hare, 28.

A series of Orders (see 2 Phillips, Append. p. xiii.) have been issued by Lord Cottenham for carrying out the provisions of the act 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, for the “better securing of trust funds, and for the relief of trustees” (v. sup. p. 49); and that act has come into full operation. In a late case (Re Bartholomew’s will, xiii. Jur. 380) a petition was presented by the representatives of an infant for payment out of court to them of the amount of a legacy paid in by the trustees of the will under that act: the residuary legatees, having made an adverse claim, were served: the question was, how their costs were to be paid, the amount of the particular legacy only having been paid into court. The Vice-Chancellor of England, unwillingly, ordered the costs to be paid out of the fund in court; observing, that the act operated an injustice in treating the fund paid into court in the same manner as if it had been carried over from the testator’s general estate to a particular account in a cause, and in allowing an executor, by paying the money into court, to put the parties in a worse situation than they would have been if a bill had been filed, in which latter case they would get their costs out of the general estate; (see Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 178, as to the general rule;) and see Re Sharpe, 15 Sim. 471, and Re Staples, xiii. Jur. 273.

INDEX TO THE CONTENTS OF VOL. II.,

AND TO THE PRACTICAL PART OF VOL. I.,

INCLUDING REFERENCES TO SOME OMITTED AND SUBSEQUENT CASES.

---

N.B.—Where no Roman Numeral is affixed, the reference is to the Second Volume ; where there are references to both Volumes, i. is prefixed to the pages of the First Volume, and ii. to the pages of the Second Volume.

---

ABATEMENT. See DEBTS, LEGACIES.

of legacies, 297, 343.

of annuities, 330.

ACCOUNT. See TRUSTEE, EXECUTOR, MORTGAGEE.

between mortgagor and mortgagee, 805, et seq.

principles on which the account is taken against mortgagee in possession, 806.

where he has worked mines, ib.

mortgagor liable to loss occasioned by refusing or turning out responsible tenant, ib.

not allowed to charge for trouble, 807.

when he will be allowed salary paid to bailiff, &c. ib.

allowance for repairs and improvements, renewal fines, &c. ib. 808.

to what extent he is liable to keep the premises in repair, 808.

when the account will be directed to be taken with Rests against him, 809, 810.

will be directed equally in respect of occupation, as of rents received, 811.

how and at what rate of interest he shall be charged from the time the mortgage was paid off by receipt of rents, 811, 812.

costs, 812.

appropriation of moneys paid to mortgagor, 813.

account settled in a suit, between mortgagor and first mortgagee, said to be binding on subsequent incumbrancers, 812.

mortgagee, generally speaking, as much entitled to his costs as to the money lent, 813.

costs of parties brought before the court by reason of mortgagee having devised or settled his interest, 815.

in what cases he will be refused his costs or be made to pay costs, 814.

Trustee and executor must always be ready with their accounts, 921.

as to surcharging and falsifying accounts of trustees and executors, 942.

settled. See TRUSTEE, EXECUTOR DE SON TORT.

ACCUMULATION :

On direction for, until conversion, who entitled to profits, 43, 184.

Trusts for, 25, 164.

Mr. Thellusson's case, 164.

statute 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98 ("Thellusson Act"), 165.

operation of the statute on, 180.

periods for which to be made, 165.

Mr. Hargrave's observations on 3rd and 4th clauses of the first section, 166.

trusts for payment of debts exempted from, ib. 352.

testator only at liberty to take one of the periods, 167.

construction of 4th clause of section 1, conflicting decisions, ib.

power of donor to dispose of accumulations permitted by clause 4, 170.

question whether act confined to cases of express direction, or extends to cases arising by construction of law, ib. 173.

how differing from the provisions of the mortmain act, 183.

which exceeds or may exceed the prescribed limits, how far void, 181.

instances, ib.

ACCUMULATION—continued.

- where void only for the excess, 182.
- who entitled to rents and interests for the excess or prohibited interval, 183, 184.
- where invalid in their creation, rejected, 182.
- where void, who entitled to rents and interest, 183, 236.
- directions for maintenance and advancement, good, 184.
- maintenance out of fund, 185.
- liabilities of trustees, 190.
- trust for, by construction of law, 170.
- none on legacy payable at a future day, 171.
- nor on similar gift of residue, ib.
- exceptions to these rules, ib. n. (a).
- otherwise where residue given on a contingency, ib. 172, n. (d).
- differing from an executory devise of lands, ib.
- on executory devise to take effect on contingency, 173.
- if of specific estate, rents go to heir or residuary devisee, ib.
- if of residue, rents accumulate, ib.
- of funds in court, not within the statute, 180, n. (a).
- of rents for renewal of leaseholds, goes to tenant for life where renewal cannot be effected, 551.
- beyond legal limits added to capital, where, 569.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

- what is sufficient to take a case out of Statute of Limitations, i. 259.
- and see Holland v. Clark, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 151.

ACQUIESCENCE

- of cestui que trust, effect of, 937, 944.

ACTION of assumpsit. See ASSUMPSIT.

- nature of, i. 245.
- on the case, i. 240, 244.

ACTIONS.

- statutes for limitation of actions, i. 255.
- See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, ASSUMPSIT, DETINUE, REPLEVIN.

ADMINISTRATION. See ASSETS, PERSONAL ESTATE, DEBTS, EXECUTOR.ADMISSIONS.

- effect of reading admission to charge coupled with statement and amounting to discharge, 953, 954.

ADVANCEMENT. See SATISFACTION, PORTION.

- by a parent's purchasing in name of child, 214, 217, 225.
- doctrine of chancery as to, in respect of double portions, 427, et seq.
- following a gift by will, 428.
- gift by will after a settlement, 429.
- not every advance by parent to be considered as a portion, 431.

ADVERSE ENJOYMENT. See TIME.ADVOWSON.

- mortgage of, 629.

AFFIRMANCE.

- subsequent not sufficient, where act done not according to the requisitions of the trust, 927, n.

AGENT.

- a trustee for his principal where, 301.
- what description of, liable to account, Terry v. Wachter, 15 Sim. 448.

ALIEN.

- suits by, 14.
- cannot be trustee, 32.
- nor a cestui que trust, Burney v. Macdonald, 15 Sim. 14.

ALIENATION.

- restraints on, 89, 520.
  - how affected by bankruptcy, ib.
  - in the case of a married woman, 520.
- See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

ALIMONY.

- court of chancery has no jurisdiction respecting, 540, n. (4).
- except in granting writ of ne exeat regno, ib.

AMBIGUITAS PATENS AND AMBIGUITAS LATENS. See EVIDENCE.

ANNUITY.

- loans on grants of, 624, et seq.
- effect of borrowing money on annuity, ib.
- proviso for repurchase, ib.
- charged on estate, estate liable in the hands of a purchaser, 369.
  - on rents and profits, 329, 370.
  - with a paramount charge of debts, 382.
- distinction between a gift of, and of a capital sum to produce, 578, 583, n. IV.
- charged on property which becomes deficient, 370, 578.
- case where annuitant not entitled to have surplus proceeds invested, applied to the payment of arrears, 578.

APPOINTMENT. See POWER.

- to a class, of which some cannot take, void, 107.
- unequal, under general power, 410.
- fraudulent, where parent seeks to benefit himself, 417.

APPORTIONMENT.

- of an entire contract, 582, n. III.
- of rents and dividends between tenant for life and remainderman, 577, 578, 582, note III.
- of fines and expences of renewing leaseholds between same, 545, 550.
- See TENANT FOR LIFE.

ARTICLES. See SETTLEMENT, HUSBAND AND WIFE.

- construction of, 26, n. (f).
  - difference between, and wills, 136.
- provision for issue in, 138—140.
- settlement reformed by reference to, 141.
- "Usual Powers," directed by, what are, 142.
- direction in, that chattels shall go as heir-looms, effect of, 157.

ASSETS. See PERSONAL ESTATE, DEBTS, LEGACIES, EXECUTORS, PARTNERSHIP.

- legal as distinguished from equitable, i. 421, 513, 515, 583, 584.
- not marshalled in favour of charity legacies, 233.
- equitable, doctrine as to, 313.
  - lands devised to executor to sell, are, 315, 316.
  - rule liable to be controlled, 317.
  - effect of statutes 1 Will. IV. c. 47, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, on administration of, 313, 319.
- creditors have no lien on, 377.
- administration of, doctrine of exoneration, 332, et seq.
- trust estate in fee made assets for payment of debts by statute of frauds, i. 504, ii. 40, n.

ASSUMPSIT.

- action of, i. 245.
- what is a sufficient consideration to support, i. 245, 246.
  - moral obligation, i. 245.
- implied undertakings which are usually the subject of, i. 245, 246.

ASSUMPSIT—continued.

in the nature of a bill in equity, i. 247.

general issue in, i. 248.

law as to bills of exchange and promissory notes, policies of insurance, and commercial law generally administered by means of this action, i. 248.

distinction between action of assumpsit, and action founded on tort, i. 249, 250.

ATTENDANT TERMS.

doctrine as to, i. 514—516.

satisfied terms whether attendant or not, now put an end to by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, i. 292, 293, 516.

ATTORNEY. See SOLICITOR.

a trustee for his client, where, 301.

BAILEE.

liability of, at law, 924, n.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

only bound to recognise persons having legal title, 309.

though stock charged under a judge's order, ib.

BANKER.

not a trustee, 309.

BANKRUPT.

may dispose of his statutory allowance, 5, n. (f).

trustee, trust not affected, 40.

gift over, on legatee becoming, 89.

proviso for maintenance of, 91.

administration of partnership effects, when one partner bankrupt, 213.

settlement of a man's own property to go over on his becoming bankrupt, invalid, 503.

conveyance of all a trader's property on act of, 351.

gift over, in event of, 89, 91.

jurisdiction in. See JURISDICTION, and see Tarleton v. Hornby, 1 Yo. & Coll. 172 ; Thompson v. Derham, 1 Hare, 358 ; and Major v. Auckland, 3 Hare, 77 ; and Pim v. Wilson, 2 Phill. 656.

BETTER EQUITY.

what will constitute a, 729.

BOND. See RELEASE.

conduct and declarations may amount to release of, 913.

when bond debt may be tacked, 724, 725.

BONUS.

arising on property given to several for life interests, who entitled to, 569.

CAPITA.

where gift is taken per, 419, 420, 471, 473.

where children take per capita with their parents, 155, n.

and see CHILDREN.

CAPITAL.

when so much capital as will produce an annual sum shall be considered as given, and when an annuity for life only, 575.

CARGO.

mortgage of, 776.

CESTUI QUE TRUST. See TRUST, TRUSTEE.

trust estate, liable for debts of, 41.

rights of, where trust terminated, 47.

entitled to a conveyance of the legal estate, where, 47, 520.

indemnity to trustee by, where, 47.

cannot be compelled to execute a release to trustee, ib.

entitled to aid of the court where trust perfected, 52.

where a stranger to the contract may be, 280, 287.

trustee cannot purchase from, 300.

not necessary party to suit, where, 389, n.

CHARGE. See PORTIONS, PURCHASE-MONEY, DEBTS, TRUSTS, LEGACIES, RENTS AND PROFITS, SALE, ANNUITY.

for payment of debts and legacies, 311, et seq.

merges in estate, when person entitled to becomes owner, 420, 424, n.

paid off by tenant for life, 345.

See also, as to charges of debts, Morse v. Tucker, 5 Hare, 79, Eardley v. Owen, 10 Beav. 572, and Purcell v. Blennerhassett, 3 Jo. & Lat. 24, 41.

when it sinks for the benefit of the devisee, 23, n.

conflicting decisions referred to, ib.

the rule stated by Sir J. Leach as regards residuary devisees, 23, n. (b).

CHARGE and DISCHARGE. See ADMISSIONS.CHARITIES.

jurisdiction of Court of Chancery as to, i. 587—593.

administration of, 33, 34.

certainly requisite in gifts to, 79.

no resulting trusts in gifts for, 246.

Court of Chancery will administer the fund cy pres, where, 79, 247.

where no object named, fund administered under King's Sign Manual, ib.

construction of wills founding, ib.

application of increased income of property given to, 248.

gift to, binding on purchaser for value, with notice, 289.

assets not marshalled in favour of, 233.

CHATTELS.

absolute interest in first taker, where, 145, n. (c).

direction to settle as heir-looms as far as law will allow, effect of, 157.

CHEQUE.

drawn in favour of a particular person, 59.

CHILDREN. See ISSUE, TRUSTS, PORTIONS, PARENT, SATISFACTION, MAINTENANCE.

purchases by parents in name of, (see ADVANCEMENT,) 215.

"younger," doctrine as to portions for, (see PORTIONS,) 393.

who are, 411, 423, n.

when to be ascertained, 414.

within what time they must be born to share in legacy, 417.

maintenance of, (see MAINTENANCE,) 459, et seq.

gift to a man and his children for undefined interests, how they take, 468, 471.

take, per stirpes or per capita, where, 419, 471, 473, n. II.

always included in settlements directed by the court, 488.

though they have no independent right, ib.

may be barred by the wife waiving her settlement, 489.

when they may enforce the settlement, ib.

not entitled to maintenance out of their mother's separate property, 492.

covenants respecting, in separation deeds, 529, 541, n. VII.

CHOSSES IN ACTION. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.

nature of chose in action in the view of the common law, 850.

originally not assignable, 850.

exceptions, 851, 852.

assignable in equity, 852.

consideration, 853, n.

now assignable at law, 854.

requisites to render assignment of effectual, against third persons, 856, et seq.

notice, 857, 859.

to one of several obligors, sufficient, 858.

duties of trustees in respect of, 857, 858.

not necessary as between the assignor and assignee, 858.

condition of debtor who has notice of assignment, 858.

notice to mortgagor not necessary in assignment of mortgage, 859.

interest which creditor has by deposit of deeds may be assigned, ib.

order given by person having funds in the hands of another, when it amounts to an assignment or appropriation, 860, 862, and see 59.

CHOSSES IN ACTION—continued.

- what will and will not amount to an appropriation of a policy of insurance, or other chose in action, to the payment of a debt, 861.
- assignment of contract for sale or purchase, 863.
- generally assignee of chose in action takes subject to all the equities and liabilities to which the property was liable in the hands of the assignor, 863.
  - exceptions, 863, 864.
  - effect of length of time, 864.
  - assignee of mortgage, 864.
- assignment of legacy, 864, 865.
- court binds the property, 867.
- things which cannot be assigned, 867.
  - half pay, ib.
  - pensions, ib.
  - things which can only be produced by litigation, 868, 872.
- maintenance and champerty as affecting the assignment of rights, 869, 871.

COLONIES. See JURISDICTION.

- sale of lands in, ordered, 8.
- will of lands in, not triable here, ib. n. (d).
- appointment of managers and consignees of property in, 15.

COMPOSITION DEEDS. See DEBTS.

- agreements for, enforced, 353.

CONDITION. See TRUSTEE.

- illegal, attached to absolute gift, donee not bound by, 229.
- annexed to portions must be complied with, 399.
- in law annexed to estate for life, i. 152.
- cases of, distinguished from cases of election, 592.

CONDITIONAL LIMITATION, i. 154.

- distinction between condition and conditional limitation, i. 538.
- and contingent remainder, ib.

CONSIDERATION. See EQUITABLE INTERESTS, CHOSSES IN ACTION.

- what sufficient to support an action of assumpsit, i. 246.
- what sufficient for the creation of an ancient use, i. 450.
- every will implies a consideration in itself, i. 520.
- past seduction and cohabitation not a good consideration to support a grant of an annuity. Beaumont v. Reeve, 15 Law J. 141, Q. B.

CONSTRUCTION. See ISSUE, WILL, DEED, EVIDENCE, ELECTION, WORDS.

- of Deeds and Wills—general rules, i. 519—550.
- interpretation of every instrument depends on matter of fact and of law, i. 521.
- rules for, arising upon matter of law, to be determined by the judge, i. 521, 549.
- rules of construction as distinguished from rules of law, i. 527, 528, n., 534, 536, 544, 557.
- distinction between words of modification of the estate and limitation, i. 521, n.
- generally same rules of interpretation applied to deeds as to wills, i. 523.
  - See Eno v. Eno, 4 Hare, 171.
- distinctions, i. 523, 547. [et v. infra, in this title.
- intention, the governing principle, i. 527, 561.
- bounds to the application of this doctrine, i. 546, 547.
- words to subserve to the intention, i. 527.
  - ut res magis valeat*, i. 527.
- intention collected on grounds of a judicial nature, i. 527.
- meaning of words used, not the intention at large to be ascertained, i. 556 ; ii. 592, 595.
- a man's grant taken most forcibly against himself, i. 528.
  - deed-poll, ib.
- construction to be on the entire instrument, i. 528.
  - and so that all parts may agree, i. 529.
- when deed cannot take effect according to the letter, if possible, it is to have effect in CONSTRUCTION—continued.

- some other way, i. 529, 530.
- ut res magis valeat quam pereat*, ib.
- rules adopted from civil law as to legatory matters, i. 523, 524, and n. (d).
- construction of Conditions, generally the same in equity as at law, i. 524.
- generally construction of Limitations the same in equity as at law, i. 524.
- qualification of this rule as regards Executory Limitations in wills and articles, i. 525, 526; and see EXECUTORY TRUSTS.
- of wills, i. 530; ii. 17, 18, 27.
- devises more favourably expounded to pursue the intention, i. 530.
- reason assigned can only control doubtful words, i. 535, 536.
- estate by implication, 530.
- words controlled by gift over, ib.
- cross remainders, i. 530, 531.
- cy pres*, or approximation, i. 531.
- applied to model limitations which would otherwise be void for remoteness, i. 531, 532, 333.
- tenancy in common, i. 534.
- of particular devises, 27; and see Garratt v. Cockerell, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 506.
- of Deeds, i. 534, et seq.; ii. 29.
- intention, even in a deed, may sometimes prevail over technical words, i. 534.
- Cholmondeley v. Clinton*, stated, i. 550 to 553.
- difference in construction of deeds and wills, as to future estates, i. 534.
- construction of deed may be, to some extent, influenced by recitals, i. 535.
- as regards the subject, ib.
- indemnity bond, ib.
- intention as applicable to the effect of the Statute of Uses, i. 536.
- repugnant clauses in will or deed—how rules to be applied to, i. 536.
- words in the habendum of a deed, i. 536.
- plain Mistakes will not vitiate a gift, even in a deed, i. 538, 541.
- misrecital, ib.
- gift, by a description, which is erroneous in part only, i. 539.
- Falsa demonstratio non nocet*, i. 539.
- misdescription in a will, i. 539.
- legacy revoked in erroneous supposition that the legatee was dead, i. 539.
- of foreign contracts, 13, 14.
- of wills according to domicile, ib. n. (e).
- of marriage articles, 26, n. (f).
- difference of, in articles and wills, 136.
- in same instrument, 140.
- rules of, in regard to trusts, 25, 26, 295.
- the purpose does not always confine the gift. See RESULTING TRUST.
- Surrender to be construed by the same rules as common-law conveyance, i. 548.
- power exercised by person having also an interest, i. 549.

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS, i. 511; ii. 193, et seq. See TRUSTS.
whether purchaser will be affected by notice of, 195.

CONTINGENT INTERESTS. See VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENTS. in land now pass by deed at law, and semble in equity, 879.

CONTINGENT REMAINDERS.

- nature of, i. 155, 156.
- how destroyed or rendered incapable of taking effect under the old law, i. 157.
- now rendered indestructible by stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 4, i. 156, 291, 500, n. (d); ii. 948.
- trustees to preserve, under the old system, nature of their office and duties, 948—951.

CONTRACT. See VOLUNTARY CONTRACT, COVENANT.

- foreign, construction of, 13, 14.
- where executed in English form, ib.
- stipulations in, in favour of third parties, how enforced, 275.

CONTRIBUTION, 837, et seq.

differs from marshalling only in specie, 837.

when the right to arises upon the instruments themselves, 837, 838.

as regards devisees and legatees, 838, 839.

devisees and specific legatees each contribute in proportion to the payment of specialty debts, 839.

Tombs v. Roch (2 Coll.), 839, n., 847, n.

between Sureties, i. 661—663 ; ii. 843—845.

CONVERSION.

tenant for life entitled until, 44.

where lands belong to a partnership, 208, 580, n. II.

questions arising as to, between heir and next of kin, 233.

out and out, 240, n. [et v. infra in this title].

for the purposes of the will, 234.

where land directed to be sold, surplus goes to the heir, 233, 234.

in the case of a mixed fund, 235.

where money is directed to be laid out in land, and part is undisposed of, ib.

out and out to the exclusion of the heir, 237, 240, n. (a).

not by a declaration, that proceeds of real estate, be considered personalty, 238.

where next of kin take by implication, 238.

in questions between the heir and residuary legatee, 239.

where a gift of Residue will carry undisposed of proceeds, 241.

where a portion of residue of mixed fund lapses, heir takes his share, 242.

lapsed proceeds of realty are personal estate in the heir, ib.

arising from the maxim that "what ought to be done is to be considered as done," 253, 256.

land directed to be sold, and vice versa, 256.

direction to convert, must be explicit, 257.

where money directed to be laid out in freehold or leaseholds, ib.

where dependent on a request or approbation, ib. 261.

under power to convert, does not arise unless fund invested, 258.

where discretion vested in trustees, 41, 259.

mortgage not a proper execution of trust for sale, where conversion clearly intended, 369.

for sale "with all convenient speed," 42, 260, 565.

real estate charged with debts, 261.

makes real estate liable to legacy duty, 267.

does not arise where purpose for which it was directed has ceased, 261.

persons who would take a collateral benefit not entitled to call for, ib. 263.

where intent was to rely on a personal covenant, 263.

principle carried out in all its consequences unless controlled, 264.

not extended to what might have been done, 265.

not in favour of mere stranger, as the crown or lord by escheat, 266.

where testator has contracted for sale of real estates, 267.

in whose favour the court will interfere, 268.

where the question arises on a devise, ib.

where on a contract, 269.

where the contract affects specific property, ib.

where it does not affect specific property, 272.

qualification of rule as to, 270.

where property directed to be converted gets to person entitled either way, ib.

where same person debtor and creditor, ib.

where the property is outstanding in a trustee, person entitled may declare his election, 271, 293, n.

where consumable property given to several in succession, 41, 42, 552.

rule as between tenant for life and those in remainder, 41, 43, 44, 552, 580, n. I.

a question of intention to be collected from the will, 552 to 557.

what income allowed to tenant for life of residue for first year, where it must be converted, 558—568, 580, nn. I. II.

bonuses must be invested as capital, 569.

within what time to be made, 42, 260, 565.

where the profits of a partnership are directed to be settled, 580, n. I.

CONVEYANCES. See DEEDS, TORTIOUS CONVEYANCES.
at common law, i. 161—164.

COPYRIGHT, statutes in regard to, i. 183.

CORPORATIONS,

may be trustees of personal estate, 33; and of real estate for charity, ib.
not of real, for private purposes, ib.
effect of Municipal Corporations Act, 33—35; and see Attorney-General v. Corporation of Plymouth, 9 Beav. 67.
money paid for the compulsory purchase of one part of their lands may be applied for the payment of incumbrances on another part. Ex parte Corporation of Cambridge, 6 Hare, 30.

COSTS. See TRUSTEE, EXECUTOR, MORTGAGE, ACCOUNT. in mortgage suits, 678, 691, 692. And see FORECLOSURE, REDEMPTION, TENDER.
mortgage to a solicitor to secure, 630.

COURT OF CHANCERY. See JURISDICTION.

COVENANT. See "WHAT OUGHT TO BE DONE CONSIDERED AS DONE."
where a person has covenanted to do an act, and he does something that may be construed into a performance, 204.
not specifically executed in favour of volunteer, 889.

CROWN, RIGHTS OF THE, i. 177, 178, 504; ii. 32, 33, 237, 266. And see FORFEITURE. cannot avoid an equitable mortgage or the lien of a factor, &c., 774, 786.

CREDITORS. See JUDGMENT, PARTNERSHIP, DEBTS, TRUSTS.

proceedings by, against debtor's equitable interest in real estate, 41.
trusts for, doctrine as to, 58, 59.
interest of, in joint partnership effects, 212.
voluntary conveyances not binding against, 185, 290, 887.
how far entitled against collaterals in a settlement, ib., 292.
legatees, trustees for, where, 297.
cannot claim in competition with, 326.
how affected by devises for payment of debts, 313.
in suits by one of several, all may come in, 314.
proof of debts in, 361—363, n.
interest given in, 325.
trustee for sale cannot sell during, 382.
specialty, must bring into hotchpot what they have received of personal estate, 318.
under trust deeds for payment of debts, 349, 357.
suits affecting, 353.
what creditors entitled to the benefit of, 355.
when entitled to interest, ib.
must give up liens, 360.
cannot sue for trust property, ib.
how affected by sale of testator's estate by executor, 371, 375, 377.
have no lien on the assets, 377.

CURTESY, estate by, i. 145, 501; and see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CYPRES, 126. And see CONSTRUCTION.

DAMAGES,

on unliquidated demand, 844.

DEBTS,

order in which debts are to be paid at common law, i. 192, 193.
all equally have claim to payment in the view of the Court of Chancery, i. 421. See EQUITABLE ASSETS [and infra in this section]. order in which funds for payment of debts are applied, 817.
personal estate, first fund, 334, 346, n., 818.
order may be varied by testator, 822, 823.
trusts by will for payment of, 312, 365.
liability of heir for payment of, ib.
effect of statutes, 3 & 4 Will. & Mary, c. 14; 1 Will. IV. c. 47; and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, on, 313, 319.
Doctrine of equitable assets, ib.

DEBTS—continued.

- charge for payment of, how it affects specialty creditors, 313, 319.
- constitutes the assets equitable, and to be administered equally among special and simple-contract creditors, 314.
- requisites of, 315.
- on rents and profits will authorize a sale, 316, 547.
- specialty creditors must bring into hotchpot what they have received out of personal estate, 318.
- creditors having security not affected by rule of distribution, ib.
- statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, does not apply where there is, 319.
- importance of ascertaining whether there is or not, 320.
- what will amount to, 321.
  - charge by implication, 322.
  - express charge not liable to be defeated by subsequent devises, ib.
  - by preliminary words, 323.
- effect of, on testator's real representatives, ib. 367.
- makes a sale necessary where, 367, 368.
- by Married woman on her separate estate, 324.
- by whom property to be sold under, 365, 367.
- difference between a charge and a power given to executors to sell, 366.
- constitutes a trust, 368.
- See CHARGE.
- exoneration of personal estate from payment of, 333, 818, 819.
- of mortgaged lands, 334, 346, 823, 824, 826.
- only where the debt is proper debt of mortgagor, 335, 824, 825.
- what amounts to, 336, 337, 342, 346.
- marshalling of assets for payment of, 827, et seq.
- trust deeds for payment of, 58, 349.
  - valid, though for the purpose of defeating some particular creditor, 350.
  - when invalid, ib. 352.
  - operation of statutes 13 Eliz., and 27 Eliz. on, 351.
  - an act of bankruptcy, where, ib.
  - not affected by the Thellusson Act, 352.
  - void, against creditors of an insolvent, when, ib.
  - equitable doctrines affecting, ib.
  - what creditors entitled to the benefit of, 353—355, 361, n.
  - trustees under, having discretion, 355.
    - refusing, when the court will act under, ib.
  - persons not objects of trust cannot enforce it, ib.
  - when creditors entitled to interest on, ib.
  - See, as to interest on debts in administration suits, Davis v. Combermere, 15 Sim. 394.
  - operation of the Statute of Limitations on, 357.
  - must be founded in good faith, ib.
    - one creditor can have no advantage not given to the others, 358.
    - unless the others agree, 359, 360.
  - creditors under, cannot redeem a mortgage, 360.
- in creditor's suits, may be impeached by the other creditors, ib. 361.
  - should be proved by plaintiff, if real estate sought to be affected, 361, 363, n.
- doctrine on sales by executors and trustees for payment of, 371, 379, 380.
  - where debts have been paid, 379.
  - of purchaser seeing to the application of his purchase-money, 371, 380.
- legacy presumed to be a satisfaction of, 428, n. (a), 437, 455, n. I.
- See SATISFACTION.
- due to wife, husband may release, 480.

DECLARATION OF TRUST. See EVIDENCE.

- as a mode of transfer of equitable rights and interests, 897.
- as a mode of transfer of contingent interests, and possibilities, 912.
- difference between declaration of trust and assignment, 913.

DEEDS. See CONSTRUCTION, VOLUNTARY DEED, EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

- production of, mortgagee not bound to produce the deeds till payment, 655, 670.
  - exception, 671.
- deeds delivered to subsequent mortgagee, without notice of prior mortgage, 688, 768.

DEEDS—continued.

relief given in mortgage suits where the deeds have been lost or destroyed, 690. effect of mortgagee not obtaining, or not keeping the title deeds, as affecting priorities, 767, 787—789, 795, n. on termination of suit to be delivered to the party who deposited them, Plunket v. Lewis, 6 Hare, 66.

DEFECTIVE SECURITIES. See TENANT IN TAIL.

by way of mortgage, 639.

DEMURRER,

as to relief given at the hearing where the suit might have been stopped by demurrer, 665.

DEPOSIT OF DEEDS. See EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.*DESCENT,

modern law of, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, i. 176.
to heir-at-law where the purpose fails, 233.

DETINUE.

modern use of this action, i. 224, 244 (et v. 2 Car. & K. 676).

DEVISES. See FRAUDULENT DEVISES.

construction of, 18, 27. See CONSTRUCTION.
revocation of, 17, 18, 27.
of trust estates, effect of, 36, 364. See the next title.
general, will pass trust estates, 37.
for payment of debts and legacies, effect of, 312, 332, 365.
of lands to executors to sell, makes them equitable assets, 315.

DEVISE OF TRUST ESTATE.

what will or will not amount to, 37, 364.
and see Sharpe v. Sharpe, xii. Jur. 598, V.-C. W., and the references.

DISCOVERY,

not compelled in aid of a foreign suit, n.

DISCRETION,

exercise of by trustee, 87, 88.
when the court may exercise discretion given to trustees, 77. n.
exercise of by trustees as regards the sale of Mexican bonds and the like, 923.
exercise of, terminates with insolvency, 89.

DISTRINGAS,

to restrain the transfer of stock, 858, n. (h).

DOMICILE,

effect of on personal property, 12.
will, 13, n. (e).

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA,

what it is, i. 196.
present gift cannot constitute, 912.

DOUBLE PORTIONS. See PORTIONS.*DOWER, distinction taken in regard to the possession of the legal estate in regard to doweress, 734, note.

EJECTMENT, action of, described, i. 232-4.

ELECTION,

doctrine of, 585—604.
principle of, 586.
how carried out, ib.
where party to elect is not sui juris, 587, 588.
where testator has devised what is not his own by mistake, 587.
applied to interests remote and contingent, 588.
foundation of the doctrine—intention, 589.
must appear on the will itself, 595.

ELECTION—continued.

- applied to powers, 590.
- person may be estopped from putting another to his election by acquiescence, or laches, 591.
- husband's curtesy, where he has taken benefit under the will, 591.
- distinction between cases of express condition and of election, 592.
- construction of devises as applicable to, 592.
  - "demonstration plain"—"necessary implication," 592, 593.
  - where testator has a partial interest in the subject, 593.
  - devise of "all my estate," 594.
  - extrinsic evidence, generally not admissible, 595.
  - in questions as to wife's claim to dower in addition to the benefits given by the will, 595 to 597.
  - on will of Scotsman, 598.
- amount and nature of property given must be ascertained before election, 598.
- implied election, 598, 599.
- election of parent as regards children, 600.
  - case where wife had elected against a settlement, and yet children held entitled to have the settlement executed against creditors, 600.
- consequences of election, 601.
  - whether forfeiture, 601, 602, 604.
  - or compensation, 603.
  - process by which compensation is effected, 601, 612.

ENLARGING TIME FOR PAYMENT OF MORTGAGE MONEY, 688. See FORECLOSURE.*EQUAL EQUITY, 728.

- Person who takes, with notice of an incumbrance, has not equal equity with the prior incumbrancer, 732. See BETTER EQUITY.

EQUITABLE CHARGES,

- rank generally according to their dates, 727, 731, 732, 745.
- See PRIORITIES.

EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS IN LAND. See VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES, TRUSTS, and the next title.

- nature of, 875—877.
- interest of cestui que trust in land under passive trust, equivalent to legal ownership, i. 499, 501.
- under express trust, 20, et seq.
  - precatory words, 65, et seq.
- under trusts by operation of law, 193, et seq., 295, et seq.
  - purchase made in the name of another, 201.
  - land acquired for purposes of a partnership, 207.
  - in favour of heir by way of resulting trust, 223, et seq.
  - arising from the maxim that "what ought to be done is considered as done," 253, et seq.
- equitable estate of mortgagor, see EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.
- equitable interest arising upon assignments of choses in action, contingent interests, and possibilities, 850, et seq.
- estate tail in, how barred, 878.
- equity of redemption, see MORTGAGE, EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.
- merger of, in legal estate, 879, 880.
- analogy between equitable estates in land, and equitable interest in a legacy or share of a residue, 865, 880.

EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS,

- transfer of, by declaration of trust, 11, 52—58, 883, 886.
- notice essential to complete the transfer of all equitable interests not being equitable estates, as against third persons, 858.
- voluntary contracts as affecting, see VOLUNTARY CONTRACTS.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGES AND LIENS,

- under written documents not under seal, 777.
- direction given to creditor by his debtor, addressed to a creditor of the debtor, to pay out of a particular fund, 778.
- to receiver of Jamaica estate to keep down annuity, 779.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGES AND LIENS—continued.

agreement as to money deposited for a particular purpose carried into effect, though to the prejudice of creditors, 779.

acceptance by the holder of the fund not necessary, 779.

See CHUSES IN ACTION, ASSIGNMENT OF.

by Deposit of Deeds, 780, et seq.

whether it amounts to a mortgage or a charge, 780.

mere deposit upon an advance of money constitutes a security, 781.

primâ facie on all the property contained in the deeds, 781.

not furniture in a mansion-house, 785.

will cover subsequent advances, when, 781, 782.

by banking company consisting of other partners, 782.

deposit of some, or one of the deeds only, 782, 783.

deeds delivered to solicitor to prepare a mortgage, 783.

effect as regards subsequent purchasers, 783, 787.

lien on deeds claimed by solicitor, 783.

object of deposit may be explained by evidence, 784.

deeds deposited with third person, 784, 785.

by debtor to the crown, 786.

legal estate afterwards conveyed in contemplation of bankruptcy, 786.

depository of lease not bound by the covenants, 786, 787.

deposit of lease with covenant not to assign, 787.

depositor takes with such interest only as the depositor can give, 790.

remedy which the depositor is entitled to, to enforce his security, 791.

mortgage, 791, 795.

sale, 792, 793, 795.

costs where sale applied for in bankruptcy, 794.

equitable title will not be defeated by judgment subsequently obtained, 794.

EQUITABLE RIGHT,

generally an equitable right may be asserted by the person entitled equally as plaintiff as where he is defendant, 485, n.

“but there are many things by which a man may rebut an equity which will not entitle him to come here for an original one.” Lord Hardwicke, Richard v. Syme, Barn. 91, and see Vol. I. p. 422.

“EQUITY FOLLOWS THE LAW,” limitations under which that doctrine is to be accepted, i. 421.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. See MORTGAGES, REDEMPTION, REDEMPTION-MONEY, MORTGAGEE.

nature of, 642.

is an estate in the land, ib.

will descend, and may be devised, entailed, &c., 645.

entail barred by disentailing deed, ib.

wherein it differs from a trust estate, 643.

on mortgage of wife's estate, 644, 665.

descent of, where the lands mortgaged are held in gavelkind or borough English, 665.

ESCHEAT. See FORFEITURE.*ESTATES. See EQUITABLE ESTATES.

nature of, at the common law, i. 139-146.

feudal grant, i. 139.

estate in fee simple, i. 139.

fee tail, i. 141.

recovery, i. 143.

estate for life, i. 144.

in incorporeal hereditaments, i. 149-151.

rents, i. 149.

estates in remainder, i. 155-158.

ESTATE TAIL. See ISSUE, CHILDREN, TENANT IN TAIL.

at law, i. 140, 142.

rule in Shelley's case, 142.

equitable estate tail. See EQUITABLE ESTATE.

ESTATE TAIL—continued.

when may be given under a power, 577.
by implication where, 152, 153, 550.

ESTOPPEL,

doctrine of, i. 549, 550.

EXECUTOR. See TRUSTEE, EXECUTOR DE SON TORT, WORDS, CONSTRUCTION OF.

how appointed, i. 189.

nature of his office, ib.

devastavit by, i. 192.

liabilities of, from the act of taking probate, 918, 919.

not absolved from liability on breach of trust by having acted under advice of solicitor, 619.

bound to keep his Accounts in a regular manner and to be ready with them, 921.

charged with Interest on balances, when, 921.

liable for omissions as well as acts, 922.

omitting to get in debts, 923. See CHOSE IN ACTION.

investing on mortgage, 926.

not justified in lending or leaving the assets on personal security, 926.

generally only answerable for his own receipts, 928.

where an executor joins in the signing a receipt for money, 930.

joining in sale, 931.

or being in any way instrumental in money coming into the hands of his co-executor, 931.

how he may discharge himself, 932, 933.

must see that residue is paid to those who are entitled to it, 932.

duty of, where testator's property in a foreign country, 44.

cannot renew a lease for his own benefit, 299.

when entitled to surplus of trust-fund where no next of kin, 364, n. IV. (Dawson v. Clark, there referred to, overruled by Mapp v. Elcock, xiii. Jur. 290).

made trustee for the purpose of raising money, 365.

under general trusts for sale for payment of debts, 366.

power of sale implies power to mortgage, 369.

difference between a devise to for sale, and a power, 366.

when surviving executor may sell, ib.

has a power to sell, by implication, where, 367.

from purchaser, not bound to see to the application of purchase-money, ib.

duty of, to realise testator's estate, 372.

within what time, 42, 565, 566.

de son tort, 373. See the next title.

purchaser or mortgagee from, of testator's personal estate, acquires an absolute title, ib.

otherwise if sale not required for the purpose of the estate, 374.

or by executor for his own purposes, 298, 374.

fraud as affecting such transactions, ib. 375.

on sale of property specifically bequeathed, 376.

where the executor has assented to the legacy, ib.

of his own specific legacy, 378.

after notice that debts are paid, 379.

residuary legatee, how affected, ib.

alienation without value by, ib.

ultimate limitation to in default of appointment, gives the absolute interest, in what cases, 496, 497, 512, 536, n. IV.

Costs of, 939.

when ordered to pay costs, 940, n.

Wilful default, decree for, 941.

course to be pursued in administering the estate of an executor where he has bequeathed part of the testator's assets in specie as his own, 954, n. III.

EXECUTOR DE SON TORT,

account settled between him and the rightful executors, not binding on cestuis que trust, 942, 953.

has none of the privileges of a rightful executor, 953.

agent of executor de son tort is himself executor de son tort, Sharland v. Mildon, x. Jur. 771.

EXECUTORY BEQUESTS OF PERSONAL ESTATE, i. 472.

EXECUTORY DEVICES.

- introduction of, i. 470.
- description of, ib., ii. 161.
- indestructibility, i. 471.
- to take effect on a contingency, accumulation of rents, where, 173.

EXECUTORY TRUSTS. See TRUST.

EXONERATION. See DEBTS.

- doctrine of, 333, 847.
- of personal estate from payment of debts and legacies, 332, et seq.
  - what will amount to, 337, 818, 820—822, 846.
- exoneration of residue, 343.
- exemption in favour of legatees not extended to next of kin, ib.
- of estate, by tenant for life, or other persons having a partial interest, paying off incumbrance, 307, 345.
- neither heir nor devisee can claim to have the estate exonerated against specific or pecuniary legatees, 343.
- as between tenant for life and remainderman, 841.
- of the estate of a married woman, 841, 842.
- son entitled in remainder joining in mortgage with father tenant for life, 843.

EXPRESS TRUST, i. 496. See TRUST, EQUITABLE ESTATES.

- provisions of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, as affecting trusts, i. 497.

EVIDENCE (Parol and Extrinsic). See LEGACIES, PORTIONS, SATISFACTION, ELECTION.

- application of extrinsic evidence to the interpretation of wills and deeds, i. 554—571.
- rules the same at law and in equity, i. 555.
  - Sir James Wigram's propositions, i. 554, 555, n.
- General rules,
  - parol evidence cannot be given to vary or add to a written instrument, i. 555.
- exceptions and qualifications,
  - date of deed, i. 556.
  - consideration, ib.
- as regards the subject and the object, meaning of words used may be ascertained by resorting to extrinsic circumstances, i. 556, 557.
  - dictionaries and the like, i. 557.
- distinction as regards words of gift or limitation, i. 557.
- general rule as to admissibility of, in legatory matters, 445, 453.
- judge and jury to be placed, as it were, in the situation of the party who used the words when he used them, i. 557, 558; and see i. 527.
  - contemporaneous exposition and ancient usage, i. 558.
- evidence to explain meaning in mercantile transactions, ib.
  - in contracts between landlord and tenant, ib.
  - to show who was the person intended under the words used, i. 559.
  - that the words used include certain premises as part of the thing given, i. 560.
- relationship of donee, ib.
- declarations of testator, ib.; ii. 442.
- where direct evidence of intention may be given, i. 560, 561.
- subsequent acts of the parties, i. 562.
- Lord Bacon's distinction as to the admissibility of parol evidence in cases of ambiguitas patens and of ambiguitas latens, i. 562—564, 573.
- application of parol evidence to repel presumptions of law, i. 565—571; ii. 445, et seq. 458, n.
- distinction between legal presumptions and presumptions which arise from collateral circumstances, i. 565, 567, 568.
  - rule as expounded by Sir E. Sugden, i. 566, 567.
- instances of presumptions of law in regard to legacies, where evidence is excluded, the meaning being ascertained by construction, i. 566, 569, 570.
- presumption raised against the apparent effect of the instrument, may be repelled by evidence, when and when not, i. 567.
- cases depending on acts partly inter vivos, and partly testamentary, i. 568; ii. 448.
  - Sir E. Sugden's distinction on this subject, i. 567, 575; ii. 452.
  - doctrine of Sir J. Leach, i. 574, 575; ii. 450, 451.
  - the question stated, 453, 454.

EVIDENCE—continued.

- evidence admitted to repel the presumption against double portions, i. 568, 569 ; ii. 441, 442, 444, 458, n.
- in questions as to satisfaction as regards portions, 441, 445, et seq.
- See PORTIONS.
- evidence to raise the primary presumption of law, in regard to the satisfaction of portions, i. 571.
- in questions as to the satisfaction of a debt by a legacy, i. 570 ; ii. 442, 445, 449, 453, 458, n.
- evidence to prove that a trust was intended, 199.
- parol, may be given to show whether a voluntary deed was intended to be a final act, 883.
- See VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE.
- subsequent declarations or instructions cannot be received in evidence, 883.
- evidence to repel resulting and constructive trusts, i. 571 ; ii. 202, 206, 214, 243, 245, 246.
- of illegal purpose for which a legacy is given, 245.
- received to explain the object of a Deposit of deeds, 785.
- not received in cases of Election, 595.
- whether to be received to show that legacy given exclusive of debt, 607, 608.
- in cases of Satisfaction and Performance, 610.
- to show that a transaction was intended as a mortgage, 619, 620, 625.

FACTOR.

- right of, to pledge, 773, 774.

FAMILY. See WORDS, CONSTRUCTION OF.

- trusts for, 73.
- interpretation of the expression, 66, 74.
- agreements entered into to support the peace of, enforced in equity, 288.

FELON.

- forfeiture of goods by, 5, n. (f).
- of what he may dispose, ib.

FINES. See TENANT FOR LIFE.

- for renewal of leaseholds and copyholds, how to be raised, 540, 541.

FINES AND RECOVERIES.

- provisions of the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, by which they were abolished, i. 166—170.
- alienation by married women, i. 169.

FOLLOWING MONEY INTO LAND, 205.*FORECLOSURE. See TIME.

- right of mortgagee to foreclose the equity of redemption, 674.
- there cannot be a foreclosure of a part, ib.
- bill by, cestui que trust entitled to part of trust money lent on mortgage, ib.
- joint mortgagees, 675.
- parties to bills for foreclosure.
- See PARTIES.
- bill for foreclosure may be filed notwithstanding a tender, ib.
- or receipt given in full if paid in securities not available, ib.
- but such security may be taken as a substitute, ib.
- where the mortgagee has a security upon land and stock, &c., 275.
- agreement not to foreclose for a given time, 676.
- where the security is in the way of charge, it will not authorize foreclosure, ib.
- when the mortgagee is entitled to a sale, 678.
- effect of, as regards costs, ib., 679.
- where there is a covenant for further assurance, 699, 680.
- when heir or devisee of mortgagor is an infant, 680, 681.
- against married woman, 681.
- where heir or devisee of mortgagee is out of the jurisdiction, or cannot be found, 684.
- where the mortgagor pending the suit has assigned his interest, 692.
- whether heir who has foreclosed the estate may keep it, paying the mortgage money, 682.
- provisions of the act 7 Geo. II. c. 20, 685—687.

FORECLOSURE—continued.

- what cases are embraced by the act, and what not, 687.
- indulgence granted to mortgagee by enlarging time for payment of the mortgage money in foreclosure suits, ib. 688.
- present practice as to enlarging time, 688.
- recognitions of title of the party seeking to foreclose, or to redeem, 690.
- relief given where deeds lost or destroyed, ib.
- costs of parties disclaiming, 691.
- taking bill pro confesso, ib.
- requisites for making the foreclosure complete, 692.
- of opening the foreclosure, 682, 683.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES. See JURISDICTION.

- contracts in, construction of, 13.
- where executed in English form, ib.

FOREIGN COURTS.

- proceeding in, when the court has made a decree here, 12, n.
- discovery not given here, to be used in a foreign court, 11.

FOREIGN PRINCES.

- suits by, 14.

FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

- how far binding, 15, n. (h).

FORFEITURE AND ESCHEAT. See CROWN, RIGHTS OF.

- of trust property, 32.

FRAUD. See NEGLIGENCE, and Vol. III., same title.

- relief against, not barred by lapse of time, 62.
- will be by laches after discovery of, ib., 198.
- affecting purchases from executors, 375.
- from trustees for sale, 384.
- constructive, in transactions between attorney and client, principal and agent, 301.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, i. 161, 497, 512 ; ii. 20.

- trusts by operation of law not within the statute, 194.

GAVELKIND LANDS. See TRUST.*GIFT. See VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.*GRANT.

- immediate freehold in corporeal hereditaments may pass by, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, i. 291, 477.
- word "grant" does not now imply a covenant, i. 545.

HEIR. See TRUST.

- trustee of legal estate, where, 33, 296, 366, 367.
- liable to pay his ancestors' debts to the extent of lands descended, 313.
- purchaser from, of land descended holds discharged of debts, 388.
- descent to, where purpose of devise fails, 233.

"HEIRS OF THE BODY."

- words of purchase, when, 150.
- "Issue," when construed as synonymous with, 155.

HEIR AND NEXT OF KIN. See TRUST.

- resulting trust in favour of, 223, 232.

HEIR LOOMS.

- direction in will that chattles shall go as,—effect of, 156.
- "as far as rules of law will allow," 157.

HOTCHPOT.

- specialty creditors cannot come into equity for payment out of real estate, without bringing their receipts out of personal estate into, 318.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See MARRIED WOMEN.

- purchase by husband in name of wife, wife not a trustee, 218.
- mortgage of wife's estates for husband's debts; equity of redemption remains the wife's property, though reserved to the husband and his heirs, 306, 644, 665.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

- where the wife joins in the deed, ib.
- of wife's chattels, wife entitled to redeem, where, ib.
- wife's power of disposition over her real estate not settled, 492, 498, 505.
- rights of husband acquired by marriage over wife's personal property not settled, 476.
- chattels real, ib., 479.
- choses in action, ib., 476.
  - bills of exchange and notes, 476, 534, n. I.
  - reduction into possession, 306, 476, 478, 479, 483, n. (c).
  - decree, or order for payment, 477.
- reversionary interests, 476, 487.
  - right of survivorship in the wife, 476, 477, 487.
- wife's mortgages, 476, n. (d).
- wife's savings out of her separate estate, 479, 502, 503.
- husband's power to release debts, legacies, &c., due to wife, ib., 480.
- where the husband, by settlement, acquires a right to all her property, whether reduced into possession or not, 480.
  - after-acquired property, 481.
- wife's rights independent of contract, 482.
  - Equity to a settlement, ib., 484, 491.
    - where the wife has an adequate provision by settlement, 483.
    - out of a trust estate in lands, ib., 484.
    - where deserted by her husband, 486, 491.
    - as against the husband's assignees in bankruptcy, 485.
    - where the wife is living in adultery, 486.
    - what part of the property allowed to her, 485.
    - practice where husband applies to the court for her money, 535, n. II.
    - where the wife is a ward of court, and marries without Consent, 486.
    - where the parties are subjects of a foreign state, ib.
    - how waived by the wife, 486—488.
    - of her reversionary interests, cannot be, 487, 535, n. III.
    - none, where the property has been received by the husband, 488.
    - where the court directs a settlement, children are included in its provisions, ib.
    - where children entitled to enforce the settlement, ib., 489.
    - husband refusing to execute the settlement, 490.
    - order for payment into court does not effect their rights, 491.
- rights and powers which may be secured to the wife by Contract, 492.
  - over real estate, 492, 493, 504.
  - by deed or will, 493—495, 497, 504.
  - difference between power and property, 495.
    - her execution of the power must be strictly in conformity with the power, 494, 495, 512.
  - settlement on wife, for life, remainder as she shall appoint, and in default, for her next of kin, does not give her an absolute interest, 495, 496.
  - otherwise where the ultimate limitation is to her executors or administrators, 496, 497, 512, 536, n. IV.
    - husband takes jure mariti, in default of appointment, 497.
- on agreements entered into before marriage, 498.
  - binding on her heir, 498, 506.
  - where the wife is an infant, 499.
  - profit of trade carried on by the wife, 503.
  - pin money, 499, 500, 501.
    - arrears of, 501.
    - her savings out of, 502, 503.
- wife may acquire a right to personal property, during marriage, by husband's consent, 502.
  - by gift from the husband, ib.
    - not good against creditors, ib.
  - her paraphernalia, ib.
    - where the husband deserts his wife, the profits of a separate trade carried on by her, for her support, will be protected against him, 503.
- husband cannot settle his own property to go over on bankruptcy to his wife, except in consideration of his wife's fortune, ib.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

- secret settlement, by wife, fraudulent against husband, 505.
- doctrine of chancery, as to Separate estate of wife in real and personal property, 503, 504.
- how she may dispose of her real estate, 492, 497, 504.
- her contract to sell or charge it, 504.
- her personal estate primâ facie belongs to the husband, 505.
- queen consort an exception, 506.
- may have a power of disposition over it, by agreement before marriage, 506.
- separate estate may be created, by gift from a third person, 507.
- where no trustee named, husband a trustee, ib.
- what words necessary to create, 507—511.
- husband not entitled to curtesy out of, 511.
- wife's power of disposition of separate personal estate, 511—513, 525.
  - restraint on alienation, 512.
  - by anticipation, 520—523, 525.
  - in possession or reversion, 513.
  - may act without her trustees, unless their assent made necessary, ib.
  - how far she may dispose of it to her husband, 514, 515.
- liability of separate estate to demands on the wife, 324, 515—519.
- where she charges it with her debts, 324, 525.
- whether subject to general demands, 516.
- what will amount to a charge, ib., 536, n.
- not liable on implied assumpsit, 517.
- reference to separate estate in her contracts not necessary to charge it, 518.
- after her death, ib., 519.
- not necessary that the woman should be married on creation of the trust, 524.
- when the separate-use clause is confined to the first coverture, ib.
- when it revives on subsequent marriage, ib.
- while single she may dispose of property so settled, 524, 525.
- income paid to the husband, the wife being lunatic, 525.
- property conveyed by husband to trustees on a separation for wife's support, does not make it separate estate, ib.
- trustee purchasing, ib.
- suits to administer, 324, 325, 525.
- suits affecting—rules of practice in, 533.
- husband must be a party, when, and when not, ib.
- trustees must be parties, ib.
- writ of ne exeat regno may be obtained against wife, when, ib.
- Separation deeds for, 526.
- covenants in, respecting children, 529, 541, n. VII.
- contracts for separation, how enforced, ib., 527, 531, 532.
- consideration necessary to support, 527, 528.
- what sufficient between husband and wife, 530, 531.
- suits for restitution of conjugal rights not restrained, 528.
- effect of reconciliation upon, 532, 540, n. VI.
- future, how far contracts for, may be valid, 529.
- examination and consent of wife in court, where necessary, 486, 514, nn. (b) and (d), 534, 535, nn. II., III.

IMPLICATION.

- estate tail by, 152, 153.
- gift to parent for life and if he die without children, over, no gift to children by, 154.
- power of sale by, 367.
- charge of debts by, 322.
- “demonstration plain,” “necessary implication” to raise a charge by, 592.

IMPLIED OR PRESUMPTIVE TRUSTS, i. 509 ; ii. 193, et seq. See RESULTING TRUSTS.*IMPROVEMENTS. See MORTGAGEE.

- made by tenant for life allowed against the inheritance, 573, 574.

INDEMNITY.

- to trustee from cestui que trust, where it may be required, 47.
- (N.B. before Goodson v. Ellison, in note (h), insert “Curties v. Candler, 6 Mad. 123, and see”).

INFANT.

election by, 587.

INTENTION. See CONSTRUCTION.

judges sometimes compelled to give a construction which they are morally convinced will defeat the intention, 29.
and see Collis v. Robins, 1 De G. & Sm. 142.

INTEREST. See TRUSTEE.

trustee and executor charged with interest on balances, where, 921.

general rule four per cent., 922.

sometimes charged with five per cent., ib.

See Wolfe v. Findlay, 6 Hare, 66, as to non-liability of deposittee to pay interest on debts generally. See DEBTS, TRUST DEEDS FOR PAYMENT OF.

INTERPRETATION of deeds and wills. See CONSTRUCTION.*ISSUE. See CONSTRUCTION.

construction of the words "dying without issue," and the like, according to the Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, i. 474, 475; ii. 154.

of gifts to the testator's own issue, according to the same act, i. 475.

devise of lands to be settled on a man and his issue, an estate tail in the issue, 137, 145.

includes grandchildren and more remote descendants, where, 138.

directory trust in favour of, 139.

provision of articles when not extended in favour of, 140.

gifts to "a man and his issue," and similar words, create tenancy in tail of realty, and absolute interest in personalty, 145, 160, n. (1).

devise to a person for life, with remainder to his issue, 148.

living at death of tenant for life, gift to, ib.

devise of term, remainder to, 149.

may be construed word of purchase, 150.

legal acceptance of the word, ib. n. (c).

"dying without leaving," 153.

stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, on "dying without issue," &c., ib.

Mr. Jarman's opinion on, 154.

gift to parent for life, and if he shall die without, ib.

synonymous to heirs of the body, where, 155.

descendants, where, ib.

take per capita as joint-tenants, where, ib.

"begotten or to be begotten," gift to, after life estate, includes all descendants, ib.

when they take per stirpes, when per capita, 419, 473, n. II.

construed "children," where, 473, n. II.

taking by substitution for parents, 471.

JOINT TENANCY.

construed tenancy in common in directory trusts, 143.

by construction, where purchase-moneys of land subscribed equally, 206, 207.

JUDGMENT—JUDGMENT CREDITOR. See MORTGAGES, TACKING.

effect of modern statutes relating to, 722, n., 799, 319, n., 325, n.

lien by, 798, 799.

on unpaid purchase-money, 799.

creditors by, parties to bills for foreclosure and redemption. See PARTIES.

proceeding in chancery against debtor's equitable interest, 41.

can only take in execution their debtor's property, 313, 325, n.

subject to any prior charge, 325, n.

must bring personal estate received into hotchpot, where, 318.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY. See BANKRUPT.

equitable as regards specific property, 2.

power of the Court of Chancery as to property out of, 6—8, 11, 15.

where the person is within, 7.

service of subpoena on persons out of, ib. n. (a).

as to matters in litigation in the colonies, 9.

as to proceedings in foreign courts, 10.

JURISDICTION—continued.

- when excluded, 10, 11.
- where concurrent, 11, 12, 16.
- where right to land in a foreign country disputed, 12.
- to appoint managers and consignees of property in the colonies, 15.
- on foreign contracts, 13.
- over foreign princes, 14, 15.
- ne exeat regno*, 15, 540, n. (4).
- over wills of personal estate, 19.
- general rule that the Court of Chancery will not interfere when there is an apt and sufficient remedy at law, i. 430.
- over trusts, 25.
  - origin of, as regards uses and trusts, i. 442.
- over property held by a corporation, 33.
- Municipal Corporation Act does not take away, 35, n. (b).
- none as to alimony in the Court of Chancery, 540, n. (4).
- as to the Court of Chancery not interfering with the jurisdiction in bankruptcy, 665.

LAND. See EQUITABLE ESTATES.

LEASEHOLDS.

- trusts for renewal of (see TRUST), 544.
  - finances and expenses of renewal, how to be raised, as between tenant for life and remainderman, 545—547, 550.
  - by whom to be paid, 545, 546.

LEGAL ESTATE.

- cestui qui trust* entitled to call for, where, 47, 520.
- trustee takes, where, 36, 37.
- person having, is the person to redeem a mortgage, 360.
- heir a trustee of, where, 296, 366, 367, 369.
- cases where a person who has, may come into the Court of Chancery for relief, i. 699, n.

LEGACIES. See PORTIONS, VESTING, MARSHALLING.

- rules of civil law applied to the construction of bequests, i. 542.
- payable on a contingency or at a future day, 170, 395.
  - not forfeited by conviction of felony before the contingency happens, 421, n.
  - maintenance out of, where given, 185, 409.
  - when intermediate interest on passes to next of kin or residuary legatee, 171.
  - on residue payable at a future day, ib.
- vested at 21 with direction to accumulate until 24, effect of, 184.
- to charity, assets not marshalled in favour of, 233.
- lapsed and void, when next of kin take, 223, 232.
  - when it passes by residuary gift, 241.
  - if of residue passes to next of kin, ib.
  - evidence admitted to support bequest impeached for illegality, 245.
- revoked on erroneous supposition that the legatee was dead, i. 539.
- Trust or charge for payment of, 312, 326.
  - must be performed in manner directed by the will, 327.
  - where only payable out of personal estate, ib.
  - Lord Alvanley's opinion on general charge of debts, &c., ib.
  - Lord Rosslyn's opinion, ib.
  - a question of intention to be ascertained from the context, 328.
  - what sufficient to constitute, ib. 329.
    - effect of blending real and personal estate, ib.
    - annuity charged on rents and profits, 329.
    - preference in payment of, 330.
    - effect of Statute of Fraudulent Devises and of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, on, ib.
  - by whom property to be sold under, 365.
  - carried into effect through the Court of Chancery, ib. 367.
- personal estate, the ordinary fund for payment of, 334.
  - exoneration of, from, 334, 342, 343.
- specific payment of, as between specific and general legatees, 343.
  - sale of, by executor, 376.
- to Children,
  - are Portions when given by a parent, 394.

LEGACIES—continued.

when given by person in loco parentis, ib.
charged on land, 393, 395.

how raised, 398, 402, 406.

interest allowed on, when not raisable, 409.

given to "younger children," who are, 393, 411.

within what time they must be born to share, 417.

to be distributed among persons "or" their children, 420.

double portions, 427.

See PORTIONS, MAINTENANCE.

legacy, when a satisfaction of a debt by, 428, n. (a), 437, n. (e), 456, n. I., 605, 606.

satisfied by previous advancement, where, 428, 437, 454.

where not, 429, 430, 437.

See SATISFACTION.

evidence, rule regarding admission of, in legatory matters, 441, 445.

to parents, for the maintenance of their children, doctrine as to, 459, et seq., 463.

See MAINTENANCE.

to or in trust for a boy to apprentice him, absolute gift, 462.

to parents and children for undefined interests, 468.

parent for life, and children in remainder, ib.

joint tenants or tenants in common, 469.

where children take, by substitution for parent, 470.

whether they take per stirpes or per capita, 419, 420, 471.

to wife, husband may release, 479.

limited to a person for life, with power to appoint, and in default to "next of kin," 495, 496.
in default, to "executors and administrators," or "personal representatives," gives the absolute interest, 496, 497, 512, 536, n. IV.

tenant for life bound to keep down interest of, where, 574.

of residue to several in succession, how to be enjoyed (see TENANT FOR LIFE), 552, 558.

LEGACY DUTY.

payable on real estate directed to be converted, 267.

LEGATEE. See LEGACIES.

a trustee for creditors when paid before debts have been ascertained, 297.

compelled to refund, where, ib.

cannot claim in competition with creditors, 326.

specific, when entitled to exoneration, 343.

how affected by sale by executor of property bequeathed to him, 376.

general, how affected by sales by executors, 375, 379.

when legatees take per stirpes, when per capita, 419, 471.

LIEN. See CROWN.

doctrine as to liens generally, 796.

lien at common law, ib.

lien on ship, ib. 797.

on freight, 797.

on certificate of registry, 798.

lien of Solicitor on deeds and papers, for his costs, 800, et seq.

extends further than a mortgage, 801.

lien on the fund in court, 802.

debt with benefit of lien may be assigned, 802.

rights in equity equivalent to liens, 803, 804.

lien cannot be set up where an express security has been taken, 804.

generally, where a lien is intended to be given on an existing fund, it will not be a lien in equity if not such at law, 863.

creditor cannot be compelled to resort to any lien he may have on the property of his creditor out of the kingdom, 9, n.

LIMITATIONS.

of estates. See USES, TRUSTS, CONSTRUCTION.

of chattels, i. 194, 195.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF. See TIME.

ancient statutes relating to, i. 255, 258.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF—continued.

- modern statute as to actions and suits in regard to real property, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, i. 256, 257.
- modern statute relating to actions on specialities, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, i. 259.
- effect of acknowledgment, i. 259.
- and see Holland v. Clark, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 151.
- as affecting trustees, 48.
  - trusts, 61.
  - waste committed by a tenant for life, 571.
  - purchasers with notice, 197.
- debts barred by, not revived by trust for payment of debts, 357.

LOCUS PCENITENTIÆ, 884—886, 892. See VOLUNTARY DEED.

MAINTENANCE.

- of children,
  - out of funds directed to accumulate, 185, 462.
  - out of contingent legacies, 185, 409.
    - where given by a parent or person in loco parentis, 185.
    - leading cases on the subject, 186.
    - where each of several legatees has a chance of survivorship, ib.
  - provided by wills and settlements, doctrine as to, 460, et seq.
    - meaning of word, 460.
    - terminates with minority, where, ib.
    - gift for, of interest, creates a life estate, where, ib.
    - from what time allowed, 461.
    - out of capital, where given, ib.
    - state of the family considered, 461, 462.
    - allowed though not authorized by will, where, 462.
    - interest apportioned on portion becoming due, ib.
    - discretion of trustees in the application of, when exercised by the court, 463.
    - paid to trustee to be applied, ib.
  - in gifts to parents and others for maintenance of children, and to parents and children for undefined interests, 463, et seq., 468.
    - gifts to wife or mother for maintenance or support of herself and children, 461, 464, 465.
    - where a power of disposal is given, 465, 466.
    - to parent or other person subject to a charge for maintenance, 466, 467.
    - where the parent or donee takes absolutely, 465, 467.
    - rule that father is bound to maintain his children where of ability, 466.
      - cases in which he may have the interest applied, notwithstanding his ability to maintain them, ib. 467.
    - in cases of undefined interests, where parent takes for life and children in remainder, 468.
      - where as joint tenants, 469, 472, n. I.
        - difference between gift and contract in case of, ib.
      - where as tenants in common, ib.
      - where children take by way of substitution for parent, 470.
      - where the gift is to parents and their children "to take per stirpes and not per capita," 471, 473, n. II.
      - where a father mixes moneys to be applied to maintenance with his own, 472.
  - wife entitled to, out of her own property when deserted by her husband, 486, 491.
  - children not entitled to, out of wife's separate estate, 492.
  - allowed to husband out of wife's separate estate, where she is lunatic, 525.
  - under separation deeds, 526.
  - of bankrupt, proviso for, property passes to assignees, 91.
  - otherwise, if for his wife and children, ib.

MAINTENANCE AND CHAMPERTY.

- as affecting the assignment of rights, 871.
- See CHOSSES IN ACTION.

MANAGER.

- appointment of, 15.
- by recommendatory words, 71.

MANDATE.

revocable, 59, n.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. See SETTLEMENT, ARTICLES.MARRIED WOMAN. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, EXONERATION.

creation of trust by, 5.

charge of debts by, on her separate estate, 324.

cannot assign her reversionary interest, so as to bind herself surviving, 487.

allowed maintenance out of her own property when deserted by her husband, 486, 491.

her power of disposition over her real estate, 492, 498, 505.

over rents and profits of real estate given to her separate use, 5, n. (f).

by will under a power, 493, 494, 497.

of her personal property, where the ultimate limitation is in favour of her “next of kin,” on default of her appointment, 495.

in favour of her “personal representatives,” or “executors and administrators,” 496, 497.

over her separate estate, 512, 513.

carrying on a separate trade, 503.

administration of her separate estate, 325, 525.

powers of alienation given to, by statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, i. 169.

election by, 587, 588.

when put to elect between her dower and benefits given by the will, 597.

MARSHALLING OF ASSETS.

assets for the payment of debts and legacies, 827, et seq.

against bond creditors, where, 318.

in case of mortgaged lands descended, 334.

in favour of portions, 410.

in favour of legatees, 829—832.

effect of statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, as regards legatees, 830, 831.

no equity on the part of pecuniary legatees to throw debts upon real estates taken under residuary devise, 832.

as regards vendor's lien, 833.

exception as regards legacies to charity, 233, 833.

MARSHALLING OF SECURITIES, 833—837. See CONTRIBUTION.

principle which is applied where one has a security upon two funds, and another only upon one, 834.

mortgagor seeking to foreclose, 835.

estate settled, where there are, prior and subsequent judgments, ib.

where a mortgagor sells a portion of his equity of redemption, 836.

MERGER.

of equitable in legal estate, 879, 880.

of charge, when person entitled becomes owner of estate, 420, 424, n.

by person entitled to partial interest in estate, where, 307, 345.

none on assignment of life interest in personalty to a married woman having the reversion, 487.

of incumbrances, 746, et seq.

incumbrance paid off by tenant for life, 308, 345, 748.

by tenant in tail, ib.

MERITORIOUS CONSIDERATION, 58, 284, 853, 889, 893.*MINES AND QUARRIES.

questions between tenant for life and remainderman as to, 570.

cannot be worked or opened by tenant for life unless previously worked, 573.

MISTAKE.

in marriage settlement, how rectified, 499.

MIXED GENERAL FUND.

payments out of pro rata, 235.

MODUS DECIMANDI.

act relating to, 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 100, i. 261.

MORAL OBLIGATION.

consideration for assumpsit, i. 245.

MORTGAGE, i. 603, 604 ; ii. 613, et seq. See LIENS, EQUITABLE MORTGAGES, CONDITIONS, SOLICITORS, MORTGAGEE, MORTGAGOR, REDEMPTION, REDEMPTION-MONEY, FORECLOSURE, MORTGAGES OF CHATTELS.

what may be the subject of a mortgage, 614.

consequences of assignment by way of mortgage of a leasehold, 614.

of advowson, 629.

nature of, at common law, i. 153.

mortgage of freehold lands at common law, 614.

See CONDITION.

by means of the creation of terms for years, 615.

Welsh mortgage, 616, et seq.

mortgagee cannot compel the mortgagor to redeem, nor can he foreclose, 617.

remedy of mortgagor, ib.

time, generally speaking, not a bar, 618.

general rule as regards mortgages generally, once a mortgage always a mortgage, ib.

evidence to show that the transaction was intended as a mortgage, 619, 620.

distinction between a mortgage and a sale with agreement for re-purchase on terms, 619, 622.

and conditional sale, 621, 622, 633.

loans on grants of annuities, 624, 626.

distinction between sale of an annuity and grant as a security, 625, 626.

Equity of redemption. See that title.

right to redeem cannot generally be clogged with any stipulations, 628.

as that interest, if not paid, shall be converted into principal, 628.

stipulations which mortgagee of West India estate may take advantage of, 630.

stipulation that the mortgagee, in default of payment, shall have a further interest, 631.

5 per cent. reserved with a stipulation that interest at 4 per cent. shall be received if regularly paid ; and 4 per cent. reserved with stipulation that 5 per cent. shall be paid if default made, 631.

limited right of redemption secured, 632.

leases made by mortgagor to mortgagee, 632, 633.

acquiescence, 633.

mortgage with power of sale, 633—638.

See STOCK, MORTGAGE OF.

rights and duties of mortgagee with power of sale, 634, 635.

duties of trustee for sale on default, 636.

power of sale implies power to, 85, 369, 407.

implied in direction to raise money out of rents and profits, where, 370, 407, 547, 549, 550.

wife's, husband may assign, where, 476, n. (d).

of wife's estate, equity of redemption remains hers though reserved to the husband, where, 306.

not allowed in place of security of government funds, where infants and married women concerned, 569.

not a proper execution of the trust where sale clearly intended, 369.

payment of redemption-money, 650.

personal estate applied in exoneration of lands in, 334.

not where the land was originally the debtor, 335.

See REDEMPTION-MONEY, PAYMENT OF, TENDER.

where the mortgage covers further advances, 764, n.

assignment of mortgage is an assignment of the debt, 655.

condition of assignee, 656.

assignee stands in the same situation as his assignor, ib.

interest paid may be converted into principal with the concurrence of the mortgagor, ib.

purchase of mortgage by a stranger, 656, 657.

by heir or agent, executor or other person, standing in a fiduciary character, 657.

mortgage may be subject of a donatio mortis causâ, ib.

extinction and merger of incumbrances, 746, et seq.

mortgage cancelled by mortgagee, 749.

parol gift of, ib.

MORTGAGE—continued.

equitable mortgages, 777, et seq.

See EQUITABLE MORTGAGES.

mortgage will prevail over a prior voluntary settlement, 638.

defective conveyances by way of mortgage, when aided in equity, 639, 640.

equity of redemption on mortgage of wife's estate, 644.

when and under what circumstances a receiver will be appointed at the instance of a subsequent mortgagee, 689.

right of mortgagee to tack one security to another. See TACKING.

priorities of mortgagees. See PRIORITIES.

where mortgagor pays off an incumbrance it will enure to the benefit of the subsequent mortgagees, 746.

MORTGAGEE. See MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.

how far a trustee for the mortgagor, 644, et seq.

may put all his securities in force concurrently, 646.

where he has not the deeds to deliver up, ib.

no right to surplus rents in the hands of a receiver appointed at the instance of third persons, 647.

cannot have a receiver appointed if he have the legal estate, ib.

if he have an equitable estate only he may, ib. 648.

payment to him of redemption money. See REDEMPTION-MONEY.

not bound to accept payment, except from the persons who are entitled to redeem, 651.

must accept the mortgage-money when properly tendered by subsequent mortgagee, 653.

may insist that all that is due to him be paid, though lent on two distinct mortgages, 651.

different where he comes to foreclose, ib.

entitled to six months' notice of payment, 652.

may purchase equity of redemption, 654.

not bound to produce deeds until paid, 644, 655, 670.

unless to prove notice, 671.

See DEEDS, PRODUCTION OF.

must produce bills of exchange, &c., showing amount of his debt, 671.

cannot dispute mortgagor's title, 654.

when made a party to a suit, there must be an offer to redeem him, 671.

contra, when not in character of mortgagee, ib.

right to foreclose, 674.

See FORECLOSURE.

when he may have a sale, 676, 677.

effect of, as regards costs, 678, 679.

devise by mortgagee of the mortgage-money, 655.

mode in which the account between the mortgagor and mortgagee is to be taken, 805, et seq.

See ACCOUNT.

MORTGAGES AND PLEDGES OF PERSONAL CHATTELS, 769, et seq.

See CHUSES IN ACTION, EQUITABLE MORTGAGES.

after time for redemption is passed stock mortgaged may be sold, 637, 769.

of Policy of Insurance, 770.

See CHUSES IN ACTION.

concurrently with common mortgage, 770.

distinction between mortgage and pawn, 771.

proper cases for the interference of the Court of Chancery in cases of pledge or pawn, 772, 773.

doctrine of tacking applied to pledges more extensively than to mortgages, 772.

right of factors to pledge, 773, 774.

mortgages of ships, 774.

of freight, ib.

of cargo, 776.

pawnbrokers' acts referred to, ib.

MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.

may pay over the rents to the mortgagor if he have no notice of any subsequent mortgage, 648.

may grant leases, 649.

but such leases liable to be defeated on redemption, ib.

may add expenses and necessary payment as for renewals, &c., to mortgage debt, ib. 650.

MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION—continued.

- if he opens mines it is at his own hazard, 650.
- cannot charge for management or trouble, 649, 650.
- mortgage of mines, 650.
- mortgagee who obtains judgment in ejectment will be considered as in possession, 649.
- the mode in which the account is taken against a mortgagee in possession, 806, et seq.
- See ACCOUNT.

MORTGAGOR.

- left in possession, 646.
- holds at the will of the mortgagee, ib.
- for most purposes considered as the owner of the estate, 648.
- but may be restrained from waste, as cutting timber, &c., if the estate be a scanty security, ib.

MORTMAIN.

- statute of, i. 592; ii. 33.
- what kinds of property are and are not within the act, 20, n. (c).
- how differing from provisions in Thellusson's Act, 183.

NE EXEAT REGNO.

- writ of, 15, 540, n. (4).
- against a married woman, 533.

NEGLIGENCE. See FRAUD.

- party affected with constructive notice by reason of, 755.
- as distinguished from fraud, i. 425.

NEXT OF KIN. See TRUST, EXECUTOR.

- take, on gift to "relations" of personalty, 75, 83.
- gifts to, 76.
- resulting trust in favour of, 223, 232.
- take lapsed legacies, when, 241.
- cannot claim benefit of exoneration for lapsed legacies, 343.
- of a married woman, limitation to, in default of appointment, 495, 496.
- where the executor will take for his own benefit, there being no next of kin, 364, n. IV.; but see Mapp v. Elcock, xiii. Jur. 290; and see PERSONAL ESTATE.

NOTICE. See EQUAL EQUITY, CHOSE IN ACTION.

- general doctrine as to, particularly as affecting the equities and priorities of incumbrances on real estate, 753, et seq.
- express or actual notice, 753.
- constructive notice.
  - what is, 754.
- docketing of judgment not notice, 746.
- nor registration of a conveyance, 762, 785.
- present disposition of the court not to extend the doctrine, 762.
- two classes, 755.
  1. where the party himself is fixed with constructive notice, 744, et seq.
    - negligence, 755, 788.
    - mere want of caution, 757, 788.
    - Sir E. Sugden's doubts as to the case of Whitbread v. St. John, 756, n.
    - facts coming to knowledge sufficient to excite attention, 757.
    - notice of one instrument notice of those to which it refers, ib.
    - notice of instrument which does not necessarily affect the property, 754, 758.
    - notice of circumstances so unusual as to excite suspicion, 758.
    - constructive notice from possession, 759.
    - suspicion of notice, ib.
    - of equity arising from construction, 760.
    - from the absence of the title-deeds, 788, 789.
  2. Where party is fixed with the notice which his attorney or agent may have acquired, 760, et seq.
    - generally speaking must be notice acquired in that transaction, 760, 761.
- constructive notice by pendency of suit, regulations of 2 Vict. c. 11, as to, 763.
- of trust, affects property in the hands of a purchaser, 195, 380.
- not necessary to affect volunteers, ib.

NOTICE—continued.

- purchaser how far bound where construction doubtful, 195, 380.
- does not affect disseisors, &c., 196.
- of ancestor's debts, does not affect purchasers from the heir of lands descended, 388.
- as affecting title to equitable interests in personal estate, 765.
- notice to trustee of reversionary interest not necessary on sale between the parties themselves, ib.
- of equitable title different from notice of legal title, 195.
- distinction as to the effect of notice in case of real and of personal estate, 730, n. 764.
- person who purchases with notice from a person who had no notice is protected, 764.

NUDUM PACTUM.

- according to the Roman law, i. 187, 219.

OPERATION OF LAW. See TRUSTS.

- trusts by operation of law, 193.

PARAPHERNALIA.

- of wife, what, 502.
- liable to husband's creditors, where, ib.

PARENT.

- what sufficient to place a person in loco parentis, 185, n. (d), 220.
- purchases by, in name of child, 215.
- resulting trust for, where, 217.
- portions given by, 394. See PORTIONS.
- appointment by, for his own benefit, 417.
- gifts to, for maintenance of children, (see MAINTENANCE,) 459, et seq.
- of himself and children, 463.

See LEGACIES.

PARTIES.

- to bills for redemption and for foreclosure, 694—708.
- judgment creditors, 703, 704.
- proper, where a bill is filed to compel trustees to replace a trust fund in which a class of persons, as children and the like, are interested, 953, 954.

PARTITION.

- of lands in the colonies cannot be had here, 7, 8.
- And see Tullock v. Hartley, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 114.

PARTNERSHIP.

- land belonging to, considered part of the stock, 207.
- each partner entitled to have the concern wound up and produce divided, 208.
- profits made by one partner, after a dissolution, is property of the, ib.
- on termination of, lands how far converted, 209.
- questions between real and personal representatives, as to, ib. 211.
- joint property of, a trust for creditors on insolvency, 211.
- but creditors of themselves have no lien, 212.
- dissolution of, how effected, 213.
- rights of creditors on, ib.
- administration of effects of, on bankruptcy, ib. et seq.

PAYMENT OF MORTGAGE DEBT. See DEBTS, EXONERATION, MARSHALLING OF ASSETS, MARSHALLING OF SECURITIES, CONTRIBUTION.

PAWN.

- distinction between mortgage and pawn, 774.

PAWNBROKERS ACT, 39 &amp; 40 Geo. III. c. 99.

- referred to, 776.

And see the treatise on this subject in the Jurist, Vol. XIII. No. 639.

PERFORMANCE, 608—610.

- distinguished from satisfaction, 436, n. 609.
- mixed case of satisfaction and performance, 610.
- where act done will be construed as done in performance of a covenant, 204.
- And see Salisbury v. Salisbury, 6 Hare, 526.

PERPETUITY. See REMOTENESS.

rule against, 93.

as applicable to uses, i. 487, 488.

effect of, where chattels directed to go in same manner as real estate, 156, 157, n. (e).

words creating, allowed to operate as far as law will permit, where, 141.

gift over of personal estate after what would be an estate tail of real, void as tending to, 149.

PERSONAL ESTATE. See ASSETS, WORDS, CONSTRUCTION OF, NEXT OF KIN.

goods and chattels, i, 179, 191.

annexed to freehold, i. 191.

choses in action, i. 180.

copyright, statutes relating to, i. 181—184.

alienation of, i. 184; ii. 915.

delivery, ib.

contract at law concerning, i. 185, 186.

consideration, i. 186.

gift of, to a "man and his issue," confers the absolute interest, 145, 160, n. (1), 148.

other expressions conferring absolute interest in, 146.

limitations in remainder of, conflicting cases as to, 149, 151, ib. n. (c), 162.

first fund for payment of debts and legacies, 334.

exoneration of, from payment of debts and legacies, ib.

does not extend to next of kin on failure of bequest, 343.

when the crown takes personal estate held in trust, 236—7.

PIN-MONEY.

granted to the wife by settlement, must be properly applied by her, 500—503.

wife only entitled to one year's arrears, 501.

PLEADING AT LAW.

modern alterations and improvements in the system of, i. 252, 253.

PLEDGE. See MORTGAGES AND PLEDGES OF PERSONAL CHATTELS.POLICY OF INSURANCE. See CHOSE IN ACTION.

assignable at law by deed without delivery of the policy, according to the ruling of Patterson, J., Neale v. Molyneux, 2 Car. and Kirwan, 672.

PORTIONS.

for younger children, doctrines of Court of Chancery on trusts for raising, 390, 393.

how usually effected, 392.

secured by a term, 393.

when a charge on real estate, ib.

given by will, 394.

by a parent or person in loco parentis, ib.

vesting of, 395, 397, 399, 421, n.

payable out of land, 396.

where there is no gift but in the direction to pay, 399.

where conditions are annexed, ib.

where child dies in parents' lifetime leaving children, 400.

where some of several children die before the parent, ib.

court inclines to include all children, 401.

survivorship, gift over divesting, 406.

raising, 398, 402, 405.

by sale of reversionary term, 402, 422, n.

where not to be raised till term comes into possession, 405.

where child too young to require it, ib.

out of rents and profits, 407, 422, n.

by sale or mortgage, ib.

where some of several portions are raisable, 408.

interest on, when allowed, 409.

unequally distributed, 410.

marshalling, ib.

who are "younger children," 411, 414, 423, n.

how ascertained in gifts by parents and persons in loco parentis, 412.

elder child unprovided for, 413.

PORTIONS—continued.

when to be ascertained, 414, 417.

younger child becoming eldest, 415.

where a parent seeks to benefit himself by appointing to, 417.

within what time they must be born to share, 417.

mode of distribution, per stirpes or per capita, 419.

by substitution, 472.

See SUBSTITUTION.

redeemed by subsequent provision, not set up by a republication of will, 441.

satisfied terms created for securing, 457, n. II.

Double, doctrine of Court of Chancery, as to, 427, 429.

second provision generally an ademption of the first, 427, 432.

where, after gift by will, a parent makes an advancement, 428, 458, n. III.

will subsequent to a settlement, ib. 429.

where a stranger is the donor, no presumption against, 430, n. (a).

persons to be burthened by, how considered, 431.

Satisfaction, doctrine of, (see SATISFACTION,) 427.

pro tanto, 432.

depends on intention, 429, 432.

which may be rebutted by evidence, 441, 445, et seq.

where the provisions are not ejusdem generis, 433, 438, 454.

gift of a residue, 435, 437, 456.

where there are material differences in the mode of enjoyment of two provisions, 438, 454, 455.

when the differences are slight, 438.

evidence, in what cases admitted, 442, et seq., 458, n.

and performance, difference between, 436.

in provision for a wife, 444.

POSSESSION. See RENTS AND PROFITS.

decreed where estate claimed under equitable title, 845.

not where the title is legal, ib.

POSSIBILITIES AND CONTINGENT INTERESTS.

originally not assignable at the common law, 855.

may be devised at law, ib.

coupled with an interest in land now pass by deed at law and in equity, 879.

assignable in equity, 852, 855, 865.

consideration, 852.

future property assignable in equity, 866.

See MORTGAGE.

notice, 866.

court binds the property, 867.

things in the nature of possibilities which cannot be assigned, 869.

things which can only be produced by litigation, ib.

Prosser v. Edmonds, 872.

maintenance and champerty, 869.

See CHOSSES IN ACTION.

POWER. POWERS.

as modes of raising future uses, i. 486.

execution of, by representatives of trustee, 38.

and trusts, distinction between, 39, 81.

in the nature of, or coupled with, trusts, 81, 369.

to be exercised in favour of a class, 82.

where objects take equally, when appointment, not made, 83.

if selection not exercised, 84.

discretionary, 68, 85.

cannot be delegated, 78.

exercised by Court of Chancery, where, 85.

not fairly exercised, 87, 88, n. (b), 417.

illusory appointments abolished, 88.

remoteness, doctrine of, affecting, 104.

POWER. POWERS—continued.

- general, in part void, whether they may be good in part, 105.
- of alienation, given to husband and wife jointly under the articles, 139.
- to jointure, 137, 138, n. (c), 577.
- of division among children in the parent, how to be exercised, 139.
- "usual," directed by articles, general rule as to, 142.
- what are, ib.
- of sale for payment of debts and legacies, 85, 365, 366.
- implies power to mortgage, 85, 369, 407.
- proceeds are equitable assets, 315.
- arising by implication, 316.
- to be exercised by executors, 366, 367.
- whether power survives, ib.
- when void or extinct at law, 368.
- duties of trustees under, 369, 370.
- cannot be made effectual immediately unless authorized by the trust, 370.
- purchaser bound to see to the application of his purchase-money, where, 371, 372.
- to appoint a fund among persons "or" their children gives a power of selection, 420.
- reserved to a married woman by settlement, (see HUSBAND AND WIFE,) 492, 494, 497.
- and property, distinction between, 495.
- to be exercised by a tenant for life, (see TENANT FOR LIFE,) 574, 577.
- of sale of real estates does not authorize timber being sold separately, 575.
- doctrine of election applied to, 590.

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

- when it is required to be under seal, 901.
- revocation of, ib.
- and see Gaussen v. Morton, 10 Barn. & Cr. 731; Watson v. King, 1 Starkie, N. P. C. 121; 4 Campb. 272.

POWER OF SALE. See POWER.

- mortgage with, 633, et seq.
- See MORTGAGES.

PRECATORY WORDS. See TRUST, BY.*PRESCRIPTION.

- act relating to, 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, i. 259, 260.

PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW. See EVIDENCE.

- application of parol evidence to repel presumptions of law, i. 565—571.

PRIORITIES AS BETWEEN SUCCESSIVE INCUMBRANCERS. See BETTER EQUITY, EQUAL EQUITY.

- equitable charges rank according to their dates, 727.
- effect of the possession of the legal estate, 727.
- as affecting priorities between incumbrancers, 727, 728, et seq., 730, n. 733—737 741.
- See DOWER, TACKING.
- priority acquired by having a better equity, 728.
- what is a better equity, 729.
- omission on the part of one may give better equity to another, 729, 740, 765.
- question whether the omitting to take or to keep the title deeds will give priority to the person who obtains them, 767; (and see Neale v. Molyneux, 2 Car. & Kirw. 676).
- purchase for valuable consideration without notice, as affecting priorities, 734.
- suppression of the truth, 765.
- concealment, 766.

PROBATE.

- to what extent conclusive, 19, 494.
- liabilities which are imposed on an executor who takes probate, 918, 919.
- of foreign instrument here as a will, how far it affects the construction, 14, n.

PRODUCT.

- product, or substitute for a thing, follows the nature of the thing itself, 221.

PROMISSORY NOTES, i. 187.

PROPERTY, REAL AND PERSONAL.

epitome of modern statutes relating to, i. 288—294.

PROTECTOR OF THE SETTLEMENT, i. 169, 170.

PURCHASE-MONEY.

whether purchaser is bound to see to the application of, 289, 367, 373, 381, 383, 389.

in purchases from executors or administrators, 372, 375.

where sale not required for the purposes of the estate, 374, 377.

rights of legatees and creditors, 375, 377.

on sale of property specifically bequeathed, 376.

after notice that debts are paid, 379.

on purchases of lands, &c., from trustees under deeds or wills, 380.

where sale for payment of debts, or where specific objects are not pointed out, 381, 382.

where annuity charged after charge of debts, 382.

alienation void pending a creditor's suit, ib.

liability of purchaser to be determined on state of things at the time, 383.

fraud in, 384.

where debts and legacies are specified, 386.

where the estate is charged with legacies, purchaser bound, 389.

on purchase from heir, purchaser not bound by debts of ancestor, 388.

mortgagee of lands vested in trustees under an Act of Parliament to raise money, bound to see it applied, 386.

PURCHASE FOR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION WITHOUT NOTICE.

as affecting the priorities of incumbrancers, 734.

PURCHASER.

with notice of trust, how far a trustee, 195, 197.

effect of Statute of Limitations, 197.

for value, not bound by voluntary conveyance, even with notice of it, 288.

otherwise if for a charity, 289.

bound to see to the application of his purchase-money, where, 289, 367, 373, 381, 383, 389. See PURCHASE-MONEY.

from executors and administrators, 372.

from trustees for sale, 380.

under a decree, 388.

under an Act of Parliament, 386.

of lands descended to heir, 388.

court will not rectify settlement against, in doubtful cases, 195.

whether affected by notice of constructive trust, ib.

QUEEN CONSORT.

considered as a feme sole, and may sue and be sued alone, 506.

REAL ESTATE. See PROPERTY, CONVERSION.

character of personal estate so completely given to it as to pass, under residuary bequest of personal estate, 237.

RECEIPT.

trustee or executor joining in signing a receipt for money, 930.

See TRUSTEE, EXECUTOR.

RECEIVER. See MORTGAGEE.

where a receiver will be appointed at the instance of a mortgagee, 647.

at the instance of subsequent mortgagee, 689.

under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14. See MORTGAGE.

REDEMPTION. See MORTGAGE, TIME, PRIORITIES, TACKING, ACCOUNT.

proviso for redemption, construction of, 644, 664, 665.

wife's estate, 644, 665.

mode of proceeding to effect redemption, 659.

parties to bill for. See PARTIES.

not permitted till after time fixed for payment of mortgage money, 668.

REDEMPTION—continued.

- who may redeem, 660—663.
  - judgment creditor, ib., 799.
- case of cestui que trust, 663, 672.
  - of insolvent, 665.
  - persons who have no interest must not join, 667.
  - person having alleged title, 668.
  - recognitions of title, 690.
  - purchaser of equity of redemption under contract, 668.
- subsequent mortgagee must pay all interest in arrear, 666.
- owner of equity of redemption of part must redeem the whole, 666.
- same equities administered to each party in suit to redeem as in suit to foreclose, 669, 684, 685, 736, 741, n.
- costs which mortgagor must bear, 669.
  - reconveyance, 670.
- provisions of the act 7 Geo. II. c. 20, 685—687.
- dismissal of bill for redemption equivalent to foreclosure, 671.
- relief given where deeds lost or destroyed, 690.
- redemption of personal chattels pledged, 772.

REDEMPTION MONEY.

- payment of, 650.
  - See MORTGAGOR, MORTGAGEE, TENDER.
- must be paid to personal representative, 651.
- six months' notice must be given before payment to stop interest, 652.
- where commission may be deducted, and where not, 653, 654.

REMAINDER.

- estate in, i. 155—158.
  - how affected by the doctrine as to livery of seisin, i. 157, 158.
  - Stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 8, i. 158.

“RELATIONS.” See WORDS.

- trusts for, 73.
- interpretation of expression, 74, 75.

RELEASE.

- what acts will amount to release of trustee from liability in respect of breach of trust, 937, 942.

RELEASE OF DEBT.

- by declarations accompanied by acts, 912.

REMEDY AT LAW.

- general principle that the Court of Chancery will not interfere where the Courts of Law are competent to afford an effectual remedy, i. 408.

REMEDIES AGAINST TRUSTEES. See DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES.*REMOTENESS. See PERPETUITY, VESTING, TRUSTS.

- doctrine of, 92, and see the additional cases under title TRUSTS.
  - vesting, as affecting this doctrine, 94, 95.
- as affecting powers, 104.
- estate tail, 105.
- gift to unborn persons, 106.
  - for life, remainder to persons in esse, ib.
- gifts to a class, ib.
  - where some capable and some incapable, 107.
- gifts of personal chattels to go with a title, 108.
- power to cut timber, 113.
- gift of profits until estate shall vest in heir attaining twenty-one, 116—125.
- limitations upon void limitations, 125.
  - may become good in event, 126.
- absolute gift with illicit limitations, 127, 229.

RENEWAL, TRUSTS FOR. See TRUSTS, TENANT FOR LIFE.

RENT-CHARGE.

distinction between sale of a rent-charge and grant by way of security, 625, 627.
grant of, with clause of repurchase, 627.

RENTS AND PROFITS. See POSSESSION, APPORTIONMENT. account of, not given generally, where the right depends on legal title, 845, 846.

case of infant an exception, 846, n. apportionment of, between tenant for life and remainderman, 577, 578, 582, n. III.
charges on, 369.
how raised, 370, 407, 547.
of annuity on, 329, 370.
of portions on, 406, 422, n.
perception of, 547.

REPLEVIN.

goods may be specifically recovered at law in this action only, i. 224.

REPUDIATION.

seeming act of, may amount to acceptance, 919.

RESIDUARY BEQUEST.

character of personal estate so completely given to real estate as to pass under residuary bequest, 237. See CONVERSION, TRUST.

RESIDUARY DEVISEE.

when a charge sinks for his benefit, 23, n. (b).

RESIDUE.

gift of, where it includes lapsed legacies, and where not, 241.
lapse of, goes to next of kin, ib.
exoneration of, 343.
given to several in succession, how to be enjoyed, 552, 558, 568.
where there are contingent charges upon it, 578.

RESULTING TRUST, i. 510, 511. See TRUSTS, EVIDENCE.

REVOCATION. See VOLUNTARY DEED.

SALE. See DEBTS, LEGACIES, PURCHASER, PURCHASE-MONEY, TRUSTS, TRUSTEE.

for payment of debts and legacies (see POWERS, EXECUTOR), 85, 365—367, 371.
powers of, imply power to mortgage, 85, 369, 407.
arising by implication of law, 316, 366, 367.
implied in direction to raise money out of rents and profits, 316, 370, 407, 547, 549, 550.
mortgage not a proper execution of the power where sale clearly intended, 369.
in what cases power survives, 366.
duties of trustee for, 369, 370, additional note.
cannot be made until authorized by the trust, however beneficial it might be, 370.
of estates in the colonies, 8.

SATISFACTION. See PORTIONS.

doctrine of, 427, 429, 432, 605.
in the case of double portions, 425, et seq.
where an advancement by parent, after gift by will, operates as, 428, 458, n. III.
gift by will subsequent to a settlement, 429, 430.
where a stranger is the donor, 430, n. (a). share on an intestacy does not operate as, 430.
in part, 432.
where the provisions are not ejusdem generis, or different in mode of enjoyment, 433, 438, 454, 455.
gift of a residue, 435, 437, 456.
assumption by parent of son's debt, 437, 440, n. (d). is a question of intention, 429, 432.
and may be rebutted by evidence, 441, 446.
evidence in what cases admitted, 442, 445, 449, 453, 458, n.

SATISFACTION—continued.

- may destroy contingent gift over, 455.
- child may elect to take one of two portions, 455.
- distinction between satisfaction and performance, 436, n., 609.
  - gift not ejusdem generis, 609.
  - distributive share, ib.
- mixed case of satisfaction and performance, 610.
  - evidence, ib.
- time material as to satisfaction not to performance, 611.
- in the case of legacy given by debtor to his creditor, 428, n. (a), 438, 455, n. 605—608.

SCINTILLA JURIS, i. 486.SEPARATE ESTATE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

- what words necessary to create, 507, 511.

SEPARATION DEEDS (see HUSBAND AND WIFE), 526.SETTLEMENT. See ARTICLES, HUSBAND AND WIFE.

- construction of, 13, 26.
  - between foreigners, ib.
- consideration of marriage will support, 52.
- of lands directed by will to be settled, 137.
- executory or directory trusts for, ib.
- reformed by reference to articles, 140, 141, 499.
  - in favour of what persons, 141.
- stipulations in, in favour of strangers and collaterals, how enforced, 274, 280.
- voluntary, binding on settlor, 289.
  - not on purchaser for value, even with notice, 288.
- collaterals, when within the range of the consideration, 291, 292.
- where invalid as to collaterals as against creditors, 290, 292.
- wife's equity to (see HUSBAND AND WIFE), 482, et seq.
- on the marriage of a ward of court without consent, 486, 493, n. (b), 499.
- by the court on the wife, always extended to children, 488, 511.
  - where the husband refuses to execute, interest directed to accumulate, 490.
    - not where the husband deserts his wife, 491.
  - where the wife is an infant, 486, 493, n. (b), 499.
    - cannot be defeated by the marriage being delayed till the infant come of age, ib.
    - binding on subsequent husband, with notice, ib.
- mistake in, how rectified, 499.
- secret, before marriage, a fraud on the husband, 505.

SHELLEY'S CASE.

- rule in, i. 142, 503 ; ii. 131, 134, 145, n. (f).
- applies to equitable as well as legal estates, 24, n., 880.
  - not where the two limitations are not of the same quality, ib.

SHIPS.

- mortgages of, 774.
- lien on, 796.
- purchase of, in name of another, no resulting trust, 220.
  - effect of Ship Registry Acts on, 221.

SIMPLE-CONTRACT DEBTS. See DEBTS.

- tacking, 725.

SOLICITOR. See TRUSTEE, EXECUTOR.

- acting as trustee, not allowed to charge the usual solicitor's costs, 945.
- gift from client to, when effectual, 301.
- lien of, 800, et seq.
- cannot take a mortgage for future costs, though he may for costs due, 630, 631.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. See TRUSTS.

when permitted in favour of stranger to the contract, 274, 280, 286.

when his condition of life has been changed by the instrumentality of the parties, 281.

when he has contributed a valuable consideration, ib.

will be decreed in favour of stranger where a party within the consideration seeks it, 287.

not enforced against the heir of the covenantor, where, 282, 283, n. (a).

when enforced against representatives, 284.

contract must be founded on a valuable consideration, 285.

of contracts entered into to secure the peace of families, 288.

of agreements between debtor and creditor for composition, 353.

SPRINGING AND SHIFTING USES, i. 483.SPRINGING, SHIFTING, AND FUTURE TRUSTS, i. 500.STOCK. See MORTGAGE, MORTGAGES AND PLEDGES OF PERSONAL CHATTELS, TRUSTEE.*STRANGER. See TRUSTS, SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.*SUBPCENA.

service of, on parties out of the jurisdiction, 7, n. (a).

SUBSTITUTION. See PORTIONS.

where children take legacies in substitution for their parents, 472, and n.

and see Smith v. Oliver, xiii. Jur. 159.

"SUFFICIENT."

what is meant by, in reference to a security, 648.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.

when, and by whom, such a bill may be filed after the common decree, to charge the trustee with wilful default, 953, n. III.

"SURVIVOR." See WORDS, CONSTRUCTION OF.*"SURVIVORS" construed "others," 473, n. II., and see WORDS.*TACKING.

right to tack one surety to another, so that both must be paid at once, 721.

right as between mortgagor and mortgagee, ib.

where mortgagee has several claims, each of which is a lien on the estate, 721, 722.

no right to tack a prior judgment, 723.

nor a bond, ib.

where mortgagee holds two securities from the same person, 726.

bond debt may be tacked against the heir or devisee, 724.

the reason, ib.

effect of stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, as regards copyholds, 725.

simple-contract debt, since the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, ib.

against executor, ib.

doctrine as to the right to tack one security to another, as between successive incumbrancers, 727, et seq.

See PRIORITIES AS BETWEEN SUCCESSIVE INCUMBRANCERS, BETTER EQUITY, PURCHASE FOR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

process by which tacking is effected, 734.

persons claiming to tack must have the legal estate—equal equity—and must have advanced his money on the credit of the land, 735, 739, 743—745.

See EQUAL EQUITY.

third mortgagee buying in the legal estate from first mortgagee, may tack, 739, 751.

pendente lite, 738.

statute or judgment creditor who is first incumbrancer, buying third mortgagee, 740.

judgment bought in by mortgagee, 741, 752.

how mortgagee shall account upon the judgment, 741.

observations on allowing this effect to a satisfied judgment, 742.

applied to pledges of personal chattels, 772.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

favoured in Chancery, 143.

TENANT FOR LIFE. See CONVERSION, EXONERATION, TRUSTEE, TIMBER, TITLE DEEDS.

conversion, when directed against, at the instance of those in remainder, 42, 552, 558, et v. infra.

rights of, as to possession and management of estates and title deeds, 45, 46.

entitled to interest until conversion, 44, 563, 568.

paying off incumbrances, when an exoneration of the estate and when not, 307, 344, 345, 546, 551.

under trusts for renewal of leaseholds and copyholds, 542, et seq.

finances and expences of renewal, how to be paid, and raised, 545—550.

as between tenant for life and remainderman, ib.

entitled to rents directed to accumulate for renewal, where it cannot be effected, 551.

entitled to enjoyment of residuary, funds and leasehold in specie, where, 42, 552, 558; and see Hunt v. Scott, 1 De Gex & Sm. 219.

what interest allowed to, for first year, where conversion must ultimately take place, 558—568, 580, nn. I., II.

4 per cent. interest allowed on unconverted property, where, 563.

practice at the Rolls, ib.

must give security to refund where there are contingent charges on the residue, 578.

of specific property, when entitled to extraordinary profits and bonuses, 569, 580, n. I.

investment of fund will not be varied merely to give a larger interest to, ib.

must keep down interest on incumbrances and legacies charged, 551, 574.

and remainderman, questions arising between, 43, 545, 546, 551, 570, 574, 576, 577.

as to timber, 570.

what he may cut where impeachable for waste, 570, 571.

waste, 570.

Statute of Limitations, how affecting, 571.

interest at 4 per cent. charged for, against estate of, ib.

allowed no benefit arising from, 572.

bound to repair, 573.

allowed for substantial repairs and improvements, where, and where not, ib., 574.

cannot open or work mines or quarries not previously open, 573.

powers of sale, leasing, &c., how to be exercised by, 574—576.

of exchange, 574.

improperly exercised, remainderman consenting, is bound, 575, 576.

of jointuring, 577.

dying entitled to an apportionment of rents and dividends, 577, 578, 582, n. III.

distinction between a gift of an annuity and of a capital sum to produce, 578, 583, n. IV.

of the profits of a trade, 580, n. I.

TENANT IN TAIL. See ISSUE.

paying off incumbrance, 46.

mortgage by, 639, 679. See MORTGAGE.

TENDER OF MORTGAGE MONEY. See REDEMPTION MONEY.

effect of tender, 652.

as regards costs, 652, 675.

where the money lent in London and the mortgagee lives elsewhere, 653.

bill for foreclosure may still be filed, 675.

TIMBER.

questions between tenant for life and remainderman, as to, 570.

what may be cut by tenant for life, ib.

cutting, is waste when, ib., 571.

ornamental, tenant for life restrained from cutting, 571.

person cutting, deprived of benefit, 572.

application of proceeds of, where waste committed, ib.

not to be sold separate from the estate under a general power of sale, 370, n., 575.

TIME. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

lapse of, effect on suits, 61.

effect on remedy for fraud, 62.

breach of trust, ib.

TIME—continued.

- not a bar to redemption of a Welsh mortgage, 618.
- effect of length of time as against the right to redeem and the right to foreclose, 709—717.
- general doctrines of the Court of Chancery as to the effect of lengthened enjoyment and adverse possession, 709, 710.
- effect of acknowledgments, 710, 711.
- Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, i. 256, 259; ii. 718, 719, nn. I., II.
- provisions of the 28th, 40th, and 42nd sections as affecting mortgages, 711—713, 718.
- retrospective effect, 713.
- operation of, as regards tenant for life, 714.
- as regards bills for foreclosure, 714, 716.
- where debt secured by bond and on covenant, 716.
- effect of appointment of receiver as regards the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, 716.
- bar from length of time must be pleaded, or relied upon by demurrer, 717.
- as to persons under disabilities, 718.
- operation of 3rd section of 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 100, where person made a party to a suit by amendment, 714.
- allowed to executors to collect testator's assets, 42, 565.

TITLE DEEDS. See DEEDS.

- to be held by trustee, 46.
- by tenant for life, ib.

TORTIOUS CONVEYANCES,

- abolished by stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, i. 291.

TRUSTEE. See EXECUTOR, PARTIES.

- who may be, 32, 33, 35.
- liabilities of, 918, 919.
- duties and liabilities under the ancient system of the Court of Chancery, i. 458—459.
- breach of trust by, 919, 932, 933.
- not absolved from consequences of breach of trust by having acted under the advice of a solicitor, 919.
- what acts of seeming repudiation may amount to an acceptance of the trust, ib.
- cannot of his own act alone denude himself of the character of trustee, 48, 920.
- is liable for the defaults of any person to whom he may have delegated or assigned the trust, ib.
- forgetfulness not an excuse for not performing a duty, 762, 921.
- bound to keep his accounts in a regular manner, 921.
- bound to afford all necessary information, ib.
- keeping balances in his hands unnecessarily, charged with interest, ib., 951.
- 5 per cent., 922 n., 932, 934.
- 4 per cent., usual rate, 922, n.
- rests, 921, 922.
- generally charged on further directions, 932.
- duties and liabilities under trust to accumulate, 190, 191, 921, 926, 927.
- duties of trustees for sale, 370, et v. infra in this title.
- power of sale given to three or more trustees, 366, 947.
- liable for omissions as well as acts, 922.
- omission to sell or convert, 934.
- to get in debts due to the trust estate, 923.
- discretion as to selling Mexican bonds and the like, 923, n.
- duty to renew, 544.
- wilful default, 924, 953.
- decree for, after common decree, 941, 953.
- omission to give notice to tenant on an opportunity offering for raising the rent, 924.
- liability where the direction is to invest in government or real securities, and neither is done, 924, 925.
- loss from fluctuation of funds, 934.
- investment, 925, et seq.
- general duties in regard to investment, 925, n., 933.
- investment on mortgage of real estate, 925.
- not justified in lending on personal security, unless authorized so to do, 926.
- or leaving the fund on personal security, 926.
- generally only answerable for his own receipts, 927.

TRUSTEE—continued.

- though required to lend to husband, will be justified in refusing if he be insolvent, 926, n.
- liability of trustee in regard to moneys which have come into the hands of co-trustee, 929.
  - difference between co-trustees and co-executors in this respect, ib.
- trustee joining in sale of stock, ib.
  - cases where trustees have been ordered to replace stock, 932, n.
- where trustee joins in signing receipt, 929, 952.
  - difference in this respect between trustees and executors, 930.
- trustee placing funds in the power of co-trustee, 933.
  - for convenience or in the due course of business, ib., 934.
  - paid to a banker, 934.
- culpable negligence in reference to leaving money in the hands of agent abroad, 935.
- trustees acting under mistake, ib.
- specialty debt created by breach of trust, 936.
- party may be precluded from charging trustee for breach of trust by condition imposed by a third person to that effect, ib.
- where trustee commits a breach of trust with the sanction of cestui que trust, ib.
- effect of acquiescence of cestui que trust, 937, 944.
  - release, ib., 942.
- trust property stolen, 937.
- effect of Statute of Limitations as regards executor, and as regards trustee, ib.
- allowance for expenses, 938.
  - charges and expenses 939.
  - maintenance of cestui que trust, 938.
  - lien for, 803, 804, 938.
- entitled generally to costs, 47, 939, 940, 942, n.
  - as between solicitor and client, 939.
  - difference between case of executor and of heir, 939, n.
  - principle of taxation once adopted usually followed, ib., n.
- when ordered to pay costs, 47, 932, n., 940, and n., 944, n.
  - where liability arises from joining in wrongful act, 941.
  - contribution, 942.
- account settled between trustee and cestui que trust, ib., and see 953.
  - between defendants, 953.
- removal of trustees, 943.
- appointment of new trustees, ib., 947.
- tenant for life of estates decreed to be sold for payment of debts, trustee within 1 Will. IV. c. 60, 943.
- devise of trust estate by trustee, 364.
- generally not permitted to purchase trust property, 299, 310, 943.
  - principle of the rule, 943, 944.
  - under what circumstances he may buy from, or take a gift from his cestui que trust, 944.
- not allowed any remuneration, or to make any profit by his office, 208, 299, 310, 945.
  - solicitor acting as trustee, ib., 946.
- trustees to preserve contingent remainders, 948, 951.
- infant ordered to convey, 16.
- dying without heir, 32, 23.
- attainder of, ib.
- want or failure of, will not vitiate the trust, 33, 355, 368.
- corporations may be, where, 33, 35.
- estate of, under devise in trust, (1 Vict. c. 26,) 36.
- may call for legal estate, when, 37.
- new, of charities, power to appoint inserted in deed appointing, ib.
  - not in cases of private trust, ib.
- devolution of trust on heir or personal representative of, 38, 364, n.
- execution of powers and trusts by, ib.
- private liabilities of, do not affect trust estate, 39, 40.
- rule as regards indefinite direction to, in division of assets, 42, 552.
  - under direction to sell as soon as conveniently may be, 41, 42.
- conversion by, ib.
- possession and management of estate by, 45.
  - of title deeds by, ib., 46.
  - left with cestui que trust with his consent, ib.

TRUSTEE—continued.

- entitled to have his accounts examined and settled, 46, 47.
- duty of, where trust terminated, 47, 520.
- not entitled to a release, 47.
- indemnity to, by cestui que trust, ib.
- act for the relief of, (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96,) 49, 954.
- discretion given to, cannot be delegated, 78. See DISCRETION.
- purchaser from, with notice of trust, bound, 195, 197, 298.
- cannot sell to a purchaser and afterwards take a re-conveyance discharged from the trust, 196.
- where one of several executors named trustee, the other executors held to be such, 229.
- takes the fee by implication for the purposes of the will, where, 295.
- heir is, of the legal estate under a direction for sale, where, 296, 366.
- character of, arising by implication or construction of law, 295.
  - where an executor is a debtor to the estate, 296.
  - where legatees have been paid before creditors were known, 297.
  - attaches to purchaser from executor of testator's assets sold by the executor for his own purposes, 298.
  - to assignees of a bankrupt broker, ib.
  - arising in dealings between attorney and client, agent and principal, 301.
  - where an executor seeks to renew a lease for his own benefit, 299.
  - where a person having a limited interest with others seeks benefit for himself, 302.
  - effect of laches, 305.
- having the legal right, entitled to sue and be sued without cestui que trust, where, 308, 389, n.
  - can give a good discharge, ib. 367, 368, 380.
- banker is not, 309.
- vendor becomes such for purchaser on contract entered into, 310.
- under charge or power of sale for payment of debts and legacies, 365.
  - duties of, 369, 370, n.; et v. supra in this title.
  - who may sell, 365, 366.
  - in what cases power survives, 366.
  - of purchaser seeing to the application of his purchase-money, 380, 382.
  - cannot aliene to pay his private debt, 384.
  - under trust for payment of specified sums, 386.
  - implied authority to give receipts, 387.
- in Composition deeds, 355.
- husband is for the wife, where no trustee named, 506, 507.
- for a married woman, his duties, 520, 521.
- wife may convey her separate property without the assent of, in what cases, 507.
- under separation deeds, 526, 530.

TRUSTS. TRUST. See EQUITABLE ESTATES, TRUST ESTATES, TRUSTS OF CHATTELS.

- introduction of modern trusts, i. 490—493.
- classes of, i. 493, 495.
  - passive and active, i. 493.
- permanent, 3.
  - estate under permanent or passive trust, i. 499.
- special or temporary, 3.
- springing, shifting, and future trusts, i. 500, and see that title.
- Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, ss. 7, 8 & 9, as affecting trusts, i. 497, 498, 512, 513; ii. 20.
- trusts are independent of tenure, i. 500.
- express, i. 495—499; ii. 4.
  - nature of, and how created, i. 496, 497.
- who may create, 5.
- of what they may be the subject, 6.
- general doctrines relating to, 17.
- created by will, ib., 19.
  - by acts inter vivos, 20.
- evidence of creation of, what sufficient, 20, 22.
- declaration of, made without writing, where, 19, 20.
  - what sufficient, 21.
  - when may be made, ib.

TRUSTS. TRUST—continued.

- by bankrupt after bankruptcy, 21.
- requisites of, 22.
- uncertain or indefinite, ib.
- on failure of, who takes, 23, 223.
- limitations of, i. 505 ; ii. 23, 223.
- of personal estate, i. 513 ; ii. 24.
- for accumulation, (see ACCUMULATION,) 24, 25, 164, et seq.
- how far void, ib.
- when void for remoteness, 93, et seq.
  - and see Jackson v. Majoribanks, 12 Sim. 93 ; Cole v. Sewell, affirmed in Dom. Proc. xii. Jur. 927 ; Blagrove v. Hancock, V.-C. of E., xii. Jur. 1081 ; and Welborne v. Teal, 6 Hare, 239.
- exclusive jurisdiction of Court of Chancery over, 24, 25.
- definition of, by Lord Hardwicke, ib. n. (f).
- construction of, principles in the, ib. 26.
  - of devises in trust, 27.
  - intention, regarded in, 28.
  - technical rules of, 29.
- on executory words, 30, 52.
- decreed, though no trustee named, 33, 51, 81.
- never fails for want of trustee, 33, 368.
- devolution of, on heir or personal representative of trustee, 38, 364, n.
- not affected by trustee's private liabilities, 39.
- estate liable to debts of cestui que trust, 41.
- of indefinite nature, duties of trustee, 42, 43, 552.
- terminated, duties of trustee, 47.
- estate, possession and management of, 45, 46.
- constituted, where, 52.
- irrevocable, where, ib. n. (g), 55.
- created by parol declaration, 53.
- transfer of property not necessary to perfect, Pye, ex parte, 18 Ves. stated, ib. n. (d).
- what not sufficient to create, 56.
- provisions of statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, as to, i. 506.
- for payment of debts, (see DEBTS,) 58, 348.
- negligence and delay, how trust affected by, 60, 63, 305.
- Statute of Limitations affecting, i. 502 ; ii. 48, 61.
- breach of, not affected by lapse of time, (see TIME,) 62.
- created by recommendatory and precatory words, i. 489, 499 ; ii. 64.
  - effect of decisions on, 67.
  - discretionary power in donee, 68, 69.
    - cannot be delegated, 78.
  - what words not sufficient to create, 68, 70 ; and see Hoy v. Master, 6 Sim. 568.
    - as affecting positive devises in the will, 67.
  - And see Winch v. Brutton, 14 Sim. 379.
  - of appointment of manager by, 71.
  - certainty requisite in, 72, 78.
  - gifts of residue, 78.
    - vesting, 79.
  - for "family," 73.
  - for "relations," 75, 83.
    - how construed, ib.
    - donee intrusted with the selection, 76, 77.
  - for "descendants," 77.
    - take as joint-tenants, when, ib.
- for Charities, certainty requisite in, 79.
  - who entitled on failure of, 80.
- and powers, distinction between, (see POWER,) 81.
- gift over, on bankruptcy or alienation, 89.
- Executory, what is, 128, 130.
  - intention, how far governs, 131.
- Directory, what constitutes, 132.
  - as distinguished from executory, 133.
  - where lands are to be conveyed, 132, 134.

TRUSTS. TRUST—continued.

- voluntary deed containing, 135.
- difference in construction of, in articles and wills, 136.
- lands directed to be settled on parent for life, and after his death on his issue, 137, 145.
- for issue, grandchildren take, 138, 139.
- and daughters as well as sons, 139.
- for settlement of gavelkind lands, how carried out, 140.
- on a person "when" he shall attain twenty-one, 141.
- so as to create perpetuity, effectual as far as law allows, ib.
- "usual powers," what are, 142.
- of estates to go with a title, 143.
- by words importing joint-tenancy, may be construed tenancy in common, ib.
- of personal estate in favour of children, 145.
- for a man and his issue gives an estate tail in realty, and an absolute interest in personality, ib.
- for settlement of chattels to go as real estate, 156, et seq.
- by Operation of Law, doctrines of Court of Chancery as to, i. 508 ; ii. 193, et v. infra.
- not within the operation of the Statute of Frauds, 194.
- fixed on trust property in the hands of the possessor, with notice of the trust, ib.
- and on volunteers, without notice, 195.
- purchaser, with notice how far a trustee, 197.
- effect of Statute of Limitations, ib.
- Resulting, see i. 510.
- whether any, on a conveyance without consideration, 198.
- arising on purchases with the money of another, 201, 202, 208.
- may be repelled by evidence, 202, 206, 243.
- as to following trust-money laid out by a trustee in land, 205.
- where person bound to settle land and purchases without settling, 204, 254.
- where several persons purchase and pay in equal proportions, they are joint-tenants, 206.
- where purchase-moneys are subscribed unequally, ib.
- where one of two purchasers expends money in improvements, ib.
- in cases of a joint undertaking, 207.
- joint-mortgages, 214.
- where land is acquired for partnership purposes, 207.
- profit or advantage gained by one partner results for the benefit of the firm, 208
- in cases of purchases in the name of another, 214.
- may be rebutted by evidence, ib.
- by parent in name of child, 215, 217.
- grandfather in name of grandchild, ib.
- in purchases by the father and another, 215, 219.
- in the name of parent and child, 218.
- of wife, ib.
- of husband and wife, ib.
- by uncle in name of nephew, 220.
- of an annuity in name of a stranger, 219.
- none in purchases and delivery of stock or chattels, ib.
- none where ship purchased in name of a third person, 220.
- effect of Ship Registry Acts on, 221.
- resulting in favour of Heir and Next of Kin where trusts wholly or partially fail, 223.
- general rule on the subject, ib., 232, 249, n.
- question whether donee takes by the instrument, beneficially or in trust, 224.
- cases in which donee is and is not considered a trustee, 224.
- where donee is an infant or married woman, 225.
- where donor has shown an intention that donee shall take in trust, his character is not altered by an omission to declare a trust, or where the trust fails, 226.
- otherwise where the crown would take, 364, n.
- distinction in a devise of land charged with debts, and a devise in trust to pay debts, ib.
- expression of a purpose does not always limit the devise, 227.
- distinction between a devise and conveyance, ib.

TRUSTS. TRUST—continued.

- where words of regard or relationship are used, 228.
- where one of several executors named trustee, the others also trustees, 229.
- in absolute gifts of property with illegal conditions, 127; 229.
- devise charged with a legacy which fails, 230.
- in questions between heirs and residuary legatee and next of kin, as to undisposed of proceeds of realty, or between next of kin and residuary legatees of personalty, 232.
- legacy to heir or next of kin does not preclude their claim, ib.
- nor an intention to exclude unless property given to another, ib. 233.
- in favour of heir of surplus proceeds of real estate, ib.
- where testator has directed a conversion out and out for purposes of the will, 234, 250.
- money devised to be laid out in land, and part undisposed of, 235.
- where part of a mixed fund lapses, ib.
- of interest of a mixed fund directed to accumulate, where accumulations void, 236.
- of a mixed fund, where no heirs or next of kin, 237.
- heir excluded from, by conversion out and out, (see CONVERSION,) ib.
- not by a mere declaration that proceeds of real estate shall be considered as personalty, ib., 238, 241.
- next of kin to take in that case must claim as legatees, ib., 238, 241.
- by gift of residue where surplus forms part, 239, 241.
- not where it is restricted, 241.
- where residue lapses, ib.
- of mixed fund, heir takes his share, 242.
- heir takes proceeds as personal estate in him, ib.
- may be rebutted by extrinsic evidence, where, 243, 245, 246.
- none in gifts to charities, 246.
- trust by operation of law arising from the maxim that "what ought to be done is to be considered as done," 253.
- covenant to settle after-acquired property, 254.
- person in whom property becomes vested a trustee, 256.
- where money or land directed to be converted, ib.
- direction to convert must be explicit, (see CONVERSION,) 257.
- in whose favour relief will be given, 268.
- where the question arises on a devise, ib.
- rights of heir, next of kin, and personal representatives, ib.
- where the question arises upon contract, 269.
- general rule that it is those who stipulate, or the persons standing in their places, ib.
- where the contract affects existing property, ib.
- where it affects no specific property, as on a covenant, 272.
- where the contract contains stipulations in favour of third persons, as collaterals, how and against whom enforced, 274.
- two contracting may enforce it against each other, 275.
- doctrine of law as to a stranger in a deed, ib.
- cannot enforce it, 276.
- contracting parties may release each other, ib.
- doctrine of law as regards agreements on which assumpsit may be brought, 276.
- stranger permitted to see, where, ib., 279.
- doctrine of Court of Chancery in regard to a stranger to a contract, 280, 286.
- when he may enforce the contract, 281.
- against the heir of covenantor, 282.
- not if the heir would thereby be disinherited, ib.
- against covenantors' representatives, 284.
- contract must have been founded on value, 285.
- where the land has been conveyed to trustees, 286.
- where he may treat the party exacting a stipulation as his trustee, 287.
- where in a series of limitations some are in favour of a stranger, if any are enforced the whole must be, ib.
- when enforced in favour of collaterals against creditors, 290, 292.
- Constructive or implied, 295.

TRUSTS. TRUST—continued.

- where for the purposes of the will trustee takes the inheritance, ib.
- under a direction for sale, legal estate devolves on the heir in, 296.
- arising from the conduct and dealings of the parties, ib.
- in the case of a mortgage, ib.
- where an executor is a debtor, ib.
- where legatees have been paid and debts are discovered, 297.
- arises on a renewed lease obtained by an executor, 299.
  - on advantages obtained by attorney from his client, 301.
  - agent from his principal, ib.
- in favour of wife on mortgage of her estate for payment of her husband's debts, 306.
- in favour of person having a limited interest paying off incumbrances, 307, 345.
- in Wills for payment of debts and legacies, doctrine of Court of Chancery as to, 312, 365.
  - how carried into effect, 365.
  - See DEBTS, LEGACIES.
  - when a sale will be directed, 316.
- in Deeds for payments of debts, 348.
  - See DEBTS.
  - equitable doctrines affecting, 352.
  - discretion given to trustees in, 355.
- for raising portions for younger children, 392, 425.
- for married women, under settlements and wills, 474, et seq.
  - See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- in deeds for separation, (see HUSBAND AND WIFE,) 526, et seq.
- affecting persons taking property under deeds and wills for limited interest, with remainder over, 542, et seq.
  - leaseholds and copyholds under settlement, who to renew, 544.
  - trusts for Renewal, ib.
    - may be express or implied, ib.
    - how fines and expenses to be paid, 545—547.
    - mode of apportionment between tenant for life and those in remainder, ib.
    - where tenant for life renews without obligation, 546.
    - no distinction between leases for years and lives, 545, 546.
    - fines to be raised out of rents and profits, ib.
    - when sale or mortgage may be made, and when not, 547.
    - different modes of raising, 547—550.
  - gift of residue to several in succession, 552. See TENANT FOR LIFE.
  - enjoyment in specie, ib., 557.
  - what interest tenant for life of residue entitled to for first year, where conversion is to take place, 558, 560, 562.
- general rule that where a person brings a bill upon a trust or equitable title to recover an estate, the court will decree possession and an account of rents and profits, 845.
- confessed and Statute of Frauds pleaded, 21.
- trust may be fixed on property of trustee which he has shown an intention to appropriate in satisfaction, 922.

TRUSTS OF CHATTELS.

- before the Statutes of Uses, i. 457.
- See TRUSTS.

TRUSTS OF PERSONAL ESTATE, i. 513.

- See TRUSTS.

TRUST ESTATES.

- trust estates in fee made assets for payment of debts by Statute of Frauds, i. 504.
- generally conform to the law affecting corresponding legal estates, i. 502, 503.
- may (like uses) agree or disagree in point of limitation with the rules of the common law, i. 505.
  - differences in this respect between uses and trusts, ib.
- alienation, i. 506 ; ii. 874.
  - and see VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES.

UNION, ACT OF, WITH SCOTLAND.

as affecting the Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, 11.

USES.

origin of, I. 439—441.

reasons for their introduction, i. 441.

doctrines of the Court of Chancery as to, Prior to the Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII., i. 446, 447.

creation of uses, i. 447.

consideration, i. 449, 450.

uses created by construction of law, resulting and constructive uses, i. 451—453.

permanent uses, nature of, i. 454.

limitations of uses, estates tail, &c., i. 455.

since the Statute of Uses, 478.

provisions of the Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII., c. 10; i. 463—465.

nature and qualities of uses since the Statute of Uses, i. 478—490.

limitations of uses, i. 480, 481.

permitted contrary to the rules of law, i. 456.

uses which do, and uses which do not, conform to the common law, i. 482—484.

springing and shifting uses, i. 483, 487.

uses engrafted on the seisin, i. 485.

scintilla juris, i. 486.

powers, to raise future uses, i. 486.

effect of stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, s. 3, as to limitations to the heir of the person who shall have conveyed the land, i. 488.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See PURCHASE, PURCHASE-MONEY.

vendor and trustee for purchaser, where, 310.

VESTING. See PORTIONS, LEGACIES.

as affecting the doctrine of remoteness, 94.

and deferring possession, difference between, ib.

of devises of real estate, 95.

words "if" and "when," how they affect vesting, 94, 97, 141, 171, 173, n. (b), 395.

and see Vize v. Stoney, 1 Dru. & War, 337, and Lang v. Pugh, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 718.

effect of gift over, on, 97, 99.

in gifts to a class, 98.

where legacy is separated from the bulk, 99.

gift of interest towards maintenance, 100.

of remainder after life estate to unborn person, 105.

of legacy at twenty-one, with direction for accumulation until twenty-four, effect of, 184.

"payable" at twenty-one, 395, 421, n.

of portions, 395, 400, 406, 421, 473, n. III.

how it affects the ascertaining who are "younger children," 414.

different rules applied as regards real and personal estate, i. 542.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS.

of choses in action, 395, et seq.

of chose in action by way of declaration of trust, 52, 53, 897, 898, 909.

by way of assignment, 901—909.

of contingent interests and possibilities in personal estate such as stock and the like, 910—912.

VOLUNTARY CONTRACTS.

as affecting equitable interests, 888.

voluntary covenant enforced in equity to the extent to which it may be enforced at law, 889, 890.

not where something is sought beyond what may be obtained at law, 889—891.

not enforced in favour of child against a father, 891.

whether as against other volunteers, it not being revoked, 393, n.

attempted assignment of what is transferable only a contract, 909.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE. See MORTGAGE.

what is a perfect gift, i. 507.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE—continued.

- circumstances which will be evidence to show that it was not intended to be revocable, 884.
- keeping the deed in the donor's possession, 885; and see Syderfin's case, 1 Mer. 82, 95.
- deed or copy obtained by stealth, ib.
- void against creditors and purchasers by stats. 13 Eliz. and 27 Eliz., 288, 290, 351, 887.
- not if for a charity, 289.
- he who hath the advantage at law ought to keep it as between volunteers, 886.
- for payment of debts, 58, 349.
- trust created by, 52, 57.
- containing directory trust, how construed, 135.
- persons taking under, affected with trust of the property, though without notice of the trust, 195.

VOLUNTEERS.

- trusts enforced against, 195.

WARD OF COURT.

- settlement on, when married without the leave of the court, 486, 493, n. (b).
- approved by the court cannot be defeated by the marriage being delayed till she is of age, 499.

WASTE. See MORTGAGOR, MORTGAGEE, &c.

- by tenant for life, what is, 570, 571.
- equitable, 571.
- will be restrained, 570.
- Statute of Limitations does not begin to run as to, till death of tenant for life, 571.

"WHAT OUGHT TO BE DONE CONSIDERED AS DONE." See TRUST, EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS, CONVERSION.*WORDS.

- construction of, i. 534, 537, 540, 542. See EVIDENCE.
- words having a conventional or technical construction, i. 542, 543.
- "child," "issue," "heirs of body," i. 475, 543.
- limitations of rule that quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est, i. 537.
- "manor" may pass in a deed by the name of a "messuage," &c., i. 537, 556, 559, and see ii. 593.
- words of condition, i. 537, 538.
- words marshalled, i. 540.
- supplied, transposed or rejected and inserted, i. 541.
- general words controlled, i. 540, 541.
- "or" construed "and," i. 541 (et v. infra in this title, and see Eno v. Eno, 6 Hare, 180).
- "or" interpreted as giving a power of selection, 78.
- "survivors" construed "others," i. 541, 542.
- "child," i. 543, 556.
- "younger children," 411, 414, 415, 423, n.
- "issue," 150, 153, 155.
- "heir male," i. 542; ii. 150.
- "next of kin," 76.
- "family," 73, 74.
- "relations," 76.
- "descendants," 77.
- "executors and administrators," 537.
- "representatives," "legal representatives," "next legal representatives," "personal representatives," 537—539.
- "Three" read "nine."
- Daniell v. Daniell*, xiii. Jur.
- "household furniture," i. 559.
- construction of the words "a present right to receive," in the 40th sect. of stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, 938, n.
- joint words of parties taken respectively and severally, i. 545.
- precatory and recommendatory words, 64, et seq., and see TRUSTS.

WORDS—continued.

The following cases may be referred to besides those cited in the text, in regard to the construction of particular words:—

“Issue,” (see i. p. 503).

construed children.

Goymour v. Pigge, 7 Beav. 475, 481; Walker v. Pitchell, 1 M. Gr. & Scott, C. B. 652.

generally.

Hedges v. Harper, Rolls, x. Jur. 578; 9 Beav. 478.

“heir.”

Ware v. Rowland, 15 Sim. 593.

as designatio personæ.

14 Mee. & W. 698.

“own heirs, executors, and administrators.”

Wilkinson v. Garrett, x. Jur. 560; 2 Coll. 643.

“without leaving issue.”

ordinary rule of construction as regards personal estate.

Mansel v. Grove, vii. Jur. 666; 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 484.

“nearest of kin,” “next of kin,” Kilner v. Leach, 10 Beav. 367.

Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613.

whether those living at testator's death take, or those living when ultimate limitation takes effect.

Seiefforth v. Badham, x. Jur. 892, 893.

“payable.”

in limitation over.

Jones v. Jones, 13 Sim. 561.

“personal representative,” “legal personal representative.”

Smith v. Barneby, Ld. Ch. xi. Jur. 619.

“Executors, administrators, and assigns.”

Att.-Gen. v. Malkin, (Ld. C., Nov. 1846,) x. Jur. 956; 2 Phill. 64.

in a settlement.

Morris v. Howes, 4 Hare, 599; affirmed x. Jur. 955.

“own right heirs for ever.”

as applied to personal estate.

De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, x. Jur. 466; 15 Sim. 163.

“moiety.”

Doe v. Fawcett, x. Jur. 741, C. P.

“my share.”

Paris v. Miller, 5 Maule & S. 408.

“survivor.”

“the question is, is it used as a word of contrast or of substantive meaning?”—

Per V.-C. K. B., Lee v. Stone, 13 Dec. 1846, MS.

“or,” construed “and.”

Penny v. Turner, x. Jur. 768; 15 Sim. 368.

“all but cash or moneys so called.”

Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 592.

technical words. Same rule to be applied to an Act of Parliament as to a will.

construction of, Burton v. Revell, xi. Jur. 71, Exch.

generally.

Smith v. Barneby, x. Jur. 750, Exch.; 2 Coll. 737.

WILL. See CONSTRUCTION.

statutes relating to, i. 468.

original Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1, i. 469.

construction of devises, i. 476.

executory devises, introduced, i. 470.

modern Statute of Wills, 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26, i. 473; ii. 36.

general heads of its provisions, i. 473, 476.

commentaries on, referred to, i. 472, n.

implies a consideration in itself, i. 520.

sufficient that the instrument discloses the intention, however expressed, i. 520.

Certainty,

essentials in a deed or will, so that it may operate as a transfer of property, in words of gift, subject, object, amount of estate, i. 526.

WILLS—continued.

- of lands in the colonies cannot be tried here, 8, n. (a).
- construction of, 17, 18, 27, 494.
  - of wills of founders of charities, 247.
  - in what cases evidence admitted to aid, 445, 449, 455.
- effect of domicile on, 13, n. (e).
- and see CONSTRUCTION.
- difference of construction in articles and, 136.
- direction in, that chattels shall go in same manner as real estate, 156.
  - present state of the law on, 159.
- trusts in, for payment of debts, 312, 332.
  - sales of property under, 365.
- gift by, after an advancement, 428.
  - See PORTIONS, SATISFACTION.
- of married women under powers, 493, 497.
  - how construed, 494.
- when trust estate will pass by will of trustee, 364, n. V.
  - See DEVISE; and see Sharpe v. Sharpe, xii. Jur. 598, and the references in the reporter's note.
- probate of, of what conclusive, 19, 494.

69 B.9

Spence, George

The equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery

Bd.: 2

London 1849

J.rel. 398-2

urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb10563661-5